On their tour of the three towns, Eritrea's largest, the newsmen travelled aboard a single-engined Cessna flight aircraft or a small French Alouette helicopter, both relatively slow and vulnerable machines. But no special precautions were taken by the pilots, an indication that they had no worries--at least in this region--of anti-aircraft fire from the guerrillas.

We could also have gone between the three centres by the road, which carries a quantity of freight traffic. The Ethiopian authorities raised no objection.

At Asmara, an Italian colonial-style town of 250,000 inhabitants, military activities are restricted to the airport, the base for the MIGs in their rocket attacks on Nafka, the last major town still held by the Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF) 250 kilometres (150 miles) to the north. Aircraft and helicopters, mainly of Soviet make, are not dispersed, indicating that the military authorities fear no action from the guerrillas, who could do extensive damage with a single mortar shell.

The EPLF--dubbed "bandits" by the Ethiopian officials, have claimed six attacks on the airport recently. All have been denied by Addis Ababa, and we saw no sign of any shelling, while civil air traffic was normal.

The Asmara shops, better provisioned than in Addis Ababa, are apparently doing good business, and the market is well stocked with cereals and vegetables supplied by outlying farms. There are no roadblocks in the town but a curfew applies from midnight, as in Addis.

Nearer to the operational sector the town of Keren, with 35,000 inhabitants, shows more signs of being on a war footing. Outside the town, near a military camp, Soviet-built MI-24 helicopter gunships specially designed for counter-insurgency work refuel and rearm on a large concrete apron. But there were no helicopters there the day of our visit and the only loading and unloading was of trucks and camels engaged in peaceful local trading.

Keren's hospital is still being rebuilt after it was seriously damaged in fighting for the town, which was held for almost a year by the EPLF before being recaptured in November 1978.

Massawa, Ertirea's outlet to the Red Sea, seems completely unaffected by the campaign. It is the only town in Ethiopia never to have come under curfew, and the open air cafes in the narrow streets built by the Turks five centuries ago are open late at night.

During the 24 hours we spent in the town the gunboats and missile boats of the Ethiopian Navy, with the task of preventing any aid being smuggled in to the guerrillas, never left the port.

The only explosion in the town was explained as an attempt by a husband to settle a problem with his ex-wife by means of a grenade. It caused no hiccup in Massawa's normal activity.

CSO: 4700/896

BRIEFS

FOREIGN MINISTER RETURNS--Minister of state, Minister of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation Martin Bongo returned to Libreville this morning on his way back from Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, where he participated in the 38th session of the OAU Ministerial Council meeting. It will be recalled that our country boycotted the deliberations of this meeting in protest of the admission of SDAR into the OAU. After leaving the Ethiopian capital, Martin Bongo went to Paris where he represented the Gabonese Government at the official installation of our countryman, Dr Francois (?Wonou) Nguema, in his new position as the secretary general of the Technical and Cultural Cooperation Agency. [Text] [AB042105 Libreville Domestic Service in French 1830 GMT 4 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/656

PNDC ISSUES GUIDELINES FOR FORMING PDC'S

AB080949 Accra Domestic Service in English 0700 GMT 8 Mar 82

[Text] The Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC] has issued directives to streamline properly the formation and functioning of people's defense committees [PDC]. All matters concerning the inauguration of defense committees will now have to be referred to the interim National Coordinating Committee at the State House in Accra or the appropriate regional coordinators. A statement by the council made it clear that the Coordinating Committee has worked out definite procedures for preliminary investigation and registration of the PDC's which should preceed any inauguration.

It has come to the notice of the council that persons who are not aware of these procedures and modalities meant to keep criminal elements and enemies of the revolution out of the defense committees have been approached to inaugurate them. This has led to confusion and made it impossible to streamline the PDC's and to ensure that only genuine elements are involved. The PNDC has therefore directed that all defense committees should be registered with the Coordinating Committee which should be given every facility to enable it to streamline the PDC's and bring some order into the organization.

Henceforth, all inaugurations should be done only after the Coordinating Committee or its representative have investigated and registered the committees. The council repeated that the defense committees are now to be taken very seriously and no effort will be spared to ensure that they are not controlled by forces hostile to the revolution. Members of the committees are expected to maintain the highest standard of revolutionary discipline and to be mindful of the national interests at all times. They should not take the law into their own hands or disrupt the smooth running of their places of work. They are expected to cooperate with management to keep production going while performing their role as watchdogs of the revolution. The PNDC observed that the defense committees are to lead Ghanaians to exercise their power and it is essential that the education for members of the committees is stepped up.

The council has therefore directed the Coordinating Committee to liaise with the Ministry of Information and other appropriate government agencies to keep up a constant program of education for members of defense committees to enable the people to exercise their power responsibly and effectively. The council warned that any attempt to obstruct the development of the PDC's or to use them for counterrevolutionary activities will be dealt with severely.

CSO: 4700/898

PNDC PRAISED FOR REFUSING DEVALUATION

AB101642 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Commentary by Effua Sam]

[Text] Ghana's secretary for foreign affairs, Dr Obed Asamoah, has stated that the new government of Ghana considers unacceptable the conditions set forth by the International Monetary Fund to this country regarding the devaluation of the cedi. At a news conference in Addis Ababa, Dr Asamoah said the recommended devaluation of the Ghanaian currency as a step for the granting of credits was absolutely unacceptable under current conditions.

This statement comes as a relief to most Ghanaians who have been wondering whether the Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC] may heed the call from many suspicious quarters, including the IMF, to devalue the cedi. In these revolutionary times, when only what is best for Ghana should be the guiding principle, Ghanaians need to take a close look at the IMF as it has been operating over the years and examine the interests it has been serving before Ghana takes any advice from it. The fact is that the IMF, which is usually presented to Ghanaians as a respectable international financial institution, is one of the bodies created by the owners of monopoly capital after World War II to safeguard the imperialist monetary system and prolong its lifespan. The IMF also champions the interests of Western monopolies in developing countries, though the fund hides under the facade of giving short term credits to member countries to offset their balance-of-payment deficits.

It must be noted that the IMF's aim of facilitating the expansion of world trade and eliminating foreign exchange restrictions among other things keeps the developing countries in their traditional position as producers of raw materials to satisfy other people's demands. By operating within the framework of the IMF's article of agreement, countries like Ghana are prevented from taking precisely the steps they ought to take to free themselves from foreign economic control. Further, the IMF is under the firm control of the Western capitalist countries, especially the United States. The representatives of these countries dominate both the board of governors and board of executive directors, the two most important decisionmaking bodies of the IMF. The United States alone controls over 20 percent of the voting rights, which means that no major decision can be taken without U.S. consent since all such decisions need at least 85 percent approval. Thus in practice, the IMF is a tool in the hands of the United States and there are many occasions when political considerations have affected decisions to grant or not to grant loans.

Over the years, the IMF has been dictating harsh conditions to many developing countries before loans are granted to them. The standard package of IMF prescriptions includes devaluation, wage freeze, trade liberalization and a cutback on government expenditure. These fiscal measures do not simply work for the economies of developing countries whose major problem is really the domination by foreign economic interests. Measures like those of the IMF rather deepen their financial crises and worsen the balance of payments problems in the long run. They also lead to rising unemployment and a cutback in social services. Many developing countries, including Bolivia, Chile, Argentina, Zaire, Turkey, Peru and the Philippines, have fallen into the IMF trap at one time or the other and faced disastrous consequences.

Ghana herself has had her share of the IMF-created problems. In 1971, under the guidance of the IMF and its sister body, the World Bank, the Busia government obtained a so-called debt refinancing loan of 3.5 million pounds under terms, which, in the view of the then minister of finance and economic planning, added a full 36 percent or $87 million to the country's debts to Britain. Dr Busia lived to regret his sellout to the IMF.

In more recent times, the cutback on health and educational facilities under the Limann administration were carried out on the advice of the IMF. Many developing countries are now resisting the harsh conditions of the IMF which are inimical to their interests. The classic example of Tanzania, which refused to devalue her currency last year under IMF pressure, can be cited.

It is therefore reassuring to hear that the PNDC has no intention of bowing to IMF pressure to devalue the cedi, a measure which would only go to strengthen foreign control over the economy at this time of all times when Ghana wants to restructure her economy in her own interest. This decision must be accompanied by the awareness that it is only Ghanaians who can rebuild their country through their own efforts. In the long run, only an independent integrated and self-sustaining national economy can be a solution to Ghana's many economic and social problems. No amount of foreign loans, whether from the IMF or similar institutions, can be a substitute for Ghana's own efforts at development.

CSO: 4700/898

PNDC PASSES RETROACTIVE RENT CONTROL LAW

AB070730 Accra Domestic Service in English 1800 GMT 6 Mar 82

[Excerpts] The Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC] has passed a law reducing by half the rent payable on residential premises as of 31 December 1981. However, where the rent was 20 cedis a month or less, then it shall remain at the level. The rent control law 1982, signed by the chairman of the PNDC, Flight Lieutenant Rawlings, also said where the rent was higher than 20 cedis but lower than 50 cedis, then it is by this law reduced to 20 cedis a month.

Until 1 year from today, no landlord is permitted to increase rents. The provisions just mentioned do not apply to premises rented from government or government agencies or premises rented for industrial commercial or other business purposes or the premises rented by diplomatic missions or other bodies required to pay rent in foreignexchange or premises where the rent payable is in excess of 1,000 cedis a month, in which case the landlords shall pay half the rent to the state as tax.

No rent is to be paid for premises let or to be let after 31 December 1981, unless the appropriate rent has been officially assessed.

Any landlord who demands or receives rent higher than that allowed by law shall forfeit to the state the premises in respect of which he demands or receives the rent. Every landlord is required to issue a rent card to such tenants testifying among other things, the rent payable and he should supply to the nearest rent office the names of his tenants and the rents they pay.

Any false declaration in this connection shall attract a 10,000 cedi fine or 2 years imprisonment or both, and the same penalty awaits those landlords who will take the law into their own hands by taking high-handed action in breach of the tenancy agreement with a view to forcing tenants out of their premises.

CSO: 4700/898

BRIEFS

TWENTY-CEDI NOTE WITHDRAWAL DENIED--The Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC] Secretariat has denied rumors that the council is to withdraw the 20 cedi notes from circulation. According to the Ghana News Agency, a spokesman for the Secretariat made it clear that there is no truth in the rumors. Reports have it that traders and marketwomen are refusing to accept the 20 cedi notes for payment. [Text] [AB051859 Accra Domestic Service in English 1800 GMT 5 Mar 82]

COMMENTS ON COMPLAINTS AGAINST PDC'S--THE GHANAIAN TIMES comments on complaints made against the activities of some defense committees. It says some of the complaints are well intentioned, while others come out of outright objection to the whole PDC [Peoples Defense Committee] idea by people who fear that their class consciousness days are at an end. However, the objections, fears and complaints can be avoided by the speed with which the PDC's establish themselves as responsible instruments of social justice. In this regard, the TIMES warns all these PDC members or those who want to be members in order to pursue their selfish aims that they will be eventually exposed and thrown out. The paper reminds them that the PDC's are not intended to replace the existing decisionmaking authorities completely. They are meant to involve the common people in decision making and to make them watchdogs on management. To achieve this, the TIMES asks the PDC's to discuss issues with management in a spirit of equality and self-correction. The paper believes that time and understanding will correct the mistakes of the PDC's. In any case, the committees have come to stay, because the people's power has been established by the revolution. [Excerpt] [AB081206 Accra Domestic Service in English 0700 GMT 8 Mar 82]

CSO: 4700/898

BRIEFS

SEKOU TOURE RETURNS--President Ahmed Sekou Toure, secretary general of the Democratic Party of Guinea and supreme leader of the revolution, paid a visit to Jeddah and Riyadh in Saudi Arabia, Baghdad in Iraq and Tehran in Iran from Thursday, 4 March, to Tuesday, 9 March 1982. This visit falls within the framework of the activities of the Islamic Peace Committee of which he is the chairman. The committee was mandated by the Islamic Conference at the end of January 1981 to find a peaceful solution to the Iran-Iraq conflict. [Excerpt] [AB100712 Conakry Domestic Service in French 2200 GMT 9 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/656

BRIEFS

PAIGC-PCF RELATIONS--Comrade Mario Cabral, member of the Central Committee and minister of national education, returned home yesterday after having represented the PAIGC at the 24th Congress of the French Communist Party [PCF] held in Paris 3-7 February. The party representative informed us that, in addition to having participated in all the activities connected with the congress, he was received by the secretary general of the French Communist Party, George Marchais, and had contacts with various other communist leaders. During his stay in Paris, Comrade Mario Cabral had contacts with the assistant secretary of international relations and members of the PCF Central Committee on strengthening cooperation at the party level and also saw a member of the General Confederation of Labor (CGT), associated with the PCF, to examine the possibilities of strengthening relations with the UNTG. In addition to contacts with personalities of the French Communist Party, Comrade Mario Cabral had talks with delegations of other countries, specifically from Angola, Mozambique, Cape Verde and Italy, to exchange views. [Excerpts] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 13 Feb 82 p 2] 8711

CSO: 4742/232

COT VISIT STRESSES FRENCH-IVORIAN COOPERATION

AB111200 Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 11 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] French Cooperation and Development Minister Jean-Pierre Cot, who has been in our country since Monday evening, was received yesterday by the head of state at a dinner honoring the French minister.

Present at the party were Foreign Minister Simeon Ake, French Ambassador Michel Dupuch, and members of Jean-Pierre Cot's delegation. Though noting of this private discussion was made public, it is easy to think that it centered mainly around French-Ivorian cooperation, which although very healthy, needs to be maintained and oriented toward the needs and resources of our two countries. The French cooperation and development minister has repeated this fact several times during his discussions with the Ivorian authorities, who for their part have rejoiced over the new impetus given this cooperation by the French socialist government. This is close to the views of President Houphouet-Boigny, who just yesterday, once again drew his guest's attention to the complementarity of Africa--producer of raw materials--and West Europe--advanced in technology and the policy of economic liberalism.

If the head of state was happy to receive a young and brilliant politician and minister in the government of one of his friends of long ago--Francois Mitterrand--he was also able to discuss with his guest the visit of President Mitterrand, who was elected president of France on 10 May 1981 and who is to pay a visit to some African countries as the president of the French Republic. It will undoubtedly be an important event.

Jean-Pierre Cot left Abidjan yesterday evening after a stay that he described as positive and instructive. Soon before his departure, he held a press conference which enabled him to evaluate the French-Ivorian cooperation on the spot and to explain precisely the idea of cooperation according to the principles of the ruling Socialist Party.

CSO: 4719/659

BRIEFS

ATTACK CLAIM--Radio Lesotho reported yesterday that an attack had been launched on the country from South Africa. The report, did not state who was responsible for the attack, but said the attackers had retreated into South Africa. There were reportedly no casualties. Radio Lesotho said the attack had been made in the vicinity of the barracks of the Lesotho para-military force, which had returned the fire. Several buildings were slightly damaged in the attack. South Africa has often been accused in the past by the Lesotho Government of harbouring Lesotho dissidents bent on overthrowing the country's authority. Radio Lesotho also reported that women of the Self Help Association had been staging widespread demonstrations in protest against the anti-Lesotho campaign being waged by exiled Lesotho citizens abroad. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 Mar 82 p 3]

TOURISM PROMOTED--Maseru--A team to promote tourism, representing eight Durban travel agencies and the Durban office of the Lesotho Tourist Corporation, arrived in Maseru yesterday on a week-long visit to explore the Maluti Mountains. The object is to attract tourists from Natal to visit Lesotho, a spokesman for the Lesotho National Tourist Office said in Maseru. The Durban team will visit several areas of tourist interest such as the Sehlabathebe National Park in the rugged Qaggasnek district bordering Natal, the Sani Top, and the Oxbow Tourist Resort. South African visitors dominate tourism in Lesotho. According to official figures, they account for about 95 percent of all foreign visitors in Lesotho. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 Mar 82 p 10]

CSO: 4700/920

WITHDRAWAL OF GENERAL'S APPOINTMENT

Paris AFRICA AFP in French 23 Feb 82 p 16

[Text]

MONROVIA, February 22 - Liberian Head of State Samuel Doe has withdrawn the appointment of Deputy Commerce Minister General Sandee Ware, who was given the post last Saturday, the Liberian LINA news agency reported here today.

The move followed a meeting today of the ruling Military Council, which accused the General of participating in the April 14, 1979 rice riots in which about 80 people were killed.

General Ware also personally ordered the flogging of a number of students at the military barracks here following a student demonstration during the same period, LINA said, quoting Mr. Doe.

For these reasons, the Council said, the appointment of General Ware to the Government post would "not be in the interest of the Liberian people". (A.F.P.)

CSO: 4700/888

FRANCE'S COT MEETS WITH TRAORE IN BAMAKO

AB052019 Bamako Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 5 Mar 82

[Text] The French cooperation and development minister had a busy day today in Bamako; audience with the president, opening of the deliberations of the joint commission and a series of discussions with the ministers of foreign affairs, planning, animal husbandry, education, finance and of commerce. Undeniably, the highlight of the day was his discussion with the head of state, Gen Moussa Troare. The special friendship existing between France and Mali--a friendship interwoven by our historical and cultural ties--and the strengthening of the cooperation between the two countries were the topics which were examined at length during the president's meeting with Jean-Pierre Cot which began at 0800 this morning.

Throughout the discussions, they expressed the desire to establish a broader scope of cooperation founded on the spirit of dialogue and mutual confidence between our two countries and peoples who have a common attitude to independence despite the difficult political and economic situation.

It is also worth noting that the main decisions made during the first ordinary congress of the Malian People's Democratic Union were also examined during the talks which were held in the presence of His Excellency Gerard Serrge, the French ambassador to Mali; Alioune Blondin Beye, the minister of foreign affairs and international cooperation; and the Malian ambassador in Paris, His Excellency Moulaye Haidara.

After the audience, Jean-Pierre Cot emphasized to the Malian press the place of the word, "confidence" in French-Malian relations.

[Begin recording] I would like to say that the discussions confirmed the place of confidence in our two countries' relations in order to enable us to say all what we have to say to each other. This basis will also enable us to envisage common activities and to support our mutual initiatives.

Concerning foreign policy, we were able to discuss all the issues related to the African continent and we have noticed that we share the same points of view. On cooperation between our two countries, we have discovered that this cooperation will be given a new impetus and reactivated by the joint commission that we are about to begin and which must be able to concentrate on the essentials, that is to say, on the great wealth that Mali has--its agriculture; and first and foremost its water resources. [End recording]

CSO: 4719/655

'AFP' REPORTS COT REMARKS UPON BAMAKO ARRIVAL

AB051521 Paris AFP in French 1139 GMT 5 Mar 82

[Text] Bamako, 5 Mar (AFP)--France believes that the Chadian and Western Sahara problems are "the OAU's business" and "not that of any power external to Africa, and especially not that of the superpowers." This was stated by Jean-Pierre Cot, French minister for cooperation and development, upon his arrival on Thursday night in Bamako where he is expected to participate in the meeting of the French-Malian Joint Cooperation Commission.

Mr Cot stressed that France supports the OAU in its efforts to settle the conflicts in Africa. "It is the business of Africans to settle African problems between themselves," the French minister also said, adding that France is trying to help the OAU to accelerate the settlement of the Chadian conflict.

"We believe," Mr Cot said, "that the OAU is justifying its usefulness by its presence in Chad and by the military presence of the inter-African force." France supports this force and also contributes, he recalled, to the reconstruction of Chad through the support it has been giving to the legitimate government of that country as it has been recognized by the OAU. He pointed out that France refuses to go beyond the bonds of this positive solidarity. "If we should get involved in the process, this would be a very bad example of intervention by the extra-African powers into matters which should be settled by Africans," Mr Cot added.

The French minister also reaffirmed France's solidarity with Africa in its struggle against racial discrimination and for the liberation of Namibia.

This solidarity is also economic, he added. He recalled the promises made by the French head of state to increase French public aid to development as well as his hope for new international economic order which will include stabilization of raw material prices.

Finally, Mr Cot recalled the economic crisis prevailing on the African continent and noted that Mali is among the countries that are badly hit. "This is all the more reason why our cooperation should be strengthened," the French minister concluded.

CSO: 4719/655

BEYE, COT SPEAK AT OPENING OF COOPERATION TALKS

AB051746 Bamako Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 5 Mar 82

[Excerpts] The deliberations of the 22d session of the Malian-French joint session began today in the Bamako's Koulouba Conference Hall. In his opening speech, Foreign Minister Alioune Blondin Beye took the opportunity to reiterate Mali's unflinching determination and total willingness to work in an atmosphere of trust and solidarity toward the consolidation and strengthening of the cooperation between France and Mali on the basis of unity and mutual interest. Alioune Blondin Beye placed this 22d session under the auspices of renewal.

[Begin Beye recording] The 22d session of the Mali-France Joint Commission, which begins its deliberations this morning, is placed under the auspices of renewal, because, after the elections in May 1981 in your country, which led to the accession of the socialists to power in France, you decided to review your assistance policy with a view to confering a new substance with a view to confering a new substance on that policy and making it fit the development requirements of developing countries.

Renewal also because my country, Mali, has chosen to apply a type of independent and planned economy and now wants to give priority to rural development projects with the participation of the rural masses concerned. Mr Minister, France has understood Mali's fundamental choices and decided to inscribe its actions within the framework of these choices.

Mr Minister, excellencies, ladies and gentlemen, Mali is following with great interest the efforts being made by France, and in particular by President Francois Mitterrand, aimed at drawing up a new policy of cooperation with a view to establishing a more equitable world economic order. Be it in Ottawa, where the summit of the industrial nations took place, be it in Cancun or in Paris, France, through its very conscious president, was among the first countries to express their willingness to work toward a greater independence for every nation in order to promote the new dynamic move for a new world economic order.

Mr Minister, this session, which is being held shortly after the first ordinary session of the Democratic Union of Malian people, is being followed by the Malian people with keen attention. As a matter of fact, in our world where even the richest countries are going through difficult times, the developing nations in general and Mali in particular cannot resist the crisis without the assistance from friendly nations in spite of all efforts already made or being made by the laboring masses because of its landlocked state and the effects of the drought that has hit it. The people of Mali know that France is one of their friends and this is why they place great hopes in our cooperation. In declaring the 22d session of the Mali-France joint session open, I want to express the hope that the deliberations will be crowned with results commensurate with our expecations. [End recording]

In his reply French Minister of Cooperation Jean-Pierre Cot said that as confidence cannot be obtained through bargaining and must be deserved, we will always make concrete moves to deserve it.

[Begin recording] Mr Minister, you have just recalled your priorities. Your major interest is in the agricultural sector and this is for obvious reasons. The rural masses must be organized, as a matter of fact, to increase their revenues; we must give them the tools for exploiting arable land. We must give them new courage and grounds for hopes in farming and production. We fully adhere to the principal objectives of your program. I hope that they will be fully taken into account in the conclusions of our joint session. [End recording]

CSO: 4719/655

BRIEFS

JEAN-PIERRE COT ENDS VISIT--Jean-Pierre Cot, the French minister of cooperation and development, left by air this afternoon for Abidjan at the end of his 4-day official visit to Mali. He was seen off by Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation Minister Alioune Blondin Beye, who was accompanied by senior officials of his ministry; His Excellency Gerard Serre, French ambassador to Mali and His Excellency Moulaye Haidara, Malian ambassador to France. During his visit, Mr Cot was received by the president of the republic to whom he delivered a message of friendship and esteem from President Francois Mitterrand. The French minister of cooperation and development and Alioune Blondin Beye jointly presided over the second session of the French-Malian Joint Commission. Mr Cot also signed an agreement relating to the use of the fund supplied in the place of food aid. He also participated in the inauguration of the national museum [words indistinct]. Mr Cot also had discussions with nine [as heard] ministers. They are the ministers of foreign affairs, health, stockbreeding, education, agriculture, finance, culture and industrial development. [Passage indistinct] [Text] [AB090901 Bamako Domestic Service in French 2015 GMT 8 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/655

REPORT ON FOREIGN CURRENCY FUNDS EARNED BY EMIGRE WORKERS

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 20 Jan 82 pp 1, 6

[Text] From 1977 To 1981: Some 530 Mauritians Abroad Have Been Repatriated For 35 Million Rupees In Currency

Receipts of foreign currency originating from the emigration of close to 530 Mauritians hired by African and Persian Gulf firms over the past 5 years, or since 1977, are estimated at close to 32 million rupees annually.

The Ministry of Employment is accelerating its efforts to make it possible for other Mauritians to find employment abroad, which could contribute to solving unemployment problems to a certain extent.

Messrs K. Saccaram, minister of employment, and J. Dassagne, employment controller, told L'EXPRESS yesterday that the receipts of currency should reach 50 million rupees between now and the end of the year.

About 20 Mauritians have just been recruited by the Gulf Hotel in Doha, Qatar. Twenty others will leave shortly, (L'EXPRESS, 17 January).

A high level Nigerian delegation (see below) is currently in Mauritius to recruit 30 Mauritians, sugar industry professionals for the most part.

The Ministry of Employment is in contact with other firms in Saudi Arabia, Qatar, and even with a French construction firm with a view to employment of Mauritians.

The Fast Company, Ltd, a Saudi Arabian construction firm, is preparing to hire about 60 Mauritians. They will leave within the next 2 months. This firm would particularly like to hire drivers for heavy vehicles and pipe fitters. The Sheraton Hotel in Dubai would like to hire 100 Mauritians, and the Meridien in Kuwait, 2 cooks. It is also known that other employment possibilities exist in hotels in Iraq.

Those who have gone to Botswana have been hired mostly as mechanics by the Central Transport Organization, a government organization. Twenty-four Mauritians have gone to the Seychelles as teachers, and 20 more will be recruited shortly.

As far as Saudi Arabia is concerned, it is known that the Drake and Scull construction firm has hired about 100 workers, while 27 Mauritians are employed as stewardesses on Gulf Airlines. Another Saudi firm has also recruited carpenters and masons.

The receipts of currency mentioned above do not include the wages that these workers receive.

As we know, Messrs Saccaram and Dassagne left in May and November of last year respectively, for the Gulf countries to explore employment possibilities for Mauritians and also to see whether the Mauritian workers had adjusted to their new jobs.

For Messrs Saccaram and Dassagne, there is no doubt that the opportunities are bright and that they will have to be exploited.

The chart below shows the number of workers who left for African and Gulf countries over the past 5 years and the monthly currency receipts (approximate).

Country	Number of Workers	Currency
Nigeria	50 (sugar industry skilled workers, etc.)	250,000 RS
Botswana	42 (mechanics, etc.)	600,000 RS
Seychelles	24 (teachers)	150,000 RS
Saudi Arabia	187 (masons, carpenters, airline stewardesses, etc.)	845,000 RS
Qatar	148 (skilled workers, laborers, masons, drivers, clerks)	300,000 RS
Ivory Coast	73 (skilled workers, etc.)	421,000 RS
Zambia	2 (pipe fitters)	7,000 RS
Swaziland	2 (skilled workers)	10,000 RS

9693
CSO: 4719/574

PRIVILEGED RELATIONS WITH INDIA TO BE MAINTAINED

Port Louis THE NATION in French 29 Jan 82 pp 1, 4

> [Text] Sir Satcam Boolell, minister of agriculture, natural resources and the environment, maintained on Wednesday that relations between India and Mauritius will remain privileged for a long time to come. Mauritius has much to learn from India, and India's examples will be followed in order to preserve democracy in the country.

Sir Satcam, who was speaking at a reception in Triveni given by the Mauritius India Friendship Society (of which he is honorary president), commented that India still has an important role to play and that the country will benefit enormously from her lessons. Mauritius has always regarded India as its fatherland and relations between the two countries are more than familial.

The country is in the process of shaping its own destiny. General elections will be organized very shortly. And we want to follow India's edifying example in order to safeguard democracy. Sometimes, however, our interests do not coincide. And it is then up to the Indian high commissioner to Mauritius, Mr B. S. Upadhyaya, to accomplish his mission. People will say that Indian-Mauritian relations are tense. There again, interests and feelings are being confused, the minister said.

On the subject of Diego Garcia, Sir Satcam said that there was no misunderstanding, despite what certain people want to cause us to believe. India displayed intelligence. "We did not fully subscribe to it, but we will have to weather it. We are in complete agreement with India that the Indian Ocean remain a peace zone. This spirit of cooperation will continue on its historical bases," added Sir Satcam.

Speaking of relations between Mauritius and foreign countries, the minister stated that he will not allow any country to interfere in Mauritius' internal affairs. "India has never done it and no other country will do it," he maintained.

Sir Satcam then spoke at length of the stages which led India to independence. He mentioned the problem of Kashmir which, he said, was the consequence of colonialism and imperialism. Despite all this, India has been able to preserve democracy and the progress it has made so far has made it the seventh most industrialized nation in the world. "Her voice commands respect," said Sir Satcam in speaking of India's great achievements since she became a nuclear power.

Stressing the failure in the North-South dialogue, the minister expressed his pessimism. And it is here that the great peninsula, whose technological know-how will contribute enormously to overall assistance to the Third World, comes into play.

Following the minister, Professor B.P. Upadhyaya stated that India has never interfered in the internal affairs of other countries. Throughout the world, India, said the diplomat, has spread the message of peace. "We always seek peace and we give peace to others." On the subject of the air and naval base on Diego Garcia, Professor Upadhyaya said that in the case of war, Mauritius would be the first to suffer and the Mauritians would be the first victims. "You should have denounced this project. You have failed in your duty," he said.

Earlier, Mr S. Gaya, president of the Mauritius India Friendship Society spoke in glowing terms of millennial India, of its scientific and economic progress which, he said, must serve as a lesson to future generations.

9693
CSO: 4719/574

MSIRI BASES FUTURE HOPES ON NEW CANE VARIETIES

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 21 Jan 82 pp 1, 6

[Text] Two new varieties of sugar cane were officially certified by the Cane Release Committee at its meeting on Monday.

The varieties are M 2370/62 and M 657/66. The first of the two is slightly sensitive to gummosis but it is recommended for the beginning of the sugar season at high altitudes. However, with respect to the M 657/66, it is resistant to gummosis, yellow spot and leaf scald and can be harvested in the middle or the end of the season. It could be the ideal replacement for M 377/56, a variety that has turned out to be highly susceptible to gummosis and whose planting has been banned.

It should be noted that these two new varieties are sensitive to smut but controlling this disease is easy thanks to hot-water treatment and sanitation at the time of cutting.

The M 2370/62 variety is a high-yield variety but with an average to weak richness. However, if it is harvested early, its richness is satisfactory.

The M 657/66 variety has average yield but good richness and has positive qualities of adaptation.

J. Dupont from R. de St. Antoine, director of the Mauritius Sugar Industry Research Institute (MSIRI), presented these two new varieties to some 200 representatives of the sugar industry Tuesday afternoon and expressed the hope that they will be adopted by the latter and that the very small area planted in the two varieties in 1982 will gradually increase until it becomes very large after a few years.

Dupont stated at a press conference in August 1981 that the new varieties that would be certified in 1982 would be particularly resistant to gummosis, a disease whose resurgence was of such importance that it was classified as the No 1 enemy of the sugar industry.

Since that time, MSIRI has issued precise instructions to planters for the gradual elimination of the varieties most susceptible to gummosis. However, it was mainly the M 377/56 that was the target and this important variety concerns 18 percent of the country's sugar cane area. An amendment to the 1976 Plants Act (Government Notice No 330 of 1981) later banned the variety.

The following are technical details for the two newly certified varieties:

M 2370/62

The M 2370/62 comes from NCo 376 and M 147/44. It has a semi-erect carriage and average diameter. It produces many stems and a moderate amount of flowers.

It is a high-yield variety but one that has an average to weak richness. Nevertheless, when harvested early, its richness is higher than that of the M 93/48.

It seems particularly well adapted to high altitudes for the beginning of the season. It is resistant to yellow spot and leaf scald, is slightly sensitive to gummosis but susceptible to smut. It is a variety that is particularly recommended for the beginning of the season in high-altitude soils and will therefore be a good replacement for the M 93/48 in those areas.

M 657/66

The M 657/66, a cross between NCo 310 and M 357/56, is a variety with few flowers. It has a semi-erect posture, with an average number of shoots and diameter.

It has an average yield but good richness and great ease of adaptation, except in type L soils. It can be harvested throughout the season in the free soils of the humid zone. On the other hand, in other environments, it is preferable to harvest it in the middle or at the end of the season. This adaptation to the end of the season makes it an ideal replacement for the M 377/56, a late season variety that turned out to be highly susceptible to gummosis and whose planting has been banned. This variety is resistant to gummosis, yellow spot and leaf scald, but sensitive to smut. In low altitude areas, it is therefore recommended in areas where smut does not pose any problem.

11,464
CSO: 4719/593

MAPUTO DIVIDED INTO ADMINISTRATIVE ZONES

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 9 Feb 82 p 2

[Text] The country's capital is now divided into seven administrative zones and one locality, according to Domingos Matola, director of the Maputo communal districts [BCCM], at a meeting held day before yesterday at the headquarters of the Machava Communal District, attended by secretaries of the promotional groups of the residential localities.

Thus, the capital has been divided into zones—namely, the Machava, Matola, Dimitrov, Jardim, Munhuana, District 1 and Catembe, Inhaca Island being given the status of locality.

Domingos Matola also said that each of the established zones will be made up of 13 communal districts and administered by a commissioner of the former administrative localities, with a population density of about 162,500.

The status of locality given to Inhaca Island stems basically from the fact that this insular part of Maputo does not have enough people to justify the establishment of an administrative zone.

In speaking of the responsibilities to be handled by the zone commissioners, the BCCM director said that it is up to those officials of the state apparatus to direct the activities of the new promotional groups of the districts included in each zone.

"Mobilization of the people for the payment of the National Reconstruction Tax, defense of the social order established by the RPM Constitution and control of the production plans of each socioeconomic sector are, among others, some of the tasks assigned to the commissioners of the administrative zones," Domingos Matola said.

The BCCM director also said that, over the long term, the present administrative zones of the country's capital will have the status of district and that those new state organizations will have the task of drawing plans of action for the communal districts.

At that meeting, Domingos Matola also spoke of the role of each new promotional group as an executive council in the residential locality.

The official also explained that where party cells have not yet been established in the districts, the party's work will be handled by the new promotional groups.

8568
CSO: 4742/225

ADB FINANCES MAPUTO WATER SUPPLY IMPROVEMENT

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 17 Feb 82 p 1

[Text] An emergency program is underway to improve the water supply in the city of Maputo. According to Frederico Martins, director of the Maputo Water Enterprise, who was quoted by Radio Mozambique on its news program at 1905 hours yesterday, construction should be completed in 1985.

This emergency program will cost about 170,000 contos and is being financed by the Mozambican Government and the ADB. The project includes expansion of the Umbeluzi water impoundment and treatment station and the pumping station, among other construction plans.

Several changes to the water supply system for the country's capital are called for in the project, the plans for which were begun in France and completed in Maputo.

Frederico Martins said that there are currently serious problems in the city's water supply. The water mains, which are over 30 years old, provide no guarantee of safety at all. There are also problems with muddiness in the river water and, sometimes, with drought.

According to Radio Mozambique News, there are other projects to be carried out by the year 2000. They will make it possible to solve the problem of water supplies for the capital so as to keep pace with the city's physical growth.

According to the same source, the plans call for collecting underground water by opening wells between Maputo-Marracuene and Maputo-Incomati and building the Pequenos Libombos Dam.

In an unrelated development, the provincial director of public works and housing in Nampula, speaking at a Coordinating Council meeting in his sector, recommended that steps be taken immediately to solve the problem of a lack of drinking water in the communal villages.

He said at the meeting that the inhabitants of the communal villages in Nampula Province suffered severely from the lack of water in 1981. In addition, a 2-year drought has been causing serious economic and social problems in Nampula Province. Government steps to combat hunger have already been taken with the support of national and international organizations.

The provincial director of public works and housing in Nampula said that his sector will have to be concerned with providing a basic solution to the water shortage problem in the communal villages. According to him, this is a major requirement.

11798
CSO: 4742/227

S. AFRICA, MOROCCO: 'NORTH, SOUTH POLES OF IMPERIALISM'

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 15 Feb 82 p 1

[Commentary by Mario Ferro]

[Text] We are moving farther and farther away from the time when Africa was a preserve of imperialist and colonizing powers that enslaved peoples and plundered their wealth. But that period is still part of the recent past, and in the people's memories there is still a very fresh--though sad--remembrance of the brutal oppression and ruthless exploitation engaged in by imperialism and colonialism.

Imperialist circles established their policy in terms of domination and submission in relation to other countries, especially underdeveloped countries. The monopolies need the petroleum, uranium, and nonferrous metals which are located in Africa and which do not belong to them. They need gold, diamonds, and copper, and they need the raw materials that are the legitimate property of the African peoples.

Refusing to recognize the demands of the African peoples (and those of other continents, since this is not an isolated struggle), the imperialist circles do not accept open, loyal, and frank dialogue. They scorn good understanding and reject the principles of equality and mutual benefit proposed to them as a means of more fairly distributing resources among all mankind.

Instead of peaceful paths in the common interest, they prefer violence. In collusion with the African continent's most reactionary, tribalistic, and racist circles enfeoffed to the former mother countries, they prefer to use weapons, instigate provocations, and destabilize the internal situation in this or that country which has escaped their orbit. They prefer to hire stateless mercenaries, traitors, and murderers, whom they finance, train, and arm to carry out the most hideous crimes.

Today in Africa, imperialism's aggressiveness is a fact that cannot be ignored. In the southern part of the continent, South Africa's racist and colonialist regime is being used as a bridgehead for armed aggression against neighboring countries. The "front line" has been chosen as the chief target to be hit and destroyed by imperialism, since, because of the proven unity that has always existed among the front-line countries, even in the most difficult moments, it constitutes an almost insurmountable barrier to the accomplishment of imperialism's criminal intentions.

In the northern part of the continent, the Kingdom of Morocco is used for a policy identical to that of the racist and colonialist regime in Pretoria. The language and methods employed by King Hassan II and Prime Minister Pieter Botha to prevent the independence of the Sahara and Namibia are exactly the same. And at the same time, they both try to legitimize tiny puppet groups so as to place the latter in power, not only in those territories but also in the neighboring countries that oppose colonization or illegal occupation.

Taking advantage of reactionary regimes existing in various parts of Africa, imperialism is trying to recover control of the OAU and direct its actions. The first step consists of sowing division among the Africans to insure better control. The second step consists of using that organization as a tool for its policy. That is the entire reason for the impasse on the issue of the Sahara. And the same line of argument explains the attitude adopted by several of the OAU's member countries in relation to Chad, where an attempt is being made at all costs to see that the puppets take power.

11798
CSO: 4742/227

PORTUGUESE FIRM PROVIDES KNOW-HOW, TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 25 Jan 82 p 2

[Article by Justino Rubben Cossa]

[Text] By May, Mozambique will receive $3 million worth of fertilizers and pesticides from QUIMIGAL, we have learned from Eng Carlos Manuel Campos Silva, the firm's representative in Mozambique.

The products will be delivered to the Ministry of Agriculture for agricultural use in the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique].

QUIMIGAL, a Portuguese company which has been providing technical support to Mozambican enterprises to improve their conditions for export, has been in our country since 1977 and has renewable technical assistance contracts with Textil do Pungue, in Sofala Province (city of Beira), Cicomo of Nacala, in Nampula Province, and Socaju, also in Nacala. The Portuguese firm is responsible for the management of these companies.

In 1981 the firm signed other agreements with the RPM, providing technical assistance and "know-how" in various areas of activity, to name a few: FASUL-BOROR INDUSTRIAL and SABOREL, in Maputo, Soboeira de Inhambane, and GERALCO (General Association of Commerce and Industry) in Quelimane.

Training of Mozambican Technicians

According to Engineer Silva, over 60 Mozambican technicians will attend QUIMIGAL (QUIMICA de Portugal) training centers in Lisbon during the next 2 years. This will bring the number of trained technicians to over 210, counting the 150 Mozambicans who have already received their training at that Portuguese enterprise.

Regarding QUIMIGAL's plans for 1982, Carlos Silva said they include broadened and expanded activities in the RPM; negotiations are now in progress for major rehabilitation and later reactivation of Quimica Geral.

The official said that "negotiations are under way regarding the use of the Pande gas." To this end, a team of QUIMIGAL specialists has arrived in the Mozambican capital at the invitation of the Secretariat of State for Coal and Hydrocarbons.

6362
CSO: 4742/228

BULGARIAN FIRM COMPLETES STUDY OF CAHORA BASSA FACILITIES

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 22 Feb 82 p 8

[Text] The technical-economic feasibility study for the establishment of a vast system of lake transportation for passengers and cargo along the Cahora-Bassa lagoon is almost completed, the director of that project informed our reporters.

The study-project now in the phase of data preparation is being carried out by specialists of the Bulgarian TRANSKOMPLEKT, under the technical-scientific cooperation agreements signed between the People's Republic of Mozambique and the People's Republic of Bulgaria.

After the preparation of data, which should be completed within a month, the data will be submitted to the National Directorate of Maritime and River Transportation, which is coordinating the study.

According to the director of the project, the Bulgarian specialists spent about 2 months in the Cahora Bassa to complete earlier studies made for execution of the project.

During the period, the director said, studies were conducted with a view to determining the type of infrastructure to be built, among other projects.

The team of Bulgarian specialists also studied the siting of the main bridges to be erected along the lagoon, passenger and cargo traffic zones, as well as a study with a view to installing a system of markers there to aid navigation.

Major Projects

The study-project for the establishment of a vast system of lake transportation in the lagoon falls within the framework of the major projects for economic development to be carried out during this decade in the country.

It is within this perspective of future development that it is planned to build a large mooring dock in Zumbo, which is situated on the line of the border between our country, Zambia and Zimbabwe, the director of the project declared.

On the other hand, it should be underscored that the establishment of a lake transportation network in the Cahora Bassa lagoon assumes particular importance within the framework of economic and transport relations at the SADCC [Southern African Development Coordination Conference] level, of which Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe are members.

Transportation, Fishing and Recreation

Within the framework of the efforts aimed at utilizing the resources of the great lagoon of Cahora Bassa, fishing and recreational activities (in addition to transportation) are also planned.

A river transportation company is already being formed, with headquarters in Songo. The current activity of that company consists basically of the transport of passengers and cargo along the lagoon on a route of about 220 kilometers between Chicoa and Zumbo.

That activity is carried out by a fleet of five whaleboats distributed among various traffic zones between the two most distant points--Chicoa and Zumbo.

Although it is still inadequate, the activity of the existing fleet assumes fundamental importance for the transport of the people living along the banks as well as their production.

8711
CSO: 4742/232

COCONUT HARVEST SOLD TO HIGHEST BIDDER, NOT STATE

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 28 Jan 82 pp 8-9

[Article by Santos Artur]

[Excerpts] Some of the country's coconut oil and soap factories are in danger of shutting down this year before the end of the annual campaign and thus failing to meet the quotas defined in the Central State Plan. In addition to problems of a purely technical nature that could arise during the 1982 campaign, the major reason for this touchy situation is basically the shortage of enough coconut to keep the factories in operation. Incredible as it may seem, Zambezia Province (traditionally known as the "land of coconuts") cannot meet the needs of most, if not all, the factories in the country that use this raw material.

According to information gathered by DIARIO reporters, at this time the state sector and even the large private sector in Zambezia cannot supply copra to the nations' factories. All their production of (special) copra is going to the foreign market to bring in the foreign exchange needed by the country. In turn, the individual or family producer who has been supplying domestic industry is now facing a delicate dilemma. As a matter of profit, the individual producer prefers to sell the coconut (not yet converted into copra) to the commercial trucker and not to representatives of the factories producing raw oils and soaps.

In simple mathematical terms, the individual producer expends less effort and makes a much greater profit selling the raw coconut to the commercial trucker, who pays 2 or 3 meticals per coconut. This is not the case with the factory representatives, who pay 7.50 meticals per kilogram of prepared copra. To produce a kilogram of copra, it takes at least four or five coconuts, depending on their size. Moreover, there are several stages in the preparation of copra: separating the coconut from the shell, removing the kernel and then drying the coconut. Logically, the "balance" tends to swing more to the trucker (who makes a profit on the resale) then to the factory's copra buyer.

How This Happened

From contacts with individuals and administrators of factories and sectors linked to the copra sector in Zambezia, our reporters learned that the dilemma is explained as follows: there is still no effective and efficient control of the copra leaving the province.

Valdemiro Pires, representative of GERALCO (which manufactures raw coconut oil and soap in Zambezia) said: "We are now close to facing a major problem: a lack of copra to work with. The small stock of raw material (copra) in our warehouse is very low. It is not enough to see us through the whole season. We have already contacted our usual suppliers, and they tell us the copra shortage is basically because the raw coconut is indiscriminately being taken out of the province. The producers prefer to sell the raw coconut to the commercial trucker, who pays them more than we pay for the coconut turned into copra."

When our reporters asked why he did not make his price competitive with the commercial truckers, our source stressed that "even if it were practical, it would not be appropriate. It would only harm the public itself, which would have to pay higher retail prices for our products, specifically oil and soap. If we paid more to the copra producer, we would also have to increase the price of our products."

6362
CSO: 4742/228

READER'S COMPLAINT: FOOD, DRINKS ONLY FOR COOPERANTS

Maputo DOMINGO in Portuguese 7 Feb 82 p 28

[Letter to the editors from Maria das Dores]

[Text] This is the first time I have written to the newspaper, although I read the news reports in DOMINGO every day, especially the letters from readers.

What I am writing about is no news to anyone; it happens every day of the week in restaurants in this city, (but) this happened in the Rovuma Hotel.

I went with two of my fellow workers to have lunch at the Rovuma Hotel one very warm Saturday.

There were other people doing the same thing.

We waited until the others had finished eating to be served.

We brought our vouchers and went into the dining room.

Meanwhile, one of us had gone to buy two soft drinks and two beers to have with our meal. Other people were going to the counter to buy soft drinks and beer.

They were told: "We have no soft drinks or beer, only juice."

But we had seen soft drinks and beer on some tables and also in the other room.

We asked what was going on. Why did some people have the right to bear and soft drinks, and not others?

"Beer and soft drinks are reserved for cooperants and guests of the hotel," came the answer.

In fact, the cooperants who were there were drinking.

So we ate our roast beef and rice and drank water, but such water! It was warm, and it was really hot in there!

Everyone was talking about it, complaining here and there.

Some people asked the cooperants who were there to buy beer for them, and the cooperants bought it there.

A customer who works at NOTICIAS asked the waiter for a bottle of beer at the table. The waiter said he could arrange it, but the customer could not drink it there because beer and soft drinks were only served to cooperants and hotel guests.

Another gentleman asked for ice water; the reply was the same.

The customers at the hotel concluded that good food and beverages were only for the cooperants.

Since this is a party hotel and is for the workers, I think it should give good service to the workers who go there to eat, because most of the customers are workers who live some distance away, even outside the city. Besides, the prices are reasonable.

Can you tell the readers what this means?

Do the cooperants have more rights than a citizen?

If a Mozambican citizen wants to eat well and get good service, does he have to disguise himself as a cooperant?

Why is it that Mozambican citizens do not get good service at some restaurants, hotels and cafes?

Dear readers, I am not against cooperants; I am against the poor organization in the hotel establishments here in Maputo. I do not know why there should be discrimination in the treatment of customers--why cooperants should be treated one way and Mozambican citizens another way.

6362
CSO: 4742/228

BRIEFS

DPRK AGRICULTURAL ASSISTANCE--According to Radio Mozambique, King Sum Young, the DPRK's ambassador accredited to Mozambique, has announced in Beira that North Korean technicians and engineers will arrive in our country this year to work in the agricultural sector. According to his statements, the North Korean technicians are going to work in Cabo Delgado and Zambezia Provinces in connection with rice production and the irrigation systems. King Sum Young also said that by 1983, Mozambique will also receive technicians from his country to work in the fields of education, health, and industry. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 16 Feb 82 p 3] 11798

LONDON FRIENDSHIP CONFERENCE--Sources at the Ministry of Information announced in Maputo on Thursday that the committees for solidarity with the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique] in West European and North American countries are beginning their annual conference tonight in London. The 1982 conference being held in London is sponsored by MAGIC (Mozambique, Angola, Guinea-Bissau Information Center), the organization that coordinates the British people's activities for militant solidarity with the Mozambican people. Delegates from many West European and North American countries will continue until Monday to analyze the coordination of activity among the various committees for support of the RPM. Their activities range from the dissemination of information on the Mozambican Revolution to the collection of funds to support development projects in the RPM, specifically in Niassa. In addition to reviewing the situation with recruitment of technicians to work in Mozambique as cooperants, the conference will plan joint activities by the solidarity committees for next year and, in general, permit a broad exchange of experiences among those groups of Mozambique's friends. The official Mozambican delegation to the conference is headed by Armando Panguene, governor of Cabo Delgado Province, and includes Leite de Vasconcelos as representative of the AMASP [Mozambican Association for Friendship and Solidarity with Peoples] and Henry Matos of International Cooperation. In 1981, the annual conference of committees for solidarity with the RPM in West Europe and North America was held in Denmark. The site for next year's conference will be decided on at the current meeting in London. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 19 Feb 82 p 10] 11798

NRM ATTACK DESCRIBED--Thanks to his courageous action, an elderly train fireman named Meio-Dia Ndequerene was able to save a string of railroad cars worth 35,000 meticals in foreign exchange when armed NRM [Mozambique National Resistance] gangs surrounded and attacked the Central Mozambique Railroad's Inhaminga station on 30 January. During the attack, the group of bandits burned a freight train standing next to the string of passenger coaches, which the elderly fireman was able to remove from the site when the armed gangs approached to burn it as well. During the attack, the group fired on defenseless inhabitants, killing two citizens and kidnapping others. The bandits robbed commercial establishments and restaurants in the locality and also burned vehicles and motorized bicycles. Meio-Dia Ndequerene is married and a native of Cheringoma. He is 60 years old and has worked for the Mozambique Railroad for about 30 years. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 18 Feb 82 p 10] 11798

DELEGATIONS ABROAD--Three Mozambican delegations left Maputo yesterday for different destinations to carry out tasks related to the RPM's domestic and foreign policies. Headed for Berlin, the capital of the GDR, and London, the British capital, is a FRELIMO Party delegation led by Armando Panguene, member of the Central Committee. In those countries, the party delegation will participate in a meeting by the International Committee Against Apartheid and in a conference of the European groups for solidarity with the RPM. The conference will deal with matters related to the recruitment of cooperants to take part in development projects in the RPM and organize an informational campaign concerning Mozambican realities. Kuwait is the destination of Julio Carrilho, minister of public works and housing. He is going there to participate in the ceremony for signing a financial agreement on road construction. Lastly, Fernando Ganhao, rector of the Eduardo Mondlane University, left Maputo for Lisbon. While in Portugal, he will hold talks with universities in that European country, where the signing of agreements on technical-scientific cooperation is expected. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 16 Feb 82 p 10] 11798

STUDENTS IN GDR--Mozambican students taking a course in tropical agriculture in the GDR have successfully completed their first and second years of schooling, according to the ADN [GENERAL [East] GERMAN NEWS AGENCY], the press agency of that European socialist country. According to the same source, they will undergo a period of practical training in agricultural cooperatives during May and June. At the same time, 25 other Mozambicans are currently in the GDR being trained as farm mechanics under the cooperation agreements signed between the two countries for the training of cadres. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 9 Feb 82 p 10] 11798

BEIRA FISH CANNERY--Salisbury -- Zimbabwe will be involved, through the supply of equipment and personnel, in a Zimdollars 3,5-million fish canning and processing plant now being built in Beira. The project in Beira harbour is being built and engineered by Stal-Astra Refrigeration of Hamburg. Stal-Astra Refrigeration project engineer, Mr Ulrich Hartmann, visited Zimbabwe recently to place orders for hardware for the Beira project. The semi-official news agency, Ziana, reports that orders for re-inforcing steel and other hardware--worth about Zimdollars 170 000--will be placed during the year. "We will also be looking for coldroom insulation for pipes and hot water tanks and, in about February next year, will probably require Zimbabwe expertise for the erection of the building and the plant," said Mr Hartmann. The Beira canning and processing plant is being built with E E C aid and will be fully operational in about September 1983. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 Mar 82 p 24]

NRM GUERRILLAS KILLED--Salisbury--Mozambican soldiers recently killed 13 guerrillas of the Mozambique National resistance and captured seven others in an attack on a rebel base at Papatane, near Mabote, in central Mozambique, the official Mozambican news agency reported today. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 3]

NRM ACTIVITY REPORTED--Lisbon, February 25--A spokesman for the anti-Government Mozambican National Resistance Movement (MNRM) today said its forces burned public buildings and killed seven soldiers in the southern town of Funhaloro on Monday. A 60-strong force occupied the cattle and forestry town for 24 hours, during which they burned all its public buildings except for schools and a health centre, the spokesman said. The MNRM forces also burned several acres of forest, whose wood is notably used for railway line sleepers, he added. [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 26 Feb 82 p 29]

CONSTANT FOOD SHORTAGES--Yesterday, the Central Market of Maputo was in short supply. Except for clams, which flooded the fish stands, there was only a small quantity of fresh fish and dried shrimp. The rest of the stands were filled only with a few leafy vegetables (squash leaves) and wild fruits in addition to many products sold in small bundles. In the past few days there have been no potatoes, onions, tomatoes, cabbage, lettuce or other fresh produce. Only 150 kg of fish was traded at the Central Market, which is very little for the enormous human stream which gravitates there every day. Many wild fruits were available to the purchaser, also sold in varying quantities and costing at least 5 meticals. Vegetables, such as squash leaves (m'boa), are in very little demand and remain on the stands, because coconut, an effective substitute for peanuts, is no longer seen at our markets. [Excerpt] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 16 Feb 82 p 2] 8568

POOR OJM ACTIVITY--Ineffective activity by rank and file organizations, particularly by that of the youth sector, is one of the findings of the recent provincial seminar of the OJM [Mozambican Youth Organization] held in Sofala, according to information coming from Beira. The meeting, which has been going on since 16 February, also dealt with questions relating to a change in the procedure for admitting members into the organization and to the use of free time. Based on reports submitted during the seminar, attention was called to ineffective activity by rank and file organizations, particularly that of the youth. Lack of recreational programs and the nonutilization of young militants for voluntary work in the OJM sector were also questions discussed during the seminar. [Excerpt] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Feb 82 p 3] 8568

SWEDISH PUNGOE BRIDGE FINANCING--A communique from the Swedish Embassy in the People's Republic of Mozambique [RPM], published Monday in Maputo, states that, "The Swedish Government has decided to finance the construction of a bridge over the Pungoe River to replace temporarily a bridge destroyed by the movement supported by South Africa, MNR [National Revolutionary Movement], in November 1981." The construction, estimated at 6 million kronor (about 36 million meticals), is to be completed by May. "This aid was decided upon during a Swedish Government meeting held on Thursday. On that occasion, the Swedish Government, in response to a request by the RPM Government, decided to furnish additional support to Mozambique to minimize the effects of hunger caused by the frought which has been devastating the country during recent harvests," the communique further states. In this regard, Sweden has donated 10 million kronor (about 65 million meticals) for the purchase of corn from Zimbabwe. The communique specifies that the nutritional aid, like that supplied for the bridge over the Pungoe, "is in the form of a donation over and beyond the funds supplied as a part of the cooperative agreement for development." The same communique also discloses that, at the same government meeting, the Stockholm Government decided to supply nutritional aid to Tanzania, as is being supplied to Mozambique, and to supply meat to Poland amounting to 10 million kronor. [Text] [Maputo NOTICAS in Portuguese 9 Feb 82 p 1] 8568

DPRK RURAL SOCIALIZATION MOVIE--A team of three Korean film makers arrived in Maputo yesterday to film scenes on the daily life of the Mozambican peasant, their purpose being to produce a film on the struggle for socialization of the rural segment of the People's Republic of Mozambique. Speaking to NOTICIAS at the Maputo Airport, Kim Gui-fan, leader of the team. said the "his group has not yet arrived at any definite program with regard to the film, since the team wants first to discuss the matter with Mozambican leaders, but that the basic idea of the film is to take pictures illustrating the rural sector's struggle for socialization." He then went on to say, "To do this, my team expects to remain in Mozambique several days, and our project will certainly include other sectors where the struggle for economic freedom is underway." The filmmakers of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea are in Mozambique at the invitation of President Samora Machel sent to the DPRK Embassy in Maputo at the end of last year, the purpose being to have movie professionals of that country record pictures of the struggle being carried on by Mozambique's rural population to eliminate underdevelopment. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 9 Feb 82 p 10] 8568

VAST SALT RESERVE DISCOVERY--A vast underground table of salt water with over 50 percent salinity, which is higher than the average content of sea water, was recently discovered in Gaza Province, in the People's Republic of Mozambique. According to a study by SERLI (State Secretariat for the Limpopo-Incomaty Region Accelerated Development Program), the table contains about 350 million cubic meters of water, distributed over an area of 50 square kilometers. It is estimated that about 5 million tons of salt (the common name for sodium chloride--NaCl) can be extracted. In addition to salt, analyses already concluded have determined the presence of sodium carbonate and bicarbonate, with an average concentration of 0.5 kg per cubic meter, or an extractable quantity of 150,000 tons, for the first of these products, commonly known as soda. [Text] [Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 29 Jan 82 p 1] 6362

KOMSOMOL RAILROAD ASSISTANCE--Reconstruction of the Beira-Moatize rail line is expected to begin in 1983, with the support of the Soviet Leninist youth organization KOMSOMOL, in cooperation with Mozambican youth brigades. To arrange the details of its participation, a KOMSOMOL delegation has been in the city of Beira since 26 January. The delegation will go to the location where the 65 kilometers of the rail line will be reconstructed. The visiting delegation has already visited the maternity hospital in Dondo District, which was built by Russian and Mozambican youths and has been in operation for 5 months. [Text] [Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 29 Jan 82 p 3] 6362

BRITISH DROUGHT DONATION--A communique from the British Embassy in Maputo, released Tuesday, announced that in response to the appeal made by the Government of the People's Republic of Mozambique to the international community, the British Government is offering four 4-wheel drive trucks to help transport food and emergency items in Nampula and Cabo Delgado provinces. The vehicles, consigned to the Coordinating Council to Prevent and Combat Natural Disasters, were shipped on the vessel "Anielo," which left the port of Southampton, in southern England, on 16 February and is expected in Maputo on 12 March. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portugese 25 Feb 82 p 1] 8711

CUBAN MOVIE PRODUCER--"The cinema is a political weapon," said Santiago Alvarez on his arrival in Maputo. The internationally known documentary movie producer arrived yesterday afternoon in the Mozambican capital. Among other programs, Santiago Alvarez, who is a member of the Central Committee of the Cuban Communist Party and deputy to the National Assembly of the People's Government, is going to make a documentary about our country. The prominent Cuban movie producer is accompanied by a technical team comprised of Ivan Napoles, cameraman and a regular collaborator in a large number of his productions, and Hector Cabrera and Ricardo Torre. In statements to our newspaper in the presence of high-ranking cadres in the National Cinema Institute, Santiago Alvarez announced that "efforts are already under way to make a documentary about Mozambique, in Mozambique, for Mozambique." [Excerpt] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 25 Feb 82 p 10] 8711

CSO: 4742/232

NIGERIA FOREIGN MINISTER ON CHAD, SAHARA

AB082200 Niamey Domestic Service in French 1900 GMT 8 Mar 82

[Text] The head of state, Col Seyni Kountche, this afternoon held talks at military headquarters with the Nigerian minister of foreign affairs. At the end of the audience, Ishaya Audu told the Voice of the Sahel that he was the bearer of a message from the Nigerian head of state to his brother Col Seyni Kountche. During the audience, the Nigerian foreign minister discussed with President Kountche the Chadian and Western Saharan issues. Here is the statement made by the Nigerian minister:

[Begin recording in English fading into French translation] [Ishaya Audu] Indeed, I was received in audience by His Excellency President Kountche. As two neighboring and friendly countries, Nigeria and Niger hold such regular discussions to exchange viewpoints on issues of mutual interest. The main issue discussed was the question of Chad. I was charged with the mission of making a progress report on the situation in Chad to President Kountche, especially with respect to the pan-African peace-keeping force in Chad. As usual, President Kountche gave me wise advice concerning the difficult task of maintaining peace in that country. Secondly, the issue of the outcome of the recent OAU Ministerial Council meeting which was held in Addis Ababa came up for discussion. Some of the actions taken during this ministerial meeting endanger the existence and the very life of the OAU. This is a subject of deep concern for all African countries for they do not want such problems to crop up each time. We are somehow trying to harmonize our viewpoints as friendly and brotherly countries and it is in this context that we held discussions with His Excellency President Seyni Kountche.

[Question] Mr Minister, recently some decisions were reached at the OAU summit concerning the restoration of peace in Chad. But as we know, the Chadian Government has rejected the OAU proposals. Could we know the future of Chad and whether there is another way to find a lasting solution to the Chadian problem?

[Ishaya Audu] I am not sure of the rejection of proposals made by the OAU heads of state and government. Actually, there is, in practice, a cease-fire. For it is Hissene Habre who has the upper hand in the situation and Hissene Habre has accepted the cease-fire proposals which were formulated. At the beginning, I must admit there was a rejection of these proposals but I think that the Chadian authorities are responsible and they know the solution which is likely to lead to peace in Chad. As far as we are concerned, we have to try to work out the conditions conducive to creating a peaceful atmosphere so that the belligerent factions can come around the conference table to discuss the issue in order to reach a peaceful solution. I think that the only peaceful solution to the issue is to be found at the conference table and not a military solution on the battlefield.

[Question] Mr Minister, we want to take up another problem facing Africa now, the issue of Western Sahara. With the decision made by the OAU secretary general to have the SDAR admitted as full member of the OAU, what is Nigeria's stand on this issue?

[Answer] Article 28 of the OAU Charter stipulated [word indistinct] the powers of the secretary general to admit a country as a full member of the OAU, the continental organization. The first condition, however, is that the country in question should be a sovereign and independent country. As yet, as far as I know, the SDAR does not fulfill any of the stipulated conditions. Therefore, there are no legal grounds upon which the secretary general can stand to defend his admission of the SDAR as a full member in any case, the charter does not give him such powers. Only the heads of state and government meeting can reach a decision by a two-third majority vote to make such an admission in the case of a country which is not sovereign and independent. Nigeria's position is in line with the OAU Charter. You see, there are two successive stages. The first is that it is only when the country in question is sovereign and independent that the secretary general can admit it by a simple majority. So far, as the secretary general did not conform with the provisions of the charter, we Nigerians consider his action to be illegal. [End recording].

CSO: 4719/656

FOREIGN MINISTER ON CHAD, POLISARIO

EA061522 Nairobi Domestic Service in English 1000 GMT 6 Mar 82

[Text] The Nigerian minister for foreign affairs, Prof Ishaya Audu, arrived in Kenya last night with a special message from President Shehu Shagari to the current chairman of the OAU, His Excellency President Daniel Arap Moi.

Addressing pressmen on his arrival at the Jomo Kenyatta International Airport, Prof Audu said he had been instructed by President Shagari to meet the OAU chairman and discuss with him the recent OAU Council of Ministers meeting in Addis Ababa. The Nigerian minister told the press that, like the current chairman, Nigeria is concerned about the integrity of the organization, adding that it is important that Nigeria shares and compares notes to ensure the organization's integrity is not marred. Professor Audu said part of the message also concerned the question of Chad.

On the question of Western Sahara, the Nigerian minister said a peaceful solution of the conflict between POLISARIO and Morocco would be affected seriously if things are allowed to get out of hand following the admission of POLISARIO as a member of the OAU by the Council of Ministers in Addis Ababa. He recalled that the Implementation Committee on Western Sahara has been meeting at a summit level to try and objectively resolve the crisis peacefully. Professor Audu said anything done below this level to try and preempt efforts of the heads of state who form the Implementation Committee is going to complicate matters. He said seating POLISARIO in the OAU is not going to bring peace in Western Sahara.

Talking on the Chadian crisis and President Goukouni's refusal to comply with the OAU resolutions to resolve the issue, Professor Audu said President Oueddei's stated position is not final. He said a military solution as advocated by President Oueddei will not solve any problem in Chad. Instead, he said, that will only cause bitterness. Professor Audu said he was sure President Oueddei will understand the heads of state, who met as a Standing Committee on Chad, are people who have very serious concern in respect to genuine peace in Chad.

The Nigerian minister was met on arrival by the permanent secretary in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Mr Shamalla; Nigerian high commissioner to Kenya, Mr Nuhu Muhammed; the acting chief of protocol, Mr Denis Afande, and other senior officials of the Foreign Ministry and the Nigerian Embassy.

CSO: 4700/900

LESSON TO BE LEARNED FROM CHADIAN CRISIS

AB091300 Lagos International Service in English 0930 GMT 9 Mar 82

[Station commentary]

[Text] The present impasse in Chad after the special OAU meeting in Nairobi last month calls for another look at the situation in that part of the African continent. At the Nairobi meeting, the OAU lined off whole-hearted support for the Government of National Unity [GUNT] and President Goukouni Oueddei seemed to [word indistinct] as priority was placed on a firm commitment to a political solution; that is, reconciliation of the GUNT with dissident Hissene Habre, with a time table for a cease-fire, elections and an OAU withdrawal by June. These were quite unacceptable to President Goukouni Oueddei. Observers see the OAU's change of tact as clearly being dictated by the impossibility of maintaining the OAU international peacekeeping force in Chad if no one is willing to pay for it and by the mounting evidence of an increasingly tense military situation.

The estimated cost of the OAU force until the June withdrawal has been put at over $150 million. There are also contradictory reports from France about the continued military assistance of Mitterrand and his government for Goukouni Oueddei. Reports published in a number of French newspapers claim that France ceased to supply arms to the GUNT after the OAU decision calling for a cease-fire. As it is, the situation in Chad presents a challenge to the OAU and independent Africa. If the organization wants to maintain its image in the eyes of the world, it should not allow the present state of affairs in Chad to escalate beyond the present proportions for two reasons.

Firstly, an escalation in the fighting has the potential of involving the OAU forced beyond a peacekeeping role. Secondly, continued fighting will provide a justification for the initial deployment of Libyan troops in Chad, while Colonel al-Qadhdhafi will rightly claim a diplomatic score for his wanting to bring peace and stability to that country.

The question now is why Africa cannot find the political will and coherence to solve the Chadian problem. Naturally, the OAU, which had all along insisted on the need to find an African solution to the crisis, was viewed as the rightful source to provide the desired relief. It is against this background that the situation in Chad further emphasizes the need of an African high command as a standing body of the OAU. The logistics and financial problems now being raised could easily have been eliminated with the presence of an African high command. It is mostly unlikely that most independent African states are in a position to provide the requested military aid and this, in fact, does not arise from a failure to appreciate the unfortunate plight of Chad.

The truth is that majority of them are not capable of mobilizing their defense ability within a short space of time. An important reason for this is the economic realities of most African states. In fact, there would have been no cause for Libya to send troops to Chad if such command was already in existence. It will, therefore, be stated that one of the most important lessons of the Chadian crisis is the renewed need to constitute an African high command for the maintenance of peace in any troubled African country where the occasion arises. A standing African force will definitely serve more useful purpose for Africa than ad hoc bodies constituted to deal with specific situations.

CSO: 4700/900

KADUNA STATE INDICTED FOR DEVELOPING ONLY 'PRIVILEGED' AREAS

Kaduna SUNDAY NEW NIGERIAN in English 28 Feb 82 p 4

[Article by Emman Udoka]

[Text]

RESIDENTS of Malali village in Kaduna suburban have indicted the state government for confining urban development to areas where privileged persons reside, while their own area remains virtually abandoned.

After "waiting in vain" for years, residents of the village are now asking the Kaduna City Development Board, KCDB, to tell them when the amenities provided by the state government in other parts of Kaduna town will reach their area.

Narrating the tale of neglect in the area to the Sunday New Nigerian at the weekend, a resident of Malali village, Alhaji Bawa Dan Gode, revealed that since the inception of the present administration in 1979, the KCDB has not built a single road in the area.

According to him, the few streets and gutters in the village were opened through communal labour, after the residents had realised that they had no other alternative.

He noted with concern that the tarring of the Waterworks Road, which links Malali village with Kaduna town, has been stopped at the GRA on Rabah Road, adding that the remaining portion of this road link in the village has deteriorated into a dusty laterite road.

Also narrating the plight of residents of the village to the SNN, a retired civil servant, Malam Garba Aliyu, disclosed that "we usually contribute 40 to 50 Naira to hire refuse collection vehicles because the services of the KCDB do not reach our area."

Malam Garba alleged that two weeks ago, three residents of the village contributed 30 Naira each to a KCDB grader driver for the grading of a road linking the area with the Malali Low Cost Housing Estate. "But up till now, the grader driver has not turned up for the job," he disclosed.

Saying that residents of Malali village were still crying for a primary school and a market, Malam Garba wondered why the area has continued to suffer neglect, in spite of the siting of the Federal Government College, National Steel Council office and senior staff quarters of Radio Nigeria and New Nigerian Newspapers Limited there.

In the same vein, shop owners in the area are now complaining aloud as their businesses continue to suffer as a result of incessant power failures, growing refuse dumps, and clouds of dust from untarred roads.

CSO: 4700/916

NIGER STATE DEMANDS COMPENSATION FOR MINNA AIRPORT

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 26 Feb 82 p 32

[Article by Ibrahim A. Biu]

[Text]

THE Niger State Government has demanded for the payment of about eight million Naira compensation from the Nigeria Airports Authority (NAA).

The amount demanded was what the state government had spent so far on the construction of the Minna Airport before it was taken over by the Federal Government last year.

Announcing this in Minna yesterday while exchanging views with members of the board of directors of the authority, the state governor, Alhaji Awwal Ibrahim said that nothing short of the payment of total compensation would be acceptable by his administration.

The governor also expressed concern about the lack of activity on the project since it was taken over by the NAA. He said the state government should have made a substantial progress on the project but for the take-over.

Alhaji Awwal further said that the state was losing alot due to lack of airways transport facilities throughout the state. According to him, people who visit the state have to travel long distances on bad roads.

Replying, the chairman of the board, Chief Evan Enwerem assured the governor that compensations due to the state would be payed without delay.

He, however, said that before this could be done, the state government would have to comply with certain procedures which included the submission of details about the project, such as contract documents and payment vouchers.

He assured that necessary steps would be taken to commence work on the project.

Officials who accompanied the chairman included the secretary to the board, Malam Ibrahim Saidu and Mr. S.O. Oputa, the board's public relations manager.

CSO: 4700/917

FOOD CROP LOSSES IN BORNO STATE COST 211 MILLION NAIRA

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 27 Feb 82 pp 1, 7

[Article by Sani Haruna]

[Text]

A TOTAL of 992,900 tonnes of produce estimated at a cost of 211 million Naira were destroyed as a result of drought which ravaged many farmlands in Borno State last year.

Speaking at the New Nigerian at an interview, the state Commissioner for Agriculture, Alhaji Saleh Maina, said the continued substantial failure of crops last year soon after the crippling effect of the drought disaster which struck in 1980 has left the people and especially the farming community in total ruins.

He pointed out that the rampant outbreaks of quelea birds in almost all the local government areas also worsened matters. He said crops like millet, rice and guineacorn which managed to survive the 1981 scourge were unfortunately attacked by quelea birds which devastated the farms

Alhaji Sale described the situation in Borno State as 'problematic and sympathetic'. As a result, acute shortage of food grains has hit the markets all over the state while prices have spiralled and were still spiralling.

The commissioner said in December 1979, for instance, a tonne of guinecorn sold at 199 Naira but in December last year, the price went up to 452 Naira. Millet also sold for 492 Naira per tonne in December last year as against 244 Naira in 1979, while the price of maize rose from 236 Naira to 380 Naira per tonne for the same period.

Alhaji Sale said due to continued drought and subsequent crop failures for the past two seasons, farmers have lost their farming capital and have no adequate seedlings for planting in the forthcoming season.

The commissioner said as a result of the pathetic situation, farmers in the state have been unable to repay their borrowed capitals while local governments found it difficult to obtain repayments of agricultural credit loans from farmers.

The commissioner said prospects for crop production for the 1982 season were gloomy adding that with the present plight, farmers would be constrained to utilise whatever little they have produced for domestic use.

Already, he said, the state government has compiled a comprehensive report on the drought situation and has made a number of recommendations to the Federal Government for assistance. These include the procurement of grains from the Nigerian Grains Board for sale at subsidised rates to the affected farmers.

The state request also included the provision of 10 million Naira agricultural credit loans to affected farmers during the 1982 season, two years interest-free grace for repayment of the 2.9 million Naira loan given to farmers during 1980-1981 season and procurement of 46 four wheel-drive lorries for fertiliser distribution.

The Federal Government is also requested to provide two helicopters for scouting, surveying and controlling of outbreaks of quelea birds, locusts and grasshoppers and means for logistics for timely detection, monitoring and control of pests.

CSO: 4700/917

PAPERS ANALYZE HANDLING OF NEPA STRIKE

AB051132 Lagos International Service in English 0830 GMT 5 Mar 82

[Press review]

[Excerpt] The NIGERIAN HERALD, the NIGERIAN TIDE, the NIGERIAN STANDARD and the CHRONICLE focus attention on NEPA [National Electric Power Authority]. The four papers condemn NEPA for not giving the people a notice before throwing the nation into total darkness for 7 days.

The HERALD blames the management of the authority for the manner it handled the post-strike negotiations with the workers union. The paper calls on the authority not to waste time seeking ways to end NEPA's problems.

Next is the TIDE, which says the situation where a group of public servants could hold the nation's life to ransom is by no means indispensable, especially when the functions could be performed by other bodies. The paper therefore suggests that the nation begins now to seriously consider the decentralization of NEPA.

The CHRONICLE observed that the effects of NEPA's action on the nation and citizens is enormous, but if Nigeria had a reliable data collection system to quantify the economic losses during the period, the result would have been frightening. Although the paper argues that one of the essential ingredients of a democratic system is the right of workers to demand better conditions of service, it condemns their action and says they have contravened the essential services act of 1976. The CHRONICLE feels the time has come to stop further disruption of essential services and calls on the legislature to enforce the law banning strikes in some government parastatals on essential services.

In its view, the STANDARD feels that the sad episode will give everyone the opportunity to think over the security and other implications of the dependence on a single source of electricity supply and distribution. The paper urges the National Assembly to immediately set in motion the legislative machinery for amending that section of the constitution which gives NEPA a monopoly of electricity power generation and distribution. Another way of enforcing some series of efficiency into NEPA, says the paper, is for the liberalization of the clause on electric power distribution, transmission and generation by allowing other companies to compete with it.

CSO: 4700/900

STRIKES CAUSE LOSS OF TWO MILLION MAN DAYS

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 27 Feb 82 pp 1, 7

[Article by Suleiman Dangana]

[Text]

NIGERIA lost more than two million 'man days' as a result of industrial strikes between January 1, 1981 and February 23, this year.

A total of 366,323 workers from the public and private sectors of the economy took part in the industrial crises during the period under review.

A National Trade Disputes Chart shows that the country recorded 178 strike actions during the period under review, out of which 90 were settled between the employers of labour and the workers while 188 disputes led to strikes.

The break-down of the chart showed that Lagos State, topped others with the highest in industrial crises of 99 strikes, out of which 53 were settled.

According to the chart, the only state in the federation which recorded no strike action at all was Niger State.

Bendel State recorded 41, out of which 18 were settled excluding the present teachers' strike action, while Kwara State had 26, out of which two were settled.

The states that recorded lowest industrial strikes in the each [as printed]

Ogun had 8 strikes out of which 5 were settled while Bauchi recorded 10 strikes with one settled.

Oyo had 21 industrial crises with seven settled, Borno 24 with four settled; Rivers 23, one settled and Cross Rivers 19 strikes out of which eight were settled.

Out of the strikes recorded during the period under review, three strikes resulted in lock-outs

CSO: 4700/916

POLYTECHNIC STUDENTS IN SIXTH WEEK OF STRIKE

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 27 Feb 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Go Back to Classes"]

[Text] THE boycott of lectures by Polytechnic students is now into its sixth week or so and with little sign that they will call it off. The Federal Government has spoken on the matter and apparently has decided that a dialogue with the students is a waste of time. The Minister of Education, Dr. Sylvester Ugoh said on Monday, that the students' 11-point demand was unrealistic. That, of course, was not the same as saying that the students do not have a good case. As we said when the boycott started (NN 15/1/82), polytechnic students need every encouragement the country can give them considering our technological needs. No doubt the authorities have been doing their very best, but the situation in our polytechnics is still far from the ideal. For example, they certainly can do with a lot more money than they now get. Too, there is no reason to continue to treat technicians as second-rate engineers. They are simply not engineers and should therefore be in a class all of their own.

Unfortunately for their good cause, the students' union has been rather frivolous in its demands and unrealistic in its deadlines. Happily, however, the Federal Government has been doing what it can about their problems while at the same time studiously ignoring their union. According to Dr. Ugoh, the GL. 14 ceiling for HND holders in the public sector is already being reviewed. Also the bodies that regulate the practice of engineering in the country are looking into the ways and means of making engineers out of technicians. Of course it is impossible to meet all of the students' demands, even such reasonable ones as reinstating the federal matching grants to state polytechnics. It is neither fair nor right to make the Federal Government the whipping boy of states that create polytechnics (or universities) without giving thought to the size of their own pockets.

The students should go back to their classes. They have nothing to lose but disgrace at the next sessional examinations.

CSO: 4700/917

HYDROELECTRIC POWER PROJECT SOON IN GEMBU

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 25 Feb 82 p 16

[Text]

THE Federal Government is to build a major hydro-electric power project in Gembu on the Mambilla Plateau in Gongola State. Contract for the construction of the project estimated at one billion Naira is to be signed next year.

When developed, the Gembu hydro-electric power project would have an installed capacity of 1,250 megawatts of electricity. With the delay in the take-off of the proposed three billion Naira Lokoja Dam which has potential of producing about 2,000 megawatts, the Gembu project is expected to be the biggest hydro-electric power generation in the country.

The Minister for Mines and Power, Alhaji Mohammed Ibrahim Hassan said in Yola yesterday, that about 15,000 people would be displaced at the site of the proposed project in Gembu.

The minister explained that the development of an alternative hydro-electric generation project on the Mambila Plateau would ease the present heavy concentration and dependence on River Niger for hydro-electric power generation in the country.

Alhaji Mohammed asserted that the Gembu project would be purely hydro-electric in nature and would therefore be pursued by NEPA.

The minister explained that the cost of compensation, resettlement and rehabilitation schemes as well as chances of social upheaval would also be reviewed and assured that all those affected by the project would be adequately compensated and resettled.

Alhaji Mohammed said that frequent black-outs and the resultant hardship due to transmission problems would be obviated when the potentials of the hydro-electric power project were fully developed.

CSO: 4700/917

DISCREPANCY SEEN IN AUTOMOBILE IMPORT LICENSE REGULATIONS

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 25 Feb 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Muddled"]

[Text] WHEN we criticised the Minister for Commerce, Alhaji Bello Maitama Yusuf for being liberal to a fault with import licences (NN 17/2/82), he probably thought we were being grossly unfair to him. He could say that the problem of the vehicle assembly plants, for example, was partly of their own making in the sense that they price their goods out of the consumers' pockets; and he could be partially correct. Too, smuggling, incessant power failures and industrial discord must have taken their own toll on the entire manufacturing sector. But all this, we would have thought, was the more reason why the ministry needed to be very stingy with its import licences.

For the avoidance of doubt, we are not in the least advocating a blind protectionist policy. Naturally, these vehicle assembly plants and other manufacturers would love nothing better. And it could be that Volkswagen (VW) in particular has been taking us all for a ride each time it laments over the slow-down in its sales figures. Alhaji Bello has in fact said so in effect. He has told the Senate Labour Committee that contrary to its claims of losses, VW has in fact been making huge profits. He said it has been operating a secret external account which contradicted the internal one. The minister was in other words saying that his ministry has nothing to do with any sales problems that may be facing locally assembled vehicles and that VW's claims in particular are false. Unfortunately, the ministries of Finance and Industry do not seem to believe that VW is telling lies. Otherwise they would not have announced a slash in the import duty on completely knocked down VW parts from 25 per cent to 15.5 per cent.

It is therefore, either that Alhaji Bello is right and we are allowing ourselves to submit to subtle blackmail by VW or the ministries of Commerce and Industry have not been comparing notes as they should. Whichever way it is, it is obvious that the consumer and of course the entire economy can only be the worse for it. We definitely need to be more clear-headed about our policy on import substitution.

CSO: 4700/917

BRICK INDUSTRY TO BE BUILT IN ABUJA

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 24 Feb 82 p 17

[Article by Mich Rei's]

[Text]

A 25-MILLION Naira brick industry is to be built in Abuja to provide suitable building materials and speed up work on the new Federal Capital Territory.

This was made known on Monday by the Minister of Mines and Power, Alhaji Mohammed Hassan, while commissioning the six million Naira Brick Industry at Bagauda in Kano State.

Alhaji Mohammed said that the Federal Government was committed to establishing a brick industry in all the states of the federation to provide the necessary materials for the development of the government's housing policy.

The minister said the provision of the brick plants would help reduce our dependence on cement for the massive construction programme of both the federal and state governments.

He said that the idea of the brick plants was first conceived to supplement the housing strategy in the country at a time the nation was running short of cement, adding that arrangements were being made for massive importation of the commodity.

He said that houses built with bricks proved to be more durable and superior than cement buildings.

Alhaji Mohammed announced that the brick plant with seven others already completed in Jos, Kaduna, Enugu, Ibadan, Lagos had a production capacity of about 15 million normal size bricks.

Also speaking during the occasion, the General Manager of the Nigerian Mining Corporation, Alhaji Rilwanu Lukman, said the brick industries in the country were finding it difficult to sell their products.

He urged the Federal Government as the greatest client in construction industry to patronise the brick plants.

CSO: 4700/917

BRIEFS

UNAUTHORIZED LAND ALLOCATION--Unauthorised non-governmental bodies and individuals, have been warned to desist from the habit of allocating statutory rights of occupancy to any person in respect of all land within and outside Ajaokuta in Kwara State. This warning was contained in a press release issued from the Ministry of Housing and Environment in Ilorin recently. The release alleged that some private organisations and individuals have illegally entered upon and occupied some parcels of land, within the area set aside for the iron steel project and its ancilliary works, under the pretence of allocation permits issued to them by some unauthorised government agents. It pointed out that, the state governor is the only legal authority that can grant statutory rights of occupancy to any person in respect of all land within the state. It further enjoined private organisations and individuals to stop patronising these dubious characters in their own interest. 'Any transaction or instrument which purports to confer on, or rest in any one, any interest or right over any land within the state, other than in accordance with the provision of the Land Use Act 1978, No. 6 shall be null and void and such guarantee would be liable for removal therefrom, the release added. [Text] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 26 Feb 82 p 21]

DELAY IN COMMISSIONING AIRPORT--The delay in commissioning the six million Naira Yola Airport Terminal Complex in Gongola State is now a source of disenchantment to the state government. The Deputy Governor of the state, Mr. Wilberforce Juta, has similarly expressed concern over the slow pace of the installation of communication and landing facilities, electrical works, as well as other necessary accessories and equipment. Speaking to members of the sub-committee on aviation of the House of Representatives in Yola, at the weekend, Mr. Wilberforce urged them to prevail on the contractor to expedite action on the project because of its socio-economic importance to the people of the state. Mr. Wilberforce said, although the construction of the building complex which has faiclities for offices, V.I.P. and general passenger lounge as well as a power sub-station was complexed, the project is now a glorified edifice. The Chairman of the sub-committee, Mr. J. K. Fadeyi, announced that, the Yola Airport would be provided with all the necessary facilities when completed. [Text] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 23 Feb 82 p 9]

PROPOSED AIR FORCE BASE--An appeal has gone to the Federal Government to site the proposed Airforce Base and Training School meant for Sokoto at Zauro in Birnin-Kebbi Local Government Area of Sokoto State, but not to convert the

Sokoto Old Airport as earlier scheduled. Making the appeal at Sokoto Airport shortly before leaving for Lagos, Alhaji Bello Marshall, an executive member of the National Party of Nigeria (NPN) said Zauro Airstrip built by the late Premier of Northern Nigerian would be more suitable for the base. He said facilities worth about a million Naira are currently rusting away at the Zauro Airstrip. Alhaji Bello said apart from the infrastructures there, the control tower and other facilities are still serviceable. He added that there was more room for future expansion there than in Sokoto. [Text] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 24 Feb 82 p 27]

SENATE: NO INDEPENDENT CANDIDATES--Lagos, 8 Mar (NAN)--The Senate today blocked the chances of independent candidates to contest elections in Nigeria. During consideration of an amendment sponsored by Senator A. Zuofa, NPN-Rivers, demanding that clause 28 (2) of the electoral bill, which provides for independent candidates be deleted, the senators voted 36-32 against independent candidates. The amendment generated a stormy debate in the Senate as members lobbied each other for and against the amendment admist shouts of no, yes. The House of Representatives, in passing the electoral bill, made provisions for independent candidates. [Excerpts] [AB091122 Lagos NAN in English 1030 GMT 9 Mar 82]

PAPERS ON GHANAIAN RELATIONS--The NIGERIAN STANDARD and the NIGERIAN CHRONICLE write on the relationship between Nigeria and Ghana. The NIGERIAN STANDARD believes the message from Flight Lt Jerry Rawlings to President Shehu Shagari offers a convenient opportunity for Nigeria to appraise its response to realities in Ghana. The paper is of the view that the prevailing situation in that country shows the general disatisfaction which Ghanaians had come to have with the Limann administration. As such, contends the STANDARD, Nigeria has no option but to recosndier its official policy toward the Rawlings regime in Ghana. On its part, the CHRONICLE is happy that rumors of an imaginary invasion of Ghana from a base in Nigeria was handled with tact. The paper also [words indistinct] that the re-establishment of good faith and understanding between the two countries was confirmed by the visit of Rawlings' delegation to the country. The CHRONICLE advises Nigeria not to worry about who rules Ghana, but help her in her moment of need. [Text] [AB101321 Lagos International Service in English 1130 GMT 10 Mar 82]

'NATIONAL CONCORD' ON OPEC--The NATIONAL CONCORD focuses attention on the meeting of oil ministers of OPEC scheduled for the 19th of this month. The paper advises OPEC to wake up and meet the challenges posed by the West by getting all members to agree on production quotas to back up their price fixing policy. According to it, the secret to the oil game is cohesion and not competition, given the fact that they all share many identical socio-cultural, political and economic problems. They must also devise necessary economic and political sanctions against OPEC and non-OPEC members found collaborating with the West and the United States to destabilize the oil market. To remove the danger posed by too much dependence on oil as the only source of revenue, the CONCORD appeals to the federal government to move quickly to tap other resources to generate enough revenue for the government. [Excerpt] [AB111124 Lagos International Service in English 0930 GMT 11 Mar 82]

CSO: 4700/899

TALKS WITH CAPE VERDE AIM AT EASING IMMIGRANTS' SITUATION

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 30 Jan 82 p 2

[Communique of the Ministry of Health and Social Affairs, Praia, 18 Jan 82]

[Text] It is generally known that there are many Cape Verdeans in the Democratic Republic of Sao Tome and Principe who for various reasons during the colonial period had to leave Cape Verde.

Since one of the concerns of our government is to aid all nationals residing abroad--which is demonstrated specifically by the recent opening of new consular services--a parliamentary and government delegation went to the Democratic Republic of Sao Tome and Principe, staying from 23 February to 2 March 1981, to discuss with officials of Sao Tome and Principe the situation of the Cape Verdean community in that fraternal country.

As a follow-up to that mission, a delegation of the Democratic Republic of Sao Tome and Principe, headed by the chairman of the National People's Assembly, Comrade Alda do Espirito Santo, visited this country from 6 to 11 January 1982 to continue the talks held at that time.

Although there are countries or regions where our communities live in a stable situation, there are some places and areas where situations of privation prevail as a result of the current world economic recession, which compel them subjectively to wish to return.

We know that the migratory movement is a universal phenomenon and that its causes are variable, and that it is a right of every Cape Verdean to live in his native land, and the duty of the government, reiterating the political principles that guide it, to create the minimum conditions essential to the realization of that inalienable right.

It is that spirit that the work between the two delegations proceeded.

Thus, following deep reflection on the historic foundations of the Cape Verdean community in Sao Tome and the cultural and blood ties that it originated, on the ties forged during the national liberation struggle and on the identity of views on the building of society, it was concluded that it was necessary to preserve the dignity of national independence, which requires the establishment of an atmosphere of frank and open dialog.

The relationship of the flights of emigration to the agricultural crises in Cape Verde and the economic situation prevailing in the territories that received that emigration were also reviewed and the development of the situation during the course of time was analyzed.

The national independence of Cape Verde and the prospects of socioeconomic development by themselves constitute the mobilizing factor for the people, who left under degrading conditions and in the status of "Contract Worker," to wish to return to their country.

During the meetings, many concrete problems encountered by the Cape Verdean worker in Sao Tome were also listed and discussed. Prominent among them are working, housing and food conditions, guarantee of social security rights acquired, and the role of consular representation in resolving those problems.

Without losing sight of the overriding interests of the Democratic Republic of Sao Tome and Principe, and in light of the right of every Cape Verdean who wants to return to Cape Verde to do so, the two delegations reached the following conclusions:

1. To return to Cape Verde all the Cape Verdean nationals who wish to do so.

2. After studying the basic reasons for the insistence on returning, to effect a significant improvement in the living conditions of the Cape Verdean workers who remain in Sao Tome.

3. To improve communications between Cape Verde and the Democratic Republic of Sao Tome and Principe for the establishment of regular shipping and air lines to permit the workers residing in Sao Tome to visit Cape Verde whenever they wish. When possible, to send Cape Verdean workers to Sao Tome.

4. To expedite cultural exchange between the two countries.

5. To permit the transfer from Sao Tome of various products, including the agricultural sector.

6. To expedite the process of remitting retirement pensions of workers who have already returned to Cape Verde.

7. To foster contacts between the consular representation of Cape Verde and the central and local officials of Sao Tome in the solution of the problems encountered by the Cape Verdean community.

8. Joint action by the two countries within the framework of international organizations with a view to obtaining the material means necessary to support return operations.

9. To establish meetings every 6 months, or whenever necessary, between counterpart delegations of the two countries to analyze the process and establish directives.

10. To promote the exchange of a report and information on the development of the situation.

Ministry of Health and Social Affairs, Prais, 18 January 1982.

8711
CSO: 4742/232

BRIEFS

SAHARA OPPOSITION LEADER ARRIVES--Mr Lahusi Sid Ahmed, secretary general of the Saharan People's Revolutionary Front, arrived in Dakar within the framework of a tour of Africa during which he will give information and explanations. He indicated that he will take the opportunity to submit to African leaders the program of his movement opposed to the Polisario Front which is accused of losing all credibility because it is mostly made up of people from outside the Sahara. The six-point program calls, among other things, for the expulsion from among the Saharans in Tindouf of foreign nationals having no links with the Saharan people. They include, in particular, Algerian Saharans, Mauritanians and Moroccan oppositionists. It also calls for the setting up of an International Inquiry Commission to determine the true Saharans from the wrong ones and their (?expulsion) from the refugee camps. The program also calls for the holding of a referendum in which only Saharans whose origin as Western Saharan citizens is proved will take part, as well as for guarantees from neighboring countries--Morocco, Algeria and Mauritania--that they will respect the choice of the Saharan people expressed in the general free and (?democratic) referendum. [Text] [AB052237 Dakar Domestic Service in French 2200 GMT 5 Mar 82]

PRESIDENT VISITS SAUDI ARABIA--Head of state Abdou Diouf leaves Dakar this evening for Saudi Arabia for a 2-day official visit at the invitation of King Khalid ibn 'Abd al-Aziz. This visit is the second visit of the head of state to that country since he assumed power. Abdou Diouf had earlier taken part in the al-Ta'if summit [words indistinct]. Cooperation between Saudi Arabia and Senegal will certainly be the topic of the talks which President Abdou Diouf will have with Abd al-'Aziz. This cooperation continues to strengthen in the economic and cultural fields. Saudi Arabia is taking part in a dam project on the Senegal River which is common to Mali, Mauritania and our country. It is also contributing to the construction of a dam in southern Senegal, and it awards scholarships to our students. It also gives aid to the Islamic Institute of Senegal. This visit will further strengthen cooperation between Senegal and Saudi Arabia. The head of state will be accompanied by Moustapha Niasse, minister of state for foreign affairs; Ousmane Seck, minister for economy and finance; Mamoudou Toure, minister for plan and cooperation; Moustapha Cisse, Senegal's ambassador to Saudi Arabia and Moustapha (Sigue), vice president of the National Assembly as well as several top officials. [Text] [AB070749 Dakar Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 6 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/656

BRIEFS

UK MILITARY DELEGATION--Victoria, 8 Mar (AFP)--A British military mission has arrived here for high level talks with representatives of the Seychelles people's defence forces. The NATION DAILY said the two-man delegation was returning a visit made by Seychelles Defence Minister Ogilvy Berlouis to Britain last year. The arrival of the British delegation yesterday coincided with the departure of a Tanzanian people's defence forces delegation following a week's visit. [Text] [AB080926 Paris AFP in English 0911 GMT 8 Mar 82]

CSO: 4700/904

JAALLE SIAD RECEIVES NORTH KOREAN DEPUTY PREMIER

Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 26 Feb 82 p 2

[Text] Mogadishu, Thrusday — The General Secretary of the SRSP, President of the SDR, Jaalle Mohamed Siad Barre, has last Wednesday received at his residence here the visiting Deputy Premier of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, Comrade Jong Jun Gi.

On the occasion, Jaalle Siad and the Korean Deputy Premier discussed the further strengthening of bilateral relations and mutual co-operation, and exchanged views on current world problems, particularly the Horn of Africa issue.

Comrade Jong conveyed to President Siad a personal message from Comrade Kim Il Sung, President of the PDRK.

Jaalle Siad expressed his thanks to the government and people of the PDRK for their generous assistance to Somalia, particularly in the field of development programmes and requested comrade Jong to convey his greetings and best wishes to President Kim Il Sung, the government and people of the PDRK.

In reply, Comrade Jong voiced his appreciation of the tangible achievements realised in Somalia during the revolutionary era. He also praised friendly relations existing between the SDR and the PDRK.

The First Vice President of the SDR, Jaalle Mohamed Ali Samater, also received on Tuesday at his office here the Deputy Primier of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, Comrade Jong Jun Gi.

On the occasion, Jaalle Samater and the Korean Deputy Primier discussed the means and ways of further promoting the good relations based on, bilateral co-operation and mutual respect that exist between SDR and the PDRK, and exchanged views on other topics of common interest to both countries.

Meanwhile the PDRK delegation returned here on Wednesday afternoon following their tour of the Lower Shabelle Region.

While there, the Korean Deputy Premier and his delegation toured the Sand Dunes Stabilization Scheme near Shalambot where they were briefed on its history and accomplishments by the Party Committee Secretary of the Lower Shabelle Region, Jaalle Said Bile Adan.

Jaalle Saeed pointed out to the Korean delegation the dangers posed by the shifting sand dunes to the region's agricultural lands and lines of communication before the launching of the project.

During its stay in the region, the delegation also visited the Grape-fruit Extension Project at Golweyn and the Janale plantations.

The Deputy Primier of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, Comrade Song Sung, accompanied by National refugee commission, Jaalle Abdi Mohamed Tarrah, on Monday visited the refugee camps at Jalalaqsi, Hiran Region.

During his stay there Comrade Jong toured the refugee centres various quarters, and closely studied the progress of relief and administration operations there, listening afterwards to a briefing report by the Co-ordinator of the National Refugee Commission for Hiran region, Jaalle Abdi Adan Ahmed.

The Co-ordinator told the visitors that the refugees who are in Somalia were forced to flee from their homes in Western Somalia by the inhuman brutalities they suffered at the hands of the Abyssinian colonialist regime, and that they looked for political and economic support to all the international peoples of the World.

CSO: 4700/924

RADIO KULMIS REPORTS ON DELEGATION VISITING U.S.

EA140050 (Clandestine) Radio Kulmis in Somali to Somalia 1800 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Text] The Democratic Front for the Salvation of Somalias [DFSS] delegation to the United States, whose visit there is to explain to the American people and government the true situation in Somalia, continues with its meet-the-people campaign. The DFSS delegation, which is in America to explain to the American people the struggle of the Somali people and to oppose the terror regime, the sole purpose of which is to destroy the independence and interests of Somalia, continues its work in America.

The DFSS delegation, which is visiting various U.S. cities, vividly exposed the anti-Somali policies and treacherous acts against the Somali people by the Mogadishu regime led by dictator Mohamed Siad Barre. The DFSS delegation spearheaded large demonstrations opposed to dictator Siad Barre's visit to America.

The DFSS delegation held high level talks with senior American officials and presented to the American Government documentary evidence of the true situation in Somalia. The DFSS delegation explained to the American people and government the political policies of the DFSS, which are opposed to foreign interference in the internal affairs of Somalia.

The DFSS delegation held a well-attended press conference in Washington on Thursday. At the press conference the DFSS delegation clearly exposed the terrorism, antihuman rights, political oppression, divide-and-rule policies in Somalia and the economic and productivity decline in Somalia which is the work of dictator Mohamed Siad Barre, who is now seeking help from President Reagan's administration.

The media in most of the American states carried the DFSS press conference on the true situation in Somalia. The DFSS delegation also distributed millions of leaflets informing the American public of the true situation in our country under the terror regime of Mohamed Siad Barre.

The large demonstrations organized by the DFSS delegation were attended by thousands of Somalis living in America as well as American citizens who sympathize with the Somali people, whose independence, freedom, integrity and human rights were usurped by dictator Siad and his henchmen.

CSO: 4797/10

SAUDIS PROVIDE SOMALIS WITH OIL GRANT

Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 26 Feb 82 p 1

[Text]

Mogadishu. Thursday — The SDR Minister of Finance Jaalle Abdullahi Axmed Addow, disclosed here on Sunday that Somalia and Saudi Ababia have concluded an economic agreement according to which the Saudi Kingdom will extend to Somalia a grant of 360,000 tons of oil valued at 125 million U.S. dollars.

Speaking to SONNA upon his return here from a friendly visit to Riyadh, Jaalle Addow said that the oil-donation agreement was the result of an earlier understanding to this effect between the Prisident of the SDR, Jaalle Mohamed Siad Barre, and the Saudi King Khalid Bin Abdul-Aziz.

The Minister said that his visit to Saudi Arabia has considerably contributed to the further strengthening of the excellent relations that have always existed between the two sisterly countries.

«Somali-Saudi Economic co-operation has always symbolised the brotherly ties of unity and solidarity that bind our two countries and peoples together», he said.

Jaalle Addow who signed the agreement for the Somali government said that the oil grant will be shipped to Somalia in the near future, and will cover Somalia's oil needs for one year approximately.

The Minister's delegation was welcomed back at the airport by the President of Somalia's Central Bank, Jaalle Mohamoud Jama, the Director General of the Ministry of Finance, Jaalle Yusuf Ali Nur and other officials.

CSO: 4700/924

SIGNIFICANCE OF P. W. BOTHA'S VICTORY OVER VERKRAMPTES EXAMINED

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 1 Mar 82 p 6

[Editorial]

[Text] It is the sheer size of Mr P W Botha's victory over the verkramptes that surprises and impresses. When it came to the pinch, the much-feared verkrampte force in the National Party's Transvaal hierarchy, whose mere existence had done so much for so long to paralyse the Government, was revealed as a mere 21%.

That the overt verkrampte representation was confined to this number says a good deal about the behind-the-scenes manoeuvring and organisational effort by Mr Botha's supporters, which no doubt stretches beyond the past few days. Mr Botha himself also played his part: his dramatic entry into Saturday's head committee meeting was a remarkable display of personal courage in being willing to take on his accusers face-to-face.

Perhaps the 21% have broader and more substantial support at grass-roots level? If so, it is unlikely to be a troubling factor at this stage. Many of the Afrikaners who oppose the Nationalist leadership are already out of the party: they showed where they stood in last April's General Election when, in straight fights with the NP in the Transvaal, the Herstigte Nasionale Party drew about one third of the votes. Those extreme Rightwingers who remain in the National Party are, with the crushing of Dr Andries Treurnicht, bereft of their rallying figure.

So Mr Botha at long last has a reasonable idea of who is with him. He is secure in his positions as party leader and Prime Minister. He knows with some precision what his power-base is.

Given the tumultuous events of the past week it is unlikely that, within the foreseeable future, he will face any kind of a challenge to his supremacy. Further conflicts will no doubt emerge in the future. But for the moment, Mr Botha is the victorious bull and no one dares take him on.

Now that the Nationalists have sorted themselves out, it is Mr Botha's task to tell South Africa exactly how he intends to operate from his power-base. He should explain in concrete, direct language what he intends doing.

To speak in vague terms about "healthy power-sharing" and "co-responsibility" might be enough to excite the passions of the extremists. But to most ordinary South Africans it is all as clear as mud in providing vital information about what exactly is intended.

To put a basic question: Freed of the verkramptes, what positive action does Mr Botha intend taking in fulfilment of his "adapt or die" warning?

We have previously expressed our grave reservations about how far Mr Botha will be willing, or indeed able, to go in restructuring South Africa. While he and his Nationalists adhere to the ideology of separate development what degree of racial change is really possible?

Are we wrong to have these doubts and anxieties?

When Mr Botha issued his call last Wednesday for South Africans to unite behind him, was he merely addressing himself to Nationalists? Or was he speaking to all South Africans? Was he holding out the hope that blacks, coloureds, Indians and English-speaking whites, as much as verligte Afrikaners, would find themselves able to rally behind him out of conviction and enthusiasm?

We would like to be able to believe this. But it is up to Mr Botha: he should speak out in plain language, free of double-speak and evasion.

South Africa waits to hear from him.

CSO: 4700/927

PROFESSOR KLEYNHANS: 'BOTHA'S SINCERITY IN DOUBT'

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 26 Feb 82 p 5

[Article by Monk Nkomo]

[Text]

BLACKS should not be too optimistic about the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha's stand that the National Party approved of the power sharing principle in South Africa, said Prof. Willem Kleynhans, head of the political Science Department at the University of South Africa.

He told The SOWETAN yesterday that the Prime Minister's "healthy power sharing" stand might not be far different from the views shared by the National Party's Transvaal leader, Mr Andries Treurnicht, who walked out of a parliamentary caucus meeting this week without casting a vote of confidence in Mr Botha.

"I do not think his power sharing principle can be genuine. The Prime Minister is not in favour of political dictionary terminology of the concept of power sharing. Until he has clearly defined what he means by healthy power sharing in the country, Blacks, who are keenly waiting for hopeful signals, should not be too optimistic. They should wait and see," said Prof. Kleynhans, who added that he was "sceptical about the whole issue."

REALISE

Voicing his approval of the "Apartheid" system, the political scientist said it took the South African government 27 years to realise that the system promulgated by the National Party, was a "myth". He warned that if ample opportunities were not created for blacks to have a meaningful say in the political running of the country, whites should prepare themselves for radical movements, urban attacks and protests from those without proper political powers.

CSO: 4700/927

COMMUNICATIONS GAP IN PARLIAMENT WIDENS

Johannesburg THE STAR in English [no date given] p 1

[Article by Peter Sullivan: "Parliament: Is It Becoming Useless?"]

[Text] The political chasm between Government and Opposition is at an all-time wide.

Politicians and observers are genuinely alarmed at the way the two sides of the house talk past each other.

Some find it depressing, others merely frightening.

But both sides are getting more bitter.

Opposition MPs angrily point to the Government's growing arrogance during question time in Parliament when legitimate questions go unanswered as they're "not in the interests of the State."

Equally angrily, Government MPs accuse Mrs Helen Suzman of misusing both Parliament and democracy by "sneaking" the Aggett letter past the Speaker's ruling in deliberate contempt.

The Speaker had ruled any discussion on Mr Aggett sub judice yet Mrs Suzman read out allegations that a detainee had been tortured before disclosing it was Neil Aggett.

But here again, Opposition MPs are furious about the sub judice rule and its interpretation.

"Parliament is supposed to have more freedom of speech than the rest of the country," says Mr Harry Pitman, an advocate and MP for Pinetown. "Yet the sub judice rule is used to stop us debating things we can freely discuss outside the House."

Government MPs shrug their shoulders and say the rulings emanate from the Speaker.

Effectively, the Speaker has banned all discussion on Dr Aggett and on the attempted Seychelles coup as being sub judice.

But the antagonism presently being shown in Parliament goes deeper than just these incidents.

It is almost as though one had the Americans and the Soviets in one house, trying to sort out the world.

The National Party certainly does not approximate to any of the American parties and the Progressive Federal Party is probably further away from communism than the Government, but there is the same refusal to consider the other's point of view.

In Government eyes — and not merely rhetoric—the Progressives are anti-South African, unpatriotic, bent on destroying the Republic and themselves.

In PFP eyes — and not merely rhetoric — the Government is cruel repressive, evil, blind and bent on self-destruction.

Most PFP supporters believe detainees are tortured in one way or another (besides solitary confinement's psychological rack).

Most National Party supporters scoff at allegations levelled by detainees or former detainees, and say accusatios of torture are all communist-inspired.

This is not political point-scoring, but deeply held beliefs which clash head-on with others, whatever the truth may be.

Is Parliament as a tool becoming useless?

The Prime Minister is worried at the erosion of "national will." The Opposition decries the erosion of what little democracy there is.

What rubbish. All it is really about is who will govern the country, National Party, PFP, HNP or ANC.

PFP supporters see the greater emphasis on national will and "Do it for your country" as being an ominous pointer to a one-party state.

As the chasm widens, the Government asks incredulously: "Do you want the same thing to happen here as happened in Rhodesia? After all Ian Smith followed Prog policy . . ."

The PFP retorts: "Would you prefer the war kill-rate of 20 a day to continue in Zimbabwe — is that preferable to giving up exclusive white power?"

Neither side answers the other's questions.

Can Parliament operate like this?

Or is Alvin Toffler, futurist writer, correct in predicting: "The overworked obsolete political technology of the ideas age is breaking up under our very eyes. . . ." (The Third Wave).

At the moment, there is one instant solution offered by South Africa's political pedlars: the President's Council.

Its recommendations are expected some time this year, maybe next, but until they come the political debate rages on in limbo, across the ever-growing chasm between the Government of the country and its loyal Opposition.

CSO: 4700/927

HISTORY OF CRACKS IN AFRIKANER UNITY TRACED

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 26 Feb 82 pp 12, 13

[Article by Joe Latakgomo in "Outsider's View"]

[Text] THE Afrikaner nation is in bondage, fettered by chains of fear and insecurity. This unfreedom, this insecurity, may yet lead to the downfall of Afrikanerdom itself.

This observation was made by J H P Serfontein in his book, Brotherhood of Power, published in 1979.

Just over two years later, the collapse of the National Party seems imminent with the walkout this week of Transvaal National Party leader Dr Andries Treurnicht from a caucus meeting, and a vote against a motion of confidence in Prime Minister P W Botha.

The rift between Dr No, as he has come to be known because of his steadfast refusal to accept proposed changes to this country's race laws, and Mr Botha, has been boiling for years.

CORNERSTONE

The final straw came when Mr Botha touched on one of the cornerstones of the whole philosophy of apartheid. In 1968, Prof Gerriet Viljoen, then chairman of the Broederbond, now Minister of National Education, made the Government's position quite clear:

"Clearly, apartheid's original formula cannot cope with this situation," and then went on to add that the National Party's biggest mistake had been to impose on blacks a policy worked out by whites without consultation.

However, he ruled out all-race conventions as being impossible. It would mean, he said, ackowledging the necessity of sharing power between races — something which Afrikaners have always been promised will never happen.

This promise had been carried through over the years, and when Mr Botha spoke of "sharing power" with coloureds and Indians, it was inevitable that he would face opposition from people like Dr Andries Treurnicht.

To be able to appreciate the effect of this, one must look into the history of the Afrikaner, how he came to power, how he manipulated himself and others, and finally, the role the Broederbond, South Africa's supersecret body, played in it all.

This is significant because it was basically through the Broederbond that Afrikaner unity has been able to hold over the years. Even in times of strife and misundertanding in the past, it was the Broederbond which kept the protagonists together.

It is significant, too, that it had to be Treurnicht who broke this string — for he was at one time strongman in the Broederbond as chairman until he was maneouvred out of office for Prof Viljoen to take the chair.

This unity, it seems, was based on fear. Fear of ostracisation. Fear of reprisals. For, over the years, the Broederbond had established itself in the cabinet, politics generally, the church, education, cultural organisations, newspapers, labour, the police, Government services, universities, among farmers and in village committees. Anybody who dared challenge any of the Bond's principles therefore faced serious troubles.

The spread of fear was based on one statement: "The Afrikaner never forgives or forgets treason. Traitors will be dealt with by the volk."

"The Afrikaner Broederbond was born out of deep conviction that the Afrikaner volk has been planted in this country by the Hand of God, destined to survive as a separate volk with its own calling." This, according to Serfontein, was what Dr J C van Tooy and Ivan Lombard said in a statement in Die Transvaler in 1944.

It is against this background that Afrikaner nationalism took hold. There were rifts and splits, ups and downs. But through the Broederbond, the Afrikaner finally emerged and seized power. Right from the beginning Afrikaner unity was placed above all else.

"The welding together of Afrikaners, differences of opinion about national problems must be removed and a healthy progressive society and uniformity of purpose must be achieved. The interest of the Afrikaner must always be served."

It was from this fear of being overwhelmed by blacks that the Broederbond devised the master scheme which resulted in the homelands. The plan was devised as long ago as 1935.

"Total mass segregation should not only be stated as the ideal, but should also be the immediate practical policy of the State. At suitable places on the borders of the Union (of South Africa) suitable and sufficient ground should be purchased which would be set aside for occupation by native families and tribes which today are still scattered throughout the country on farms and in kraals and reserves . . ."

The Bond went on: "Natives who have reached a certain fixed age will be allowed, with the permission of his tribal chiefs, and the commissioner, to go temporarily to the area of the white to work on his farms, or in the towns or cities, but they will not be allowed to go with their families."

With regard to political rights, the Bond states: "In these areas,a greater measure of self-government can be granted with the lapse of time, which as far as possible should take into consideration the pre-history and traditional form of government of the native . . ."

Regarding "detribalised urban natives, they must be encouraged as far as possible to move to these native areas. Those who cannot do it ought to be housed in separate locations where they will enjoy no political privileges and may own no property because they must be regarded as temporary sojourners . . ."

All this formed the cornerstone of the National Party's policy when it took government in 1948. Over the years, the system was rigidly adhered to. The famous declaration by poet Totius, to 70 000 Afrikaners in 1939 in Bloemfontein, was always in the Afrikaner's mind: "It has been pledged that Afrikanerdom would never allow itself to split."

Dr Hendrik Verwoerd, as a newspaper editor in 1943, demanded that "the Afrikaner Broederbond must gain control of everything it can lay its hands on in every walk of life in South Africa. Members must help each other to gain promotion in the civil service or any other field of activity in which they work with a view to working themselves up into important administrative positions".

After the 1948 election victory, Dr Verwoerd told a Broeder meeting that the major task of the Bond was to entrench the NP in power and to see it never lost it.

Certainly, it seems, he kept the support of the Bond when he finally became premier. He propped himself up by co-operation, and sticking to the ideals of the Bond.

Often considered the architect of apartheid, Dr Verwoerd was actually only implementing Broeder ideals and philosophies worked out almost 20 years earlier. He gave these ideals a touch of respectability, but made sure he remained well within the realms of general Broeder philosophy.

Trouble in the Afrikaner ranks really started when Mr B J Vorster took over the premiership after Dr Verwoerd was assassinated.

It was the beginning of the wane in power and grip by the Bond. Vorster, who was himself a Bond member, sparked the formation of the Herstigte Nasionale Party, and Dr Albert Hertzog tried to prop himself up by seeking Broeder support.

In 1966, the terms "verlig" and "verkramp" became fashionable, after being first used by another Afrikaans editor.

The Hertzog group were classified as "verkramp" and the Vorster supporters "verlig". Perhaps these terms, too, contributed to the beginning of the cracks in Afrikaner unity. The Bond did try to warn people against "classifying each other . . . with superficial generalisations like verlig and verkramp."

However, it was clear that the knives were out for Mr Vorster. He had been trying too hard to woo the English, and alienated the Bond to the extent that Dr Piet Meyer, head of the SABC and chairman of the Bond, is reported to have declared at a party: "Our most important task is to get rid of John Vorster".

Again internal dissent was plastered over. Whether this was a clear indication that the Bond's power and influence were on the wane is debatable, but from that, it seems, Mr Vorster emerged the victor. The cause of Afrikaner unity had once more been saved.

Throughout this period, there was a plea for "the necessary co-operation and solidarity among Afrikaners without abandoning principles".

However, the kind of spark for dissent will show that it was simply another papering exercise. In one instance, Mr Vorster was accused by a newspaper of having said that Maori players were welcome in South Africa.

The editor of that newspaper was . . . Dr Treurnicht. That was the beginning, really, of a long series of clashes between Dr Treurnicht and his premiers. Subsequent clashes also came from sports issues, but each time Afrikaner unity was protected, and he survived.

He was voted out of the chairmanship of the Bond, given a deputy ministerial position, moved again to another post, and finally, only in an attempt once more to hold unity, he was given a cabinet position which (at the time of writing) he is still holding.

However, Mr Vorster certainly became more and more cautious in his reformist approach. He moved back to seeking support from the Bond, and Treurnicht used the same organ to delay changes, for instance, in sport policy.

These changes are still being delayed, and Mr P W Botha, who took over the premiership when Mr Vorster bowed out after the Information Scandal, inherited Mr Vorster's problems with Dr Treurnicht.

Mr Botha took the first Transvaal congress he addressed by storm when he challenged them to accept his policies and chosen path or get out. His performances won him friends — but the bitterness among the verkramptes in the Transvaal congress were to continue simmering.

And finally, this week, the whole bubble burst. Treurnicht, with support from mostly Transvaal members of Parliament, seems to have thrown down the gauntlet. He is only prepared to go back if Mr Botha "defines" what he means by "power sharing". He is asking Mr Botha to "water down" his position.

South African politics have taken a new turn. If Dr No gets four more supporters — 19 MP's did not attend this week's dramatic caucus meeting — his faction could become the official Opposition Party. He needs to win over 34 of the Transvaal's 67 seats to keep the province under control. It is difficult to say how many of the caucus's 142 members he can win over.

Whatever, the only danger for this country would be for Mr Botha to be over-cautious, and halt his reformist approach with the hope that he will retain grassroots support. The game is going on.

CSO: 4700/927

NATION'S 'REALITIES' FORCED NP CHANGES

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 26 Feb 82 p 10

[Article by Michael Acott]

[Text] POWER-SHARING was, until this week, something no Nationalist leader could condemn strongly enough. Now it has suddenly become Nationalist policy with the approval of the Prime Minister himself.

And it was the final straw that broke the verkrampte Nationalists' backs as the party split this week for the second time in 13 years.

For Mr P W Botha's endorsement on Monday of an emotive term in South African politics raised eyebrows both within and outside the Government. However strongly he qualified it, laying the emphasis on consultation and co-responsibilityy, power-sharing has always been a dirty word in Nationalist politics.

Perhaps more than any other, it is this word which will dominate the turbulent months ahead as a smaller governing party — and perhaps a new, Rightwing opposition — debate a new constitutional framework for South Africa.

The endorsement of integrated sport led to the Herstigte Nasionale Party breakaway in 1969. It is the endorsement now of sharing power with other races which has provoked another group of Rightwing Nationalists to rebellion.

The change from bogey-word to official policy is nothing new in the shifting vocabulary which has marked what Nationalists are pleased to call the logical unfolding of the separate development concept.

Each has been forced on a reluctant National Party by force of circumstances. But few terminology changes can have had as sudden and dramatic effect as Mr Botha's approval of power-sharing when many in his party were already apprehensive of his approach to a new constitution for white, coloured and Indian people.

It is welcome ammunition to the Herstige Nasionale Party and other Rightwing groups, including some of his former Cabinet and caucus members, who see Mr Botha as an integrationist.

For power-sharing is something generations of Nationalists have been assured would be avoided for so long as they kept the National Party in power. It has been derided as one of the many evils espoused by their opponents which would lead to chaos and black majority rule in South Africa.

When Mr Botha unveiled his 12-point plan, he was careful to explain to Nationalist congresses that magsverdeling was not the dreaded term magsdeling; the Government stood for a division of power, not the sharing of power.

Central to Nationalist policy has been the insistence that the white man must retain an exclusive say over his own destiny. Other population groups have been given increasing power to rule themselves, but they have always been told firmly that this cannot include a say in how the white man is governed.

As recently as last August, the PFP MP for Pinelands, Dr Alex Boraine, asked Mr Botha in Parliament whether he believed in power-sharing.

"No. Do not talk nonsense," Mr Botha replied, adding that Dr Boraine "can wait until doomsday if he thinks I intend to implement PFP policy."

Now things are different. Mr Botha stated flatly this week that, while the National Party and the PFP understood power-sharing in different terms, too many bogeys had been created around the concept.

"For us the concept of consultation and co-responsibility is a healthy form of power-sharing, without undermining the principle of self-determination. Therefore we prefer the term co-responsibility," he said.

As the Nationalist newspaper Beeld observed in an editorial, this is the first time a Nationalist leader has spoken approvingly of power-sharing. Beeld also answered the question of why the Government was departing from previous stands: Whether Nationalists like it or not, coloured people can have no separate homeland or separate sovereignty, and will therefore have to be involved in a form of power-sharing with whites.

There, too, is the answer to previous changes of terminology, from apartheid onwards. Nationalist policy has been forced to adapt as it has found itself unable to bend the realities of South Africa to its own vision of how things should be. As the policy has adapted, official descriptions have adapted too.

The National Party came to power under Dr D F Malan in 1948 on a platform of apartheid.

Under Dr H F Verwoerd, came a new emphasis as the Government realised segregation was not enough, that other population groups had at least to be given a form of self-government. Thus apartheid became separate development.

Black homelands were given first self-government and then, under Mr John Vorster, the right to opt for independence. Separate governing councils were created for the coloured and Indian peoples struck by Nationalist edict from the voters' rolls.

Now the wheel is turning again under Mr P W Botha, although it might never turn full circle.

Having separated the homelands politically, the Government now wants to reunite them economically with South Africa. So Mr Botha has embraced confederation, another former Nationalist bogey word, as a policy for co-operation of independent states.

Separate development for the coloured people has collapsed, and with it has gone the dream of population groups in separate, self-governing, racial compartments.

The Coloured Persons' Representative Council, meant to compensate for the loss of the coloured parliamentary vote, was abolished at its own request because it had no real power. The Indian Council has survived an unpopular and poorly supported election, but lacks credibility.

Mr Botha has committed his Government to a shared constitutional dispensation for white, coloured and Indian people on the basis that separate coloured or Indian homelands are not possible. He has created the President's Council to recommend a new constitution, and its proposals are expected by May.

Nationalist battle-lines have now been drawn, with Dr Andries Treurnicht and his fellow verkramptes rejecting in advance a shared Parliament or a multi-racial Cabinet. Mr Botha has produced a bomb of his own which exploded in the Nationalist caucus room on Wednesday: endorsement of power-sharing and the stated demand that every Cabinet Minister, Dr Treurnicht included, endorse it as well.

Dr Treurnicht managed to avoid the caucus vote, but Mr Botha's statement was worded carefully to allow doubting Nationalists to support it. It was, as PFP members noted immediately, in effect only power-sharing within the strict confines of white domination and existing Nationalist policy. Even that has proved too much for a large section of Mr Botha's MPs.

His endorsement of power-sharing is, potentially, much more than an attempt to bend the meaning of a clearly understood word to suit unaltered Nationalist policy.

Its Nationalist use, in spite of Wednesday's events, is still strongly qualified. It means vastly different things to a Nationalist Government and to those who believe power-sharing includes an equal parliamentary vote and government by all the people for all the people.

But it is also an admission by a Nationalist leader, belated and possibly reluctant, that some government sometime will have to agree to whites and other races sharing real power in South Africa.

The months ahead will show whether it will be Mr Botha's government that does it. The fragile Nationalist unity which rendered the National Party incapable of real reform is crumbling, but there are still a multitude of sceptics who believe Nationalists will never allow a diminution of real white power.

The small ray of hope for an eventual solution is that South African realities have forced another small, but significant, change in official political terminology and a more significant change in party politics.

CSO: 4700/927

OPEN VOTE BEAT US, CLAIM NP REBELS

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 1 Mar 82 p 7

[Text] SUPPORTERS of Dr Andries Treurnicht are claiming that a secret ballot at Saturday's Transvaal Nationalist Head Committee meeting could have changed the outcome of the showdown between him and the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha.

They say an attempt by Dr Treurnicht's top aide, Mr Tom Langley, to allow members of the head committee to cast their votes secretly was defeated.

The final open vote on the motion of confidence in the leadership of the Prime Minister and unqualified support for his interpretation of National Party policy sent Dr Treurnicht crashing to a 172 to 36 vote defeat.

An indication that the outcome could have been closer came in the first vote of the day — the election of a chairman to control the meeting. Victory in this first skirmish was vital to both parties.

The Treurnicht camp suggested Mr B D T Boshoff, chairman of the Transvaal Provincial Council. The Botha camp nominated Mr J de Wet, a constituency chairman from Klerksdorp. Mr De Wet won by 125 votes to 96.

The relatively narrow victory by the loyalists, who were led by Mr Botha's strong-arm man, Mr F W De Klerk, deputy Transvaal leader and Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs, is said to have deeply worried the P W Botha men.

This fear was reflected in the first motion suggested by Mr De Klerk. The motion would be the final test of support or rejection of Dr Treurnicht and his rebels.

Mr De Klerk's initial motion was identical to the one which caused the split at Wednesday's caucus meeting in Cape Town — except that it completely left out all reference to the Prime Minister's exclusive right to interpret party policy.

The rebels objected vehemently believing that this was not erough and that it purposely evaded the central critical issue.

They then put their own motion through Mr Caspar Uys, MP for Barberton.

It read: "This head committee reaffirms the acceptance of the principles and policy of the National Party and stresses that it does not accept power-sharing or mixed government at central, provincial or local level."

The rebels claimed afterwards that they did not wish to involve personalities and therefore did not move a vote of confidence in Dr Treurnicht or wish to mention the Prime Minister.

But their motion was never put to the vote. After the tea break, Mr De Klerk altered hisfirst motion, toughening it up by inserting the very issues which led to the split last week.

It is believed that at this stage the rebel contingent may have supported a motion of confidence in the Prime Minister and his leadership with certain qualifications. Sources indicated later that the P W. Botha camp, now sensing a decisive victory, decided during the break that they now had to introduce a motion which would force Dr Treurnicht and his followers into irrevocable opposition.

The motion which was then drafted and put to the head committee read: "The head committee of the National Party in the Transvaal (a) believes that the best interests of South Africa demand that maximum unity of the National Party should be protected; (b) expresses its confidence in and full support for the Prime Minsiter, his leadership and interpretation of National Party policy; (c) accepts the Prime Minister's interpretation of the meaning of joint responsibility as a form of healthy power sharing without the rape of the principle of self-determination and (d) thanks the Prime Minister for his emphasis on the unacceptability of the PFP policy of power sharing in a unitary state and his assurance in his policy statement on February 22 that the National Party would be consulted on the expected recommendations of the President's Council."

The loyalists swept the vote in winning by 172 to 36.

The head committe then supported by another decisive majority a motion appealing to those MPs who had "failed to conform" to do so by 11am on Wednesday when the Nationalist Parliamentary Caucus would be held.

The motion also demanded that non-conformity be followed immediately by stripping all office-bearers of their positions. It added that all non-conformists had to be suspended with immediate effect, but that their party membership would not be at issue until all possibility of conformity had died. When that stage was reached "disciplinary steps" would be taken.

CSO: 4700/927

GROBLER: LEADER NEEDS SUPPORT OF ALL RACES

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 25 Feb 82 p 29

[Text]

Dr Jan Grobler the editor of Nat 80s who set the cat among the National Party pigeons, talks to Bob Davis. His urgent sense of the need for change and his belief that meeting aspirations is vital to maintaining peace emerge.

Political leadership in South Africa is viable only if it has appeal for Afrikaners and English-speakers, Asians, coloured people and blacks, both in the national states and in white areas.

This is the view of Dr Jan Grobler, MP for Brits, whose controversial editorial in Nat 80s has again brought to the surface differences of opinion within the National Party leadership.

Dr Grobler wrote in his editorial that "in one country there can logically be no more than one Government."

The opinion was fully supported by Prime Minister Mr P W Botha, when he replied in the House of Assembly to a question from Mr Harry Schwarz (PFP, Yeoville). But Minister of State Administration Dr Treurnicht demanded clarification, objecting that one Government implied a multiracial Cabinet.

Dr Grobler told The Star: "We are at fault if we do not perceive the changing world in which other races are being emancipated."

He said prickly issues, such as the process of urbanisation and the fact that in the next 19 years some 21 million blacks would have to be housed in "white" South Africa, had so far been left to future generations.

"But we are the future generation that will have to make decisions and implement them," he reflected.

Dr Grobler said urbanisation problems were so pressing that the State and the private sector "do not dare wait for each other to make the first move."

Each had a responsibility to contribute meaningfully to solve the problem.

Factors such as population growth, educational advance, economic progress and pressure for political power demanded radical new approaches.

"There are no simple solutions to these problems but there are clear guidelines — namely, that we put our faith in Jesus Christ and admit that which is wrong is wrong and cannot be wiped out with mere words.

"In fact, we dare not attempt to solve our problems with sweet talk."

Dr Grobler said — as he understood matters — Mr P W Botha had gone beyond mere words and was in fact taking positive action to solve South Africa's problems.

"That is why I am encouraged and optimistic about our future," he commented.

Dr Grobler said if the basic human needs of food, clothing, shelter and self-expression were met, the results were usually peace and contentment.

He views his fellow men as social creatures who achieved and made their greatest demands within their peer group under the leadership of persons capable of responding to the demands of their times.

In multi-cultural societies, demanding interdependence and communal infrastructure, leaders needed wider horizons than those required to meet the parochial demands of only the peer group.

Dr Grobler said: "The acceptability of a leader by multiple groups within the same heterogenous structure becomes of cardinal importance.

"In the South African or southern African context a leader needs to have political appeal, for instance, to Afrikaners and English-speakers, Asians, coloured people and blacks, both in the national states and in in white areas in South Africa."

He said the theme could be further developed within Mr Botha's envisaged constellation of states. In this case white leadership would have to be acceptable throughout the constellation.

Dr Grobler said Mr Botha's leadership should preferably also have appeal in other African states — "South Africa being of Africa".

Acceptable and accepted leadership did not mean that a particular group should be required to give up what it held dear or peculiar to itself but that it should have equal respect for what what was dear or peculiar to other groups.

Dr Grobler said a lesson to be taken from history was that successive political structures had been forced to make room for the demands of new times.

"As regards our times, the person and leadership of Mr P W Botha is indispensable.

"He has not only clearly defined the problems of our times but he is also doing something about it.

"The greater his support from us, the sooner he will achieve his objectives — namely, a better South Africa for all its peoples."

CSO: 4700/927

NP SPOKESMAN: BUTHELEZI REPORT UNACCEPTABLE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 9

[Text]

CAPE TOWN. — The Government was not prepared to endorse the Buthelezi Commission report, the Minister of Finance and leader of the National Party in Natal, Mr Owen Horwood, said in a statement on behalf of the Government.

Mr Horwood said the recommendations of the Buthelezi Commission were, in many respects, contrary to the important aspects of National Party policy.

He said the political and constitutional section of the report was not acceptable to the Government because, among other things, it stood for a unitary society in Natal, which clashed with the policy which the Government believed should determine relations between population groups in South Africa.

A number of recommendations on education clashed with the starting points the Government had made in its provisional memorandum on the De Lange report and were, therefore, unacceptable.

The statement pointed out that several other sections of the report, particularly those concerning research in the field of Zulu economic and social requirements, could have some practical value.

Mr Horwood said the Government was prepared to co-operate with the KwaZulu Government without deviating from its policy.

The Government also aknowledged that the New Republic Party-controlled Natal provincial authority was not prepared to endorse the report either. — Sapa.

CSO: 4700/906

CROSS-BORDER OPERATIONS IN SOUTHERN AFRICA DEFENDED

Pretoria PARATUS in English Jan 82 pp 20, 21

[Article by Dr M. Hough, director, Institute for Strategic Studies]

[Text] The Rhodesian practice of striking at terrorist bases in neighbouring countries when it was deemed to be in the interests of Rhodesian security was deemed to be in the interests of Rhodesian security has been followed by South Africa as far as terrorist bases in Angola and Mozambique are concerned. As could have been expected, these operations were widely criticised on the grounds of "wrecking negotiaions," involving "refugee camps" as well as "violating the territorial integrity" of the host countries and attempting to "invade" these countries. Israel, too, has been condemned for cross-border operations in, for instance, Lebanon and Jordan.

It is obvious that any strict legal interpretation of these actions could create difficulties. There is some measure of uncertainty surrounding the right of self-defence and especially preventive self-defence, and cross-border operations do not always meet the requirements of "hot pursuit" as narrowly defined. On the other hand, states harbouring terrorists are justifying their actions mainly on political grounds. The whole issue has in fact, become more than a question of international law. During 1970 for instance, a declaration was adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations, wherein it was stated that: "Every State has the duty to refrain from organizing or encouraging the organization of irregular forces or armed bands, including mercenaries, for incursion into the territory of another State.

"Every State has the duty to refrain from organizing, instigating, assisting or participating in acts of civil strife or terrorist acts in another State or acquiescing in organized activities within its territory directed towards the commission of such acts when the acts referred to in the present paragraph involve a threat or use of force."

During 1974, "aggression" was defined by the General Assembly as acts which inter alia, follow from "...the sending by or on behalf of a State of armed bands, groups, irregulars or mercenaries which carry out acts of armed force against another State of such gravity as to amount to the acts listed above, or its substantial involvement therein."

It was, however, added that nothing in this definition could in any way prejudice "the right of self-determination, freedom and independence of peoples forcibly deprived of that right, nor the right of these people to struggle to that end and to seek and receive support."

No attempt was made to give this exception a legal basis. As resolutions of the General Assembly do not constitute international law, no attention has been given to this exception. It seems as if a very free hand is given to individuals and groups acting with armed force and operating across international borders while severe restrictions are placed on the actions of states across borders.

Justifications used for cross-border operations by South Africa (and Israel) appear to have been based on a variety of factors, including those of a legal, political and strategic nature. The right of hot pursuit, the right of self-defence and retaliation, pre-emption and deterrence, were involved.

The right of hot pursuit has only been codified in the international law of the sea. This "right" may also, however, find expression on land as well as in the air. In the case of land it refers to the uninterrupted immediate pursuit of an offender or group of offenders into the territory of another state. The right of hot pursuit does not, however, permit the crossing of boundaries or of territorial waters of the air space of another state unless an agreement permitting the exercise of this right between the states involved already exists.

Legally hot pursuit should be distinguished from such actions as self-defence and reprisals. It is submitted by some writers that although self-defence may include measures which resemble hot pursuit, the distinction between the right of self-defence and the right of hot pursuit is founded primarily on different objectives. Self-defence aims at the repulse of aggression or armed attack and the protection of the territorial integrity or political independence of a state. The main objective of hot pursuit on the other hand, is the effective administration of justice of an injured state and the bringing before its courts and punishment of wrongdoers.

The concept of "preventive self-defence" also exists, and states have invoked this right in practice although a measure of uncertainty exists as to what is admissable according to the right of self-defence. Necessity, proportionality and quick withdrawal are all elements of self-defence.

As to reprisals, there appears to be some uncertainty as far as their legality is concerned. Articles 2, 33 and 51 of the UN Charter, as well as a declaration adopted by the General Assembly in 1970 do not justify the use of force in acts of retaliation, and seemingly view the use of force as illegal. The term "punitive intervention" is also sometimes used with regard to retaliatory acts. This is defined as reprisal, short of war, for an injury at the hands of another state.

Excluding the legal justifications on which cross-border operations are based, considerations of a political and strategic nature obviously prove to be an important rationale behind the operations. In this regard, the following motives can be identified.

Pre-emption

In strategic terms, pre-emption has the object of forestalling an imminent attack. Destruction or capture of weapons is therefore a prime object of any pre-emptive strike in order to, at least temporarily, delay or destroy an insurgent's military capability. Pre-emptive strikes are obviously aimed at the larger insurgent bases and cannot prevent smaller groups of insurgents from continuing to function. In fact the destruction of bases often has the result of fragmenting insurgent forces until such time as a regrouping has taken place.

Deterrence

Cross-border operations could serve both as a warning to the government of the states harbouring insurgents as well as to the insurgent leaders, that future operations will be carried out if terrorism does not cease. Where deterrence in the original sense, that is defensive deterrence through the application on conventional tactics, can seldom serve to prevent terrorism, offensive deterrence, through threats coupled with action, is sometimes seen as an effective alternative. It does not, however, appear as though cross-border raids can be a completely effective deterrent either. None of the governments of the states harbouring insurgents have reacted after cross-border operations by withdrawing support facilities. In many instances these governments had even been warned or requested beforehand not to grant these facilities. It seems, however, that because these governments either feel that they themselves will not be attacked (such contacts have been avoided by South Africa during cross-border operations, although Rhodesia for instance, attacked economic targets in Zambia and Mozambique prior to Lancaster House); or because they are often powerless to control the insurgent forces; or they are under pressure from other states to grant these facilities; they will continue doing so.

The insurgents likewise do not appear to be completely deterred by cross-border raids. There seem to be sufficient recruits available (either joining voluntarily or being kidnapped) and fresh supplies of weapons apparently pose no problem.

The seizure of insurgent equipment, as well as the prevention of abductions give an added incentive to cross-border operations. Obtaining the plans and documents of insurgents also provides information on future activities. Furthermore "attacking of bases located near the border makes re-supply for insurgents more difficult, and temporarily safeguard towns. Recent operations by South Africa, such as "Protea," have also aimed at preventing a conventional back-up for SWAPO being established.

Political Implications

Boosting of public morale creating conditions conducive to peaceful internal settlement and a possible stronger bargaining position during negotiations are seen as importang considerations by states carrying out cross-border operations. The limited freedom of action that South Africa possesses, however, creates a problem in this sense. SWAPO has at times hardened its attitude towards negotiation; it has tried to use cross-border operations for propaganda by claiming, among other things, that the terrorist bases were refugee camps harbouring civilians. Consequently the outside world has often condemned the cross-border raids as "aggression" and has viewed them as ruining the prospects for peaceful settlement of the SWA/Namibia dispute. The risk of contact with Frelimo or MPLA troops is also ever present during cross-border operations, and although such contact has been largely avoided, large scale contact should it occur, could have far-reaching political repercussions.

Conclusion

The problems connected with the idea of cross-border operations in Southern Africa are only part of a larger problem, namely that of revolutionary warfare and support for "liberation movements." It may, strictly speaking, be legally more correct to invoke self-defence as justification for raids on insurgent bases, although this concept is somewhat vague and often has an element of reprisal built into it. It is sometimes reasoned that justifying cross-border operations in this sense will make these actions internationally more acceptable. The concept of self-defence and especially preventive self-defence, exercised through pre-emptive attacks will, although possibly legally more correct in the situation under consideration, in all likelihood be equally condemned.

The point, however, is that the first duty of a stage is to protect its inhabitants. If support for terrorism by neighbouring states endangers the security of a state and creates a de facto war situation, cross-border operations are essential even if it is only a partial solution to the problem.

The fact that South Africa has warned neighbouring countries not to support terrorism against South Africa and that attacks have been directed against terrorism bases only, makes it clear that South Africa has no intention of getting involved in armed hostilities with the governments of these countries. But attempts to protect terrorist bases against attacks could involve the armed forces of neighbouring countries in a war which could wreak havoc on already unstable economies.

CSO: 4700/908

DETAILS ON LARGEST INFANTRY BASE GIVEN

Pretoria PARATUS in English Feb 82 pp 36, 37

[Text] On 1 April 1962, in the small town of Ladysmith, was born one of the SADF's largest yet most effective infantry training bases--5 South African Infantry Battalion. Situated on the confluence of the Klip River and the Modderspruit, the base has grown to a fully operational infantry unit.

5 SAI Bn prides itself on many achievements, especially in the field of training where excellent results have been obtained. This is amply borne out by the fact that this Battalion has produced a Honoris Crux recipient--Sgt K.B. Rice, who was awarded the Honoris Crux at a parade in Bloemfontein at the beginning of 1981. Sgt Rice, then a Corporal, won the Best Section Leader's Cup while on course at 5 SAI Bn. The recent limited operations by the Security Forces in the south of Angola also gave the men of 5 SAI Bn the opportunity to prove themselves.

Like most units in the SADF, 5 SAI Bn has established certain traditions which will ensure that the spirit of its members will never wane. In accordance with the motto, "Avante" (Forward), the prestigious award of "Insizwa" has been instituted. In January 1971 5 SAI Bn started presenting its members with a proficiency badge known as the "Insizwa." Translated from the Zulu it means "strong young man." This badge is awarded to soldiers who achieve an exceptionally high standard in two main infantry subjects: physical fitness and musketry.

Fitness Test

The fitness test is a test of endurance, during which 2.4 km must be completed in under 10 minutes wearing full battle dress and a rifle. Prospective "Insizwas" are further required to complete a 20 km route march, in marching order, within the almost impossible time of three hours.

Good markmanship is also required for this award. To qualify for the "Insizwa" award in the musketry section a score of 200 out of a possible 250 must be scored. PARATUS spoke to Maj T. Smuts, Second in Command of 5 SAI Bn and himself a holder of the "Insizwa" who says that the award has been instituted as a motivating stimulus in the training of his men.

The Battalion further prides itself on the fact that it fits in very well with the community of Ladysmith. A previous Mayor of the town, Clr Mr H.E. Lee, said the following about the relationship between the people of Ladysmith and the base: "No other army camp in the country is so well integrated into a town's life as the Fifth South African Infantry Battalion". Further evidence of this is that the local newspaper, as a public service, is presently printing the Battalion's newspaper, also called "Insizwa".

Under the command of the first OC, the present base was constructed on the old site of the Ladysmith Military Base — indeed a very historical site. As one pages through the historical records of the base, which are jealously preserved by the men of 5 SAI's media centre, one comes across old photographs and manuscripts which portray the early days of the base during the siege of Ladysmith and subsequently. Even the training of the 'troopies' are conducted in close proximity to such historic battlefields as Elandslaagte and Spioenkop.

That the base was dilapidated when 5 SAI Bn was established, is a fact which must be borne in mind when considering the subsequent developments and additions to the structures which accommodate the men of 5 SAI Bn. The responsibility of providing a new HQ with full training facilities went to the first OC, Maj M.M. Horner and his RSM, WO1 B.R. Kruger. Until 1978 they, however, had to be satisfied with existing facilities which were merely maintained and renovated. In 1978 the first new buildings were constructed with the troops already using the new messing facilities in the same year.

In 1979, the Officers and NCOs moved into their new messing quarters. Furthermore, in July 1979, with the troops moving into 140 tents, construction was started on six luxury accommodation blocks which are nearing completion. Presently, in order to conserve resources, the old NCOs mess houses the pay office, the Operations Room and Media Centre, with the rest of the building earmarked for a junior NCO's mess.

PARATUS resently accompanied Cmdt K.V. Harris on a tour of inspection of the base. What strikes you most as you move around the camp is the tremendous development taking place. This, however, appears not to have affected the training programme. In fact, everywhere you go you see groups of troops going about the work of becoming part of South Africa's Infantry Corps.

ENTHUSIASM

More noticeable however, is the enthusiasm and exuberance which exudes Cmdt Harris as he amicably chats about the plans which he has for 5 SAI Bn.

Mounds of hamburgers and chips are daily pouring out of the canteens. Not only does this add to the diversity of the diet of the average National Serviceman at 5 SAI Bn, but it also brings in a large revenue with which alterations are being made to the camp. For instance, work has already begun on a Visitors Reception Centre. This will include the use by parents of a large, fibre-glassed swimming pool, braaing facilities, the Hamburger Hut and Restaurant where the Ladies' Association is making the tastiest light meals this side of the Drakensberg.

"It's going to be a hit," says Cmdt Harris before going on to mention the new era of development which 5 SAI Bn is presently going through. Due to the poor soil found in the area, soil has to be brought in so as to improve the vegetation and grass in the base. Under construction at the moment is a hot-house type nursery which will, in the near future, supply the base with indigenous trees and shrubs. Also on the cards is a water reticulation system. This is to be followed by a hydro-seeding project which will provide grass around the living and training areas.

LIBRARY

A fully equipped library, placed there by the Natal Provincial Administration, serves to keep the literary interests of the people of 5 SAI Bn alive. The most popular form of recreation, however, is the sporting facilities available at 5 SAI Bn. The existing Avante Park (as the sport complex at 5 SAI Bn is known) was built by a private company at cost price — a tremendous cost saver and a sure indication of the high regard the community of Ladysmith has for the hard work being done by all and sundry connected to the SADF.

A visit to 5 SAI Bn is incomplete without a look at the goings on at "Oom Ben se plaas" which is situated in the south of the base. Here are kept the two ponies: Lady Noble and Boesman (the Battalion mascot). The fresh produce needed in the Restaurant are presently also being grown on the 'farm', which has as its patron the Battalion Sergeant Major, WO1 B. Oosthuizen, after whom the farm is named.

Meeting the Demands of Sophisticated Warfare

UPON entering the multi-media centre at 5 SAI Battalion in Ladysmith, you are immediately struck by the hive of productive activity erupting from this young section. The use of a multi-media centre to assist in the training of troops was introduced to 5 SAI Bn only from the beginning of the year. Functioning according to the directives as laid down by Chief of the Army, the 5 SAI Bn multi-media centre under the leadership of Lt G.M. Nunes, has made tremendous progress in developing modern instructional aids.

The multi-media centre at 5 SAI Bn has a graphic and art section, a photographic section which boasts a black-and-white darkroom, a printing section and library. "We can inform instructors on the various training aids which are available so as to make the standard of instruction more advanced," says Lt Nunes, himself a graduate in Education.

Amongst its stocks the centre has a collection of flipcharts, training manuals, models and transparencies and if any particular aid is not in stock, the men working in the media centre are first of all tasked to manufacture the required item. If this is not possible, the item is requested from the central stores.

The aim of the centre is to produce "packaged" training programmes which will be used to increase the knowledge of individuals on certain aspects of the varied syllabus of being an Infantryman. An added advantage of these packages is that not only are they used by instructors but also by personnel undergoing in-service training. This standardises the training from one Company to another. According to Lt Nunes, once the effectiveness of his centre caught on, it became very popular with all members of 5 SAI Bn.

The multi media centre at 5 SAI Bn has recently been responsible for the publication of its first newspaper, "Insizwa", which is a supplement to the local newspaper and is devoted entirely to Battalion activities. The aims of the newspaper are manifold. While providing the troops with local "military" news, it also serves as an important medium of communication between the OC, Cmdt K.V. Harris, his troops and their parents. Furthermore, the newspaper serves as an exposition to the community of Ladysmith of the activities of the people at 5 SAI Bn.

A major project undertaken by the centre is the collection and collation of the historical data of the Battalion. In 1982, with the celebration of the Battalion's 20th Birthday, the Centre will be responsible for the necessary brochure on the history of 5 SAI Bn.

From a small, prefabricated building where the Media Centre originated, one can easily see the progress achieved by Lt Nunes and his men. In meeting the demands that sophisticated warfare make on the Infantryman of today, the Media Centre at 5 SAI Bn, as indeed all the Centres in the SADF, will ensure a well trained and prepared soldier.

CSO: 4700/908

OPENING OF NEW INFANTRY BASE AT PHALABORWA MARKED

Pretoria PARATUS in English Jan 82 pp 26, 27

[Text]

DESPITE a threat of bad weather, the programme for the official opening of 7 SA Infantry Battalion's new R6 million base at Phalaborwa recently, was an unqualified success.

The new base was officially opened by the Minister of Defence, Genl Magnus Malan, just one month after the unit celebrated its eighth anniversary. Before the move to Phalaborwa, 7 SAI Bn was based at Bourke's Luck.

An air of festivity prevailed throughout the weekend's activities which many people, including parents of National Serviceman at the base and a number of local residents travelled great distances to attend.

Apart from the official opening ceremony, the highlight of the weekend's celebrations was a military tattoo held on the Friday evening.

An estimated 2 000 spectators attended the tattoo, among them the Chief of the SA Defence Force, Genl C.L. Viljoen; die Officer Commanding Northern Transvaal Command, Maj Genl P.M. Hanekom, as well as the Mayor of Phalaborwa, Mr W.A. Schoeman.

The young National Servicemen from 7 SAI Bn treated the large crowd, none of whom allowed the dark rain clouds to dampen their spirits, to a spectacular display of military prowess.

CLIMAX

The tattoo included drill, physical training, a band display and a demonstration of support weapons. There were also two team competitions in the form of an obstacle race and the changing of a vehicle's tyre, both of which had the spectators enthusiastically joining in.

The climax, however, was a mock attack staged by the infantrymen.

A "battle situation" was effectively created, down to the last detail including a SAAF helicopter which brought in two tracker dogs to trail the routed "terrorists".

Saturday's activities consisted of a review parade, after which Genl Malan officially opened the new base.

He was presented with a striking lynx head carving — the lynx is the unit's symbol — by the Officer Commanding 7 SAI Bn, Cmdt H.J. Schultz, as a memento of the occasion.

Genl Malan was taken on a short tour during which the history and training aims and methods of the unit were explained to him by Cmdt Schultz.

During his speech earlier on in the morning, the Minister warmly congratulated the men of 7 SAI Bn, both for their excellent operational record as well as for claiming sixth place in the army shooting championships.

NO SURPRISE

He said that it had come as no surprise to him that the unit had won the Chief of the Army's evaluation trophy for 1980.

The final event of the weekend was an open air Church Parade on the Sunday morning.

• SA Infantry Battalion was formed on Oct 1973 at Bourke's Luck. The first accommodation for the troops was a disused hospital there, which was gradually converted into a military complex.

The unit rapidly evolved into a dynamic infantry battalion with an esprit de corps of its own. However, halfway through 1979, the possibility of a change in location of the unit became progressively realiseable. And shortly afterwards the move to Phalaborwa took place.

The new base facilities at Phalaborwa were constructed almost entirely by 5 Military Works Unit, in a record time of only 14 months.

The cost of the comprehensive new base was R6 million. However, as Genl Malan pointed out while commending 5 Military Works Unit for the job, if the construction had been carried out in the whole by a private firm, the cost would have been at least 70 per cent higher.

We'll Do it Again, Says General Malan

SOUTH AFRICA would not hesitate to launch another operation like Operation Protea, the Minister of Defence, Genl Magnus Malan, said at the opening of a new infantry base at Phalaborwa.

Speaking at the official opening of the new 7 SA Infantry Battalion base, Genl Malan said that no self-respecting country which had the welfare and security of its peoples at heart, could allow terrorist organisations to try to jeopardise its future.

"Every country that harbours and supports these terrorists must know that they stand to lose in the struggle," he added. "We are determined to wipe out the terrorists, even if we have to cross our borders in order to do so."

Genl Malan stressed that by now the whole world must know that South Africa had no intention of capitulating.

"Our friends as well as our foes should have come to realise that we intend to solve our problems without any outside interference," he said. "We have no intention whatsoever of having our future decided by foreign powers."

Genl Malan said that despite boycotts and a generally hostile world, South Africa had succeeded in building up a military force feared by the country's enemies.

"It is a source of pride that we do not need foreign military equipment and foreign instructors to build up this strength, like some of our outspoken and critical neighbours," he said.

ACTIVE SUPPORT

He appealed for the active support of all inhabitants of South Africa, regardless of sex or race, saying that no Defence Force could operate in isolation.

Genl Malan paid special tribute to the community of Phalaborwa who, he said, had contributed a great deal to the unit in terms of generous moral and material support.

"The strategic position of Phalaborwa in the defence of the Republic made it an obvious choice as a training base for 7 SAI Bn," he said, "and the people of Phalaborwa have always taken a great interest in the unit's activities."

Speaking of the new base, Genl Malan said that the new complex was an achievement to be proud of.

"Designed to accommodate 1 700 members and with comprehensive fac... such as a fully equipped kitchen, sick-bay, working areas, offices, ablution blocks, hall restaurants and clubs, it is further proof of our country's military self-sufficiency, determination and power," he said.

CSO: 4700/908

DETAILS ON G5 ARTILLERY SYSTEM GIVEN

Pretoria PARATUS in English Feb 82 pp 13, 78

[Text] In the G5 artillery system, the South African Army has a weapon to outgun any enemy until the year 2000.

The Angolan operation in 1975 provided the impetus for the modernisation of the South African Artillery Field Branch, and this new generation 155 mm gun has placed South Africa in the forefront of modern artillery warfare.

The importance of artillery was emphasised during the Angolan operation by the successful use of the 88 mm (25 pounder) field gun, and the 140 mm (5,5 inch) medium gun.

However, the nature of the artillery battles in Angola led to a new requirement being identified by the SADF, namely a single field gun which would replace both the 88 mm and the 140 mm guns.

Shortly after the Angolan operation, a study was launched to determine the modern trends in artillery. The study indicated that the 155 mm calibre accepted by NATO was the choice for the upgrading of SADF artillery.

Most of the artillery used until recently by the SADF--and most other fighting forces--dates from the Second World War. This lack of upgrading was, among others, the result of the belief that artillery would eventually be phased out to make place for other forms of weaponry, such as missiles.

However, the 1973 war between Israel and Egypt proved beyond doubt that artillery still has a major role to play in conventional warfare, and most countries subsequently implemented vast programmes which upgraded their armaments and gave them greater range and effectiveness. In South Africa, developmentof the G5 gun was carried out simultaneously with the upgrading of existing systems, the development of the R4 assault rifle, the modification of the Elephant tank and development of missile systems such as the 127 mm multiple rocket launcher.

The G5 is designed to counter anything the enemy can throw into the field in the form of artillery. It is generally acknowledged as being far superior to similar systems developed elsewhere.

The G5 system, which will in future form the backbone of the South African Artillery Field Branch, consists of a medium gun, a full range of 155mm ammunition and a gun tractor.

The G5 will increase the firing power of the South African Forces considerably. It can provide offensive as well as defensive close fire support to forward infantry and mechanised groups, as well as independent artillery fire aimed at confusing and destroying the enemy.

The development team is confident that the G5 is a system that no enemy will be able to disregard in the future. Coupled with a high rate of fire and the most effective ammunition in the world, the effective flexibility in the use of the system commands great respect. The gun fires in both the high an and low angle mode directly and indirectly. The wide arc of fire also gives the G5 anti-tank and anti-vehicle capabilities in its wide range of applications.

Initial deployment of the guns is carried out by means of a gun-tractor, although the gun itself can be propelled at low speeds by its own built-in engine to facilitate short moves. In addition the gun can be transported by aircraft, train or tank-transporter.

A crew of five to eight mans the gun which features many power-assisted components for quick handling: a jack for the firing platform, the ramming of the projectile, the manoeuvring of the trail-leg and main wheels.

In addition to the local ammunition which was developed in conjunction with which the G5, the gun can fire all existing 155 mm projectiles. Furthermore it can fire all fuses, most charges and all existing NATO 155 mm ammunition.

The world-wide arms embargo against South Africa provided the local armanents industry with a great many challenging projects to satisfy the defensive equipment needs of the SADF: Development of the G5 has effectively filled the gap in our artillery requirements.

The entire project was co-ordinated by Armscor, in close co-operation with the SADF. AN Armscor subsidiary is the main contractor for the system, but various other Armscor subsidiaries and manufacturers in the private sector have made a major contribution to the G5 system. Following a detailed investigation, the first model was built and evaluated by the consumer, the SADF.

Based on the recommendations of this evaluation, an experimental development model led to an advanced development model and later to the engineering development model. It was only then that a pre-production model could be presented for serious production. The training of Permanent Force personnel and National Servicemen as gunners began recently in anticipation of the full deployment of this new generation gun in the SA Artillery.

The Armscor members of the development team attribute the outstanding success of the G5 project to the good co-operation received from the SADF and the high team spirit which marked this exciting development programme. One team member puts it this way: "Every individual was pushing the interests which he represented, which meant that quality, production and the many other disciplines that comprise a project of such magnitude, all received the highest priority at some stage or another, which led to the final product being the outstanding weapon that it undoubtedly is."

The gun has proved to be one of the best in the world. In addition, it was developed in a far shorter time than any of its counterparts abroad. Teamwork cut down significantly on the red-tape attached to the project, thanks to the direct contact that was maintained with the SADF throughout the project.

Thanks to the advanced technology which made the G5 possible, the system will be employed by the SA Artillery Field Branch for a long time to come.

CSO: 4700/908

SUDDEN CLOSURE OF MAHE AIRPORT TRIAL REPORTED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 pp 1, 2

[Article by Tim Clarke]

[Text]

COLONEL Mike Hoare and two other accused had told the pilot of an Air India aircraft that he had landed at Mahe Airport in "the middle of a revolution" and that "one or more" people would be shot if he did not co-operate.

This was contended by the State prosecutor, Mr Cecil Rees, SC, when he outlined his case in the Pietermaritzburg Supreme Court yesterday against Col Hoare and 42 others accused in terms of the Civil Aviation Offences Act.

He was leading evidence against the 43 men facing four counts individually of contravening the Civil Aviation Offences Act before the acting Judge President of Natal, Mr Justice Neville James and two assessors.

In a day which started with a scuffle between one of the alleged hijackers and a TV cameraman and the sudden closure of yesterday's court proceedings by Mr Justice James because the acoustics were so bad, Mr Rees also disclosed that the authorities were still negotiating to bring the captain and crew of the allegedly hijacked Air India Boeing to South Africa to give evidence in the trial. This ended earlier speculation that the captain and his 14-man crew had been stopped from coming to South Africa for political reasons.

Earlier, before a packed court, the 43 accused in the case, originally there were 45 but two, Steyn de Wet and Theo Dorious Daniel van Huysteen, will give evidence for the State, had pleaded not guilty on all counts. When the prosecution called on each one of the men to plead, they all replied in firm and loud voices "not guilty".

The day's proceedings came to a dramatic halt when Mr Justice James said the accused could not hear the proceedings. He described the situation as "intolerable". He said the accused had every right to know what evidence was being led against them.

The day started on a dramatic note when one of the burly alleged hijackers, Mr Kenneth John Kelly, while striding towards the entrance of the court, took exception to a TV cameraman, John Harris, filming him. Mr Harris' camera was abruptly swept aside and smashed into his face. He received a cut under his right eye.

Later, a spokesman for Independent Television, who employs Mr Harris, told The Citizen a charge of assault would be laid.

Outlining the State case of four cases under the Civil Aviation Offences Act against the men, Mr Rees said the State would set out to prove that the men, acting in concert, had contravened the Act in all four instances.

He said that at all times the men were a group of armed men acting in concert or in a pursuance of a common purpose.

Seized

During the afternoon of November 25 last year, in the Seychelles, the accused, through the force of arms, seized and exercised control over the Mahe Airport and its air traffic control centre.

During the night of November 25 an aircraft approached the Mahe Airport and requested clearance to land.

This aircraft, he said, was an Air India Boeing with 65 passengers aboard which had earlier left the Salisbury Airport, Zimbabwe, bound for Bombay, India, via the Seychelles.

Although there were parked vehicles on the runway, clearance was given for the aircraft to land.

Contravention

It was the State's contention that the Act had been contravened by this very action as there had been no lights on the runway.

These actions related to Counts 1 and the alternative count under the Act. He said the aircraft had landed in most dangerous circumstances which could have affected the safety of the aircraft.

Mr Rees said before the external doors of the aircraft were opened for disembarkation, certain of the accused surrounded the aircraft and then boarded it, instructing the crew and passengers to obey orders.

Some of the accused were armed with AK-47 assault rifles.

The surrounding of the aircraft related to a second count under the Cicil Aviation Offences Act.

The captain and the first officer of the Boeing were then taken into a dark room where they appeared before accused No 1 (Col Hoare). Col Hoare instructed the captain and first officer to cooperate and said they had landed in the middle of a "revolution".

While the captain and first officer were in the main airport building, other accused went to the aircraft and saw that it was refuelled and re-equipped for a flight out. At this stage none of the passengers, men, women and children, had been allowed to disembark.

Grenades

In relation to Counts 3 and 4, the accused then boarded the aircraft carring AK-47 assault rifles, Chinese stick hand grenades and rounds of ammunition. This in itself was a contravention of the Act.

The accused instructed the captain and members of the crew to take off from Mahe Airport even though they knew it was highly dangerous and that the aircraft had been damaged when it landed.

Monitor

Mr Rees said the aircraft was still damaged and no flight plans had been filed.

No clearance for the starting-up of the aircraft engines and no clearance to taxi had been given and the lights on the runway had not been switched on.

In relation to Count 4 Mr Rees said that one of the accused, Mr Charles Goatley and another accused, Peter Duffy, took up the position in the cockpit to monitor the flight and make sure the aircraft flew to Durban.

The captain was forced to fly to Louis Botha Airport in Durban, an airport he was unfamiliar with — and not to Jan Smuts, an international airport.

The pilot was also unfamiliar with landing conditions at Louis Botha.

Mr Rees said during the flight to Durban the accused — they were carrying arms — prevented the captain and members of the crew from making use of facilities on the aircraft.

They also interfered with the running of the aircraft. The crew and captain were also told not to communicate with the control tower at Louis Botha.

Closed

The aircraft finally landed at the Louis Botha Airport early on November 26.

At this stage the airport was closed to normal air traffic for about five hours because of the conduct of the accused.

It had also been highly dangerous for the damaged aircraft to land.

Mr Rees said the accused then began negotiating and issuing instructions to the authorities at the airport where the aircraft should be parked and the movement of vehicles and personnel in the restricted area of the airport. The accused also instructed the passengers on the aircraft not to talk to aircraft officials.

Danger

Mr Rees said the band of alleged mercenaries had exposed the passengers and crew to extreme danger by their actions.

At Mahe Airport the accused used the aircraft "virtually as a fortress and this is the place from which they were going to fight".

The Civil Aviation Offences Act was aimed at protecting passengers and aircraft and preventing "even the slightest stress" to the cabin crew. The Act regarded the slightest interference in a most serious light, he said.

Col Mike Hoare said earlier he "could not hear a thing" during proceedings.

The judge said this was the first time in his 25 years of convening the College Road Supreme Court that the accused had said they could not hear.

People

"I accept that this is because there are so many people in court and so many accused, all of whom are sitting further back than they normally do".

He suggested that steps be taken to improve the situation.

Negotiations are in progress to enable certain witnesses to be flown to South Africa to give evidence at the trial, Mr Rees told the court.

It is believed this will be one of the longest and most expensive trials in South African legal history.

Mr Hannon is appearing for 33 of the accused and Mr Stafford, SC, assisted by Mr P Oosthuizen, is appearing for 10 of the accused.

The names of the 43 men who are appearing are:

Thomas Michael Edward Hoare
Charles William Dukes
Vernon Anthony Prinsloo
Robert Jones Davies
Andrew Thomas Standish-White
Patrick John Eurelle
Christo Hillebrand
Bernhard de Vos
Louis Anthony Boucher
John Vincent MacKay
Sven Forsell
Janolof Sjölow
Stephen John Bildlecombe
Richard John Stannard
Nicholas Wilson
Peter Anthony Duff
Kevin Trevor Beck
Jochemus Louis Dekker
Frederick Gous
Kevin Nicholas Barnes
Barry Gribein
Tullio Moneta
David Charles Greenhalgh
Charles Glen Goatley
Johannes Pretorius de Boer
Kenneth Hugh Dalgleish
Patrick Glynn Barry Hendrick
Earnest Lodewyk Deetlefts
Keith MacLeod
Desmond Walker
Pieter Doorewaard
Donalds Peter Kenny
Michael Francis Webb
Peter Bruce Guy Duffy
Desmond Jurgens Botes
Kenneth John Kelly
Kurt George Horst Priefert
Peter Rokwyn
Simon Willar
Jacob Adriaan du Toit
Alex Deacon
William Dudley Paul
Alan Aston Man.

CSO: 4700/906

ECONOMIC DEPENDENCE ON GOLD DEPLORED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 6

[Editorial]

[Text]

WE HAD WARNED for several months of tough times ahead. Now they have arrived.

The credit squeeze has tightened. The lending rate and the mortgage rate are at record levels. Money is becoming scarcer and dearer. Jobs will soon become harder to come by.

Most of our troubles can be blamed on gold, that golden harbinger of boom days, but now the main cause of our difficulties.

We are, unfortunately, too dependent on this precious metal.

When the price is high, the economy takes on a rosy picture and there is a boom. When the price is low, the economy turns grey and there are serious problems.

So with the gold price now plunging alarmingly, the balance of payments in deficit, and the Government falling short of cash because the revenue from mines is down so badly, we can expect higher taxation in the Budget — probably a 10 percent loan levy on individuals and companies and higher imposts on tobacco, liquor and other items.

Clearly, when the boom was on, too much money was squandered by the Government and the private sector.

The Government may not have thought that the boom could last forever, but we doubt it ever thought the bottom would fall out of the gold price so soon and so devastatingly.

Businessmen are perhaps more cynical. They take the maximum profits while they can — and they did so in the recent boom. If they were wise enough, they have enough reserves to tide them over a recession like the one into which we are going.

The consumer is not as fortunate, since he hasn't really been able to build up any reserves. Whatever increases he has received in pay have been overtaken by sharp rises in prices, tariffs and fees.

If our troubles due to gold were not enough, diamonds have lost their sparkle and a giant like De Beers has had to cut its final dividend by half, sending shock waves through the gem industry and the stock exchange.

Share prices have been falling for some time and the JSE overall index has dropped more than 24 percent since the beginning of the year.

The rand has also fallen below the dollar, and if it drops much further, imports will cost more, though our exports will benefit.

To add to the gloom, farmers are complaining of the effects of drought, a petrol price increase is in the pipeline, and the ripple effect of recent rail and postal tariff increases is still to be felt.

The fact that the ruling party has split will also not encourage overseas investor confidence, since one of the bullpoints in recent years has been the strength of the country's Government.

There could, of course, be an upturn in the gold market that would bring relief, but few experts expect gold to shine again this year.

So it looks very much like there will be hard times for some months to come.

The growth rate may then, as one or two experts have predicted, be not nil, but in a minus phase.

All this has come at a time when we still have the South West African border war on our hands, when we still have to spend much of our national income on defence, and when we are committed to improving the salaries of Blacks as well as their education and the quality of their lives.

Thus, the fall in the price of gold could not be at a more inopportune moment.

However, before we start talking of Black Thursdays or Black Fridays on the stock exchange, we think investors and the general public should bear this in mind.

We have been through bad times before — and worse times like Sharpeville and the Soweto riots periods.

The country's economy is basically very sound. We will survive the present recession as we have survived other periods of economic stringency.

One thing we cannot afford is a loss of confidence in ourselves. And there is no need for this.

The downturn we are experiencing will come to an end, as such downturns always do, and the economy will recover.

We have no doubt about that whatsover.

CSO: 4700/906

COUNTRY'S SEA FREIGHT ACTIVITIES PICK UP

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 1 Mar 82 p 10

[Excerpts]

SOUTH AFRICA was one of several pockets of slightly increased activity in a depressed market last week, reports Afromar.

Time charter did not provide much interest, especially for 'tweendeckers and the market is sorely trying for owners. A modern vessel of 16 800 tons ballasted from Malta to give delivery Houston mid-March for a trip to South Africa at $5 125 a day.

The only period business of note was for three sophisticated 12 700 dwt vessels with a speed of 16,5 to 17 knots, able to carry 428 containers with delivery on the Continent on prompt positions for six months' trading with options of a further six months, at $6 000 daily by a British liner company.

South Africa operators were prominent in time-charter tonnage to the Far East and to the Continent. Grain charterers took further tonnage to Japan with rates steady at $18 basis three ports discharge.

Other cargoes were quoted to Venezuela for a prompt position, and a small cargo was to be moved to the UK. Some grain products were quoted from South America to Durban.

Little fixing was reported in the coal trades although several new inquiries were circulated. Korean charterers were looking to move 40 000 tons of coal from Richards Bay on either voyage or time-charter basis for March 15 to 30.

A Japanese company was interested in moving 25 000 to 30 000 tons on time-charter basis out of Richards Bay on similar dates. One of the major oil companies had cargoes of 30 000 to 40 000 tons each from Richards Bay to Greece with shipment over the second half of this year.

Ore exports were also well catered for, and 30 000 tons of manganese was quoted from Port Elizabeth to Japan for a first-half April position which should be coverd at over $14 a ton on fio terms. Other interests were also involved in this trade.

It was said that a 20 000-ton cargo of manganese was fixed from Port Elizabeth to Montreal for about $14. A cargo of 10 000 to 15 000 tons was also to be moved between these ports.

A cargo of 16 000 tons was still to be covered to Norway on a prompt position, and 80 000 tons of manganese was arranged from Port Elizabeth to Northern Spain in three vessel with shipment between March and December. Another 30 000-ton cargo was arranged to Spain.

The sugar rate from Mauritius to the UK moved up to 50p with a fixture of 15 000 tons at £14. A total of 15 000 tons was arranged from Durban to Japan at $18,50 basis one port discharge.

CSO: 4700/927

WITWATERSRAND STUDENTS PLEAD GUILTY, GET TEN DAYS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 8

[Text]

AFTER being seven months in detention and four weeks on trial in the Johannesburg Regional Court the four University of the Witwatersrand Students charged with communist activities were sentenced yesterday after changing their pleas to guilty.

Benjamin Greyling (20), Elaine Mohammed (21), Michael O'Donovan (21) and Leslie Lax (23) have an effective 10-day jail sentence to serve and will be released from prison on March 21.

They pleaded guilty to assisting in the manufacture and production of posters commemorating the 60th anniversary of the Communist Party in South Africa.

Greyling also admitted assisting in the distribution of the posters.

The Regional Court Magistrate, Mr H Oosthuizen, accepted in mitigation that the accused were all first offenders. He also accepted that their youth was a well established mitigating factor.

Mr M Basslion, defending, submitted that the fact that the four were students should also be taken as a mitigating factor as "it is quite obvious that this act was committed by four basically irresponsible university students with no real thought about it."

He argued that there was no evidence to show the four had ever intended becoming members of the Communist Party and also that the posters had been found at an early stage and been removed before any real harm was done.

The magistrate said the court was satisfied the accused knew that what they were doing was wrong. He also pointed out that the legislature had meant the offence to be viewed in a serious light but "the court will therefore afford you the opportunity of pursuing your studies this year."

He said the students had been in custody for a long time and he would therefore suspend the greater part of the sentence.

All four were sentenced to the 360 days' imprisonment of which 350 days were suspended for five years.

CSO: 4700/906

PARENTS OF DETAINEES RALLY SUPPORT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 8

[Text]

THE Detainees Parents' Support Committee is organising a "Detainees Week" to mark nation-wide opposition to the detention laws, from tomorrow night until March 20.

During this week, a petition in the form of a declaration, will be launched and the public is invited to record its rejection of political detentions by signing this declaration.

The declaration will be launched for signature on Saturday morning, in which a prominent part will be played by the Public Support Group. The declaration will be open for signature until March 25.

An all-night vigil will start the week off. It will be held from 6 pm on Friday until 6 on Saturday morning, at Khotso House, 42 De Villiers Street, Braamfontein.

The vigil will be opened by Reverend Peter Storey with an undenominations prayer, followed by talks, poetry readings and songs.

The public is invited to participate "as an act of solidarity with those in detention". Many participants have declared their intention of fasting for 24 hours from 6 pm on Friday until 6 pm on Saturday as a further act of solidarity.

Religious services will be held on appropriate days during the week by the Christian, Islamic and Jewish faiths.

Placard demonstrations will be held each morning from Monday, March 15 to Friday, March 19 outside John Vorster Square and possibly other points.

Seminars concerning various aspects of detention and security legislation will be held during Detainees Week.

CSO: 4700/906

LARGE PRETORIA STUDENT CROWD APPLAUDS TREURNICHT

Constitutional Power Sharing Opposed

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Keith Abendroth]

[Text]

A CROWD of more than 3 000 Pretoria University students yesterday gave expelled National Party Cabinet Minister Andries Treurnicht a standing ovation — and cheered his stated determination to oppose constitutional power sharing.

The students packed the university's amphitheatre to hear Dr Treurnicht tell a lunchtime "forum" meeting he and those with him were "fighting integration and power sharing."

There was loud applause when he said that "there are those who say the 1977 constitutional proposals are as dead as a mossie — but I want to know who killed the mossie."

The meeting was carried over to the massive amphitheatre after the original Roos Hall venue became too crowded. In the amphitheatre, students packed the seats and spilled over onto the platform apron.

Speaking clearly but with strong emotional undertones, Dr Treurnicht said South Africa now faced a time of decision — but he could sense that his welcome from the students stressed his own belief that his own future still lay ahead.

Attitude

He had never changed his attitude since the 1977 constitutional proposals, he said.

"I have always stood for one Cabinet, one Government for one country."

Anything which could lead to power sharing with other racial groups — as was the clear implication of the latest constitutional developments — could under no circumstances be accepted.

He and the people for whom he spoke, recognised the right to self-determination of every race — the right to self-government in their own geographic domain.

"And the question in South Africa is how this is to be achieved," he said.

He denied and described as "absolute nonsense" criticisms that Afrikanerdom stood for racial oppression and said he believed that other race groups were in fact ripe for and entitled to self-determination.

But the Whites must refuse to give up their own right to self-determination — as could follow from the new constitutional developments. This could lead to doom.

Once Indians and Coloureds were admitted into the Cabinet Committee there would be no guarantees for the smaller race groups in South Africa — and an end to White self-determination.

In the past 30 years South Africa had taken massive strides towards providing and meeting the political expectations and rights of other race groups.

Contended

Thinkers had always contended that power sharing would be the death of White self-determination, "and you can't expect me to condone a 'healthy' death," he said.

The path of the Government was now leading to demands from Blacks for rights in urban areas, and these would result in ever more demands.

"Just as we treasure the right to self-determination so we know that the Coloureds, Indians and Blacks treasure that same right — but it must be given on a differentiated basis."

The path now being taken by the Government was resulting in the Cabinet Committee becoming a probable executive body.

"And under this dispensation, with these executive powers and with Indians and Coloureds in the committee, what guarantee is there that for instance a Minister of Education would be White?

"Naturally the other groups would strive to fill posts," he said.

At the same time, developments were giving the State President wider powers than originally envisaged — and he warned that this post could in time to come, through power sharing, become a "storm centre."

Questions

When questions had been asked about the constitutional plans last year the Prime Minister had said that there was plenty of time for discussion.

"But this time has never come," he said.

Plans were now at an advanced stage and it appeared that the system of three Parliaments, three Cabinets as originally planned had disappeared and the country was on the way to a unitary system of government.

Dr Treurnicht said: "We — not I — reject this."

He would not accept 10 non-Whites on a Cabinet Committee having an executive say over the Whites.

Problems

"The whole scene bristles with problems and lays the groundwork for possible domination of one race group over the destiny of others," he said.

Asked by a student on what authority he said it would be possible for a Non-White to become a Cabinet minister, he quoted from a report in an Afrikaans morning newspaper in March 1980.

He invited the student to the platform to see the authority and the student was shouted down when he tried to discuss the situation with Dr Treurnicht on the platform.

Pretoria Campus 'Politically Divided'

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 3

THE biggest crowd ever to attend a Pretoria University forum discussion group meeting welcomed Dr Treurnicht to the platform.

A few voices raised in criticism of Dr Treurnicht were quickly hushed to silence.

Dr Treurnicht's entry was preceded by two students carrying a giant paper mache head of his arch rival, the Minister of Manpower, Mr Fanie Botha.

There were loud yells and laughter when the head was placed on the platform near Dr Treurnicht but crashed to the ground when the wind blew it over.

Dr Treurnicht joked: "As you can see a head has fallen. But as far as I can make out mine is still on my shoulders."

His entry was welcomed by the singing of "Die Lied van Jong Suid-Afrika" by several thousand students.

Sitting among the students were many professors and lecturers, many of them with their wives and families.

Pretoria University students said yesterday that never before had the campus been so divided as over the Treurnicht-PW Botha political developments.

Students to whom The Citizen spoke said that there was tremendous sympathy and understanding for Dr Treurnicht and antagonism against Mr Botha.

But, generally, it appeared that many students were "fence sitting" to see which way the wind blew.

Comments overheard from students streaming to attend the forum meeting addressed by Dr Treurnicht were illuminating.

They included: "At last somebody has had the guts to speak out against the Kapenaar."

"Treurnicht will lay it on the line — and Afrikaners in the north will follow him."

"Treurnicht has the courage of his convictions to risk losing all to become the thin end of the anti-Botha wedge."

Students said that generally they were re-examining their party affiliations — and this was often against the background of an instinctive semi-dislike if not distrust of Mr P W Botha.

One student who did not want to be named, commented: "The P W Botha arrogance is not going down well with the Afrikaner — particularly the Afrikaner of the north."

It appeared that many students were waiting for the right-wing Afrikaanse Studentebond to stand up and be counted, indicating in what direction Afrikaans students should move.

A spokesman for the Pretoria University Students' Representative Council also said that the body would not take sides and did not expect to be affected by the political upheaval.

An article yesterday in the campus newspaper Die Perdeby said that the student community had been "drastically and directly hit" by the political developments.

It said: "Suddenly the party is broken up. And we have always been bonded by the language we speak and largely by the party to which we belong."

But it said more cheerfully: "But it should all make campus politics as interesting as the good old days of egg-throwing and political meetings."

CSO: 4700/906

VARIOUS VIEWS ON NP SPLIT REPORTED

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 26 Feb 82 p 11

[Report by Patrick Lawrence and Eugene Hugo]

[Text]

Wanted: A 'third man'

A CONCERTED bid to reconcile the Botha and Treurnicht factions in the National Party by persuading both men to step down in favour of a third man acceptable to both sides is likely to materialise in the next few days, predicts Dr Robert Schrire, of the University of Cape Town.

He tips Mr F W de Klerk, Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs and a vice-president of the Transvaal National Party, as the man whom Nationalists would turn to as a compromise leader.

"De Klerk is a Transvaaler and a conciliator," says Dr Schrire, who forecast the political demise of Mr Botha last April as the first results of the General Election started to come in.

If events are left to run their course a likely scenario is the capture of the Transvaal National Party by Dr Treurnicht and his rebel lieutenants — which will split the NP into "the Transvaal Nationalists and the National Nationalists, with Dr Treurnicht leader of the Transvaal NP but not a member of the NP parliamentary caucus".

Rather than risk so deep a schism in the NP, a major attempt will be made to usher both Mr Botha and Dr Treurnicht to the sidelines and to unite their supporters behind a new leader, he says.

Dr Schrire feels that the anticipated bid by Dr Treurnicht to capture the Transvaal NP, and exacerbate the already acrimonious broedertwis, cannot be lightly dismissed.

Although Dr Treurnicht's camp appears to be a minority in the Transvaal party hierarchy, their standing among rank-and-file party members is almost certainly stronger — and they are thus likely to request an extraordinary congress of the party to settle the dispute.

"The head committee of the party, which meets on Saturday, can hardly refuse a request for a special congress," says Dr Schrire.

Re-affirmation of Dr Treurnicht as Transvaal leader will place the NP in an untenable position — and rather than gamble on his rejection by the special congress the path to concialition and compromise via a third alternative will be chosen.

Reform or . . . kragdadigheid

BLACKS fear a new surge of kragdadigheid will emanate from the turmoil in the National Party but hope it will trigger a bold programme of reform, says Bishop Desmond Tutu, Secretrary General of the SA Council of Churches.

If the Prime Minister interprets the rebellion of Dr Treurnicht as a signal to continue the retreat from his promises of reform and to woo back Rightwing dissidents by a display of kragdadigheid, he may ignite a black explosion, the bishop cautions.

The end result will be to compound rather than solve Mr P W Botha's and South Africa's problems.

And that will be tragic because the dispute which precipitated the crisis in the NP — power-sharing with coloureds — is marginal compared to the "central issue" of including blacks in a new political dispensation for South Africa.

If the relatively minor question of accommodating coloureds cannot be solved without a major crisis in the governing party, what hope is there that it will be able to tackle the major question of black political rights in the central Government?

Bishop Tutu says of Mr Botha: "I want to encourage him to embark on a programme of change. He has nothing to lose but his chains."

If the Prime Minister has a sense of strategy, which his experience as Minister of Defence should have given him, he will realise that shedding his Rightwing has given him an opportunity to forge ahead with his oft proclaimed reform policies.

"If he goes boldly forward for change, I will be first to get on the rooftops and say: 'Give him a chance."

Formation of centrist group

A COALITION of centrist political forces could emerge in the wake of Dr Andries Treurnicht's rebellion against Mr P W Botha's policy of power-sharing.

This is the view of Professor Hennie Coetzee, former Chairman of the Afrikaner Calvinist Movement, former editor of the movement's mouthpiece, Woord en Daad, and former Dean of the Faculty of Ethnology at Potchefstroom University.

He says that assuming Dr Treurnicht and his Rightwing backers break from the National Party, the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, will be able to move to a reformist policy which could attract more moderate opposition elements.

This, he feels, would naturally lead to the formation of a stronger "centralist group" with a stronger Rightwing grouping and a smaller Leftist grouping emerging in the realignment of political forces.

"A coalition situation, as in 1933, could develop as an interim measure in preparation for another step, which could be the formation of a new party," says Prof Coetzee.

"It could be a pragmatic and spontaneous move in the face of co-operation between Rightwing groups in a general election," he says.

Prof Coetzee does not see Mr Botha's leadership position being in danger because, he says. "I don't think Dr Treurnicht is a man of that kind of mettle."

Rightwing co-operation, he says, could produce no more than 15 or 16 seats in a general election, leaving the Prime Minister with a reasonable majority.

"I can't see Dr Treurnicht forcing a coalition but I can see it as a pragmatic political move.

"Now that the Prime Minister is rid of the burden of the Rightwing he may move to the Left and a coalition could result as a spontaneous reaction."

Prof Coetzee says that in the new situation the leader of the strongest group would have to move away from the standpoint that there should be no breach in Afrikanerdom.

"This I believe is a necessary happening in terms of the political evolution in South Africa," he says.

A risk for the PM

THE onus is now on the Prime Minister to spell out how he is going to move towards true reform if he wants the support of the coloured people.

This is the view of Mr David Curry, deputy leader of the Labour Party, following Wednesday's dramatic caucus walkout by Dr Andries Treurnicht and 21 of his verkrampte Nationalist disciples.

Mr Curry says he is grateful that the National Party has now established that there has to be one government for coloureds, Indians and whites in South Africa.

The lines have now been drawn and the divisions made clear.

But if the Prime Minister does not show clearly which road he is going to travel, the NP crisis will be looked upon as just another "domestic squabble".

"Our position is that the coloured people cannot live any more with vague and abstract phrases such as 'healthy power sharing'," says Mr Curry.

The Prime Minister has to remember that even if Dr Treurnicht and his followers leave the National Party they will not be out of politics in South Africa.

Even the HNP has been able to apply the brakes on reform without any parliamentary representation. "He has not got rid of the brakes within Afrikanerdom," he says.

"Mr Botha now has to take the risk — and it will be a risk for him whatever direction he moves in — to take a strong line in leadership. Everything now depends on the Prime Minister's leadership."

Mr Curry says he believes that the split in Afrikanerdom feared by all Nationalists has already occurred and that there will now be a realignment of forces in South Africa.

ATTERIDGEVILLE COSAS LEADER SHOT

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 3 Mar 82 p 2

[Article by Monk Nkomo]

[Text] THE CHAIRMAN of the Atteridgeville branch of the Congress of South African Students (Cosas), who narrowly escaped death at the weekend, underwent an operation at the Kalafong Hospital yesterday to remove a bullet lodged in his right armpit.

Mr Desmond Nkosi (22), of 10 Letlametlo Street, Saulsville, was shot through the chest "at point-blank range" by an unknown gunman while on his way home on Saturday night.

Speaking from his hospital bed, the student leader told The SOWETAN yesterday that his nightmarish ordeal began a few minutes after he had walked out of the local cinema at interval.

"I was on my way home at about 9 pm when I was suddenly approached by a blue Valiant car along Lephura Street, near the Flavius Mareka High School. There were four men inside the car. When I retreated, they came out of the car and charged at me. One of the men, wearing a brown hat and black slacks, produced a gun and shot at me.

"The men ran back to the car after I fell to the ground. An unknown man travelling in a combi came to my rescue and rushed me to the Kalafong Hospital".

Mr Nkosi said he still did not know why his life was threatened, "because their motive was definitely not robbery. They wanted to kill me."

CSO: 4700/927

BRIEFS

SQUATTERS 'SIT-IN'--Cape Town--Fifty-four men, women and children from the Nyanga squatter camp here began a "sit-in fast" in the St George's Cathedral--a fast they are determined will end only "when we drop or when our plight is heard and understood." The silent men and women, many with babes in arms, took their places in the dimly-lit cathedral shortly after the end of the evening service. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 9]

PETROL THIEVES--Chaos reigned in Pretoria yesterday morning when traffic police fired tear gas and used batons to prevent a large crowd pilfering petrol from an overturned tanker. More than 6 500 litres of petrol and diesel were lost when the trailer of a tanker overturned at the corner of Boom and Van der Walt streets shortly before 9 am. The accident occurred opposite a taxi rank and a crowd carrying buckets, tins or any other conceivable containers rushed from the rank to the scene of the accident to help themselves to leaking fuel. Members of the traffic department chased the pilferers--who retaliated by throwing stones. The police then resorted to the use of tear gas and batons. A fire engine arrived on the scene and sprayed the leaking fuel with foam to prevent it from igniting. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 3]

DETAINEE DISCHARGED--Durban--Detained trade unionist Mr Sam Kikine was discharged from a Durban hospital where he had been receiving psychiatric treatment into police custody on condition he would no longer be held in isolation cells, his lawyer said today. He said the psychiatrist, who has treated Mr Kikine since he was admitted to St Augustine's Hospital about two weeks ago had recommended the conditions of discharge which had been accepted by the police. The psychiatrist today declined to comment, but said he was satisfied with the conditions of discharge. Mr Kikine, general secretary of the South African Allied Workers' ~~Union~~, was detained in November last year and had spent about 90 days in solitary confinement before he was admitted to hospital. Mr Kikine is being held under Section Six of the Terrorism Act. The Head of Security Police in Durban, brigadier J van den Hoven would not comment on the discharge or detention of Mr Kikine. "I will discuss it with his relatives," he said. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 11]

LITTLE CASH FOR MORTGAGES--Cape Town--Building societies in South Africa are still experiencing difficulties in regard to cash flow and where four investors in the past would have secured a house loan about eight investors were now required to secure one mortgage loan. Addressing a Press conference in Cape Town yesterday the president of the Association of Building Societies of South Africa, Mr Hendrik Sloet, said that in the period April to January 1980 a total of 155 849 loans had been granted while in the same period in 1982 only 78 993 could be granted. He did not, however, envisage an immediate (and further) increase in the rate structure though he thought that a further one percent (maximum) could be accommodated at a later stage if necessary. He said that it should be remembered that building societies followed the market and did not lead the market.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 11]

AFROX STRIKERS--Three hundred workers who have been on strike since Monday at the Afrox plant in Germiston returned to work yesterday morning and negotiations on their wage increase demands began immediately. The situation at the plant yesterday and throughout the strike was characterised by the claim behaviour of both management and striking workers. Although intimidatory notices, threatening physical restraint of any worker arriving for work on Monday were posted by strike leaders on Friday, Afrox management reported that there was no violence during the two-day strike. No police action or presence was necessary. The 300 strikers, (less than half the work-force at the plant), made demands through four worker-appointed negotiators that would would, according to management, make the local manufacture of gas-cutting and welding equipment more expensive than imported equipment, and deprive the plant of its economic viability. The strike originated from a verbal demand made last week that the pay increases planned for July be paid immediately. Management reported that it informed works committees it was prepared to negotiate. Notwithstanding the assurances, 300 men walked off the job on Monday. The results of the present negotiations begun yesterday when the strike ended, should be known today. The strike has only affected operations in the engineering contracts department and not in the production sections of bulk and cylinder gas, as workers in these sections chose not to strike. Customer deliveries would remain unaffected. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 8]

NEW CAPTAIN FOR FRIGATE--Capt A.P. Burgers addresses the ship's company of SAS President Pretorius for the last time. He was succeeded by Cdr N.S. Vorster as Captain of the frigate at a change of command parade in Simonstown recently. Cdr Vorster was formerly the ship's executive officer. Capt Burgers, who commanded SAS President Pretorius for nearly two years has been appointed OC of SAS Saldanha, the Navy's basic training unit on the West Coast. A product of Vryheid High School, he has had a long and varied career in the Navy. After obtaining his B Mil (BSc) degree at the Military Academy in Saldanha in 1962, he served as watchkeeping officer aboard SAS Good Hope and SAS President Kruger. In 1966 he was appointed Flag Lieutenant to the Chief of the Navy, a position he occupied for a year. Before assuming Command of SAS President Pretorius, Capt Burgers was a member of the control staff at the SA Defence College where he completed his Joint Staff Course. In his farewell address to the ship's company, Capt Burgers expressed his thanks to the crew for the shousands of sea miles they had travelled together. [Text] [Pretoria PARATUS in English Feb 82 p 38]

GEC CUTBACK--The GEC group's R5-million electric motor factory in Kwazulu has been forced to cut back production because of competition from cheap imports. This was revealed yesterday by Mr Robin Bullen-Smith, executive director of GEC South Africa, who said that the group's Kwazulu factory has been working a four-day week since February 1, 1982. He said that, in spite of the 30 per cent tariff protection which local manufacturers have enjoyed, imported electric motors are still coming in at prices which on average are 20 to 30 per cent cheaper than locally-made products. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 Mar 82 p 18]

NP SPLIT APPEARS 'UNBRIDGEABLE'--The split in the National Party appears to be unbridgeable. The Treurnicht breakaway group is determined to go its own way and a new party is likely to be founded. There will be arguments in the months to come whether or not there was any serious deviation in principle or emphasis in the policy of the NP as interpreted by the Prime Minister. We do not take sides, for the purposes of this editorial. But what we do say is that the split is in danger of driving the Afrikaners apart as nothing else has done in the post-war years. What the party and the breakaways will have to ask themselves is whether such a deep, dangerous and potentially bitter rift is either necessary or unavoidable. For once Afrikaner unity is shattered, it will be the volk itself that will be irrevocably divided and weakened. It is a thought that should be uppermost in many minds in the difficult months ahead. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 Mar 82 p 6]

SCIENTIFIC ADVISER--Cape Town.--The president of the Atomic Energy Board, Dr J W L de Villiers, has accepted the chairmanship of the Scientific Advisory Council on a part-time basis. Announcing this in Cape Town yesterday, the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, said the chairman would have direct and unrestricted access to him Dr De Villiers, who is also Chairman-designate of the Atomic Energy access to the professional expertise of the science planning branch of the Prime Minister's Office, which will continue to provide the professional base for the activities of the SAC. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 Mar 82 p 10]

GOLD RESERVES DOWN--The total gold and foreign assets of the Reserve Bank increased by R264 346 915 and stood at R3 753 163 950 on February 28. According to the monthly statement released in Pretoria, the gold holdings decreased by R126 244 782 to R2 915 546 016 at the end of February. Gold reserves have been valued ~~at R321,07~~ a fine ounce, compared with a valuat~~ion price~~ of R332,14 a fine ounce at January 31. Foreign bills increased from R34 988 455 to R82 033 500 at the end of February, while foreign investments decreased from R34 485 139 to R33 591 708. Other foreign assets increased from R377 552 641 to R721 992 724. Notes in circulation increased from R2 435 137 303 to R2 468 439 394. Government deposits increased from R45 036 297 to R88 602 089. The ratio of gold reserves to liabilities to the public less foreign assets stood at 54,4 percent, compared to 51,5 percent at the end of January. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 Mar 82 p 18]

STUDENTS NOMINATE MANDELA--A group of University of the Witwatersrand graduates in Britain has nominated imprisoned African National Congress (ANC) leader Nelson Mandela for chancellor--but they need his signature to make the nomination official. Like all Wits graduates, the group belongs to the university's convocation, which nominates and elects the university's chancellor. Nelson Mandela is in prison, so they plan to ask his wife, Winnie, to accept on her husband's behalf--but the university's registrar, Mr Ken Standenmacher, has said this would make the nomination invalid. [Text] [Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 3 Mar 82 p 5]

VAAL COSAS MEMBERS DETAINED--Three executive members of the Vaal branch of the Congress of South African Students (Cosas) are believed to be in security police detention. The three, Mr Gcina Malindi, Mr Lucky Twala and executive committee member Mr Tsheko Johnson, disappeared from their homes in Sebokeng and Evaton on Monday morning. Later the same evening the families of Gcina and Lucky received reports that they had been detained by the security p lice. The three's disappearance follows reports that the March rent increases in the Vaal were met with violent protest by youths in the area. People who went to the superintendents' offices to pay their monthly rentals are said to have been stopped by groups of youths who discouraged them from paying. Lucky's mother, Mrs Alzinah Twala, said white policeman came to her home on Monday night and told her that her son had been detained. Police said he had been picked up in Zone 13 Sebokeng that morning. A police spokesman yesterday said the three detentions could not be confirmed. [Text] [Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 3 Mar 82 p 3]

ANC TRIO'S HUNGER STRIKE--Three members of the African National Congress refusing prison food in death row, were yesterday said to be in satisfactory conditions by Prisons Department officials. Anthony Bobby Tsotsobe, Johannes Shabangu and David Moise, have been refusing prison food since February 6. The three men are waiting on death row after being sentenced to death for treason at the end of the Sasol-Booysens trial last year.] [Text] [Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 26 Feb 82 p 7]

CSO: 4700/927

PARTY OFFICIALS RAP USE OF PUBLIC OFFICE FOR PERSONAL GAIN

Paris AFRICA AFP in French 16 Feb 82 p 1

[Text]

DAR-ES-SALAAM, February 14 - Tanzanian public leaders who use their official capacities for personal gain have been described as more dangerous to the country's Socialist crusade than the remaining capitalists.

The warning was sounded by a prominent member of Tanzania's ruling Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM) party, Mr. Ngombale-Mwiru, in a report quoted here today by the Swahili-language party newspaper 'Mzalendo.

Mr. Ngombale- Mwiru, an ardent Marxist and a faithful discipline of President Julius Nyerere's Socialist philosophy, explained that the task of rooting out these so-called underminers would be more difficult than that of stamping out capitalism in the country.

He ranked acts of personal gain with theft, damage to public property and misconduct which, he said, were on the increase. But he laid the task of eradicating the enemies of the country's Socialism squarely on the shoulders of the party and its committed members.

Mr. Ngombale-Mwiru was one of the members of a special committee which last year proposed a series of chances to the CCM constitution and formulation of guidelines of party policy. The changes, together with the guidelines, were endorsed by more than 1,600 delegates at a four-day party congress here early last month.

The guidelines analysed the precepts of building an independent Socialist national economy and gave importance to the principles of self-criticism within the party.

Capitalist aspirants

President Nyerere has within the last few weeks been elaborating the new guidelines - aimed at making the CCM a really "Socialist" party - and has been urging the rooting out of hypocrites so that they can not contest leadership positions in the forthcoming party elections.

President Nyerere emphasised that elections of hypocrites and capitalist aspirants would not only frustrate the ruling party's objectives but would also give a licence for the perpetuation of corruption, tribalism and divisionism and their accompanying evils in Tanzania, which advocated justice and equitable distribution of the nation's wealth.

Meanwhile, Mzalendo also reported today that a CCM branch chairman in Tanzania's southern region of Lindi, Mohamed Ali Hemedi, has been suspended from his leadership position with immediate effect for allegedly being a stumbling block in the implementation of an agricultural programme in his village. (A.F.P.)

CSO: 4700/888

DELEGATION ENCOURAGED BY IMPROVED TRANSPORT PROSPECTS

Paris AFRICA AFP in French 23 Feb 82 p 1

[Text]

DAR-ES-SALAAM, February 22 - A high-level delegation from Tanzania to an aid donors' conference in Bruseels has returned highly encouraged with the prospects of a big improvement in the country's railway and water transport systems aimed at boosting carriage of goods to neighbouring land-locked states.

The conference in Brussels was also attended by representatives from Zambia, Zaire, Rwanda and Burundi, whose economies are heavily reliant on the Tanzanian transport system.

Minister for Transport and Communications John Malecela, who led the Tanzanian delegation, told reporters yesterday that several countries and international financiers had shown great interest in helping create what would soon be known as the "central transport corridor" of East and Central Africa.

This corridor - comprising the Tanzanian central rail line, trunk roads and water routes over Lakes Victoria and Tanganyika - would provide a transport outlet for Burundi, Rwanda, Zambia, Zaire and also Uganda to the sea through the port of Dar-es-Salaam.

Tanzania andits land-locked neighbours are determined to see improved under the programme the century-old Tanzanian railway and the handling capacities of the ports of Dar-es-Salaam, Mwanza on Lake Victoria and Kigoma on Lake Tanganyika to ease the flow of traffic. The programme also calls for upgrading of the Lake Tanganyika ports of Bujumbura in Burundi, Kalemie (Zaire) and Mpulungushi (Zambia).

Mr. Malecela, describing the Brussels conference as "extremely fruitful", said the European Economic Community (EEC) had pledged to give 200 million shillings (U.S. dollars 25 million) in addition to an earlier pledge of 190 million shillings (US. dollars 24 million) for improvement of the central rail line.

Canada, Denmark

Canada was expected to provide 1,380 million shillings (U.S. dollars 172 million) over the next five years to improve the line's infrastructure, while Denmark would give 80 million shillings (U.S. dollars 10 million) worth of signals and navigational equipment, he said.

West Germany, currently involved in bridge construction along the Kigoma-Tabora stretch of the central line, would provide locomotives and had further pledged to assist with communications equipment. The Kuwait fund and the African Development Bank had also agreed to consider the financing of medium-size projects within the corridor programme. (A.F.P.)

CSO: 4700/888

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS PRESENTS REPORT ON FUNDING OF MISSIONS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Mar 82 p 5

[Text]

THERE is not much need for Zambia to open up new missions abroad because it has failed to maintain the present ones by not funding them with enough cash and property in form of furniture, according to a report of the committee on foreign rel.'ons for the third session of the fourth National Assembly appointed on January 21, 1981.

"Missions should be dignified to be able to present the proper image of the country and not to reflect poverty, mismanagement and dishonour. They should therefore be properly funded and serviced," the report says.

In determining the establishment of missions the deciding factor should be the economic benefits that would be gained through such missions.

The committee notes that in this regard major economic negotiations were often conducted in Geneva which was the seat of many specialised UN agencies such as the International Labour Organisation and the World Health Organisation.

At present the staff at New York were made to do extra work because there was nobody based in Geneva, the committee says.

There were so many employment opportunities at the United Nations secretariat which Zambians did ne know about and the committee feels that publicity should be made about these job facilities so that qualified Zambians could be employed.

For instance, the committee notes that there are 14 posts at the UN which Zambia is entitled but only six are filled up.

CSO: 4700/925

MUDENDA ADMITS IMF TERMS HAD 'SOME ADVERSE EFFECTS' ON AGRICULTURE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Mar 82 pp 1, 7

[Excerpt]

CHAIRMAN of the Economic and Finance Sub-Committee of the Central Committee, Mr Elijah Mudenda yesterday conceded in Parliament that the terms demanded by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) as a condition for granting Zambia the first loan between 1978 and 1980 had some adverse effects on the development of agriculture.

This was because of the ceiling imposed on the amount of money to be used on agriculture. The terms made it difficult for agricultural marketing organisations to get overdrafts from lending institutions to service farmers.

But as a result of subsequent negotiations the IMF became more flexible — easing the strain the measures had imposed on the agricultural industry.

The IMF was a highly professional institution which was insensitive to the country's political problems but looked rather at the economical feasibility of the measures applied, Mr Mudenda said.

It was up to Zambia to gauge the effects of the measures taken on the political and other fronts and institute a remedy.

Mr Mudenda was speaking in his contribution to the debate of estimates for the Ministry of Finance and was specifically replying to MP for Pemba Mr Landson Hantuba who had appealed to the Government to re-examine conditions imposed by the IMF which he said had adversely affected agricultural development.

Mr Hantuba said if the IMF agreed to help Zambia but insisted on 101 per cent adherence to its conditions, it was virtually running the affairs of the country.

CSO: 4700/925

ZAMBIA, MALAWI EXPANDING BILATERAL RELATIONS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

ZAMBIA and Malawi have established a joint permanent commission of cooperation embracing various spheres of bilateral cooperation.

This follows the signing of a protocol at Sanjika palace in Blantyre, Malawi, between Dr Kaunda and President Kamuzu Banda.

According to a joint communique issued at the end of President Kaunda's visit to Malawi, the two leaders noted with great satisfaction that their countries' bilateral relations continued to develop in a positive manner.

They explored other means of consolidating, expanding further and strengthening the scope of their cooperation in various fields which included Mchinji-Chipata railway link, air services, telecommunications, Karonga-Mpulungu road project and trade relations between the two nations.

The two heads of state reaffirmed their support for, and commitment to principles of the Southern African Development Coordination Conference (SADCC) and those of the recently signed agreement establishing a Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern Africa (PTA).

The two leaders reviewed the international situation and expressed their belief in the principles enshrined in the charter of the United Nations and the Organisation of African Unity (OAU).

Respect for those principles was a consonance with the maintenance of international peace and security.

President Kaunda and Dr Banda reviewed the situation in Namibia and hoped the five Western contact group discussions now going on would bring independence for the disputed territory, in accordance with United Nations resolution 435.

Dr Kaunda expressed his gratitude to the Malawi leader, the party and government and the people of Malawi for their overwhelming, enthusiastic and genuinely warm welcome and generous African hospitality accorded him, his wife Betty, and his delegation.

The President was touched by the spontaneous demonstration of love and respect of the people of Malawi towards their Zambian brothers.

He thanked Dr Banda for inviting him to Malawi and he extended an invitation to the Ngwazi to visit Zambia. Dr Banda accepted the invitation with pleasure.

CSO: 4700/925

FINLAND AIDING FUNDING OF PRACTICAL STUDIES IN PRIMARY SCHOOLS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 Mar 82 p 5

[Text]

THE Government is to reintroduce practical subjects in primary schools to prepare pupils to face the world in the event of premature termination of their education careers, Minister of State for Education Mr Alan Chilimboyi announced in Lusaka yesterday.

He told a workshop for chief education officers and inspectors of schools that the Finnish government had already agreed to help fund the development of practical subjects.

He said the Finnish government had spent K937,000 on practical subjects and had earmarked another K1,617,000 over the next two years.

In addition to financial help the government of Finland had been sending out about seven specialists in practical subjects on two-year contracts since 1977.

Mr Chilimboyi urged the workshop to work out ways in which facilities could be provided for schools utilising the initiatives of the community.

Teachers curriculum specialists, lecturers and inspectors of schools must conduct the assessment of subject objectives contained in the current syllabus and text books to determine their relevance and suitability.

This would help curriculum specialists in establishing which subjects would need to be modified or retained.

He admitted the Party and its Government made a serious mistake soon after Independence by deliberately phasing out practical subjects from the primary school curriculum.

He said now a correction must be made which should include the reviving of positive attitudes towards practical schools.

With the disappearance of practical subjects from the school curriculum, teachers qualified in these fields were retrained to take academic subjects which were considered superior.

CSO: 4700/925

SCOTTISH GROUP OF COMPANIES TO MAKE 'MASSIVE' INVESTMENTS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Mar 82 p 2

[Text]

THE Scottish Low and Bonar PLC International is to pour massive investments into Zambia to boost its economy.

The pledge was made in Lusaka by visiting Bonar group managing director and chief executive Mr Brian Gilbert who said his chain of companies had a great future in Zambia.

The group includes clothing manufacturing Bonar Colvwn of Ndola, Lusaka Plastics, Bonar Travel, Bonar Canvas and Modern Garments.

During his tour of Lusaka Plastics Mr Gilbert said expansion plans involving hundreds of thousands of Kwacha had been worked out by his group subsidiaries.

He would meet the heads of companies in Ndola today to decide on these plans and see how they could be executed.

"We hope to put in more investments to help earn more foreign exchange and promote local employment," he said.

In Ndola Mr Gilbert would look at plans for a big textile plant which expected to employ 800 workers.

His visit would afford him the opportunity to understand fully problems facing his group of companies and what future plans they had to put into effect.

He was satisfied with the operations of Lusaka Plastics and was "fascinated" with new developments, including the manufacture of baths and wash and hand basins.

He saw how the company was geared to participate in Zambia's agrarian revolution by being one of the major manufacturers of irrigation pipes and other industrial and domestic hardware.

Last week newly appointed manager of the plastics development side of the Bonar Colvwn group in Ndola Mr David Woodworth said the group was planning a wide expansion of its product range with considerable capital.

Mr Gilbert was taken around the plant by Lusaka Plastics manager Mr Dhiraj Parmar and was accompanied by newly appointed Bonar Colwyn managing director, Mr Gerald Sterck.

CSO: 4700/925

ZR MANAGER REVIEWING FRAUD CASE DECISIONS MADE IN HIS ABSENCE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

ZAMBIA Railways general manager Mr Basil Monze is reviewing decisions made in his absence concerning workers implicated in fraud cases.

Mr Monze announced this in Kabwe yesterday when he commented on reports that some top management officials at the company's headquarters were allegedly shielding relatives involved in malpractices from punishment.

Sources in the company's audit department have said fraud cases had become common because some senior management officials abetted them by protecting culprits.

The sources cited cases of double and delayed payments of money to the immigration department for expatriate work permits, cheating on mileage allowances by senior company officials and thefts which had been reported to the authorities without action being taken.

In most cases, recommendations by the personnel department to dismiss culprits in accordance with company policy could not go through as big shots at head office allegedly substituted such cases for negligence and meted out mild punishments.

The sources mentioned a senior officer who had allegedly misused K1,450 which he obtained from the company on the pretext that the cash would be distributed to company sponsored clubs.

There was the case of two personnel clerks and their supervisor said to have obtained K1,000 from the company to pay for expatriate work permits when in fact this was false.

According to the sources, the two clerks said to be relatives of some influential management officials were recommended for dismissal, but their case was reduced to carelessness. They only got demoted.

Mr Monze confirmed receipt of the audit report late last year and left instructions to his assistants to take appropriate disciplinary action before he left for his month-long tour of Europe and America.

"That action was taken during my absence but I am reviewing it to find out whether it was carried out in accordance with the company's disciplinary procedure.

"In my opinion, these chaps misappropriated the money. I have the matter with me and I am looking at it today. If you want to know something, you will know tomorrow. I am answerable for whatever goes wrong in Zambia Railways and this being the case, nobody will be protected for indiscipline."

He said while he gave power to his departmental managers to discipline their subordinates without necessarily consulting him, he would not hesitate to "move in wherever unusual things" happened.

But Mr Monze exonerated an expatriate employee accused of cheating on mileage allowance, saying what he did on two occasions was "just a mistake" because instead of writing the correct figure on the weight of his vehicle, he wrote a different number.

"In fact, action on this was taken when I was away and I am satisfied with it because after all, he has already paid the difference of K10 since the wrong claim on each occasion was only K5."

CSO: 4700/925

RESTRICTIONS ON MOVEMENTS OF POLICE OFFICER LIFTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Mar 82 p 5

[Text] RESTRICTIONS imposed on suspended Central Province deputy police chief Mr Labby Kalombe's movements by the Ministry of Home Affairs have been lifted after representations from his lawyers.

An angry Mr Kalombe said from his Kabwe home yesterday he was placed "under house arrest" for 16 days by the ministry's permanent secretary Mr Langson Kawesha in his suspension letter dated February 3.

The restrictions, which confined Mr Kalombe's movements to Kabwe police station, lasted from February 3 to February 19 after Nkwazi Chambers made representations to the ministry.

"I am very bitter because I am not a criminal nor am I a political dissident. The offence I am alleged to have committed was in 1975, nearly eight years ago and was of an administrative nature. Why have they waited all these years to punish me now?"

He believed he was being "harassed" for speaking out on the ills afflicting the police force including tribalism, corruption, nepotism and misplacement of qualified staff.

A letter from Nkwazi Chambers to Mr Kawesha reads in part: "Our client was suspended from duty and his movements were restricted to Kabwe police station (a distance of about ten metres from the house) for alleged abuse of authority on a matter which happened on January 11, 1975 which is roughly eight years ago.

"We fail to understand the legal basis upon which our client's movements were restricted to Kabwe police station which is in fact an infringement of his constitutional rights."

The letter quoted the relevant constitutional provision under Statutory Instrument number 65 of 1976 relating to the Police and Prison Service Commission regulation, section 32 (7) which reads as follows:

"A suspended officer shall not leave Zambia without the permission of the responsible officer (permanent secretary) during the period of his suspension."

Nkwazi Chambers contended that this provision did not apply to the restriction of movement within Zambia and "would be obliged to know the constitutional basis for confining our client's movements to Kabwe police station."

The lawyers warned that if the restriction order was not revoked within three days of receiving the letter, they had instructions to apply for a declaration to have the order declared null and void by the High Court.

Following receipt of this letter, the ministry's under secretary, Mr Evans Simukulwa revoked the restrictions on Mr Kalombe's freedom of movement within the country.

His letter to Nkwazi Chambers, dated February 12 reads: "I refer to your letter dated February 8, 1982 regarding the above subject. I wish to inform you that Mr Kalombe is free to move anywhere within Zambia as long as he informs this office where he is

CSO: 4700/925

NHA WORKERS END WILDCAT STRIKE AFTER ADDRESS BY UNION LEADERS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 Mar 82 p 5

[Excerpt]

HUNDREDS of hourly-paid construction workers of National Housing Authority (NHA) in Lusaka yesterday downed tools for four hours in protest against non-payment of salary increment arrears from last year.

The sit-in was immediately condemned by NHA managing director Dr David Simonda who called it illegal and warned that ring leaders would be dismissed.

The workers returned to work after being addressed by union officials.

Commenting on the incident, Dr Simonda said workers on NHA building sites who downed tools were guilty of a collective agreement signed between the company and the Zambia United Local Authorities Workers Union.

The workers had reacted to late publication of the agreement in the Government Gazette which took effect on August 1 last year in which they were awarded a 6n an-hour increase.

"This increase had in fact been already paid to the hourly workers with effect from the date of the collective agreement currently in force" said Dr Simonda.

Confusion had arisen because the NHA used two dates for the revision of salaries, one for permanent staff on January 1 and the other for general workers on August 1 every year.

"It seems that hourly paid workers were also expecting increases in January along with permanent staff despite the fact that this would contradict the provision of the collective agreement."

Misunderstandings arose last month when a few of the workers' salaries were adjusted slightly to bring them to the minimum of the scale required under the collective agreement.

This was misunderstood to mean that certain workers were being granted increases in salary whereas that was not so. The adjustments were made in full consultation with union officials.

Dr Simonda charged that a number of disgruntled workers had taken advantage of the misunderstanding to incite workers to go on an illegal protest.

He had wanted to sack all workers who had taken part in the sit-in but after urgent consultations with union officials, only ring leaders would be fired.

CSO: 4700/925

PINEAPPLE CANNING PLANT OVERCOMES OPERATING PROBLEMS

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 4 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpt]

OPERATIONAL problems previously faced by the Mwinilunga Pineapple Canning factory had been overcome, North-Western Province permanent secretary, Mr Rhodes Sambondu reported in Solwezi yesterday.

He said the factory was now running smoothly and authorities did not anticipate any hitches in its operations.

Mr Sambondu, who toured the factory last week, said tins which were constantly in short supply were now in abundance.

RUCOM, he said, had been directed to ensure that the factory was operating accordingly and report any problems to the authorities so that they are rectified quickly.

Mr Sambondu said although farmers were always complaining about the late payments for their produce by RUCOM, they had agreed to sell their fruits to the factory instead of leaving them to rot on their farms.

Mr Sambondu also hoped that the transportation of the crop would speed up with the purchase of new vehicles by the North-western Co-operative Union (NWCU).

CSO: 4700/925

SUGAR COMPANY ACTS TO AVERT FURTHER [illegible]

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 4 Mar 82 p [illegible]

[Text] ONLY 1,300 tonnes of sugar will be released to the market each week with immediate effect, an Indeco spokesman said in Lusaka yesterday.

This was one of the measures undertaken by Zambia Sugar Company to avoid a possible shortage of the commodity between now and the end of this month when the new production season begins.

The spokesman said the measure would continue until the start of the 1982 crop early in April.

"But the 1,300 tonnes that will be made available to the market between now and the end March should be sufficient for normal requirements and there is no need for panic-buying that has been evident recently."

The spokesman explained that Nakambala Sugar Estate mills were normally shut down at this time of the year after all the sugar had been harvested and processed and the company carried out plant maintenance in readiness for the next season.

He said the sales of sugar had gone up over the last three years. The total marketable sugar for the 1981/82 season was 112,000 tonnes as [illegible] 90,000 tonnes [illegible] 1979/80 season.

He charged that the abnormal increase in the sales of sugar were partly because of the illegal exports of the commodity to neighbouring countries. Copies of the weekly distribution list would be made available to the provincial and national contingency offices, the office of the provincial political secretary, the Price Control Office and Freedom House.

Meanwhile, the spokesman announced that Nakambala were to start producing white sugar as soon as the harvest began at the end of this month in order to ensure increased supply of the commodity.

The production of white sugar would be twice more than the current consumption.

Meanwhile, a critical shortage of sugar has hit several parts of the country and endless queues are a common feature where the commodity appears briefly on sale, ZANA reports.

Lusaka, Central, Copperbelt, North — Western and other provinces have been hit by the sugar crisis which began soon after prices were hiked in the Budge tabled in Parliament by Finance Minister Mr Kebby Musokotwane in [illegible]ry.

In Lusaka's Chilenje township on Tuesday, a huge crowd converged on a [illegible]CBC shop to buy the commodity shortly after word went round that it had been delivered to the super-market.

Several people spent the whole day at the shop in a bid to buy the rare commodity. Similar situations are witnessed in other parts of the capital where sugar is sold.

In Kitwe, sugar shortage is critical and governor Mr Raphael Mwale spoke to Zambia Sugar Company management who also expressed concern at the crisis.

Mr Mwale said Zambia Sugar Company officials told him that the shortage might have been caused by an administrative problem within the company.

The situation in Kabwe is also critical and manager of Kabwe Transport, distributors of the commodity, Mr Samr Parekh said his firm got 30 tonnes a week instead of 60 tonnes it previously used to get from Ndola three times per week.

The shortage has also affected Mufulira and Solwezi where shelves had been without sugar for over a week.

CSO: 4700/925

PROGRAM PROVIDES PLACES IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS FOR DROPOUTS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

MORE than 500 Grade Seven dropouts have found Form One places through the programme of converting old buildings into secondary schools with the help of local people, Minister of State for Education Mr Allan Chilimboyi has said.

He said this yesterday when commenting on the progress of the programme launched last May by the ministry to secure places in secondary schools for pupils who were not selected.

The programme was yielding good results and he described the response to it by local communities as encouraging.

Mr Chilimboyi recently toured the converted schools in line with Prime Minister Mundia's directive that the plan of converting old buildings into secondary schools should now be tackled seriously.

He visited schools in Solwezi, Choma and Kasempa from February 24. The Solwezi school has been housed in what was once old rural council buildings which the local people modified into classrooms and teachers' houses.

The school was provided with six teachers on completion and had an intake of 123 pupils last year. Yesterday it was expected to have enrolled 120 pupils.

The converted school at Kasempa had been fashioned out of former rural council offices and people were prepared to expand it.

CSO: 4700/925

EMERALD SMUGGLERS CAUSING LOSSES TO TREASURY

Paris AFRICA AFP in French 23 Feb 82 pp 1-3

[Text]

LUSAKA, February 20 - Tens of millions of dollars, as much as 10 per cent of the national budget according to some, escape the Zambian Treasury every year through the smuggling of emeralds.

This highly lucrative traffic has became a matter of state concern in a country which suffers much as a result of being almost wholly dependent on its copper exports to earn foreign revenue.

The last few months have seen vigorous action by the authorities against illegal emerald miners, who are usually Zambian nationals, and above all against the smugglers who come from other African states.

A total of 541 foreign nationals have been arrested in the crackdown, according to official sources, joining some 300 already behind bars for their involvement.

The illegal but semi-open extraction of emeralds and their clandestine channelling onto the markets of Europe, India and South Africa began in the 1970s in the Copperbelt near the border with Zaire.

Hundreds of foreigners - from Mali and Senegal in particular, and also Zaire, Cameroun, Malawi, Zimbabwe and Tanzania - flocked to Ndola Province in the hope of getting rich quick.

Easy living

Zambia is, with South Africa, Zimbabwe, Colombia and some other South American states, one of the few countries rich in emeralds.

An indication of the scale of the traffic is the fact that official emerald production has been zero for several years.

Until a short while ago, the living was easy for the emerald smugglers.

A Senegalese told how he operates. He enters Zambia via Lusaka airport, changing money to the value of 5,000 kwachas (5,000 U.S. dollars at the official rate) to keep within the rules.

Cultural, social effects

He then goes to the Ndola region without hiding the fact that he is after the green stones. After "squaring" with police and customs on his return, he then goes to Switzerland and France, which do not lack wealthy buyers.

Local authorities, traditional chiefs and the press have become worried by this "green gold rush."

Firstly there have been economic consequences,with increased inflation due to the fact that the miners and above all the smugglers have the means to live the high life.

Cultural and social effects have also resulted, with a population explosion in the border villages due to the influx of foreigners.

The foreigners are sometimes accused of abusing locals who refuse to sell their precious stones at sufficiently low prices.

Police involved

The settling of scores in the Zambian emerald business does not seem as murderous as that in Colombia, however, even if the press made much of a shooting in which a Senegalese was wounded.

Another regular complaint is that these rich foreigners undertake "marriages of convenience" with Zambian women in order to avoid expulsion.

The impunity with which the smugglers can operate may appear surprising. But the police are not always above suspicion.

According to the Zambian Sunday Times, some officers confiscate emeralds they find on illegal miners and then release the offenders.

In October 1980, a former top police official sentenced to 24 years' hard labour for assuming possession of emeralds was acquitted on appeal.

Regular swoops

Prime Minister Nalumino Mundia recently expressed "shock" during a visit to the Copperbelt that the authorities seemed to be doing practically nothing to put an end to the thousands of illegal foreign miners.

The Government has not been idle since President Kenneth Kaunda called for action in 1979, however.

Apart from regular swoops on thousands of Zambians and foreigners in recent years, the authorities have tightened border controls. Interior Minister Frederick Chomba has said that in future all visitors to Zambia not citizens of Commonwealth countries would need visas.

Ten-fold pay

The most serious attempt by the Government to prevent the outflow of this national wealth was the setting up at the end of last year of the Reserved Minerals Corporation (RMC).

This company, which has been granted an exclusive mining right, is still only at the stage of prospecting and building an infrastructure.

It will perhaps have difficulty in competing with the "illegals", who are very up-to-date on the latest extraction techniques and who pay their miners at least 10 times RMC's salaries.

The illegal traffic in precious stones is a worry in neighbouring countries too. In Zimbabwe just a few days ago, for example, Parliament adopted a law providing for sentences of three years' jail aimed at outlawing the trade. (A.F.P.)

CSO: 4700/888

BRIEFS

REVENUES FROM TOURISM--The Ministry of Tourism earned K73.9 million in foreign exchange between 1979 and 1981, Minister Mr Roger Sakuhuka told Parliament yesterday. He was winding up debate on estimates of expenditure for the ministry. Mr Sakuhuka said K12.4 million was raised from 53,885 tourists in 1979; K24.4 million from 86,931 tourists in 1980 while K37.1 million was raised last year from 125,744 tourists. Last year the ministry raised K19.5 million from about 85,000 Zambians who visited various tourist spots. Mr Sakuhuka was sure the ministry would have done even better this year had it been allocated sufficient funds. The National Hotels Development Corporation group had achieved a turnover of K15,191 million for the year ended March 31, 1981, as against K10,378 million for the previous year. The corporation had, for the first time since its inception, made a profit of K121,000 last year. Mr Sakuhuka conceded that standards of some hotels were falling but the ministry was doing "everything possible" to make improvements. [Excerpt] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 Mar 82 (no page number given)]

DETAINEES IN 1980, 1981--At least 115 people were detained under the Preservation of Public Security Act between 1980 and 1981, Home Affairs Minister of State CHIEFTAINESS NKOMESHYA said in Parliament yesterday. She said this in reply to a question by Senanga MP Mr Linyando Mukwe who wanted to know the number of people detained during the period under the Act and how mnay of them had sued the State for wrongful detention. But Chieftainess Nkomeshya referred the issue of suing to the Ministry of Legal Affairs. On those detained, she said 71 were detained in 1980, while 44 were held in 1981. [Excerpt] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Mar 82 p 7]

EFFECTIVE FERTILIZER DISTRIBUTION--Namboard should introduce an effective distribution system of fertiliser to avoid the shortage of the commodity in some parts of the country. Opening the Monze-Pemba Farmers conference in Monze's Hindu Hall yesterday, Minister of State for Decentralisation, Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula, said Namb should not blame the Party and its government for their shortcomings since it was free to ask for foreign exchange to import agricultural requisites. Mr Chuula also called on the parastatal firm to take steps to ensure that agricultural requisites were made available to the farming community before the rainy season starts. He told the farmers that Namb must ensure that fertiliser and other requisites were made available to farmers as early as September this year. He told farmers that agriculture had become the cornerstone of the economy and all efforts must be made to ensure the success of the lima and operation food production programmes. [Excerpt] [Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 3 Mar 82 p 3]

MISSING EMERGE FROM BUSH--The Zambian minister of home affairs, Mr Chomba, says that seven of his country's nationals who were reported abducted by Zairese troops during a border skirmish last weekend have been found. Mr Chomba said the men had fled into the bush during the exchange of fire between Zambian and Zairese troops. He appealed for calm in response to calls in Parliament for the closure of the border between the two countries as a result of the incident. [Excerpt] [CA052306 Salisbury Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 5 Mar 82]

POLICE GROUND ROMANIAN VEHICLES--More than half of the 811 Romanian ARO vehicles, which were ordered for the Zambian Police Force, have been grounded due to lack of spare parts, while a good of them are beyond repair. Home Affairs Minister, Mr Frederick Chomba said in Parliament recently that the government would consider letting a private firm take over the provision of spare parts for the vehicles. The Mechanical Services Branch in the Ministry of Works and Supply usually maintains and services all government vehicles. Mr Chomba said that out of 811 vehicles allocated to the Police last year, only 241 were still on the road; 531 were awaiting spare parts, while 38 were beyond repair. The Minister explained that since the vehicles had been received under a technical aid agreement, not initial provision had been made for spare parts. He said parts which were ordered later were all used up and new ones had to be ordered. [Text] [Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 5 Mar 82 p 3]

CSO: 4700/926

MAPUTO MEETING PUZZLES NKOMO

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 10 Mar 82 p 9

[Text]

SALISBURY. — The leader of Zapu-PF, Mr Joshua Nkomo, said yesterday he failed to understand the stance adopted by the "frontline" states at their weekend meeting in Maputo.

He was commenting on a communique issued after the meeting on Sunday in which the heads of "frontline" states said the Prime Minister, Mr Robert Mugabe, was justified in dismissing from the government Mr Nkomo and other members of his party, following the discovery of arms on property they were associated with.

Mr Nkomo said: "There was no need for the prime minister to seek support from the 'frontline' states and there was no need for the frontliners to make the statement they made."

In an interview with the semi-official news agency Ziana, he added: "The Prime Minister has internationalised a purely local conflict which was of his own making, a conflict we have been trying to get rid of.

"If the frontliners represent the OAU, is that how the OAU is now going to conduct its affairs?" he asked.

Asked about reports of Zapu members leaving the party to join Zanu-PF, Mr Nkomo claimed Zanu-PF members had collected cards and uniforms from his members by force.

He denied anyone was resigning from his party and repeated a previous assertion that both Zipra and Zanla had hidden arms and neither he nor Mr Mugabe knew where they were.

CSO: 4700/920

FOUR WHITE TRIED FOR ATTEMPT TO OVERTHROW MUGABE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 9

[Text]

BULAWAYO. — The prosecution has begun calling witnesses in the treason trial of four White men accused of plotting to overthrow the Prime Minister, Mr Robert Mugabe.

The four — Mr Francis Bertrand, 58, his son Stephen, Mr Victor Radmore, 53, and Mr Allen Chauvin, 21 — are accused of "terrorism and sabotage". They face the death penalty on each of the two charges.

It is the first treason trial since Zimbabwe became independent two years ago.

The first prosecution witness was a Zimbabwe police detective who claimed he had infiltrated a group of Whites, including the four, by posing as a dissident army officer.

Detective-Sergeant Benson Nkiwane testified that the aim of the group, led by Mr Bertrand senior, was to force secession of Matebeleland, the western Zimbabwe province that mainly supports Mr Joshua Nkomo's Zimbabwe African People's Union.

Mr Nkomo was accused of plotting against Mr Mugabe last month and was fired from the Cabinet after massive arms caches were found on property belonging to him and other Zapu leaders.

Sergeant Nkiwane said Mr Radmore had told him South African supporters were backing the plot.

The policeman also claimed Mr Radmore had told him soldiers loyal to the former Prime Minister, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, were prepared to back the coup attempt.

Mr Mugabe has often claimed that 5 000 Muzorewa soldiers are being trained in South Africa to topple his government, and has accused South Africa of trying to destabilise Zimbabwe.

All four accused have denied the charges. They have been held under emergency regulations for 113 days. They are also accused of illegal possession of automatic rifles, hand grenades, explosives and ammunition. — Sapa-AP.

CSO: 4700/907

GOVERNMENT TO CRACK DOWN ON FOREIGN JOURNALISTS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

THE Government is to get tough with journalists working for foreign publications who misrepresent events in Zimbabwe, the Minister of Information, Posts and Telecommunications, Dr Nathan Shamuyarira warned yesterday.

Speaking at the opening of the Georgi Dimitrov photographic exhibition in Salisbury, Dr Shamuyarira said the Government would clamp down on journalists working for foreign publications who "saw Zimbabwe through South African eyes".

"We have already withdrawn the accreditation of one correspondent and we are going to adopt a tougher line towards such correspondents."

He said that the meet-the-people tour by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, last year had been projected as a sign of the decline of ZANU (PF)'s popularity and when he (the Prime Minister) reshuffled the Cabinet this too had been reported as the advent of a civil war.

He appealed for more literature from socialist countries, saying this would counter the effect of these "lies".

Dr Shamuyarira told the Bulgarian Ambassador to Zimbabwe, Mr Christo Kolev, that as soon as such revolutionary literature became available the Government would distribute it.

Paying tribute to Georgi Dimitrov for the heritage he left Bulgaria, Dr Shamuyarira said that the Prime Minister had been impressed by the socio-economic institutions established in Bulgaria.

CSO: 4700/928

MINING OFFICIAL: INDUSTRY IN 'WORST' STATE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Mar 82 p 3

[Text]

THE Zimbabwean mining industry is the worst off it has ever been, the president of the Chamber of Mines, Mr Roy Lander, said last night.

Citing falling productivity and bad prices as the reasons for the poor state of the industry, he said the time had come to make increased productivity the main aim of mineworkers.

He was speaking at a cocktail party held to mark the merger of the country's two mining unions — the Associated Mine Workers of Zimbabwe and the Mine Officials Salaried Staff Association — which formed the Associated Mineworkers of Zimbabwe.

Mr Lander said the chamber, as an organisation of employers, was pleased to see employees under one union.

"It is important to the industry that we should have talks with one employees' representative body. We will be able to communicate with the union and they will be able to communicate with us."

He called on the union to strive for increased membership, so that the views of all the workers could be heard and moulded.

Emphasising the need for hard work, Mr Lander said with increased productivity everyone could have his share of the cake. It could not be shared if there was no cake.

Congratulating the two unions for merging, the Chief Industrial Registrar, Mr Ignatius Chigwendere, said the example set by the AMWZ should be followed by other industries with split representative bodies.

"Unity is not often gone into for its own sake. At best it is only a means to an end. If we are not united we stand to lose the benefits meant for all of us."

Repeating the call for increased productivity, he said Zimbabwean miners should not be found wanting when the metal prices were right.

"It is more far-reaching. Even our thinking and attitudes to each other must change. If we do not change we start to realise we have not transformed enough."

CSO: 4700/928

DETAILS ON GREEN REVOLUTION PLAN GIVEN

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Mar 82 pp 1, 4

[Text]

A MAJOR rural reafforestation project costing about $12,5 million may soon be undertaken in Zimbabwe by the Forestry Commission.

This was disclosed by the director of the commission, Mr John Wiltshire, in an interview this week.

He said a team of World Bank officials, based in Nairobi, would arrive in Zimbabwe next month to carry out an appraisal of the proposed scheme, with a view to financing it.

"The project is basically concerned with the provision of building poles and fuelwood in communal areas. We started investigation into this two years ago, and a study was carried out in conjunction with Devag and the Whitsun Foundation."

ENORMITY

Investigators recognised the enormity of the problem of deforestation, identified the causes and made recommendations for solving it.

"There have been serious inroads into the indigenous forest resources of this country, for fuelwood and poles. The growth rate of the population and that of forestry resources are incompatible and it is now necessary to create fuel plantations of fast-growing species," said Mr Wiltshire.

"We see the partial solution as being the establishment of large woodlots and block plantations where larger population concentrations exist, such as at rural service centres."

The woodlots would be created as a self-help project, with the technical expertise coming from either the Forestry Commission, acting as agents of district councils, or from the councils themselves.

"We ill be working very closely with district council conservation committees on this matter," said Mr Wiltshire. A new division, responsible for the whole project, had been created within the commission.

There was also a need to establish urban plantations close to the main centres. Plans were also being made to introduce fuelwood plantations on forest land adjoining communal areas.

"We could then supply these areas with wood. For example, we will have a plantation at Gwaai Forest Area, and we will be able to supply people in the Tjolotjo communal area," he said.

He stressed that the provision of fuelwood was not the total solution of the energy problem in Zimbabwe. There would have to be an integrated approach, with use made of other sources like electricity, liquid fuels and solar heating.

The $12,5 million sought for the scheme would finance it in its first five years of development.

"Reafforestation will be our major development. We have worked in the communal areas for many y ars, with advisory and extension services, but because of a lack of finance and other problems we hav only now come to grip with the issue," said Mr Wiltshire.

Research was another commission task. Three stations were operated in the Eastern Districts and a new one was planned for the lo rainfall, Kalahari-sand area near Bulawayo.

"To date research has been aimed primarily at commercial forestry, but we are now into a new field, based on the introduction and management of eucalyptus species suitable for arid and semi-arid areas. This will be for pole and fuelwood production."

Mr Wiltshire said considerable interest was being taken in Zimbabwe's forestry affairs by overseas governments and organisations.

Two officials of Finland's Jaakkopoyry consultancy organisation arrive in Salisbury this week to undertake a market study. Financed by the Finnish government, the study would assess demands so that th development of the industry could be rationalised.

Interest in research work was also being taken by the Australian government and a Canadian-based organisation called the International th. International Development Research Centre.

The IDRC was looking a. agro-forestry — the integration of agricultural crops with trees. Projects of thi: nature were already taking place at the new commission research station at Chesa. 30 km from Bulawayo, and at Mafungabusi in the norther Midlands.

The Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa, based in Khartoum, and an African developmen' bank were looking at plans for the establishment of a large sawmill complex on Springvale farm south of Melsetter, to serve the estates in the area.

CSO: 4700/928

MAIZE EXPORTS COULD DOUBLE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Stan Higgins]

[Text] ZIMBABWE'S maize exports are expected to rise to more than half a million tonnes this year, nearly double the amount exported after last year's bumper harvest.

The general manager of the Grain Marketing Board, Mr Bill Long, said in an interview yesterday that 300 000 tonnes of last year's crop had been exported so far.

"In the coming year we hope—with the co-operation of the National Railways of Zimbabwe and the Mozambican railways and port authorities — to export more than 500 000 tonnes — a substantial increase."

He disclosed that maize production this season totalled almost 2 million tonnes. The Crop Estimation Committee of the board had said that about a million tonnes would be delivered to GMB intake points.

"This is about half of what we took in last year. This is because of the difficult growing conditions in the north of the country and a very severe drought in the south."

Of the amount delivered to the GMB, 850 000 tonnes would come from about 7 000 commercial farmers. The million tonnes not delivered to the board would be consumed by people in the rural areas, mainly in communal lands.

Mr Long said 1,2 million tonnes of last year's crop was still held in depots throughout the country. Because of "the relatively low, slow rate of exporting, due to transport difficulties", these stocks would probably be held for some time.

"These stocks will make handling of the new crop more difficult, because we will have two crops on our hands. We will try to dispose of the old crop first.

"The board is now looking for land adjacent to existing depots to take in the new crop. This means extensive development work at a time when we are trying to develop new depots.

"It is a tremendous task on our shoulders," he said.

The GMB was confident that it could take in the crop as successfully as it did last year. Discussions held with the NRZ had revealed that because of new locomotives and several other factors, a greater number of wagons would be allocated to maize transportation this year.

"This is good news not only for the GMB but also for the World Food Programme, with which we have a very close association. They are keen that African production should be seen to be feeding Africa," said Mr Long.

Although world maize prices were depressed because of big surpluses in other countries, shorter routes for Zimbabwe's exports put this country in a better position for export to African nations.

Turning to the drought, he said sales of maize for the domestic market would increase substantially this year because people in many areas of the country were short of grain, particularly those who had sold all their supplies last year.

This would help the board reduce its high stock holdings.

The drought would also mean that some maize would have to be fed to cattle.

CSO: 4700/928

TEKERE'S RETURN TO FOREFRONT SEEN POSSIBLE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 10 Mar 82 p 4

[Article by Aida Parker]

[Text] Is Mr Edgar Tekere--the former Zimbabwe Cabinet Minister who was charged with shooting a White farmer--about to make his political come-back?

That question is being anxiously asked by Whites in Salisbury. And there appear to be some grounds at least for believing that Mr Tekere is about to re-emerge on the Zimbabwe political scene.

According to good sources, Mr Tekere recently declined an offer by a Kenyan businessman to become a company director of a Kenyan company with a Salisbury subsidiary, on the grounds that he "might be offered a ministerial post by Mr Mugabe."

In the last few days, ZBC has given considerable prominence to a statement by Mr Tekere that Mr Mugabe's Zanu-PF should be strengthened and re-organised.

Were Mr Tekere still in the political limbo, it is doubtful if a state-controlled radio station would dare give him such coverage.

General assumption is that "someone is flying a kite," either to test popular opinion on Mr Tekere, or to prepare the way for his return to public life.

The speculation is disturbing Whites because it follows almost immediately upon the return to power of another noted hard-core radical, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, summarily dismissed last October after a series of contentious statements. Dr Ushewokunze and Mr Tekere are close friends.

A Salisbury analyst told me: "Mugabe appears to have succumbed to pressure from the radical traditionalists in Zanu-PF.

"If the reaction from the grassroots to a Tekere return is positive, then his re-appearance, probably as a deputy minister, can be expected.

"Seemingly, it was felt that he had to be rusticated as punishment for embarrassing Mugabe over the Adams murder.

"Now, having completed his period in the political wilderness, it looks as though he is about to return to the [word illegible]."

Mr Tekere, once one of the three most powerful men in the Zimbabwe Marxist government was axed as Minister of Manpower in January, 1981, and as secretary-general of Zanu-PF in August.

This post has not yet been filled, it having been decided that it should wait till the 1982 Zanu-PF congress.

Mr Tekere is generally portrayed as a radical Marxist, but the analysts say he is really a traditionalist "and above all a racist", less interested in changing Zimbabwe's socio-political system than in having Whites replaced by Blacks at the head of all major institutions.

Throughout his period in the Mugabe Cabinet Whites were often aghast at his pronouncements on their future in Zimbabwe.

CSO: 4700/920

'BATTLE PLAN', ARMS EVIDENCE OF GROUP'S PLOT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 Mar 82 p 11

[Text]

BULAWAYO. — A "battle plan," detailing missions to seize and hold Que Que River Bridge, Gwelo School of Infantry and other military and civilian centres throughout Zimbabwe, was produced as an exhibit in the High Court, Bulawayo, yesterday.

Before the court were Bulawayo dentist Dr Frank Bertrand, (58), his son Mr Stephen Francis Bertrand, (24), Mr Victor Samuel Radmore, (53) an employee of Bulawayo City Council Parks Department, and Mr Allen Richard Cauvin, (21).

The four have all denied conspiring to commit acts of terrorism, or sabotage, and possessing arms of war, offensive weapons and offensive materials.

The investigating officer in the case, Detective-Inspector Morgan Sibanda, told the court the "battle plan" had been found in a car driven by Mr Stephen Bertrand and Mr Cauvin on the day of their arrest.

They had been to a meeting with two policemen posing as disillusioned ex-Zipra national army officers.

One of the undercover policemen, Detective-Sergeant Benson Nkiwane, has stated in evidence that the meeting discussed troops he said he was training.

The two accused are alleged to have thought that these troops would form part of Dr Bertrand's "Matabele army".

As soon as the meeting was over the two men were arrested and the "battle plan" found.

Also in the car of the two accused were a loaded AK-47 rifle with a fully charged magazine, a G3 rifle hidden in a golf bag, 677 rounds of ammunition in a small sack and a canvas bag, two full G3 magazines, two full AK-47 magazines, two knives, two water bottles, three magazine pouches, one British passport in the name of Mr Stephen Bertrand, one Rhodesian passport in the name of Mr Allen Cauvin and 100 Zimdollars (R130).

Mr Chris Jordaan, who appears for Mr Radmore and Mr Cauvin, said: "You could not seriously have believed that there was a plot to overthrow the government by violent means by these four — two of them elderly men, one a cripple, and two almost children."

The officer said: "I seriously believed there was a plot against the central government."

The case was adjourned to today.

CSO: 4700/920

BRIEFS

NKOMO, MUGABE SUPPORTERS CLASH--The Zimbabwe News Agency has reported the arrest of 32 people in the central town of Que Que during a clash between supporters of the prime minister, Mr Mugabe, and those of Mr Joshua Nkomo. The news agency said a number of people suffered minor injuries in the fighting. This was the first report of such fighting since Mr Nkomo and three other ministers were dismissed from the cabinet 3 weeks ago. [Salisbury Domestic Service in English at 1115 GMT on 10 March reported that 37 people arrested after clashes in Que Que on Monday evening would appear in court this afternoon. No mention was made of the nature of the clash or of who was involved. The areas where the clashes occurred were described as being calm.] [Text] [CA101658 Blantyre Domestic Service in English 1600 GMT 10 Mar 82]

DEFECTIONS STRENGTHEN MUGABE'S PARTY--Salisbury, 6 Mar (AFP)--Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's domestic political position continued to strengthen today as one more MP left the white Republican Front (RF) Party and more than 1,200 members of Joshua Nkomo's minority party reportedly quit to join Mr Mugabe's ZANU Party. Member of Parliament Dennis Divaris announced that he was quitting the RF, led by former white-rule Prime Minister Ian Smith, to join the seven other RF MP's who quit the party on Thursday to sit as independents in the House. The breakaway MP's have said that they want to work more constructively with Mr Mugabe's government. The RF now has 11 of the 20 parliamentary seats reserved for whites, but only nine are active MP's. One RF MP is in jail and another is out of the country to avoid arrest. Meanwhile, more than 1,200 members of Mr Nkomo's Patriotic Front Party left to join Mr Mugabe's ZANU Party in the central city of Gatooma, according to ZANU officials. They left because of a lack of confidence in Mr Nkomo's leadership after large amounts of arms were found on his party's property, ZANU officials said. [Text] [NC06150 Paris AFP in English 1458 GMT 6 Mar 82]

GENERAL FINED--Salisbury--A drunken national army major-general who killed two pedestrians while driving was fined Z$400 (R530)--or four months--yesterday by a Salisbury magistrate for culpable homicide. Sebastian Gariki Mushipe (31), stationed at KGVI Barracks in Salisbury, pleaded guilty. On August 24 last year, Mushipe knocked down and killed two pedestrians while driving along Lorraine Drive in Mabelreign, Salisbury. Prosecutor Mr G Woolcock told the court that Mushipe's blood sample taken for an alcohol analysis test showed he was drunk while driving. Mr Roberts suspended two months of the sentence for five years and prohibited Mushipe from driving for a year.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Mar 82 p 5]

END

CSO: 4700/007

JPRS 80422

26 March 1982

Sub-Saharan Africa Report

No. 2595

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 80422

26 March 1982

SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA REPORT

No. 2595

CONTENTS

INTER-AFRICAN AFFAIRS

Diversity, Development of Agriculture in Africa Examined
(AFRICA, Feb 82) 1

ANGOLA

Energy Minister Visits Soyo Oil Installations
(JORNAL DE ANGOLA, 25 Feb 82) 7

Measures Advocated To Improve Kuando Kubango Supplying
(JORNAL DE ANGOLA, 25 Feb 82) 9

Implementation of Agreements With DPRK Studied
(JORNAL DE ANGOLA, 26 Feb 82) 10

Minister Terms Transportation Situation 'Critical'
(Naftal Donaldo; NOTICIAS, 5 Mar 82) 11

Portuguese Know-How Replacement by Eastern Bloc Seen as Failure
(AFRICA AFP, 5 Mar 82) 13

Briefs
Warning to Sweden 14
Poll Firm Nationalized 14
Oil Agreement With Congo 14
Alleged Savimbi-Botha Talks 15

GHANA

Revolution Seen as Beginning of Democratization Process
(Nii K. Bentsi-Enchill; WEST AFRICA, 8 Mar 82) 16

Budget Suspended, Foreign-Owned Firm's Share Acquired
(AFRICA AFP, 2 Mar 82) 19

Cocoa Marketing Board Deficit Prevents Payments to Producers
(WEST AFRICA, 1, 8 Mar 82) 20

Chits Instead of Cash
Cocoa Price Reduction Ahead

Investigation Law Will Probe Corruption, Abuses
(WEST AFRICA, 8 Mar 82)..... 22

Briefs
Journalism Workers' Power 23
Justice System Streamlining Needed 23
University Workers' Threat 23
New Health Appointments 24
Catholic Church Assets Defrozen 24
Corrupt Officers Arrested 24

GUINEA

National Economic Council Examining State Firms' Accounts
(Ibrahima Sory Camara; HOROYA, 7-13 Feb 82) 25

President's Recent Trips to African Countries
(HOROYA, 7-13 Feb 82) 28

KENYA

Moi Announces Wide-Ranging Cabinet Changes
(THE WEEKLY REVIEW, 26 Feb 82) 30

Moi Addresses Law Society of Kenya
(Daniel arap Moi; THE WEEKLY REVIEW, 26 Feb 82) 34

Investigation of Kenyatta's Portrait Removals Urged
(Editorial; DAILY NATION, 20 Feb 82) 36

Confusion Surrounds Removal of Kenyatta's Portrait
(THE WEEKLY REVIEW, 26 Feb 82)..... 38

Businessmen To Continue Fee Boycott
(DAILY NATION, 22 Feb 82) 39

Odinga Threatens To Sue Oloitipitip
(Mitch Odero; DAILY NATION, 18 Feb 82) 40

Karume Slams Rude Asians
(Magayu Magayu; DAILY NATION, 22 Feb 82)..... 41

Minor Battalion Units Merged
(DAILY NATION, 22 Feb 82) 42

Country's Economic Performance Said To Improve
(Zackary Onyonka; THE WEEKLY REVIEW, 5 Mar 82) 43

Moi Hits Out at Odinga
(DAILY NATION, 19 Feb 82) 47

Subtle Power Shifts Wrought by Reshuffle
(DAILY NATION, 5 Mar 82) 48

Ship Is Ordered Back to Port
(DAILY NATION, 19 Feb 82) 51

Police Corruption Said To Be Rife
(Editorial; DAILY NATION, 17 Feb 82) 52

Argentina Plans To Use Kenya as Trade Hub
(DAILY NATION, 18 Mar 82)..... 54

City Police Boss Held on Theft Charge
(Andrew Kuria; DAILY NATION, 19 Feb 82) 55

'KNA' Accused of News 'Blackout'
(DAILY NATION, 20 Feb 82) 56

Illegal Stay Sends Somali to Prison
(DAILY NATION, 18 Feb 82) 57

Land Scramble Pits Agriculture Vs. Forestry
(Daniel Mbao; DAILY NATION, 19 Feb 82) 58

Road Project Given Sh. 81M.
(DAILY NATION, 19 Feb 82) 60

Kenya, Nigeria in Oil Deal
(DAILY NATION, 20 Feb 82) 61

Government Policy Said To Hurt Sugar Growers
(Editorial; DAILY NATION, 18 Feb 82) 62

Briefs
1,900 Co-ops in Kenya 64
Economic Pact With Argentina 64
Ngong Swoop Nets 120 64

MOZAMBIQUE

Hotel Responds To Complaint of Favoring Cooperants
(Joaquim Dai; DOMINGO, 21 Feb 82) 65

GDR Trade Union Offers Assistance
(NOTICIAS, 27 Feb 82) 67

GDR Railroad Cooperation Described
(NOTICIAS, 4 Mar 82)..... 68

Maputo Denies Zimbabwe Report on Pipeline Use Price
(AFRICA AFP, 2 Mar 82) 69

Briefs
LAM-Swazi Airlines Cooperation 71

NAMIBIA

Speculation Centers on Windhoek Mayoral Race
(THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 12 Mar 82) 72

Barney Barnes Unravels Coloured Politics
(Barney Barnes Interview; THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER,
12 Mar 82) 73

Meinert Group Clinches Major Deal
(THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 12 Mar 82) 76

Reagan Offer to SA Likened to Kissinger Offer to Ian Smith
(THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 12 Mar 82) 77

Call for Karakul Institute for SWA
(THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 12 Mar 82) 78

Negotiations Underway To Process 1980 Census Take
(David Pieters; THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 12 Mar 82).... 79

Okahandja Military School Has Second Intake
(THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 12 Mar 82) 82

Table Top Invests in Walvis
(THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 12 Mar 82) 81

Merits of Press Control in SWA Argued
(Leon Kok; THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 12 Mar 82) 82

Briefs
SWAPO Officials, Catholic Charged 84
Riruako, Munjuku Bury Hatchet 84
Mystery Blast Investigation 84

NIGER

Projects Financed by FAC Grants Noted
(LE SAHEL, 11 Feb 82) 85

SENEGAMBIA

President Discusses Senegambia, Alleged Libyan Role in Coup
(Souleymane Gueye; LE SOLEIL, 16-17 Jan 82) 87

Chamber of Deputies Adopts Second 5-Year Plan
(Deyda Aidara; LE SOLEIL, 15 Jan 82) 89

French, Belgian and Canadian Financing Agreements Signed
(Ibrahim Fall; LE SOLEIL, 16-17 Jan 82) 91

SOUTH AFRICA

Botha, Policy May Survive Despite Party Rift
(DIE BURGER, 26 Feb 82) 93

Prominent Personalities Take Sides
Tension Precedes Directorate Meeting, by Alf Ries
Botha Receives Messages of Support
Rebels Will Not Join Far Right

SACTU Official Discusses Fight Against Apartheid
(NOTICIAS, 4 Mar 82)..... 101

Controversial Political Power Sharing Explained
(Editorial; DIE BURGER, 26 Feb 82) 102

Party Crisis Blamed on Ambiguity, Fear of Reality
(Editorial; DIE BURGER, 26 Feb 82) 104

Efforts in Naval Expansion in the Face of Arms Embargo
(DIE BURGER, 26 Feb 82) 105

ZAMBIA

Township Residents Told Not To Pay Council for Nonexistent Services
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 8 Mar 82) 107

Governor's Statement
'Perhaps Councils Have Had Too Much Freedom', Editorial

DBZ Director Notes Project Spending Since Bank's Inception
(DAILY MAIL, 8 Mar 82) 109

WFP Representative Notes Western Province Relief Measures
(DAILY MAIL, 11 Mar 82) 110

Bank of Zambia Reports on Economic Situation
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 11 Mar 82) 111

Kaunda Praises USSR
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 9 Mar 82) 112

MPs Urge Government To Explain Legitimate Authority in Angola
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 6 Mar 82) 113

Peace, Security Restored at Zairian Border Towns
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 8 Mar 82) 114

Unza Authorities Hold Emergency Meeting To Avert Crisis
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 5 Mar 82) 115

UNDP Report on Economic, Disaster Aid Issued
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 5 Mar 82) 116

District Official Urges Redefinition of Zimbabwe Border on Kariba Dam
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 9 Mar 82) 117

ZNS Members Leave Suspended To Boost Food Production
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 5 Mar 82) 118

Mundia Says NCCM-RCM Merger Will Aid Nation Regarding Copper Prices
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 10 Mar 82) 119

RCM Kalenga Mine Closure
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 9 Mar 82) 120

Gwembe, Some Parts of Southern Province Facing Famine Threat
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 10 Mar 82, DAILY MAIL, 9 Mar 82).... 122

Comments on Southern Province Situation
Situation in Gwembe Valley

Minister Notes Reasons for Fertilizer Shortage
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 6 Mar 82) 123

Briefs
Freedom House on Foreign Policy 124
Mundia on Goods Shortages 124
Students to GDR 124
More Maize To Be Imported 124
Layoffs in 1981 125
Easing of Fertilizer Crisis 125
Policemen Detained by Zairians 125
Czechoslovak Delegation 126
Lusaka Blackout 126

DIVERSITY, DEVELOPMENT OF AGRICULTURE IN AFRICA EXAMINED

Dakar AFRICA in French Feb 82 pp 53-57

[Article: "Agriculture in Black Africa"]

[Text] "A continent with 12 percent arable land and whose population-arable land ratio is lower than that of the Middle or Far East or Latin America can look to a brilliant agricultural future, provided that irrigation takes the place of rainfall," Edem Kodjo, secretary general of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), recently said.

It is true that most of the African population makes its living off agriculture and for countries south of the Sahara, 30 to 60 percent of the gross national product comes from agriculture. For for the past 10 years, the growth rate of agricultural production has steadily dropped until it is now lower than the rate of growth of the population. At the same time, exports have ceased developing and the vertical drop in food production has forced governments to step up commercial grain imports, dangerously increasing their dependency on foreign countries. Grain imports have risen 9 percent a year since independence. The "brilliant agricultural future" awaiting Africa is not immediately ahead.

And yet, the Black continent is one of the leading exporters of agricultural products in the world: coffee, cacao, hevea, palm oil, cotton, peanuts, sugar cane. What is wrong?

Analyzing the causes for the stagnation, experts from the different international organizations have pointed out different problems: upheavals caused by wars and civil conflicts; the drought and inadequate precipitation in the 1970's; rapid population growth; the incompetence of government and aid organizations; and finally, the exaggerated attention of investments to major government-directed programs. To this, one would have to add the excessively low official prices, poorly defined marketing circuits that are ineffective and not competitive, and the insufficient participation by farmers in rural affairs.

These factors have led countries such as Ethiopia, Ghana, Nigeria, the Sudan, Tanzania, Zaire, the Ivory Coast, Senegal, the Congo or Zambia to increase their grain imports (particularly of wheat and rice), when these grains are more costly to produce than millet, sorghum or corn. There are rare exceptions in this sea of the unfortunate, such as Cameroon, which is aiming at food self-sufficiency despite fluctuating prices, the uncertainty of the climate and the rural exodus, or the Ivory Coast, which has strong, diversified agriculture, even if the country has depended too heavily for 2 years on two export products: cacao and coffee.

Nevertheless, the African countries regularly express their determination to grant top priority to agriculture in general and food self-sufficiency in particular.

Rural Development Action

The special summit conference of the OAU in Lagos (1980) accepted the important program of action on behalf of African agriculture, the "Regional Food Plan for Agriculture" drafted by the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO). This program sets a 3.9-percent growth rate for agricultural production for 1980-1985 and a 4.2-percent rate for 1985-1990, triple that of the 1970's. Planned investments amount to $125 billion (1981 prices) over a period of 15 years (1975-1990), 45 percent of which will be for food crops. However, this hypothesis of the "maximum feasible demand and production" is optimistic and presumes rapid growth and rapidly expanding agricultural production, which the experts doubt, believing that in the absence of far-reaching action, the current trends will become even stronger and will cause production to drop.

However, within the framework of an overall strategy based on growth, the program emphasizes the cardinal role played by small farmers, an increase in prices paid to producers, expanded agricultural research and the launching of rapid-yield activities in irrigated agriculture.

Small Farms

Small farms provide most of the continent's agricultural production, but yield is still very low and specialization rare. Poverty is an essentially rural phenomenon in Africa. Most governments have preferred to invest in large government-run farms over the past decade, thinking that they could thereby overcome the stagnation due to ancestral methods and endemic droughts and increase the marketable surplus. But as a result of management problems, overemployment, underutilization of costly machinery and difficult maintenance, results have generally been far below the hopes that such changes had created. In countries such as Kenya, Malawi, Swaziland, Zambia or Zimbabwe, the large farms do provide most marketable production, but certain projects involving small cotton producers in French-speaking Africa, for example, projects organized by joint ventures, are among the most successful undertakings on the continent.

Price Policy

In some African countries, there is a definite determination to overcome food dependency, especially in the LDCs [less developed countries], where chronic food shortages leave a trail of death and desolation. Unfortunately, the circumstances do not cooperate. The economic system bequeathed by the colonial powers force the farmer to produce, not for his own self-sufficiency, but in order to pile up monetary income in order to buy consumer goods and above all, pay taxes, an important source of public receipts.

This monetarization of peripheral economies is a major obstacle to the achievement of food self-sufficiency. In this context, accepting self-centered development appears to be both an economic and political problem whose solution requires a broad social consensus.

Over the past decade, farmers producing for export are heavily taxed: an average of 30 percent, after deducting various subsidies for production. This explains why farm income has dropped year after year over the past decade and why Africa's share of the world market is constantly declining.

As for food crops, whose prices are regulated everywhere, official prices are often too low and have led to a "parallel" market, on which prices have tripled, and to the demobilization of farmers, especially since the import policy has made imported grains such as wheat or rice cheaper than locally-based commodities, as a result of the overevaluation of a large number of African currencies.

Projected figures for the amount of grain Africa will have to import by 1990 vary between 6 and 28 million tons, depending on the working hypotheses used. Most estimates are 11 to 12 million tons, mainly wheat and rice. However, for 1981 alone, imports already amounted to 6 or 7 million tons. When one realizes that it is city-dwellers who are the main consumers of these grains, one can measure the unfavorable treatment reserved for the rural people!

Modernization Effort

Modernization has long since reached the so-called commercial crops, which produce foreign exchange for the public treasury. Research efforts have favored plantation crops such as the oil and coconut palms, tea, coffee, cacao, rubber and other industrial crops such as cotton and peanuts. But average yields have remained relatively low. For cacao, they are less than half the yields obtained in certain regions of Asia, and for the oil palm, less than half of those obtained in the Far East. In addition, the rapid spread of diseases in plantations on the western coast of Africa, for example, have caused immense damage and Africa has only a few organizations capable of mobilizing adequate means to fight these diseases, lacking adequate financial means and coordination between national and international organizations.

Regarding food crops, certain governments have allocated increasing resources to them, as in the case of Niger, hoping to rapidly reach food self-sufficiency. This effort has mainly involved irrigated food crops, either through the establishment of new perimeters (Mauritania, Niger, Nigeria and Senegal), or through diversification and reorganization of growing systems in irrigated areas (Sudan, Office of the Niger in Mali). Remarkable success has been registered in projects based on one main commercial crop associated with food crops: for example, hybrid corn accompanying cotton. But the diversity of local customs, cultural systems, soils and climates makes the coordination of research activities very delicate.

Fight Against Pests and Distribution of Seed

The fight against pests has not been forgotten in research activities and national or regional programs. The FAO's Food Plan for Africa and the Lagos Action Plan emphasize the importance of reducing food losses and of possibilities of action in that field. But a large number of governments have not yet done any more than pay lip service to the different regional organizations responsible for these problems, with the exception, perhaps, of the organization to fight locusts in East Africa, which makes extremely precise predictions and which has just extended its action to the fight against caterpillars that eat foliage and queleas.

It is important to stress the crucial role of increasing the amount of and distributing seed in many countries, where there has been marked deterioration in the us useful varieties, a deterioration that has resulted from poor production practices and the use of multiple types of seed.

Labor Problems

Over the past decade, labor problems have constituted one of the main obstacles to agricultural development. Measures aimed at increasing productivity have not always been taken, particularly with respect to the use of farm implements and tools, harness crops and the use of machinery to process grain or to save time.

Out of the over 30 million tractors in service in the world in 1979, only 200,000 were being used in Africa (with the exclusion of South Africa) and there were only 40,000 in tropical Africa, .2 percent of the world total.

Progress in using oxen has been very uneven depending on the country in question, but in general, it has been very disappointing because of the cost of keeping the oxen during the off-season, the varying cost of clearing the fields, different taboos regarding the use of animals and the impossibility of using oxen in an area some 10 million kilometers square because of the prevalence of trypanosomiasis.

In tropical Africa, the industrialization effort has essentially involved the manufacture of small implements to improve farming: plows, cultivators, planters, harrows and carts. Animal traction is an important element in areas where livestock raising is possible and where the size of the farms is not over a few hectares. This requires equipment designed to meet the needs of the country and the manufacturing capacities of local artisans. In Mali, for example, the general policy of mechanization in agriculture has encouraged harness crops. With 100,000 team of oxen, the country increased its cotton production 10 percent a year and its peanut production by 7 percent.

Harness crops are gradually moving toward "selective mechanization," which makes the necessary transition from harness crops to mechanization. The shortage of livestock needed for food and the lack of labor inevitably leads to such a trend, but there are few countries that have worked out any real policy of agricultural mechanization, and aside from Cameroon, the Ivory Coast, Mali or Senegal, no institution has truly looked at the problem.

And yet, the potential demand exists. The most advanced countries are already in the stage of heavy mechanization and the large farms have almost all introduced motor-driven machinery. By 1990, there should be some 1.33 million tractors in Africa, according to the most recent predictions. The appreciable results registered by single crops should favor these promising beginnings. The mutual benefit societies (Senegal, Togo) should serve as an example here.

Food Processing

The local processing of agricultural raw materials makes it possible to create added value, provide more jobs and contribute to the development of regions which would have no resources without it, whence the attraction of agroindustry to different African governments, for it has become one of the key words to development on the continent.

There are several sorts of agroindustries, ranging from those above agriculture to those which process agricultural products and including some which, from imported local products, are aimed at meeting domestic demand.

It should be noted that the Sahelian or Central African countries are not very advanced in this field, unlike countries such as the Ivory Coast, with the Ivorian Fertilizer Company, which produces 25,000 tons of different types of fertilizer a year, or Senegal and Cameroon, which have their own fertilizer plants or industries.

Irrigation

Africa theoretically has 19 percent of the world's hydroelectric potential, which does not prevent drought from ravaging the continent, where entire regions suffer from inadequate rainfall. Consequently, the harnessing of water is essential and constitutes the key to agricultural development.

And yet, outside of the Sudan and Madagascar, irrigated agriculture occupies a minor place in African economies. It plays a substantial role in certain countries of the Sahel (Mali and Senegal) and, to a lesser extent, in the northern zones of Cameroon, the Ivory Coast and Nigeria, as well as in the river valleys in Ethiopia, Mozambique, Somalia and Zimbabwe.

According to the latest statistics, the irrigated area, including systems with complete control of flow, totals 2.5 million hectares, 65 percent in the Sudan and 15 percent in Madagascar. In all the other African countries, the proportion of irrigated land is under 10 percent and in most cases, under 5 percent.

Outside of cotton, which occupies a predominant place in irrigated agriculture in the Sudan, and sugar programs scattered throughout the continent, irrigation is mainly used for rice growing.

And yet, the development of irrigation has made some progress in the last two decades, even if the net impact of irrigation on total agricultural production remains modest.

According to the FAO, the use of irrigated land in Africa is far from having produced its maximum effect. Over half of the systems used on irrigated land operate with under 50-percent efficiency.

Harnessing water most frequently encounters financial rather than technical problems. Irrigation is very expensive and African budgets are limited. But despite the obstacles, irrigation projects have emerged nearly everywhere, with a great number of techniques, and are under the responsibility of the government.

Irrigation is practiced in Africa using surface waters, a less costly and more reliable technique than the capturing of underground water. Various methods are used: irrigation within the framework of major integrated systems, as in the case of development of the Niger River in Mali, within the framework of the Office of the Niger, or the development of the Senegal River Delta within the framework of the SAED (Delta Development and Equipment Company), or yet, the major development underway in the Sudan in the Gesirah region, covering hundreds of thousands of hectares. But here also, results are not always on a par with the means used. Another practice consists of applying the so-called "small integrated village perimeters," mainly in West Africa along certain rivers, which leads farmers to develop each area themselves and to irrigate by pumping water from the river. In this way, 3,000 to 4,000 irrigated hectares are farmed along the Senegal River. Finally, a third method consists of combining the advantages of the two preceding ones: applying to the development of large areas methods that succeeded in the irrigated village perimeters. This development strategy, encouraged by the main international backers that finance irrigation projects, will be increasingly applied in development of the major river basins.

Irrigation: Expensive Technique

According to a recent study by the Inter-State Committee To Fight the Drought in the Sahel (CILSS) concerning the cost of water projects in the Sahel, the latter can represent a cost of 100,000 to 250,000 CFA francs for simple, so-called "controlled submersion" operations like those in Mali (Segou and Mopti rice operation). The same is true of developing the lower river valleys in Upper Volta. Development in that country involves the construction of small dams that are costly: 1 million CFA francs per hectare, plus the cost of the dikes.

Operations requiring complete harnessing of water are obviously more costly: 1 to 2 million CFA francs per hectare for the SAED; 1.4 million for the Banfora sugar area in Upper Volta; 2.5 million in Mauritania, and so on.

Regarding the production of 5.5 million tons of grain in the Sahel during a normal year, irrigated crops supply only 5 percent and only 3 percent is totally protected from climatic uncertainties.

All these figures show that irrigation is one of the great investments to be made on the African Continent as the century comes to a close.

11,464
CSO: 4719/607

ENERGY MINISTER VISITS SOYO OIL INSTALLATIONS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 25 Feb 82 p 3

[Text] Soyo--An official party headed by Energy and Petroleum Minister Pedro Van-Dunen (Loy) went to the petroleum installations in the township of Soyo on Monday to inspect its operations and to get the opinions of Angolan workers on their job and social situation.

Pedro Van-Dunen was accompanied by SONANGOL [National Fuel Company] general manager and member, MPLA-Labor Party Central Committee, Herminio Escorcio, along with other officials from that company, from the Petroleum Ministry, and from the operating companies, Texaco, ELF [Gasoline and Lubricants Company of France], and PETRANGOL [Angola Petroleum Company].

During his 2-day stay, he visited "offshore" and "onshore" production units located in prospecting and development areas shared by SONANGOL with foreign companies.

The first facility visited was the base at Kwanda which is to be built near the town of Soyo to support prospecting operations in blocks 1, 2, and 3 in the "offshore" concession between the mouth of the Zaire River and Nzeto.

Work on the construction of the Kwanda base began in 1980 in line with a project conceived by SONANGOL which included the two-stage construction of a port zone made up of piers, warehouses, and offices, along with a residential section. The road linking the base to the town of Soyo was asphalted as part of this project; its extension to the Pangala production field and the Quinfuquena warehousing area, over a total distance of 25 kilometers, is now underway.

The deputy general manager of SONANGOL for hydrocarbons informed the visitors that petroleum production from block 2 at the end of last year came to 12,000 barrels per day and he noted that an increase in the output depends on the opening of the Etele field.

The Cuntala and Essungo producing fields were opened starting in 1980 following the entry into force of a new production sharing contract between SONANGOL and Texaco and the formation of a group of contractors also including the BRASPETRO [PETROBRAS (Brazilian Petroleum Corporation) International Inc] and Total.

Block 3 became operational in May of last year with the drilling of an exploratory well in the Palanca deposit by the ELF operating company as part of an association made up of SONANGOL, Mobil, AGIP [National Italian Oil Company], Inanaftagas, and Inanaftaplin.

The petroleum discovered in this well revealed a good chemical makeup and engineers are optimistic regarding the commercial possibilities of the Palanca field.

The energy and petroleum minister then went to the Quinfuquena terminal which, starting in July, will have a storage capacity of 140,000 cubic meters of crude petroleum extracted in the "offshore" and "onshore" concessions of Soyo.

In the first phase, the Quinfuquena project included the installation of equipment for exporting crude petroleum and the first shipment was sent out at the end of 1979.

In the PETRANGOL exploration area, the minister's party visited the Pangala and Quinguila producing fields before meeting with the workers of that company in camp B.

A PETRANGOL manager recalled that the first analysis well in this area was drilled in 1965 and that so far nine commercial deposits have been discovered with a current yield of about 37,000 barrels per day.

The "onshore" contractor group--made up of SONANGOL, PETRANGOL, and Texaco--has been trying in this area gradually to reduce the burning of associated gas; this will be reduced to a minimum by the end of this year.

During the meeting with the PETRANGOL workers, the visitors were briefed on job and social problems; at the end, Pedro Van-Dunen said that "new problems are a matter of constant concern to us."

The energy and petroleum minister admitted that there should have been "qualitative and quantitative" improvements over the past 3 years in the PETRANGOL production unit and said that he was convinced that these problems will be solved "through the measures recommended here."

Pedro Van-Dunen said that his visit was intended to obtain a first-hand look at the situation in the petroleum sector in the Soyo region and he indicated that he was satisfied with the results of that meeting.

5058
CSO: 4742/235-A

MEASURES ADVOCATED TO IMPROVE KUANDO KUBANGO SUPPLYING

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 25 Feb 82 p 3

[Excerpt] Menongue--One of the consequences deriving from the war situation imposed by South Africa, particularly against Kuando Kubango, is the rather precarious supply situation concerning the province's domestic trade structures which has caused local authorities to give priority to the development of agriculture.

The racists in Pretoria and their agents are primarily trying to hinder the movement of vehicles on roads which lead to Kuando Kubango, both through the interior and along the shore.

As Provincial Domestic Trade Delegate Garcia David told ANGOP [ANGOLAN PRESS AGENCY], supplies for the province have declined tremendously since December of last year due to the existing political-military situation.

Garcia David however emphasized that one of the ways to solve this problem is to create support posts in the provinces in the center and along the shore, especially Benguela, Mocamedes, Huila, and Huambo, which could serve as storage centers for the kind of goods which Kuando Kubango needs.

"The establishment of a fleet of trucks assigned to the delegation would be the best solution in terms of transportation," said the official in talking about the "substantial aid" that was given to the province last year.

Since on the other hand there is a good number of displaced persons in the province, the ANGOP team, which spent several days in Menongue, tried to find out how supplies for these people were being processed in the light of the difficulties mentioned.

Garcia David indicated that the first measure consisted in organizing the peasants in the form of associations (there are 13 in Kuando Kubango, with 3,000 members); the Secretariat of State of Social Affairs has also been helping in this matter.

The organization of the people in the ODP [People's Defense Organization] and the future people's vigilance brigades for the protection of the province's principal economic centers was also hinted at by that official as a way to guarantee efficient supply shipments.

"It is necessary to mobilize the people who live primarily along the railroad so that they will be more vigilant at this strategic point in the province's development," he emphasized.

5058
CSO: 4742/235-A

IMPLEMENTATION OF AGREEMENTS WITH DPRK STUDIED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 26 Feb 82 p 1

[Text] Conversations begun yesterday in Luanda between the Angolan and Korean delegations are centered around the study of practical ways to implement the agreements signed between Angola and the DPRK during the visit of President Jose Eduardo dos Santos to that country.

During that visit, the delegations--headed on the Angolan side by RPA [People's Republic of Angola] Secretary of State for Cooperation Paulino Pinto Joao, and by Chen Il Chun, DPRK vice minister of foreign trade--will review these agreements which in particular cover the economic and educational fields.

The drafting of various documents is anticipated at the end of this meeting; the documents will later on be signed during one of the meetings of a mixed commission to be established shortly between the two countries.

On that occasion, Pinto Joao recalled that a memorandum was also signed in Pyongyang during the president's visit to the DPRK in which Angola proposed the establishment of mixed enterprises in the field of agriculture for the production of rice and corn in the Angolan province of Southern Lunda.

The memorandum, which also covers the field of construction materials and the dispatch of Korean teachers to Angola to teach in middle-level and higher institutions of education and to train cadres, as well as technical cooperation in the textile sector, will be implemented during this year.

During its stay in Angola, the Korean group will also separately meet with officials from the ministries of energy, construction, agriculture, fishing, and education. The party will also go to Southern Lunda to study areas set aside for the cultivation of corn and rice.

5058
CSO: 4742/235-A

MINISTER TERMS TRANSPORTATION SITUATION 'CRITICAL'

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Mar 82 p 10

[Article by Naftal Donaldo: "No Dialogue With Criminals"]

[Excerpts] "The People's Republic of Angola, directed by the MPLA-Labor Party, never contemplated the possibility of a dialogue with the bandits, traitors, and renegades of UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola] or any other highwaymen who terrorize Angolan people, according to the propaganda of the Western information agencies," said Fernando Faustino Muteka, deputy in the People's Assembly and minister of transportation and communications of the People's Republic of Angola yesterday on his arrival in the Mozambican capital in the course of the exclusive interview which he gave the newspaper NOTICIAS.

"The reports which the Western press is printing are aimed not only at trying to create a split among the progressive countries and the peace-loving peoples but also to advance the counterrevolutionary forces operating in Angola for the purpose of presenting them as an alternative," our interviewee said, after which he went into a detailed briefing on the balance of forces in southern Africa.

Basically, news circulated internationally advances the assumption that secret contacts have been established between the directorate of the MPLA-Labor Party and the Angolan counterrevolutionaries of UNITA, headed by the puppet Jonas Malheiros Savimbi, with the cooperation of certain personalities in the Portuguese government to work out a common platform for the solution of the "Angolan problem" which Lisbon denied formally through its Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

"I can say categorically that our party's directorate, right now, more so than ever before, would never commit the frivolity of sitting down at the negotiating table to talk to a band of assassins paid by imperialism to massacre the Angolan people and to destroy the economic potential of the People's Republic of Angola," Fernando Faustino Muteka emphasized in one passage of his remarks.

Urged by our reporter to state the position of the Angolan government regarding United States allegations to the effect that Washington could recognize the People's Republic of Angola only if the Cuban internationalists, who helped the MPLA during the hard phase of the Second War of National Liberation, were to be withdrawn, Muteka said that "the recognition of the People's Republic of Angola by any country has nothing to do with the presence of the Cuban contingent stationed in Angola and the United States is not an exception."

"As representatives of sovereign countries, the ministries of foreign affairs of the People's Republic of Angola and of the Socialist Republic of Cuba recently held conversations designed to define this situation on an international level and, as countries fighting in the same trench. Cuba reiterated its support for the RPA [People's Republic of Angola] according to the joint announcement on conversations between the two countries," said the Angolan minister of transportation and communications of the RPM.

Imperialist Sabotage

"The current situation in the transportation and communications field in the RPA is critical at a moment when racist South Africa is stepping up its acts of aggression," said the Angolan minister of transportation and communications. As part of imperialism's strategy, both transportation and communications constitute some of the targets considered for destabilization and the creation of insecurity.

"On the other hand," continued Muteka, "while the raids by the 'apartheid' regime are aimed at laying the groundwork for future activities by the counterrevolutionaries of UNITA, the mass communications media of imperialism, which are the multinational Western information agencies, seek to discredit the government in Angola."

Foreign aggression against the RPA has hit the country's economic emancipation hard, destroying the lines of communication especially on land. This is what happened several days ago when a band of UNITA counterrevolutionaries blew up a bridge on the railroad linking the province of Shaba, which borders on Zaire, in the southern part of that country, with the Angolan port of Lobito.

"The objective of this attack was to stop the shipment of minerals from nearby Zaire which are exported via the Benguela railroad. This operation ended in failure because we are still exporting raw materials from Zaire although at a slower rate and, by way of example, this includes zinc and manganese," the Angolan minister explained.

"It is obvious that there are no other alternatives that could do away with the difficulties created on our lines of communication. But steps are now being taken to organize and revitalize the transportation industry, especially on the Benguela railroad," he said.

Angolan Petroleum for the SADCC [Conference for Development Coordination in Southern Africa]

Concerning the construction of a second refinery in Luanda, which would supply petroleum to the members of the SADCC, Muteka made it clear that studies prior to this undertaking are in a rather advanced phase of implementation.

5058
CSO: 4742/235

PORTUGUESE KNOW-HOW REPLACEMENT BY EASTERN BLOC SEEN AS FAILURE

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 5 Mar 82 p 23

[Text] Sao Paulo, Brazil, March 5--Portuguese Foreign Minister Andre Goncalves Pereira said here Thursday that President Antonio Rahmalho Eanes would visit Angola, probably in May, as part of a new Portuguese drive to improve relations with its former colony.

Mr Goncalves Pereira told a news conference that next week he himself would be going to Luanda for three days in the first such visit by a Portuguese Foreign Minister since Angola gained independence from Portugal in 1975.

He said President Eanes would later head a delegation of Portuguese businessmen to Angola.

Mr Goncalves Pereira said Portugal enjoyed a privileged position in Southern Africa having "good if not intimate" relations with all the countries involved in the region, including Angola, South Africa, the five-nation Western contact group on Namibia and the African front-line states.

Although the Portuguese Government condemned apartheid, it had always abstained in United Nations votes on sanctions against South Africa in order to allow Portugal "to contribute to the dialogue between the parties involved in Southern Africa," he said.

The Exiles

The Foreign Minister expressed Portugal's gratitude to the Pretoria regime for having welcomed numerous Portuguese exiles into South Africa from Angola and Mozambique after those countries obtained their independence. He said the Portuguese community in South Africa now numbered about 600,000.

He also blamed what he said was the economic decline of Angola and Mozambique on the exodus of Portuguese executives.

He said the attempt to replace them with Soviet or Bulgarian technicians had failed.

CSO: 4700/940

BRIEFS

WARNING TO SWEDEN--Stockholm--The Angolan ambassador accredited to the Kingdom of Sweden, Maria Maller, has said that the possible supply of Swedish military technology to the South African racist regime represents an affront to the African continent and a serious blow to the confidence which Angola and other countries of Africa have placed in cooperation with Swedish enterprises. The Angolan diplomat made these statements in connection with news released recently according to which the Swedish ASEA [expansion unknown] enterprise is to supply nuclear technology to South Africa which that country is using for belligerent purposes. "If this type of business deal with South Africa should be confirmed, relations between Angola and that company would suffer serious consequences," Maria Maller emphasized. Maria Maller visited the big Swedish industrial city of Vasteras in response to an invitation from the solidarity organization "Brcd och Fiskarna" whose activities essentially are concerned with collecting clothing for the various stricken parts of the world; the arrival of clothing from that organization in Angola is anticipated in May. [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 27 Feb 82 p 1] 5058

POLL FIRM NATIONALIZED--A cabinet decree published in DIARIO DA REPUBLICA provides for the confiscation of all of the assets, property, and rights of the public opinion survey company based in this city (Survey and Foundations Enterprise, Limited). According to the decree, the enterprise mentioned is considered to have been dissolved for all practical purposes, with the exception of the share held by the resident partners. The decree furthermore makes it clear that the assets now nationalized will be transferred to the property of the state and will be assigned to the Ministry of Construction. On the other hand, another decree by the People's Assembly confers powers upon the cabinet in the matter of nationalization and confiscation. [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 26 Feb 82 p 1] 5058

OIL AGREEMENT WITH CONGO--Petroleum Minister Pedro Van-Dunem (Loy) is in Brazzaville this Thursday where he will sign an agreement with Congolese authorities on petroleum development and where he will discuss the project which had been drafted and ratified by the Angolan government on the problem of maritime water pollution. In Brazzaville, Pedro Van-Dunem will also confer with the Congolese ministers of energy and natural resources and of tours and environment on questions of bilateral interest. The Angolan delegation is made up of five members, including SONANGOL [National Fuel Company] general manager Herminio Escorbio and the head of the planning office in the Petroleum Ministry. [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 26 Feb 82 p 1] 5058

CSO: 4742/235-A

ALLEGED SAVIMBI-BOTHA TALKS--Johannesburg, March 3--The leader of Angola's rebel UNITA movement, Jonas Savimbi, met secretly in Cape Town last week with South African Premier Pieter Botha, The Star evening paper reported here Tuesday. It said Mr Savimbi also met Foreign Minister Roelof Botha and Defence Minister General Magnus Malan. The talks reportedly covered phase two of a Western-promoted independence settlement plan for Namibia, and withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, The Star said. A Government spokesman refused to confirm The Star's report. He said the Prime Minister's programme and how he employed his time were not generally divulged. The Star linked the alleged secret meeting with reports last month that the Portuguese Government had presented Mr Savimbi with a plan for his movement to break with South Africa in order to facilitate a reconciliation with Angola's ruling People's Liberation Movement (MPLA). The estimated 20,000 Cuban troops stationed in Angola to support the MPLA Government would be replaced under the proposal by a contingent of troops from African countries, the paper said, adding that Mr Savimbi had said the United States was linking that problem with the issue of Namibian independence. (A.F.P.) [Text] [Paris AFRICA in English 5 Mar 82 p 22]

CSO: 4700/940

REVOLUTION SEEN AS BEGINNING OF DEMOCRATIZATION PROCESS

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 pp 629-630

[Article by Nii K. Bentsi-Enchill]

[Text]

THE PROVISIONAL National Defence Council has suspended the 1981-82 budget of the People's National Party government, and will soon publish a law repealing the 1981 Appropriations Act. An official statement said the Limann administration had projected a budget deficit of ₵4,500m. However, expenditure trends in the last six months showed that the deficit was likely to rise to at least ₵8,000m. while the threefold increase in cocoa, sheanut and coffee producer prices would have added another ₵2,500m. to the deficit. It said funding such large deficits by printing more money would have meant a continuous decrease in the buying power of the cedi, already falling at the rate of 120 per cent per year.

The economic programme of the PNDC has not yet been laid out in detail. Preliminary indications point to a programme of stabilisation, especially of government finances, money supply, and the balance of payments. Before an economic review committee was formed — its membership has not been publicised but it is said to include figures such as Amoako-Atta and Abbey — the PNDC's first intervention in the agricultural sector was to enlist the aid of students in evacuating cocoa purchased in 1978. Although several thousand tonnes of cocoa were moved to the ports, this exercise, along with the campaign to increase the supply of foodstuffs to urban markets, has been hampered by old problems of roads, vehicle shortages, and some bureaucratic obstructions. According to the Secretary to the PNDC, Mr. B. B. Asamoah, emphasis in this sector will be on maize and rice cultivation, with the aim of self-sufficiency in staple foodstuffs. It will be important to see what measures are taken to turn the basis of the economy from export commodities towards a domestically-stimulated pattern of development.

A major speech is expected on the PNDC's economic policy and will have to deal with the fundamental problems of the economy, from the balance of payments crisis to the exchange rate. This is why the expenditure controls announced at the end of February are relatively routine. Such things as establishing detailed and accurate lists of personnel in the civil service have been announced before without being fully implemented. Defence committees will now monitor their preparation. Except where specified — for example, debt-servicing and payment of pensions and gratuities — all recurrent expenditure has been frozen at present levels, and new contracts will be more closely scrutinised. Revenue collection (including all excise and sales taxes, and any other duties) has been given a new impetus reminiscent of the June 4, 1979 period.

The acquisition of a 55 per cent shareholding in the General Superintendence Company (SGS Ghana) Ltd. was presented as part of the PNDC's "determination to infuse financial discipline into the system and in particular to ensure effective monitoring of the use of foreign exchange". This immediately brings to mind the view of US officials that they would become seriously concerned only if Valco was going to be nationalised; otherwise renegotiation of power rates was tolerable. A full discussion of the PNDC economic programme will begin in next week's issue.

On the political side of things, there is a visible settling down and consolidation of the PNDC into a government. However, given the nature of the process initiated by the action of December 31, there has been a degree of conflicting signals and inconsistencies that are to be expected from this "national government", much more a simple broad and heterogeneous front than a broad front of the left. One incident that to some extent illustrated the struggle between old and new politics was the congratulatory message sent by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to on the coming into force (an appropriate expression in the circumstances) of the Senegambian confederation. This was roundly condemned from several quarters.

The new politics began on December 31 when Fl-Lt. Rawlings advocated "nothing less than a revolution", the transformation of Ghanaian society and its institutions. People have been saying "you cannot change society overnight", a banal truth, but there is a genuine and powerful desire in sections of Ghanaian society to advance qualitative change. It happens that within the PNDC, among the Secretaries and the population, there are two broad tendencies that can be discerned: one ranges from the "moderates" to the outright reactionaries — this tendency is responding with varying degrees of subtlety to the present "adverse" situation; and the other ranges from the progressives to the revolutionaries, a spectrum that incorporates people with a genuine "house-cleaning" mentality and other people with a keener perception of the institutional and structural changes necessary for social transformation in Ghana.

Different causes for concern

People are worried for different reasons by the relatively low-key developments. Nothing as spectacular as the executions in June 1979, assets confiscations and bulldozing of markets has taken place. Some of those who feel threatened in the current situation may find the activities of the Citizens Vetting Committee particularly disturbing. Others feel that the absence of "exemplary" punishments (few people are calling for executions in any case), and confiscation of assets could prove costly in the long run, that the forces of kalabule and reaction have been given too much time to regain their composure, and could even be on the offensive again.

This is why the evolution of the defence committees is of such interest. The struggle there is over whether these committees will become little more than civic-pride units, or will make concrete interventions in the way Ghana is run. The struggle here is also between "house-cleaning" or something more, as illustrated by the meeting between Sergeant Akata-Pore of the PNDC, and management and defence committees in Tema at the end of last month. While management was told to avoid "anarchy" by respecting the views of workers in the decision-making process, workers were told to respect management, not to flout "authority" but rather to ensure that discipline and increased productivity became the order of the day. He said defence committees were not for witch-hunting but to serve as watchdogs, to protect state property as well as to promote the interests of workers. Workers are expected to be patient with management "because the revolution is irreversible". History teaches a different lesson.

Propaganda war

Meanwhile the propaganda war continues unabated. Rumour-mongering based on "ear-witness" accounts turns each gunshot into ten corpses. For example, one story in January ending had it that people with more than ₵50,000 in their bank accounts were having their money seized. It turned out that the Citizens Vetting Committee was starting work on screening certain people and making them pay taxes and penalties on undeclared or illegal income.

This is not to minimise the importance of discipline among the People's Armed Forces, whose neo-colonial heritage of latent anti-civilian feelings has resulted in some deadly incidents. It is important to remember the political work that has to be done among both the lower ranks of the Armed Forces and of the civilian population in order to forge those conscious links towards the stated objective of social transformation. Equally important is the fact that hostile forces can destabilise by word as by deed, thereby encouraging a counter-productive volatility and tension among the men at arms.

Two months after the PNDC came into power, one must recall the saying that "there can be no social peace without social justice". In developed liberal democracies, the pretensions of completed social justice and equal opportunity have rapidly eroded in this phase of economic crisis. Stability in our context tends to be measured in coups d'état and their aftermath. What the PNDC has done so far is to lift the lid off the already fermenting brew, and add some yeast. There is nothing strange about what is happening in Ghana. In some ways, it is almost classic. A minimal definition would be to say that a process of greater democratisation has been initiated. Time will tell how far this movement will go.

CSO: 4700/941

BUDGET SUSPENDED, FOREIGN-OWNED FIRM'S SHARE ACQUIRED

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 2 Mar 82 p 16

[Excerpt] Accra, March 2--Ghana's ruling Military Council suspended the ousted civilian administration's 1981-82 budget at the weekend and said it would repeal the relevant Appropriations Act.

A policy statement from the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) quoted by Radio Ghana said the previous regime overthrown on New Year's Eve had estimated deficits for central and local government of 4.5 million cedis (some 1.7 million dollars) for the financial year, but expenditure trends in the first six months had shown the deficit was likely to mount to at least 8,000 million cedis.

The trebling of producer prices for cocoa and shea-nut, which had not been budget for, would add a further 2,500 million cedis to the deficit, the PNDC said. With shortages of essential items including food and drugs, the funding of such a large deficit simply by printing more money would mean a continuous lowering of the purchasing power of the national currency, the PNDC noted. It added that the buying power was already slipping 100 percent a year.

The Council said it would impose controls on Government spending with immediate effect to ensure it was restricted to only the most essential commitments in the country's economy.

To ensure effective monitoring of the use of foreign exchange, it would immediately acquire 55 percent of shares in the hitherto wholly foreign-owned General Superintendence (Ghana) Co. Ltd., which operates on behalf of the Government.

CSO: 4700/938

COCOA MARKETING BOARD DEFICIT PREVENTS PAYMENTS TO PRODUCERS

Chits Instead of Cash

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 p 618

[Text]

Mr. B. B. D. Asamoah, Secretary to the PNDC, has asked farmers to demand from top officials of the Cocoa Marketing Board an account of how they manage the cocoa industry.

Addressing an emergency supreme council meeting of the Ghana National Farmers' Council in Accra, Mr. Asamoah made it clear that the national coffers were completely depleted. He said it was, therefore, the duty of all sections of the community, particularly farmers, to know how the country's wealth was used.

Mr. Oheneba Osei Akoto, secretary-general of the Ghana National Farmers' Council (GNFC), said at a farmer's meeting that the CMB had run into a deficit of ₵888m. during the 1980-81 cocoa season. The result was that the majority of the farmers whose cocoa, coffee and sheanuts were purchased by the board were not paid cash, but were only given chits to cover such purchases. Most of these farmers still have not been paid. Oheneba Akoto said that the situation had brought untold hardship to farmers and their families. To combat this, he reiterated the council's appeal to the government to allow the GNFC to take part in the marketing of cocoa and other produce. Farmers, he said, should also be allowed to take part in the fixing of prices for cocoa and other exportable crops, and he added that farmers were prepared to review the current high price of cocoa to bring it down, if necessary.

The evacuation of cocoa continues, and the Akim Oda Students Task Force has so far evacuated 267,685 bags of cocoa in the first phase, which began a month ago. Students over the country have now tripled the flow of cocoa to ports.

Cocoa Price Reduction Ahead

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 683

[Text]

Cocoa farmers at Oworakesem, near Asamankese, have suggested that the current producer price of ₵350 per load of cocoa be reduced to ₵240. They said this would enable the PNDC to pay cash for farmers' produce in view of economic problems facing the nation.

The farmers said in a resolution adopted by the farmers at a meeting with the Odikro of the village, that the reduction would help the Cocoa Marketing Board to cover its huge indebtedness to cocoa farmers, who were given chits instead of cash for cocoa bought last year.

CSO: 4700/939

AD

INVESTIGATION LAW WILL PROBE CORRUPTION, ABUSES

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 682

[Text]

A law giving legal effect to the National Investigations Committee (NIC) which is to probe allegations of corruption and dishonesty or abuse of office for profit among public officers was published recently.

According to Law Two of the Provisional National Defence Council, the NIC is authorised to investigate groups of persons who held high office of state or any public office in Ghana or may be shown to have acted in collaboration with any person holding a high office of state or any public office.

The NIC shall investigate any other acts or commission which might be shown to be detrimental to the economy of Ghana or to the welfare of the sovereign people of Ghana or in any other way the national interest.

Dated February 5, 1982 the law, however, provides that any person who wilfully and maliciously or recklessly makes a false allegation against any other person commits an offence and shall be liable upon conviction to a fine not exceeding ₵5,000 or to imprisonment to a term not exceeding 12 months or to both.

The NIC is empowered to investigate any other matters which may be referred to it by the PNDC.

It has the power to arrest, detain or freeze assets provided it could give reasons and the grounds of such an action.

While the NIC may receive statements and other evidence from any person who wishes to give statements or evidence it could by summons require any person to attend at such times and place to be specified to give or provide evidence.

The NIC could meet at such places and times as it may determine. It shall conduct public hearings to take statements and evidence when it deems it fit for the effective performance of its duties.

It may allow cross examination of any person who makes a statement or otherwise give evidence before it to the extent that the NIC deems fit for its purpose.

The NIC is to make periodic reports at least once a month to the PNDC on the performance of its functions.

The law is deemed to have come into force on January 2, 1982 reported GNA.

CSO: 4700/939

BRIEFS

JOURNALISM WORKERS' POWER--The workers of the Ghana Institute of Journalism have sacked the institute's director, Mr J.K. Quartey, and Mr S.Y.K. Sackey, the bursar. A spokesman for the workers explained that their move was to check an alleged embezzlement of ¢15,239 by the two people. Meanwhile, Mr Opata MateKorley, secretary to the institute, Mr Akoto Bamfo, senior tutor, and Dr C.J. Nsiah, principal tutor, have been nominated by the committees to run the affairs of the institute. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 p 619]

JUSTICE SYSTEM STREAMLINING NEEDED--Mr Chris Atim of the PNDC told a workers' rally in Koforidua that the country's judicial system was discriminatory because it favoured only the rich in the society. "There cannot be any confidence in a judicial system which commits a poor man who steals a few cedis to jail, and sets free a rich man who steals millions, he stressed. The system should, therefore, be streamlined to conform to the wishes of the people. "We will not allow ourselves to be bamboozled with legal arguments by lawyers anymore," he added. Meanwhile, the Citizen's Vetting Committee has held its first sitting in Accra. It was declared that the inquiry would cover all people who made their extravagant life-styles possible through the granting of loans which could have been used for more productive ventures. In a statement to the press, the committee said that such people often did not pay taxes or evaded duties which should have been paid on the consumer items which they had brought into the country. The committee has been set up to investigate people whose lifestyles and expenditures substantially exceeded their known or declared incomes. It will also investigate people whose bank accounts are in excess of a certain specified sum. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 p 619]

UNIVERSITY WORKERS' THREAT--The unionised workers of the University of Ghana have presented a resolution to the Pro-Vice-Chancellor in which they demanded an official enquiry into the affairs of the administration. Specifically, they requested that five officials: the executive engineer, the hospital secretary, an assistant registrar, the head of the furniture section (Estates) and the head of the maintenance section (Achimota Staff Village), should be asked to proceed on indefinite leave over allegations of malpractices made against them. The union resolution further said that: "The safety of all the officers involved cannot be guaranteed by the union and they should be so advised to stay away unless when invited to appear before the enquiry." [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 p 618]

NEW HEALTH APPOINTMENTS--The PNDC has appointed Dr Sika Nartey and Mr A.K.Y. Kokukokor, an Assistant Superintendent of Police at the Police Hospital, as Deputy Secretaries for the Ministry of Health. Their appointments take immediate effect. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 682]

CATHOLIC CHURCH ASSETS DEFROZEN--The PNDC has ordered the immediate defreezing of the assets and bank accounts of the Roman Catholic Church. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 685]

CORRUPT OFFICERS ARRESTED--Nine senior army officers alleged to have helped smugglers on the border with Upper Volta have been arrested by junior ranks. The men detained at Bawku, included Captain Bright Oppong, the border post commander who was said to have collected between ¢5,000 and C10,000 for each truckload of food, cola nuts and timber allowed to leave Ghana without an export licence. A spokesman from the junior ranks alleged that Captain Oppong had transferred all "disciplines and revolutionary junior ranks from Bawku District since January to allow him to carry on his corrupt activities unimpeded." Captain Oppong and his colleagues who had ignored warnings to stop aiding smugglers would be sent to Bolgatanga, the regional capital of Upper Ghana for interrogation. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 682]

CSO: 4700/939

NATIONAL ECONOMIC COUNCIL EXAMINING STATE FIRMS' ACCOUNTS

Conakry HOROYA in French No 2904, 7-13 Feb 82 pp 8-9

[Article by Ibrahima Sory Camara: "Strictness in Management Control"]

[Text] The 11th session of the National Economic Conference, whose work began on Friday, 22 January, continues to examine with great strictness the balance sheets of state economic enterprises. President Ahmed Sekou Toure is personally leading and moderating debate.

Discussions on 28 January first of all dealt with the report of the commission of the Ministry of State Control in charge of the liquidation of Nafaya and Sabouya and then the complementary report drawn up by the Ministry of Economic and Financial Affairs commission in charge of auditing the balance sheet of the national enterprise Prominex.

An analysis of the report of the commission liquidating Nafaya and Sabouya revealed that those enterprises had registered more losses than profits. Consequently, in order to safeguard and increase the people's holdings, the conference resolved to liquidate both enterprises. The Ministry of State Control commission was therefore asked to turn over to national companies those articles and goods for sale which they had delivered to Sabouya or Nafaya.

As for the complementary report, the analysis of the supreme leader of the revolution, President Ahmed Sekou Toure showed that data from the balance sheet of the Kindia Bauxite office (OBK) were missing. The commission was ordered to take such data into account in order to complete a better audit. In other words, the balance sheet of Prominex will have to be discussed again.

On Saturday, 30 January, the session took up the balance sheet of the National Import and Export Enterprise, IMPORTEX. Presented by Comrade Mamadou Bobo Dieng, general manager, the balance sheet was clear, precise and well drafted. The additional information provided by the board of directors in response to questions from the supreme leader of the revolution enabled the conference to see that this national company is playing its double role as an essential source of national earnings and as a regulator of the circulation of goods perfectly.

The conference saw that IMPORTEX has embarked upon a veritable offensive to revive the national economy thanks to the application of a policy to promote national exports. Its immediate objective consists of financing all imports through receipts from its IMPORTEX exports, thereby responding to its objective. Its balance sheet was accepted by the conference.

It was the balance sheet of the Hydrovente Enterprise in Conakry which, in the light of information gathered by the commission in charge of clarifying the situation of the enterprise, was examined again. The analysis showed several differences between figures given in the balance sheet and the facts as noted by the commission. Since no justification could be given by the board of directors in an objective or convincing manner, the minister of state control was asked to go to the competent jurisdictions for the Hydrovente Enterprise, accused of forgery.

At the session of Tuesday, 2 February, Comrade Alias Camara, general manager of state control, was given responsibility, on behalf of the commission, for clarifying the situation of Hydrovente of Conakry, presented the report on verification of that enterprise's bookkeeping and balance sheet.

The situation emerging from the audit is poor, essentially due to two factors. With respect to operations, accounting is poor. Books and accounting documents are not up to date. In addition, there is a lack of coordination and supervision between the divisions (treasury-commercial division-financial division), each of them working alone.

Regarding the conduct of employees, there has been misconduct, which explains embezzlements and misappropriations of 28,065,488 sylis, which had to be concealed under the heading of expenses to be borne by the enterprise. In addition, some 5,584,217 sylis in old bills were deliberately withheld from the enterprise's funds in order to cover up the embezzlement.

At the close of the analysis of the auditing report, which shows all the elements for correction and reorganization of accounting, the balance sheet for the end of the 1981 fiscal year of Hydrovente of Conakry was accepted by the conference and the supreme leader of the revolution, Comrade President Ahmed Sekou Toure congratulated the auditing commission for the clarity and objectivity of the report and the seriousness it showed in the enormous task it had completed.

Deriving the lessons from the confusion caused by the former board of directors of Hydrovente of Conakry, the conference decided to decentralize the enterprise, creating an autonomous Hydrovente in each of the ten arrondissements in the Conakry region. They will each manage hydrocarbon stations in the territory of the individual arrondissements. For the next session of the National Economic Conference, the Ministry of State Control will draw up a report centralizing accounting figures from the ten Hydroventes of Conakry, to be presented to the session. In addition, it was decided to make reductions in the plethoric personnel.

Next, it was Comrade Sanoussy Cissoko, general manager of the National Hydrocarbons Office (ONAH), who presented the company's 1981 balance sheet. A wide-ranging, in-depth, objective debate began, making it possible to establish that ONAH, has realized large profits by applying the decisions of the preceding session of the National Economic Conference. The conference accepted the board's balance sheet and authorized the board, in cooperation with IMPORTEX, to order new tank trucks.

The board was instructed to turn the retired tank trucks over to the government garage so that they might be distributed among the administrative regions of Koundara, Dinguiraye, and so on, for other useful purposes. In addition, in order to achieve more rational distribution of hydrocarbons, ONAH is henceforth to integrate the Mamou and Kankan depots into its operating structure and eliminate those at Boke, Kindia, Faranah and N'Zerekore.

11,464
CSO: 4719/608

PRESIDENT'S RECENT TRIPS TO AFRICAN COUNTRIES

Conakry HOROYA in French No 2904, 7-13 Feb 82 pp 4-5

[Excerpts] On the agenda of our militant, active and effective diplomatic action, the diplomatic offensive of our people's revolution during this first week of February 1982 will have a profound effect, going beyond any cult of exclusivity.

At 0530 hours on Friday, 5 February 1982, President Ahmed Sekou Toure, supreme leader of the revolution and chief of state, left Conakry for an important African mission.

The phases of this new African mission of the chief of state were Lome, Lagos, Nairobi and Niamey.

The framework of this diplomatic offensive, whose every phase consolidates and widens the following of our people's revolution, shows what prestige President Ahmed Sekou Toure enjoys in the world.

The tour began in Lome, capital of the Togo of the "New March," where the chief of state and his entourage were greeted by President Gnassingbe Eyadema and welcomed in an extraordinary display of mobilization by the leaders and members of the Rally of the Togolese People (RPT).

The stop in Lome was used by the chiefs of state as an opportunity to discuss issues of common interest.

On that same day, Friday, 5 February 1982, the supreme leader of the revolution was to arrive in Lagos, capital of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, at 1630 hours.

In another warm and fraternal welcome, he was received by President Alhadji Shehu Usman Aliyu Shagari, who was accompanied by officials from the Nigerian Federal Government.

The central event of the Nigerian visit was to be in Zaria, where the Alhadji Ahmadou Bello Sardauna de Sokoto University bestowed the degree of Doctor Honoris Causa on the secretary general of the party, President Ahmed Sekou Toure, in recognition of the lucid, far-sighted leadership of the eminent theoretician.

On Sunday, 7 February 1982, the august messenger of our people is to go to Nairobi, capital of Kenya, to participate in the important meetings of the OAU commission on Chad and the committee for implementation of the OAU resolutions on the Western Sahara.

Following the meetings in Nairobi, the supreme leader of the revolution is, during the second phase, to make an official visit of friendship to Niger, in response to an invitation from President Kountche.

Exceptional Event

Already, in that land stretching east of the bend in the Niger River, that visit is being announced as an exceptional event.

In Niamey, Maradi, Zinder, Dossou, Tahoua, Agades, Djado and so on, the people have been caught up in the excitement of these celebrations, which they want to make spectacular and unique.

11,464
CSO: 4719/608

MOI ANNOUNCES WIDE-RANGING CABINET CHANGES

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 26 Feb 82 pp 4-5

[Text]

WITH one clean sweep, President Daniel arap Moi has made far reaching changes in his cabinet the implications of which will not unfold for quite some time. The most important change is the removal of the ministry of finance from the vice-president's office and the creation of a separate ministry of finance under Mr. Arthur Magugu, formerly minister of health. Vice-President Mwai Kibaki who has been minister for finance for more than a decade, will now be responsible for home affairs. This is the portfolio which Moi held for twelve years when he was vice-president under the late President Jomo Kenyatta. Kibaki was for many years associated with fiscal and financial policies in Kenya and in recent months he has come under fire for the poor performance of the country's economy. The Standard newspaper, in particular, has pressed home the point that Kibaki should be accountable for the performance of the country's economy. The loss of the finance portfolio will be seen by many observers as an attempt by the president to hew a slightly different line in financial matters from that which may have been associated with Kibaki, but it is not clear what the new minister of finance, Magugu, is likely to do in the very near future to pull Kenya out of the economic doldrums which the country is going through at the moment. Magugu had a stint in the ministry of finance as an assistant minister before the general election of 1979 and that should serve him in good stead in his new job. But being an assistant minister is not quite the same thing as being the minister and Magugu may in due course discover that off loading some of the problems Kibaki has been labouring under may not be all that easy, given the continued global economic slump.

On the face of it Mr. Charles Njonjo who is now left only with the constitutional affairs portfolio of his former ministry has lost something in the reshuffle, but in reality it was the constitutional affairs aspect of his former ministry which was crucial. The final details of specific functions of every ministry are not yet known, but it is likely that the criminal investigation department of the police may no longer be within the ministry of constitutional affairs. At one time talk had it that it would go to the office of the president as it had been under the late President Kenyatta. If that happens, it would, of course, correspondingly diminish Njonjo's responsibilities and power.

Given persistent reports of differences between Kibaki and Njonjo in recent months, the changes in the portfolios of the two men should have the impression of evenhandedness on the part of the president.

The rest of the reshuffles are so wide-ranging that it almost looks as if President Moi seems dissatisfied with many of the his ministers' performances in the previous posts, though not dissatisfied enough to throw out anyone from the cabinet altogether. In any cabinet reshuffle it is always tempting to assume that those who are shifted around may not have been performing their taks as well as those not affected by the reshuffle, but often reshuffles tend also to incorporate re-organisations of government portfolios in such a way that lessons gained from previous operations are put into practice to streamline or improve government performance. One case in point is the creation of the new ministry of works and housing under Mr. Charles Rubia. The ministry of works, when it was under Mr. Paul Ngei, (now minister for livestock development) was very much a depleted ministry, for a good deal of its previous portfolio in the form of road construction and maintenance had gone over to the ministry of transport and communication still under Mr. Henry Kosgey. What was left of the ministry of works dealt mainly with the construction and maintenance of government buildings and therefore seemed a natural partner for a merger with the housing portfolio.

A similar re-organisation is involved in the addition of wildlife to the ministry of tourism. This is a natural development for many tourists who come to Kenya are still attracted to the country by the wildlife. A ministry which tries to promote tourism, but has no control over wildlife management and conservation has many handicaps to contend with. In any case, the new arrangement simply returns the situation to what it was years ago. Until the main attraction for tourists coming to Kenya has shifted substantially away from wildlife, it is wise to keep tourism and wildlife management under one roof.

The president is clearly still trying to find a winning combination for the country's major ministries — agriculture, livestock development and energy — which have all undergone changes of ministerial personnel once more in the space of two years. What, however, is most obvious in this reshuffle as compared with previous ones, is that the president is not merely assigning new duties to his cabinet, but is telling politicians and the country at large that he is the man in charge of the direction of developments in Kenya. In his announcement of the reshuffle, the president made no bones of his intention to dismiss "any public servant who proves unable to do his or her job properly and effectively", adding that nobody in government should consider himself indispensible". ■

Excerpts from Moi's announcement on the cabinet reshuffle

AS you all know, since I became the president of our beloved republic, I have frequently emphasised the importance of maintaining the highest degree of efficiency in the management of all our affairs.

There is, of course, no need to introduce a change merely for the sake of it. Stability and continuity are important in the management of our country's affairs. However, in order to ensure that the machinery of government is efficient — so that it remains ahead of the various economic and social problems instead of merely responding to them, and that it enables our country to seize economic opportunities as they arise — it is necessary to review its efficiency from time to time. Such a review should not only be on the basis of the activities undertaken by the government directly but, also very important on the effectiveness with which the government supports Kenyans in their development efforts.

In the kind of review I am talking about, emphasis is given to such important matters as clear assignment of responsibility; avoidance of duplication of responsibility; and proper allocation of government work so that it is distributed in a manner which does not lead to overloading of some ministries or departments.

Unless these qualities are maintained, some of the economic problems now facing us and many other countries could set us back many years. Moreover, and as I emphasised a few minutes ago, without such qualities and efficiency we shall not be able to seize economic opportunities as they arise. This is why I shall not hesitate to dismiss any public servant who proves unable to do his or her job properly and effectively. And in that connection, I want to repeat what I have said many times before: that nobody should consider himself indispensable.

The changes which I shall announce in a short moment have been made after very careful review of the performance of the existing machinery, its weaknesses and strengths, and also the economic and social problems and opportunities which are ahead of us. Against that whole background, the new structure of the government will be as follows:

President and commander-in-chief of the armed forces of the Republic of Kenya:
H.E. D.T. arap Moi
Minister of state: J.S. Gichuru
Assistant ministers: J. ole Tipis, I.K.A. Salat, J. Keen, D.N. Kuguru.
Chief secretary, head of the civil service and secretary to the cabinet:
J.G. Kiereini
Permanent Secretaries:
Development co-ordination and cabinet office — S. Nyachae.
Director of personnel management — A.K. Kandie
Provincial administration — J.S. Mathenge
Defence — A. Githinji

Office of the vice-president and ministry of home affairs
Vice-president and minister for home affairs: Mwai Kibaki
Assistant ministers:
M. Kubo, F. Gumo
Permanent secretary:
D. Mwiraria

Ministry of constitutional affairs
Minister: C. Njonjo
Assistant ministers:
Z.O. Olang', Mwangi Njuguna
Permanent secretary:
J.K. Ndoto

Ministry of finance
Minister:
A.K. Magugu
Assistant ministers:
V. arap Too, S.A. Echakara
Permanent secretary:
H.M. Mule
Financial secretary:
J. Karuga

Ministry of water development
Minister:
J.J. Nyagah
Assistant ministers:
K.B. Mwamzandi, E. Kiptanui
Permanent secretary:
J.H.O. Omino

Ministry of economic planning and development
Minister:
Z. Onyonka
Assistant ministers:
J.M. Angatia, M.J. Shikuku
Permanent secretary:
F.Y.O. Masakhalia

Ministry of co-operative development
Minister:
R.S. Matano
Assistant ministers:
P. Ejore, Henry R. Cheboiwo
Permanent secretary:
J. Gituma

Ministry of agriculture
Minister:
M. Waiyaki
Assistant ministers:
L. Marita Atebe, A.A. Hirsi
Permanent secretary:
F.M. Njuguna

Ministry of local government
Minister:
S.S. ole Oloitipitip
Assistant ministers:
K. Ngala, G.S. Muia
Permanent secretary:
L.M. Kabetu

Ministry of information and broadcasting
Minister:
E. Mwamunga
Assistant ministers:
N. Mbogori, E. Khasakhala
Permanent secretary:
J. Kiti

Ministry of livestock development
Minister:
P.J. Ngei
Assistant ministers:
N. Muigai, C.C. Murgor
Permanent secretary:
L.O. Kibinge

Ministry of foreign affairs
Minister:
R.J. Ouko
Assistant ministers:
K. Munyi, E. M. Mweu
Permanent secretary:
J.G. Shamalla

Ministry of lands, settlement and physical planning
Minister:
G.G. Kariuki
Assistant ministers:
F. Lotodo, A.A. Mohamed
Permanent secretary:
F.N. Ondieki

Ministry of regional development, science and technology
Minister:
K.N.K. Biwott
Assistant ministers:
F.M. Kalulu, A. Okuku
Permanent secretary:
P. Gacii

Ministry of works and housing
Minister:
C.W. Rubia
Assistant ministers:
N.N. Njuno, P.L.Lotitiyo
Permanent secretary:
J.K. Muchemi

Ministry of higher education
Minister:
J.J. Kamotho
Assistant ministers:
W.E. Mwita, F.B. Tuva
Permanent secretary:
J.T. arap-Leting

Ministry of commerce
Minister:
J.H. Okwanyo
Assistant ministers:
W. Kisiero, P.E.M. Ivuti
Permanent secretary:
J.A. Kipsanai

Ministry of culture and social services
Minister:
M.B. Mudavadi
Assistant ministers:
J.Kalweo, S.K. Metto, A. Ambala
Permanent secretary:
J. Muliro

Ministry of tourism and wildlife
Minister:
E. Mwangale
Assistant ministers:
A.H. Halake Fayo, M. Mwithaga
Permanent secretary:
A.W. Mbogho

Ministry of energy
Minister:
G.K. M'Mbijjewe

Assistant ministers:
J.K. Wagara, J.N. Karume
Permanent secretary:
A. Ligale

Ministry of basic education
Minister:
J.K. Ng'eno
Assistant ministers:
J.A. Ojiambo, J.K. Munene
Permanent secretary:
L.P. Odero

Ministry of Industry
Minister:
A.J. Omanga
Assistant ministers:
H.C. Wariithi, M. Sheikh Aden
Permanent secretary:
J.W. Githuku

Ministry of transport and communications
Minister:
H.K. Kosgey
Assistant ministers:
M.O.S. Soba, M.P. ole Nampaso
Permanent secretary:
S.J. Mbogua

Ministry of environment and natural resources
Minister:
P. Oloo-Aringo
Assistant ministers:
P. Leakey, H.M.K. Adichareh
Permanent secretary:
H.F. Mtula

Ministry of labour
Minister:
T. Mbathi
Assistant ministers:
Shariff Nassir Taib, M. Kubo
Permanent secretary:
J.A. Gethenji

Ministry of health
Minister:
A. Mukasa Mango
Assistant ministers:
J. Njiru, E.W. Wameyo
Permanent secretary:
G.R. M'Mwirichia

Office of the attorney-general
Attorney-general:
J.K. Kamere

CSO: 4700/942

MOI ADDRESSES LAW SOCIETY OF KENYA

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 26 Feb 82 p 18

[Excerpts from speech by President Daniel arap Moi to the Law Society of Kenya on the occasion of its annual dinner]

[Text]

I would hesitate, before a gathering such as this, to offer a detailed analysis on the law, the judiciary or our legal system. May I, however, make a few remarks. First, let me say at once, and I say it in all sincerity, that my government has the deepest respect for the rule of law and for constitutional legality. The rule of law, as I understand it, requires that the fundamental rights and freedom of every individual regardless of his status, tribal, racial or ethnic origin, shall receive protection without discrimination. My government is committed to that ideal.

In this regard, I can think of no other body of men and women better able to make a worthwhile contribution towards the realisation of this noble ideal than the members of the legal profession — academic and practising lawyers alike. It is my view that today's lawyer should not contend himself merely with the conduct of his practice. Neither should he remain a stranger to important developments taking place in the country. In countries facing vast problems of organisation and development, the lawyer has important responsibilities in making a contribution both towards the economic progress of his country and the social advancement of his people.
sibilities in making a contribution both towards the economic progress of his country and the social advancement of his people.

In Kenya, as in other developing countries, there is a need to provide access to legal advice and representation to all our people, to enable them to have equal access to the courts and the benefit of rights conferred upon them by law. It is important, however, that such services are made available to them at a cost which they can afford.

I understand that, in all departments of the court's jurisdiction, and more so in civil, there is a litigation explosion. Most of the increase is recent and cases filed now, I am told, may not be heard until 1983 or 1984. Every effort should be made to correct this unhappy state of affairs, otherwise public confidence in the system will be eroded and the rule of law put in jeopardy. As you all know, justice delayed is justice denied.

The number of judges were recently increased from 19 to 24. That may help relieve the problem. The pressure may be reduced further by relieving the judges of those matters in which judicial expertise is not absolutedly. The removal of land cases from the normal judicial system is a step in that direction, lawyers must therefore, adhere to the new method of dealing with land cases and actively encourage their clients to settle such cases through arbitration by elders as provided for by the law.

I am, however, surprised to hear that some lawyers have been hesitant to refer land cases to the elders. This might be so because land cases usually appear genuine and straightforward from the complainant's standpoint. The truth, however, is that the majority of land cases are from those who want to exploit others. It was for this reason that the government amended the law to stop further exploitation of innocent wananchi. At this juncture, I would like you to ponder the following quotation from the Book of Proverbs.

'He who states his case first seems right, until the other comes and examines him, the lot puts an end to disputes and decides between powerful contenders.'

We are proud to have a judiciary that is well known for its integrity and for the high standards that it has set in the administration of justice. For the rule of law to prevail, it is important to maintain the respect and dignity of the court and its officers, whose task it is to uphold and enforce the law. Without such respect, public faith in the administration of justice would be undermined and the law itself would fall into disrepute.

I am addressing these remarks to you in the knowledge that I am speaking to men and women of integrity. That the legal profession should be responsible for the discipline of its members, is generally accepted and rightly so. After all, the whole concept of a profession is that its members bring to the performance of their duties certain self-imposed ethical standards. It must protect the public not only against the unscrupulous but also against the incompetent by laying down proper professional standards and seeing to it that they are maintained.

Our country is undergoing a rapid process of change — a change for the better — and is endeavouring to reach those social and economic goals which are essential for the proper functioning of the rule of law. If, in the light of these remarks, you can examine and determine your obligations and responsibilities and play the part expected of you as members of an honourable profession, you will have strengthened our philosophy of peace, love and unity.

CSO: 4700/942

INVESTIGATION OF KENYATTA'S PORTRAIT REMOVALS URGED

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 20 Feb 82 p 6

[Editorial: "The President and the Rumor-Mongers"]

[Text]

PORTRAITS of heads of state are more than just pictures. They are symbols of nationhood and of the body politic. They are just as important as the national flag. And displaying them on walls of offices and public places is more than a national duty. It is a demonstration of honour by a people for their leader.

Portraits of former leaders and other personalities can be displayed on the same walls with that of the current Head of State. But when that happens it should be done in a way that leaves no doubt who is the current Head of State.

In Kenya, for instance, portraits displayed together with that of the President should be displayed in a manner that makes it quite clear that we have only one President — His Excellency Daniel arap Moi. But nothing should stop those who wish to do so from displaying portraits of other personalities on the same walls.

In the past three weeks, however, the portraits of the late President Jomo Kenyatta disappeared from the walls of many public places in Nairobi.

This was not by voluntary action on the part of the proprietors of bars and restaurants and shops in the city. No. Men in the uniforms of the administration police and also the regular police forces walked into the premises and ordered the owners to pull down the portraits.

As is the case with most Kenyans when confronted by the police, most proprietors pulled down the pictures without so much as a whimper. There are eye-witness accounts where some bar and restaurant owners resisted the orders. In one such case, the men in uniform pulled down the picture and threw it into the waste bin. When the proprietor attempted to put it back on the wall, they snatched it and smashed it on the floor. All this happened in the presence of at least 60 shocked patrons.

All along, the impression created was that the pulling down of Mzee Kenyatta's portraits was ordered by President Moi. No reasons were given for this. And no one questioned the action publicly.

But the President himself gave the most likely explanation on Thursday when he said that a few disgruntled politicians and some civil servants were waging a slanderous campaign designed to make him unpopular among wananchi.

"How can I direct people to remove the portraits of Mzee Kenyatta whom I served for many years? Asked President Moi.

He called on the rumour-mongers to stop the smear campaign forthwith. "People who are making such unfounded allegations are out to make me unpopular," adding "when you see them you should realise that they are anti-Nyayo."

Kenyans know President Moi as a man who greatly admired Mzee Kenyatta and served the late President with loyalty and dedication as his vice-president for 12 years. No other person served Mzee Kenyatta in that capacity for that long.

This sniping at President Moi had a diabolical timing. The exercise was launched at a time when several African heads of state were in Nairobi for the mini summit of the Organisation of African Unity of which the Kenyan President is the current chairman.

We have no evidence on whether the uniformed men who went around ordering the removal of the portraits were genuine police officers or impositors. That the President has said there were some civil servants involved in the campaign to discredit him suggests they may have actually been police officers. What is clear from the President's statement is that whoever they were they were not acting on his directives.

The action of those behind the exercise was obviously calculated to create political divisions and chaos in the country. Given the seriousness of the matter, a public investigation should be instituted to establish who these people are and appropriate action should be taken against them.

CSO: 4700/942

CONFUSION SURROUNDS REMOVAL OF KENYATTA'S PORTRAIT

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 26 Feb 82 p 12

[Text]

FOR a number of weeks, provincial administration policemen and other administrators had been going around shops asking proprietors to take down the portrait of the late President Jomo Kenyatta which in many premises hang alongside that of President Daniel arap Moi. In many cases, no explanation was given other than that it was an order from "the top". The public were rather mystified about the move for Kenyatta's portrait has been displayed in public since he died. President Moi last week told Kenyans he was upset by the manner in which the late president's portrait was being taken down and he charged that there were some members of the civil service who appear bent on making his name unpopular among Kenyans by giving the impression that he did not want Kenyatta's picture displayed in public. The president pointed out that he had served Kenyatta loyally for twelve years as vice-president and that Kenyatta's portrait is prominently displayed at State House and at the president's residence.

It was still uncertain exactly who had given the order to have Kenyatta's portrait removed from public places. What is interesting is that foreign visitors have been known to ask why there are two portraits of presidents displayed in public, the standard response has tended to be that Kenyans continue to revere the memory of Kenyatta as the founder of the Kenya nation by retaining his portrait in public places. Elsewhere in the world, however, the practice is to replace the portrait of the outgoing head of state with that of the new one as soon as the change-over has taken place. ■

CSO: 4700/942

BUSINESSMEN TO CONTINUE FEE BOYCOTT

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 22 Feb 82 p 10

[Text]

MOMBASA traders have resolved to continue boycotting payment of the new licence fees announced late last year by the Mombasa Municipal Council.

The resolution was passed at a meeting of the Mombasa branch of Kenya National Chamber of Commerce and Industry held over the weekend under the chairmanship of Coun. Gasper Walele.

Early this month Mombasa traders sent a memorandum to the Minister for Local Government, Mr. Stanely Oloitipitip, protesting against the new licence fees.

The traders said that they would continue boycotting the new licence fees till the Minister replied to their memorandum.

They reiterated that the new licence fee was unreasonably high and would force small traders out of business if enforced.

Coun. Walele, who is the vice-chairman of the branch, alleged the fees and rates were approved despite the opposition from majority of the council members.

Coun. Walele disclosed that a meeting of all branches of the Chamber of Commerce will be held at Nairobi on Tuesday to discuss the issue.

He urged the branch to support the headquarters' decision on the issue.

The traders also expressed concern over the shortage of white maize flour, rice and wheat flour in the district. They wondered why these commodities were available in Nairobi and not in Mombasa. They urged the Government to intervene and ensure that Mombasa people were supplied with the commodities.

Coun. Walele called on traders to repay Government loans so that other businessmen could also benefit.

CSO: 4700/942

ODINGA THREATENS TO SUE OLOITIPITIP

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 18 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Mitch Odero]

[Text]

THE wrangle between Local Government Minister Stanley Oloitipitip and former Vice-President Jaramogi Oginga Odinga took a new turn yesterday when Mr. Odinga threatened to seek legal redress against the Minister.

A notice to this effect was reportedly conveyed to the Minister on Tuesday in respect of what Mr. Odinga contended as "libellous" utterances by the Minister published by The Standard about a week ago.

The notice signed by C. N. Omondi and Co. Advocates, acting for Mr. Odinga stated in part:

"We are therefore, writing to ask you whether you are prepared (1) to sign a suitable withdrawal and apology in terms to be approved by us on our client's behalf.

"(2) To indemnify him in respect of the costs to which he has been put in the matter and (3) to pay, and in what sum you are prepared to pay, by way of damages for the injury to our client's reputation."

The notice had a further condition stating: "We ask you to let us have a reply within the next seven days. In the meantime our client reserves the all his rights in the matter."

The lawyers contended in the notice that the Minister caused to be printed and published the allegation which "are completely unfounded and constitute a grave libel upon our client".

In the same vein, the lawyers also gave another notice to The Standard asking the newspaper whether it would be prepared to "( ) publish in your newspaper a full and complete withdrawal and apology in terms to be approved by us on our client's behalf in a position similar to that occupied by the report complained of".

Further demands were on costs to which Odinga had been put in the matter as well as payment for damages for "the very serious injury to his (Odinga's) reputation".

The lawyers asked the newspaper to "let us have a reply at once," adding that their client would meanwhile reserve all his rights in the matter".

According to the notice Mr. Odinga "complains of a report appearing on page 5[illegible]" on the newspaper's issue of February 11.

The notice stated: "The allegations in this report are merely bitter and unjustifiable attack upon our client. The allegations are untrue and are highly defamatory of him."

Both notices were dated February 16.

CSO: 4700/942

KARUME SLAMS RUDE ASIANS

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 22 Feb 82 p 5

[Article by Magayu Magayu]

[Text]

ARROGANT Asian traders over the weekend received a severe slating from an Assistant Minister for Urban Development and Housing Mr. Njenga Karume.

Speaking at Karuri trading centre, at a meeting organised by the Kanu sub-branch, Kiambaa, Mr. Karume said the arrogance of some Asian businessmen and traders had been growing over the years. He said they had lost respect for their African customers and had resorted to abusing them.

"Some Asian businessmen do not respect their African customers. They have started abusing them the way they were doing before independence," Mr. Karume said.

He said such Asian businessmen must not think they were the lords of Kenya, adding that the freedom and stability that they enjoyed in the country today had been fought for by Kenyans. "We call upon them to live with us like brothers and sisters. The rights they now enjoy have been given to them by us," he said.

He said he wholly backed President Moi's recent reprimand on corrupt Asian businessmen.

Mr. Karume also hit out at people in his Kiambaa constituency who, he said, went around rumour-mongering and bar-politicking. He said they were accusing him of making efforts to introduce Kenya Bus Service to the constituency in order to undermine matatu operators.

He said Kiambaa people had requested the introduction of KBS to Kiambaa, adding it was wrong and misleading to suggest he was the one doing that.

Mr. Karume further chided Jaramogi Odinga Odinga and the Minister for Local Government, Mr. S. Oloitipitip, for "abusing each other in the open". He said if Jaramogi and Mr. Oloitipitip had a bone of contention between them they should have settled it individually "instead of dragging the nation into it at a time when some African elders were meeting in Nairobi".

Speaking on the removal of the late Mzee Kenyatta's portraits from public places Mr. Karume said those maliciously capitalising on the late President's name in order to discredit President Moi would end up destroyed like Mr. Odinga ended up when he "tried to misuse Kenyatta's name".

The Assistant Minister condemned people who asked some leaders to explain where money had gone to end discounted rumours that the country was bankrupt. He said the country's current economic difficulties were temporary and were being experienced the world over.

CSO: 4700/942

MINOR BATTALION UNITS MERGED

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 22 Feb 82 p 3

[Text]

ARMY Commander and Deputy Chief of General Staff Lt.-General J. M. Sawe has announced that all minor battalion units had been scrapped.

He was speaking at armed forces inter-unit cross-country race competition at the Nanyuki army barracks at the weekend where he was deputising for the Chief of General Staff, General J. K. Mulinge.

He said Kenya was highly acclaimed the world over because of her renown athletes.

General Sawe appealed to the soldiers to continue training so that they can be healthy soldiers.

The competitors were drawn from the Kenya Army, Airforce and the Navy.

In the major units Transport Battalion took the first position with 156 points, while Kenya Army came second with 159 points and 3-KR third position with 286 points.

In minor units Armed Forces Medical Service (AFMS) got 376 points and Parachute with 548 was second.

The fifth Air Cavalry Battalion (ACBN) scored 606 points and took third position.

In the 12.5 km. cross-country race which Lt.-General Sawe flagged off, Pre. Kiptum of 5-KR was first.

Cpl. Nyasan of 3-KR came second and Cpl. Mosinik of 5-KR was third.

In women service corps race of 6-kms., Cpl. Nyabanyo was first while Pte. Toroitich came second and Pte. Kimuge third.

Lt.-General Sawe presented shields and trophies to the winning units.

— KNA

CSO: 4700/942

COUNTRY'S ECONOMIC PERFORMANCE SAID TO IMPROVE

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 5 Mar 82 pp 21, 23

[Summary of Kenya's quarterly economic report released by the minister for economic planning and development, Dr. Zackary Onyonka]

[Text]

The Kenya Economy 1981 General

Due to the long rains which came in time and the relatively liberal policy for imports in the early part of the year, there was some improvement in the performance of the Kenyan economy in 1981. Recorded marketed production from agriculture increased in volume by less than one per cent but total agricultural output, because of the larger maize crop and better pastures, is estimated to have increased by 5 per cent. Output of the manufacturing sector also increased by 5 per cent. Overall, GDP at constant prices is estimated to have increased by 3.5 to 4.0 per cent as there was a fall in construction output and little growth in transport:

External Trade and Balance of Payments

Kenya's external trade experienced some improvement in the first nine months of 1981 compared with the same period in 1980. The overall value of imports dropped from £667.8 million in January-September, 1980 to £659.0 million in January-September 1981. While the value of other goods including machinery and transport equipment declined.

Export earnings increased from £369.1 million in January-September 1980 to £388.4 million in the same period in 1980. Coffee export revenues amounted to £108.1 million for the whole year in 1980 and £109.8 million in 1981 while tea exports were valued at £60 million in 1981 compared with £58 million in 1980. The export value of petroleum products rose from £89.4 million in January-September 1980 to £106.4 million in January-September, 1981.

The balance of trade deficit dropped from £298.8 million recorded in January-September 1980 to £270.6 million for the same period of 1981. This represents a 9.4 per cent decrease in the size of the deficit. It is estimated that the trade deficit for the entire year in 1981 will be about £372 million compared with £443.3 million in January-September, 1981.

The balance of payments continued to be difficult in 1981 mainly as a result of the large trade deficit. There was a reduction in gross foreign exchange of £60 million between December, 1980 and December, 1981 which reflects the extent of the overall payments deficit on both current and capital accounts.

Money and Banking

High import prices, poor export earnings stemming from depressed demand in industrialised countries, little growth in invisible earnings and accelerated external debt service payments further eroded Kenya's foreign exchange reserves. Gross foreign reserves, which were £183 million in June, 1981, declined to £138 million in October, the lowest reserve holding since December, 1976

However, a £51.8 million euro-dollar loan helped raise the reserves to £129 million by December, 1981.

After the slowdown to June, 1981, money supply expanded by £95 million between June and December to reach £918 million. While credit to the private sector increased by 8 per cent in 1981, credit to the government grew by 76 per cent.

Employment

Based on early provisional figures overall employment is expected to have risen by 2.5 per cent during 1981, a small rate of increase compared with earlier years. In agriculture, wage employment decreased by 5 per cent mainly due to declines in tea, sisal and sugar estates. In contrast, between June, 1980 and June, 1981, employment in central government recorded an increase of about 10 percent.

Consumer Prices

Comparing December, 1980 and December, 1981, consumer prices increased by 19.3, 24.8 and 18.9 per cent for the lower, middle and upper income groups respectively, resulting in an average rise of 21.0 per cent. Despite the sharp increases recorded in December, itself for many food items, the annual average inflation rate for 1981 was 12.6 per cent as compared to 12.8 per cent in 1980.

Sectoral Contributions

- Agriculture

The generally improved weather conditions, particularly the long rains which in 1981 came on time, accompanied by increased producer prices resulted in a strong recovery in output from the agricultural sector. Maize deliveries to the produce board more than doubled from 217,887 tonnes in 1980 to 472,909 tonnes in 1981 and the value of such sales rose from £10.4 million to £23.6 million. Total maize production is estimated to have increased by 15 per cent in 1981.

In 1981, 90,746 tonnes of coffee were delivered to the coffee marketing board as compared to 91,334 tonnes delivered in 1980. Gross farm income to growers dropped from £119 million in 1980 to £102.5 million in 1981 due to lower prices. Tea deliveries in 1981 improved slightly to 90,941 tonnes as compared to 89,893 tonnes in 1980, as a result of good rainfall in the tea growing areas. The price of tea at auctions so far in 1982 has been higher as a result of the devaluation of the Kenya shilling and higher real demand.

Deliveries of sugarcane for manufacture of sugar and jaggery are thought to have improved slightly in 1981 as compared to the nearly 4 million tonnes delivered in 1980. Total wheat deliveries during 1981 are expected to have fallen below 1980 level by about 13 per cent from 215,674 to 188,000 tonnes. Total sisal production declined by 13.4 per cent from 46,910 tonnes in 1980 to 40,615 tonnes in 1981 while income to growers fell from £9.7 million to £7.9 million. Deliveries of pyrethrum flowers improved in 1981 rising by 46.5 per cent in January-June, 1981 compared to the same period of 1980. Total deliveries in 1981 are estimated at 14,000 tonnes compared to 12,337 tonnes delivered in 1980.

As a result of price increases in October, 1980 and also due to improved grazing resulting from good rains, deliveries of wholemilk to Kenya Co-operative Creameries increased from 187 million litres in 1980 to well over 200 million in 1981. Meat supplies from slaughtered beasts have been very good while the poultry industry had a glut of eggs.

The agricultural sector has once again shown its ability in 1981 to recover quickly from the periodic droughts experienced in Kenya. The recently announced increase in prices for food products together with higher prices for tea and coffee, plus the currency devaluation of September 1981 have set the scene in 1982 for a further rise in output.

• Manufacturing

In spite of adverse influences due to the stagnant world economy and its impact on Kenya's exports, the year 1981 has seen further growth in the output of domestic manufacturing industry. The value of sales rose by 22 per cent during the first nine months of 1981 compared to the same period in 1980. In volume terms, the output of manufacturing the first three-quarters of 1981 was 5 per cent higher than in the same period of 1980. Value of output for the whole of 1981 is also estimated to have risen by 5 per cent in real terms.

• Energy

Domestic sales of petroleum fuels declined by 10 per cent from 1,269,100 tonnes in the first nine months of 1980 to 1,141,000 tonnes in the same period of 1981. This decline in domestic sales obviously resulted from a less buoyant economy accompanied by further price increases. As a result throughput at the Mombasa Refinery also declined by 10 per cent. The quantity of crude oil and petroleum products imported has fallen significantly in 1981 even though the net cost to the country of its trade in petroleum and products is thought to have risen. In the first three quarters of 1981 domestic production of electricity showed a very satisfactory increase of 16 per cent while consumption rose by 9 per cent.

• Building and Construction

The major indicators of overall activity in the building and construction industry are cement consumption and employment. For cement, and these figures are still subject to adjustment, total domestic consumption in the first nine months of 1981 appears to have been about 500,000 tonnes or 5 per cent below the total for the same period of 1980.

Provisional employment figures indicate that in 1981, there was a reduction below the estimated total of 63,300 in wage employment in the construction industry in 1980.

In the building sector, in the first nine months of 1981 reported completions of buildings in Nairobi and in Mombasa were valued in total at £14.7 million compared with £15.2 million in the same period of 1980. In the case of building plans passed in the nine months to September 1981, those for Nairobi and Mombasa together totalled £73.5 million or 3 per cent higher than in the same period in 1980. However, despite this rise in the value of building plans, the volume of work represented would have been 10 per cent less than in the same period of 1980 as building costs were over 14 per cent higher. This reinforces the view that the building component of the construction industry has moved into recession.

• Transport

In the transport sector during 1981, activity measured in volume terms was generally lower than in 1980. The throughput of the Kenya Pipeline Company declined by 3.4 per cent in comparison with 1980. The Kenya Railways Corporation carried 1.2 per cent fewer tonnes of freight, although revenues were 32.2 per cent higher due to new tariff rates.

Goods landed and loaded at Mombasa Port increased by 1.2 per cent during the first eight months in 1981 compared with the same period in 1980. The increase was due to a rise of 21.1 per cent in the volume of goods loaded accompanied by a decline of 3.2 per cent in the volume of goods unloaded. The number of passengers passing through both Nairobi and Mombasa international airport declined by 7.6 per cent, from 1,959,500 in 1980 to 1,800,700 in 1981. The number of new cars registered also declined from 23,234 in 1980 to 18,000 in 1981.

• Tourism

Touring in Kenya continued to be affected by recessionary global conditions. In the period January to October, 1981 a total of 3,869,000 bednights were occupied compared to 3,885,000 hotel bednights occupied in the same period of 1980. Since hotel capacity increased, there was a drop of one per cent in the occupancy rate.

European visitors continued to be the main customers of hotels in Kenya. Visitors from other African countries showed some increase, helped by Kenya hosting the OAU conference. Visitors from North America, Scandinavia, and Asia have continued to decline.

Information of visitor arrivals and departures is available for the period January to August, 1981. There were declines in holiday and transit visitors. There was 2 per cent decline in the number of departing visitors in the first eight months of 1981. Business visitors showed a rise from 21,043 to 25,885.

Outlook for 1982

The international economic scene is still dominated by the results of policy actions taken earlier to bring down the rate of inflation. Unemployment is still high and increasing while control of money supply has led to high interest rates. Under the circumstances, developing countries are not likely to benefit from the impact of increased economic activity in advanced countries until possibly towards the end of 1982.

Kenya's prospects for higher economic growth in 1982 are closely tied to these international events. Overall economic performances should be similar to that experienced in 1981. However, the inflation rate will be higher than in the recent past so that GDP at current prices could exceed 20 per cent and yet be below 4 per cent at constant prices. ■

CSO: 4700/942

MOI HITS OUT AT ODINGA

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 19 Feb 82 pp 1, 28

[Text]

PRESIDENT Moi last night hit out at Jaramogi Oginga Odinga for having dwelt on the country's economic situation during the recent Organisation of African Unity (OAU) mini-summit in Nairobi.

The President wondered why Odinga had held a press conference while Kenya was host to foreign dignitaries.

He said although Kenya was a democratic country, Odinga's utterances were deplorable and he wondered whether Odinga wanted to campaign for votes in foreign countries.

"If we cannot succeed in local campaigns how can we succeed in foreign campagins?" asked the President.

The President also criticised Mr. Odinga for having claimed that there were politicians languishing in prison and detention and wondered who were the detainees.

The President, who was flanked by Vice-President Mwai Kibaki, said he had no ill-feeling towards anybody.

He called on Kenyans to live peacefully, guided by the principles of the Nyayo philosophy.

He pointed out that no country could ignore unity, adding that unity was a prerequisite to prosperity.

The President also lashed out at a few disgruntled politicians and some civil servants whom he said were waging a slanderous campaign designed to make him unpopular among wananchi.

President Moi, who was speaking to a group of musicians and dramatists who called to entertain him at State House, Nairobi, narrated how such people were going round the country spreading malicious rumours and distorting some of his directives to discredit him.

The President said that recently, some people had gone into peoples' homes, pulled down and broke the late President Kenyatta's portraits claiming this was presidential directive.

"How can I direct people to remove the portraits of Mzee Kenyatta whom I served for many years?" asked the President.

President Moi said he still displayed Mzee Kenyatta's portaits in his house and offices. And he wondered how he could continue to retain Mzee Kenyatta's pictures if he disliked the late President as the rumour-mongers were alleging. He called on the rumour-mongers to stop smear campaign forthwith.

"People who are making such unfounded allegations are out to make me unpopular", he said and added, "when you see them you should realise that they are anti-Nyayo".

The President said he was always happy to see the late President Kenyatta's portrait displayed together with his own.

President Moi also related how certain people had distorted his directive on curbing indiscriminate felling of trees to preserve forests.

He said that after issuing the directive, the same group of people, whom he described as the prophets of doom, went round claiming that his intention in making the directive was to chase forest workers away from the forests.

President Moi said there were disgruntled elements in the country who could not be satisfied whatever one gave them, their aim was to cause dispondency.

He said civil servants were the main culprits in distorting his directives and asked "to whom do they owe their loyalty"?

Touching on the economic problems facing the country President Moi said these problems were worldwide. He said they had been caused by recession and added that they had also affected the industrialised countries.

The occasion was also attended by among others Ministers of State Mr. G.G. Kariuki and Nicholas Biwott, and the Minister for Culture and Social Services, Mr. Jeremiah Nyagah.

The group of the entertainers included Kamaru Band and the Kenya rhythm.

CSO: 4700/942

SUBTLE POWER SHIFTS WROUGHT BY RESHUFFLE

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 5 Mar 82 pp 4-5

[Text] A WEEK after the cabinet reshuffle it is still difficult to say what the long-term implications of the changes will be. One obvious observation which can be made is that the biggest winner in the reshuffle is Mr. Arthur Magugu who moved from the relatively low-level cabinet post of minister for health to the critical post of minister for finance. Given the trials and tribulations through which the Kenya economy has been going during the past two or three years, Magugu's new post will keep him in the public limelight for quite a while, and if his record in the ministry of health is something to go by, this is attention which Magugu will relish, though in finance there is not the same kind of opportunity for headline catching as Magugu enjoyed in health. He is unlikely, for instance, to make surprise visits to banking or financial institutions to ensure that they are being run cleanly, as he has done to hospitals in the past or to visit customs border posts to see whether goods are being smuggled through Kenya's borders without the usual customs duties being paid. But Magugu is aware that the public expects him to do something about the country's finances and economy in general; they expect him to rectify all those things which many Kenyans, particularly businessmen, say went wrong under Mr. Mwai Kibaki's stewardship of the ministry of finance. He will have to do something demonstrable to prove that he means business, and it is not unlikely that he may want to review seriously some of the projects which in the recent past have been at the centre of controversy — the most spectacular one being the Kisumu molasses plant.

Magugu will be doing this while at the same time trying to convince external aid organisations and potential investors that Kenya will pursue the same moderate economic policies which have been the hallmark of Kenya's economic performance since independence. For more than a decade now those policies in the eyes of the World Bank, the IMF and related bodies have been associated with Kibaki. It is inevitable that these bodies should for the time being adopt a position of wait-and-see, and Magugu will have to move fast to cultivate their confidence so as to ensure continuity in day-to-day relations between the ministry and aid and financial institutions abroad. Luckily the reshuffle has not affected the ministry's civil service and therefore continuity in relations between the ministry and the aid bodies at the technocratic level is assured.

As for Kibaki, he has lost finance and gained home affairs. From a point of view of responsibilities, this is clearly a step downwards, for even though the ministry of home affairs traditionally carries considerable clout in Kenya it has been reduced to very little over the years. Prisons, remand homes and approved schools — the key sections of the home affairs portfolio — simply do not have the same critical importance as finance. Kibaki, of course, remains vice-president of Kenya, and what he has lost on the one hand he may have gained on the other; being finance minister is a full-time job and to that extent it allowed Kibaki little time to devote to ordinary politics. In respect of Othaya politics (Kibaki is the MP for Othaya in Nyeri District) this did not make much of a difference; he was assured of re-election to parliament without opposition so long as he remained vice-president of Kenya. But in terms of national politics, it did make a big difference to Kibaki how much time he could devote to cultivating friends and allies among Kenya's political leaders, especially as a hedge against being dislodged from his elective position as vice-president of the ruling party, Kanu. Freed from the duties of the ministry of finance, Kibaki should now have time to devote to politics and make contingency plans for re-election as Kanu vice-president at the forthcoming national executive elections of the ruling party. During the last party elections, Kibaki easily defeated Mr. Jeremiah Nyagah for the vice-presidency of the party, but that was partly because of an ingenious election campaign strategy which ensured victory for a whole slate of people. There is no longer the same kind of cohesion among party strategists that existed at the last party election, and there may be a number of factions contending for posts in such a manner that no one faction can be guaranteed of a clean sweep. Kibaki will surely be spending some of the time that he now has on his hands trying to plug any loopholes that might cause him difficulty in his quest for re-election.

The other senior minister who appears to have lost out in the reshuffle is Mr. Charles Njonjo, minister for constitutional affairs. His former portfolio for home affairs went to Kibaki, but that loss is more than compensated for by the fact that added to his portfolio is the immigration department. Even the loss of the criminal investigations department of the police to the office of the president may be a blessing in disguise for Njonjo. In recent times some of the investigations and prosecutions which have resulted from CID work have been laid at the door of Njonjo. When those being investigated or prosecuted have been politicians, they have tended to accuse Njonjo of using his control of the CID to harass people he disagreed with politically. This was the case when late last year a number of back-bench MPs came under investigation by the CID for alleged false mileage claims to the national assembly. With the CID out of his control, such accusations will no longer be possible. A more important factor is Magugu's appointment. Magugu and Njonjo are close political allies, and the elevation of Magugu to the ministry of finance cannot but strengthen Njonjo's political clout which is impressive enough as it is.

The reshuffle has also affected the office of the president somewhat. Two former ministers of state — Mr. G.G. Kariuki and Mr. Nicholas Biwott — have been given their own separate ministries. Kariuki is now minister for lands, settlement and physical planning and Biwott is minister for regional development, science and technology. Observers are not sure whether these are upward or downward moves. Both ministries certainly carry enormous responsibilities. Land is still the most crucial factor in Kenya's development, and as we move into the technological era in Africa, science and technology will determine the pace and direction of Kenya's development. It is clear, then, that Kariuki and Biwott have their work cut out for them, but they are also losing something — the aura that goes with being minister of state in the office of the president, an aura first created by the late Mr. Mbiyu Koinange who served in that office for years under the late President Jomo Kenyatta. The public in Kenya came to see a minister of state as having a very special relationship with the president, and this view applied to Kariuki and Biwott as much as it applied to Koinange under Kenyatta — which is not to say that Kariuki and Biwott will no longer have a special relationship with President Moi, but they definitely will lose the aura which went with their former titles.

Kariuki's and Biwott's departure from the office of the president leaves Mr. James Gichuru as minister of state responsible for defence. The assistant ministers are also left unchanged. So are the permanent secretaries. It should be safe to assume that last week's reshuffle will strengthen the assistant ministers but more so the top permanent secretaries — the chief secretary, Mr. Jeremiah Kiereini, and the secretary for cabinet affairs, Mr. Simeon Nyachae.

As to the rest of the reshuffle, there has obviously been an effort on the part of the president to place the right man in the right job. As we mentioned in these columns last week, the president is still looking for a combination which would ensure efficiency in the workings of the government machinery. The wide nature of the reshuffle — at ministerial, assistant ministerial and permanent secretarial levels — clearly suggests that he has not been overly happy with government performance. It remains to be seen whether the current arrangement will do the trick.

The reshuffle added two assistant ministers to the already large number of assistant ministers. One was Mr. Eric Khasakhala (information and broadcasting) and the other Mr. Otieno Ambala's (culture and social services). Ambala's appointment is the more interesting one for it has clear political overtones. Until two years ago, Ambala was a staunch supporter of Mr. Oginga Odinga, a former vice-president of Kenya. Indeed, Ambala was married to one of Odinga's daughters though the marriage has since ended, and Ambala and Odinga no longer see eye to eye. Ambala has organised a number of delegations from Siaya to pledge loyalty to President Moi and his government at times when the president or the ruling party has been critical of Odinga. One such time was a few weeks after Odinga's abortive attempt to stand for election to the Bondo constituency seat which had been left vacant by the resignation of Mr. Hezekiah Ougo from parliament. Coming so soon after the president and the ruling party has taken Odinga to task for his recent virulent attack on government policies, Ambala's appointment may be meant to show Luo leaders that it pays to be loyal to the government. Ambala, however, has an up hill job ahead of him hanging on to his Gem parliamentary seat which he won in 1979 from the former minister for power and communications and Kanu national chairman, Mr. Isaack Omolo Okero. It is reported that Odinga is determined to campaign against Ambala during the next general election even if it means supporting Okero, with whom Odinga has been at loggerheads for years. Notwithstanding Mr. Stanley Oloitipitip's contention that Odinga is a dead horse in politics, Ambala cannot be relishing the thoughts of having to go into battle during the next general election with Odinga as his opponent by proxy. ■

CSO: 4700/942

SHIP IS ORDERED BACK TO PORT

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 19 Feb 82 p 1

[Text]

POLICE and Central Bank officials have launched investigations into suspected smuggled cargo of a Djibouti-bound ship which left Mombasa yesterday.

The vessel, m.v. Barrister was recalled half an hour after leaving the port of Mombasa on Wednesday evening when Customs officials grew suspicious of its cargo export papers.

Customs officials had the ship's cargo of simsim worth 325,000/- offloaded. The chargo's export documents are being scrutinised by police and Central Bank officials.

The deputy managing director of the Kenya Ports Authority, Mr. Joshua Kegode, confirming the incident, said three containers were offloaded when the vessel returned to port.

A spokesman for MacKenzie Maritime Ltd., agents of m.v. Barrister, said the ship sailed off on Wednesday at about 10 a.m. after she had loaded the cargo.

"We had no reason whatsoever to suspect anything. The ship started on her voyage to UK via Djibouti," he said.

The spokesman said that the ship received instructions from the pilot station to return to port, half an hour after the harbour pilot had disembarked.

She returned to port following the instruction and anchored at Kilindini. The vessel was finally allowed to sail yesterday.

He confirmed that three containers off-loaded from the ship contained cargo destined for Djibouti.

CSO: 4700/942

POLICE CORRUPTION SAID TO BE RIFE

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 17 Feb 82 p 6

[Editorial: "The Wrong Arm of the Law..."]

[Text]

THERE is a bad joke about an off-duty policeman who had no money to buy supper for his family one evening.

According to the joke, the policeman asked his wife to place on the stove water for making ugali. He then put on his uniform, grabbed a spotlight and went to the road.

The policeman flagged down several passing motorists and randomly inspected their vehicles. He returned home with a packet of maize meal, a half kilo of meat, a loaf of bread, tea leaves, and a packet of milk and some sugar — all before the water at home had started to boil.

That such a joke should be told about Kenya's police force is bad enough. But that it should even sound plausible shows what a bad name the police force generally has been given by a handful of its members who demand or accept bribes from the public.

Corruption in the force is mainly perpetrated by indisciplined junior policemen, but it has seriously tarnished the image of the entire force and embarrassed the more conscientious senior officers.

Some members of the police traffic department are especially most vulnerable to this kind of corruption. There are thousands of Kenyans to bear witness to this.

Traffic policemen patrol the city streets and other major urban centres, usually in pairs, flagging down vehicles for random inspection.

The main purpose of deploying these policemen on the streets of our towns and highways is to ensure that drivers observe traffic regulations, that the machines driven on our roads and streets are roadworthy and that they are properly licensed and insured.

There are many occasions, however, when some of these policemen turn this exercise into a personal financial operation by obtaining money from errant drivers and vehicle owners to overlook violation of traffic regulations.

The matatus have become a gold mine for most of these unscrupulous policemen. As a result, heavily overloaded and badly serviced matatus can be seen overspeeding all over the country in total disregard of other road users, often causing considerable loss to life.

Many private motorists found driving cars with minor defects such as a malfunctioning indicator light, will testify to having been harassed by traffic policemen who wanted bribes. Such harassment usually takes the form of rude questioning.

Policemen have even been known to get into such cars and to be driven around as they discuss the bribe.

To save themselves the bother, most motorists give in to the policemen.

There are, of course, some members of the public who of their own volition, bribe the police. But the police in these cases have acquired a reputation for accepting the bribes instead of bringing their bribers to book.

In spite of numerous warnings by President Moi, Police Commissioner Ben Gethi and other senior Government officials, corruption continues.

It is in recognition of this that Mr. Gethi has decided to reorganise the Traffic Police Department. Mr. Gethi is understood to have ordered that traffic policemen may only stop cars for random inspection under the command of a senior police officer not below the rank of inspector.

The new directive is intended to curb the abuse of power by unscrupulous junior officers and to also spare motorists unnecessary harassment. It is out hope that it will also go a long way to curb corruption in the Traffic Police Department and improve the image of our police force.

CSO: 4700/942

ARGENTINA PLANS TO USE KENYA AS TRADE HUB

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 18 Mar 82 p 20

[Text]

ARGENTINA plans to promote trade with East Africa using Kenya as a hub, Argentine Minister of International Trade, Dr. Alfredo Esposito, said yesterday.

Dr. Esposito told a news conference that Argentina has granted the Central Bank of Kenya a $15 million credit line at a 7.5 per cent interest rate over 8½ years.

He described current trade between the two countries as "negligible" and said he hopes a trade agreement will be signed this year.

The Minister said the Argentine Government decided two months ago to identify ways to improve trade and co-operation with Kenya, which sparked his current visit. We are aware of the importance of Kenya as a hub in East Africa, he said.

Explaining that "communications in the past were very poor", between Kenya and Argentina, Dr. Esposito said he hopes his trip will promote export-oriented joint ventures in the agricultural area. "We think maybe we can export equipment and machinery to Kenya," he added.

Kenya's Industry Minister Munyua Waiyaki told Dr. Esposito yesterday that the Kenya Government would encourage rural industrialisation by continuing supporting individuals and groups, especially for rural projects.

CSO: 4700/942

CITY POLICE BOSS HELD ON THEFT CHARGE

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 19 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Andrew Kuria]

[Text]

A SENIOR police officer was yesterday charged with wrongfully confining a man, stealing 2,000/- from him and defeating the ends of justice.

Elijah Murmet ole Sakaja, senior superintendent of police commanding Central Police Station, Nairobi, denied the charges before chief magistrate Fidahussein Abdullah.

Ole Sakaja had earlier been suspended by the Commissioner of Police, Senior State Counsel Sureta Chana told the court. Defence counsel H.P. Makhecha applied for bail, but Mrs. Chana opposed the application. She said ole Sakaja was to have appeared in court 24 days ago but he "absconded" when he was told by another officer that he was required to appear in court.

Sakaja was accused that, on November 17 in the Industrial Are Nairobi, jointly with another not in court, he conspired to falsely accuse Charles Kirigo Ndungu of possessing a leopard skin contrary to the Wildlife Conservation and Management Act.

Ole Sakaja also wrongfully confined Ndungu and stole 2,000/- from him, according to the charge sheet. Mrs. Chana said 29 prosecution witnesses would be called and the hearing would last for about six days.

Mrs. Chana, opposing bail, said ole Sakaja might abscond.

The court heard from Mrs. Chana that Sakaja had informed Snr. Supt. Wambua that he was going to hospital. "But Sakaja was not heard of until this morning when he went to the Nairobi Area Police headquarters and somebody at the Headquarters telephoned Snr. Supt. Wambua telling him Sakaja was there," said the Senior State Counsel. She said Sakaja had then been collected from the headquarters and escorted to court.

"The search for Sakaja for the 24 days showed that he was not in any hospital nor in his house in Nairobi. If he absconded for 24 days, he might do the same."

In applying for bail Sakaja said he had been interdicted since January 14. He said that on January 25 he was in the High Court giving evidence in a case. He claimed Snr. Supt. Wambua did not tell him he wanted to take him to court and that he (Sakaja) had left for Kajiado thereafter and later to Mombasa to see a sick friend. He returned to Nairobi seven days later, the court heard.

Mr. Abdullah ordered Sakaja to be released on a bond of 200,000/- with two sureties of the same amount. Sakaja was further ordered to deposit his passport with the court and ordered to report to CID headquarters every Monday and Thursday.

The case will be mentioned today for the fixing of a hearing date.

CSO: 4700/942

'KNA' ACCUSED OF NEWS 'BLACKOUT'

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 20 Feb 82 p 20

[Text]

THE information office in Nakuru and Kenya News Agency editors in Nairobi yesterday drew sharp criticism from three MPs in Nakuru District for "deliberately giving certain leaders a news blackout".

"We wanted to go on record that the information office and editors have many shortcomings and we are not satisfied with the services they are giving," the MPs said.

The criticism was handed out by an Assistant Minister for Basic Education, Mr. J.K. Wagara, Nakuru North MP Koigi wa Wamwere and Nakuru West MP Njenga Mungai during a day-long leaders conference chaired by the Nakuru DC Ben Ogol.

The MPs claimed that during various public functions in the district, the KNA reporters and TV cameramen have been leaving certain politicians out of the picture. "When we ask why we have been left out, the information officers usually refer us to the editors in Information House or Voice of Kenya, Nairobi," said Mr. Mungai.

He warned that if the trend continued, it could "bring clashes between leaders" and asked the DC to intervene. He said he and his colleagues may take up the issue in Parliament. "It is our right to be seen to represent our people since our constituents may have the impression that we do not attend meetings," said Mr. Mungai.

Mr. Wamwere said in the meeting, also attended by an Assistant Labour Minister, Mark Mwithaga, Nakuru Mayor D.K. Kanyi, the Chairman of Nakuru County Council, Coun. William Leitich, that he had been a "victim of this scheme" for a long time. "It is very wrong for us to be left out in Press coverage because of political reasons," said Mr. Wamwere.

The MP noted that freedom of expression in the country gave newspapers leeway to decide on news coverage but added that this did not apply to the radio and television since they were paid for by taxpayers.

He asked reporters and editors to exercise fairness in their work and to "stop playing games", adding that this was not the time of campaigns.

But the DC told the MPs that information officers and editors were doing a good job.

CSO: 4700/942

ILLEGAL STAY SENDS SOMALI TO PRISON

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 18 Feb 82 p 3

[Text]

A SOMALI national who entered Kenya armed with a pistol has been sentenced to eight years' jail by Wajir magistrate Nicolas Mberia.

Barut Abdi Bharat pleaded "guilty" to three counts of having a firearm and ammunition without certificate. He also faced another count of unlawful entry into Kenya.

Prosecuting, Inspector Wanjohi said that on December 16 the accused tried to enter Kharo-Frar administration centre but was noticed by the policeman on duty. He tried to run away but was caught after a short chase.

The court heard that Bharat was searched and found with a Russian-made pistol and twelve rounds of ammunition for which he had no certificate.

On interrogation, the accused admitted he was a Somali but could not produce an entry permit from the Immigration Department.

Insp. Wanjohi called for a deterrent sentence saying that North-Eastern Province was a restricted area where possession of firearms was a serious offence.

He said Bharat's motive in entering the administration camp at night raised much suspicion.

"Had it not been for the alert policeman, the accused might have done harm to people in the camp," he said.

In mitigation, Bharat denied being a shifta and told the court he was an employee of the Somali Government. He had come to Kenya to visit his father, he said, and pleaded with the court to allow him to return to Somalia.

Passing sentence, Mr. Mberia agreed with the prosecution that the time the accused was arrested was dangerous as he was caught at night with a gun.

He said Bharat being a Somali and an employee of the Somali Government "would not have sneaked into Kenya but would have applied for proper immigration documents to visit the country".

Mr. Mberia added that the court has a duty to help the Government in dealing with the illegal possession of firearms in the area by meting out deterrent sentences.

He sent Bharat to jail for four years for each of the two counts, both sentences to run concurrently. He also ordered that the accused be repatriated to Somalia on completing the sentences.

The firearm and the ammunition were forfeited to the Government.

—KNA

CSO: 4700/942

LAND SCRAMBLE PITS AGRICULTURE VS. FORESTRY

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 19 Feb 82 pp 14-15

[Article by Daniel Mbao]

[Text] SINCE late last year and early this year, hardly a week has goneby without an accusing finger being pointed at the foresters or the squatters for the mess in forest industry.

To many of us the mess is obscure except for occasional charges of foresters with corruption and quitting orders issued to squatters.

The plight of squatters from the forest areas as a result of marching orders issued either by the forest authorities or the administration has started in the western part of the country.

Many of us thought everything was going on all right in the forest industry until recently when there was a flare-up between the Nandis and the Luhyas.

The President who personally went to the area to quell the warring tribes was touched by the serious injuries squatters had inflicted on the forest in the district.

He took time off to direct the authorities in attendance to see to it that the squatters quit the forest areas presumably to stop any more annihilation of forest trees.

The directive too, seems to have sent a cold chill up the spines of those entrusted with preservation and creation of forests.

The officer-in-charge of Kakamega forest department is reported to have issued quit notices to squatters in Bunyala, Malava, Shikusa, KFA, Kisaina, Khapse, Allo and Kibirik forests. An assistant chief from the same district was also reported to have given similar orders to squatters living in forests in his sub-location.

This seems to be the beginning of a road and many more orders are expected to follow suit if the Government was to check depletion of forest and tree resources through uncontrolled felling of trees.

The scramble of land for agriculture purposes in the forest areas goes back to the early stages of the century when the forest department lowly paid workers who were residing in the forest stations were free to subsidise their meagre earnings by growing food crops in cleared areas before tree seedlings were planted.

All the time, a forester was required to allocate to employees under him an amount of land which was equivalent to the one he was supposed to plant with trees within one year.

Cultivation of food crops lasted for three years, two years before the planting of young trees and one year after the seedlings were put in the ground.

While determining areas to give out for cultivation, the forester had to use guidelines which were laid down by his department. These guidelines required foresters not to allow cultivation on steep slopes or where the growing of the crops could interfere with water sheds or 60.6 metres from the river bed.

Except for the areas ruled out for farming, the others would be fully exploited before demarcation was carried out.

In the remote mountanous parts, pitsawing which is done by hand would be instituted while in the lower regions licensed sawmillers would be engaged.

Any other trees which were not passed fit for timber were used as fencing posts with the remains being burned for fuel (charcoal).

According to reports, the cultivation was controlled and was not in any way interfering with forestry development until recently when conditions of acquiring land for cultivation were reversed.

It all began with all former casual labourers in the forest stations being employed on permanent basis and distributed to various sections of the department as workspaid and subordinate staff.

As a follow up, a ruling was made at Ministry Headquarters that cultivation in the forests could now be allowed to any one whether employed or not provided he was licensed and was capable of paying rent equivalent to the number of hectares he wanted to put under crop.

Disharmonised

The ruling not only disharmonised the quiet live the forest station labour hands used to enjoy but invited the landless and the well-to-do into farming in the natural grasslands and treelands in the forest.

Senior Government officers and politicians found their way into wheat-growing areas around Molo, Elburgon, Kericho and Mt. Kenya. Others took to Kakamega forests which are highly rated for sugarcane plantations.

Due to seniority of the group, licesing was no longer entrusted on the foresters but on officers in the top cadres at the ministerial headquarters.

The field officers up to the level of divisional forest officers (in charge of a number of foresters), who failed to tow the line of their bosses were transferred to remote areas after being accused of various unfounded shortcomings.

The officers who opted to bow to the wishes of their superiors were assured of staying in one station or division for years or even promoted to higher ranks but still going back to their old stations.

An easy way of telling the field officers who are aligned to the headquarters is to ask an officer in affected areas the length of time he has been in one station and if the answer is more than three years then you will know there is some connection.

As if that group was not big enough to hamper development of the forestry industry, there came another one of former squatters in the "White Highlands".

This second lot did not need to consult anyone but entered into the bushlands in the forest, pegged in their living structures and started clearing anything on sight to give room for cultivation.

As some forests have big areas, the group would go right inside the uninhabitable areas and according to reports: "Within a short time they have established themselves". Thereafter they would call others and exercise the powers of a landlord in the forest area.

In the course of time and in the absence of family planning knowledge, the population of the squatters has swollen to such great heights that even the foresters cannot go anywhere near them. Some politicians, administrative officers and heads from the forest headquarters have formed a protective shell around them.

Any attempts by foresters to have the squatters removed are met with a transfer or with the reasoning: "Let them stay on until an alternative place is found to settle them."

It is no wonder that Western Province was the first one to be affected by the Presidential eviction order of squatters to leave Nandi District forests. A highly placed officer at the forest headquarters was said to have shielded squatters in Western Province forests from being kicked out.

Another group of squatters is said to have been settled at the slopes of Mt. Kenya so as to put through a candidate during the 1979 parliamentary elections.

A very senior officer in the personnel section of the Ministry is reported to have ordered many hectares of land to be dished out to landless from Meru District to help a candidate win the last general elections. Other stretches of land were also authorised to be allocated to some highly placed officers.

Information

When the information leaked, the personnel officer parched up all trails leading to his guilt and further to that relinquished the forester on the ground of his duties reportedly "without even giving him a chance to defend himself".

In all these cases of legal or illegal trespass to public land, the most uncompromising thing about them is that they are all against the Government's policy of preserving the existing forests and creation of new ones by planting more trees.

It is inconceivable that when the Government is spending millions of shillings on development of forests, some individuals, squatters included, were bent on either destroying trees or blocking the way for extension.

The seriousness of the conflict between agricultural land and for forestry is pointed out in the current five-year Development Plan which comes to an end in 1983.

The plan notes that the encroachment of agricultural settlement onto forest land is a problem which is assuming major proportions. It adds that forest and tree resources have been depleted through uncontrolled felling of trees for charcoal burning and building materials.

The plan further blames mismanagement of the saw industry for the inefficiency and wasteful exploitation of scarce forestry resources.

The guide book in recognition of the need to curb more strangulation of the forests for the purposes of cultivation had recommended early formation of a National Lands Commission to review the situation.

It further advanced that the National Lands Commission would be expected to seek a consensus from a nation-wide range of expertise, interests and opinions as the only way to solve the conflict between the demands for land for agriculture use and for forestry.

In the absence of the lands commission or in its dormancy, the conflict has outgrown its limits in Western Province and upper parts of the Rift Valley Province sending out in the cold squatters who have lived in the forest lands, some of them most of their lives.

No doubt that the situation in the forests in other areas of the country is better or worse than in Kakamega and Nandi forests but it is a question of time before the areas are affected by the eviction orders not only for the sake of conserving soil and protecting water catchment areas but also for other by-products of trees.

CSO: 4700/942

ROAD PROJECT GIVEN SH. 81M.

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 19 Feb 82 p 3

[Text]

THE Kenya-Sudan road, linking Lodwar in north-western Kenya and Juba in southern Sudan, is to get a Norwegian assistance of Sh. 81 million.

Vice-President Mwai Kibaki, Sudanese Ambassador Yousif Mukhtar Yousif, and Norwegian Charge d'Affaires in Nairobi, Arman Aardal yesterday signed the aid agreement on behalf of their respective governments.

Mr. Kibaki said the Norwegian assistance was important in that it would help the two neighbouring countries improve communications between them.

The road covers a distance of 574.7 km. of which 244.2 km. are in Kenya and 330.5 km. in Sudan.

On completion the road will give Juba an easy access to Mombasa port, and improve trade flow between the two countries.

It is estimated that the entire road would cost Sh. 1,290 million, with just about Sh. 500 million being spent on Kenyan section and the remainder in the Sudanese sector.

Thanking the Norwegian Government for the gesture, the Vice-President appealed to friendly countries to assist Kenya and the Sudan to construct and complete the 574.7 km. road.

Mr. Kibaki said the completion of the road will not only make easier the movement of the peoples of Kenya and the Sudan but that trade between the two sister states will be facilitated, KNA adds.

"The Kenya/Sudan road link will also promote tourism and cultural contacts between the peoples of Kenya and the Sudan. It will also form an important part of the long awaited Trans-African Highway," he said.

Thanking the Norwegian Government on behalf of his government, the Sudanese Ambassador said Norway had made the long awaited dream a reality.

● Turkana District will benefit from a grant of Sh. 12 million from the Norwegian Agency for International Development (NORAD) in 1982/83 fiscal years.

During a two-day meeting held in the District Officer's office in Lodwar between Norad and Government officials and chaired by the Turkana District Officer, Mr. Peter Onyango Abwao, the Norwegian officials promised to step up aid in a bid to develop Turkana.

CSO: 4700/942

KENYA, NIGERIA IN OIL DEAL

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 20 Feb 82 p 5

[Text]

KENYA might soon purchase its oil requirements from Nigeria, if negotiations between the two countries succeed, Nigerian High Commissioner to Kenya, Mr. Nuhu Mohamed disclosed yesterday.

Mr. Mohamed, currently on an extensive tour of the Coast Province, told Mombasa Mayor Rajab Sumba that the Federal Government had agreed in principle to sell oil to Kenya.

The envoy who had called on the mayor, said terms for sale were being worked out and the deal might take time to materialise.

He said President Shehu Shagari of Nigeria had directed that arrangements be made to sell oil to Kenya through the Nigerian Oil Corporation.

"We would be able to sell Kenya some percentage of oil we buy from oil companies dealing and marketing Nigerian crude," added the envoy.

He said some of the percentage is used for local consumption, while the rest is available for sale to Kenya and other countries.

Some of the technicalities involved in the deal are that the East African Refinery in Mombasa cannot refine light crude from Nigerian oil wells.

Other factors to be considered are transportation of crude and its marketing.

Mayor Sumba welcomed the envoy's visit to the Coast as it could strengthen ties existing between the two countries.

Earlier, the envoy who was accompanied by the Mombasa District Commissioner Mr. Moffat Kamau Mugwe called on the Coast Provincial Commissioner, Mr. Luka Daudi Galgalo.

He told the PC that during his visit he would mainly be interested in visiting rural industries.

"It would be futile for an envoy not to know the country he is accredited to, and this can only be achieved through touring rural areas," added Mr. Mohamed.

The PC told the envoy that Coast people had great joy in welcoming envoys from African countries with which Kenyans shared common problems and experiences.

"We can learn more from each other by sharing our views and experiences," he added.

During his tour of the province, Mr. Mohamed will visit the Bamburi Portland Cement Factory, Kilindini Port, Kilifi and Lamu districts.

CSO: 4700/942

GOVERNMENT POLICY SAID TO HURT SUGAR GROWERS

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 18 Feb 82 p 6

[Editorial: "A Bitter Setback for Sugar Growers"]

[Text]

THE development of the sugar industry in Kenya since independence is a sweet story of great success. But it is now threatening to go sour. The industry is in a mess. Production is on a downward trend and urgent action is needed to save the situation.

At the time of independence, Kenya imported 70 per cent of all the sugar consumed in the country, half from Uganda. In one of the most determined efforts towards self-sufficiency, the country invested more than Sh. 4 billion in 15 years to expand the industry. And in 1979 sugar production for the first time outstripped consumption with a surplus of 40,000 tonnes for export.

Although production has remained ahead of consumption since then the trend is beginning to change and the industry's future prosperity is threatened. It is important to examine some of the factors that have contributed to this and how the situation can be saved.

First are two factors whose effects are, we hope, short-term — the dry spells of the past two seasons which were preceeded by the over-production of 1979, and the frequent fires last year which caused extensive damage to several hundred thousand tonnes of uncrushed cane.

Then there are the more serious long-term effects on the industry. These include the cane pricing system, costs of production, inadequate crushing capacity and lack of land utilisation policy.

Despite increased production the producer prices of sugar remained unreviewed from 1977 to 1980. In 1980, the prices payable to farmers for uncrushed cane was raised from Sh. 133 per tonne to Sh. 150 and again in 1981 to Sh. 170. This represented a total increase of about 30 per cent since 1977.

Over the same period, the costs of transportation from growing areas to the factories, prices of pesticides and other inputs, as well as land preparation charges went up by about 100 per cent.

This obviously discouraged many farmers from producing more cane.

The effects of the inadequate payments were aggravated by the lack of sufficient crushing facilities. Following the 1979 sugar production boom, the existing sugar mills were unable to handle the amount of cane from the outgrowers after taking in supplies from the factory-owned plantations. As a result, most outgrowers had nowhere to take much of their cane and it was left to rot in the fields.

Tied up with the cane-pricing system and the operations of the factories is another problem involving payments to farmers. Not only are these often long delayed, but deductions made are often unrealistic.

Take the case of Mumias sugar growers. In 1980, the farmers were reported to have earned Sh. 62.2 million for one million tonnes of cane. The price of cane at the time was Sh. 133 a tonne. It is clear from these figures that farmers in the area earned only Sh. 62/20 per tonne of their cane; half the official price.

Studies by experts strongly suggest that the sugar industry has little chance of surviving and expanding under the present structure where large factories control all the cane crushing facilities with the outgrowers at their mercy. Strong recommendations have been made for the establishment of mini-sugar factories, or jaggeries, in the sugar belt.

The rationale behind this is that such mini factories would not only handle all the surplus cane that the existing factories cannot process, but they would cut down the transportation costs incurred by farmers since they are cheap and can be constructed in the out-growing areas farthest from the factories. The Government, however, has not been enthusiastic about this. Neither have the large sugar factories, for obvious reasons.

We, however, feel that these suggestions, as well as a more realistic pricing system, should be given serious consideration if the sugar industry is to be saved from collapsing.

Along with this should be an examination of the possibility of officially setting out the amount of acreage to be planted with sugar cane each year to avoid over-production which discourages farmers.

CSO: 4700/942

BRIEFS

1,900 CO-OPS IN KENYA--The general manager of the Kenya National Federation of Co-operatives, Mr J.J. Musundi, said yesterday that there were over 3,000 registered co-operative societies in Kenya, out of which 1,900 are active. Mr Musundi was addressing a group of delegates from 14 countries who are attending a course on trade promotions and marketing research in Nairobi. The delegates were touring the KNFC and the Kenya Planters Co-operative Union. He also said that there were over 1.2 million individual members of the co-ops. [Text] [Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 20 Feb 82 p 3]

ECONOMIC PACT WITH ARGENTINA--Commerce Minister Eliud Mwamunga and the Argentinian Minister for International Trade, Dr Alfredo Esposito signed a communique yesterday on trade and economic co-operation between the two countries. The two countries are also expected to sign a trade agreement in the near future. The communique contains a Sh. 150 million line of credit Argentina has extended to Kenya to stimulate trade between them. Kenya would use the money to import machinery and other industrial equipment from Argentina. Argentina also offered to train Kenyans in various fields of industrial technology. [Text] [Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 17 Feb 82 p 28]

NGONG SWOOP NETS 120--A joint police and administration swoop resulted in rounding up of 120 persons in Ngong Town. Forty-three of them were rounded up during a dawn swoop. They were to appear in Kibera court yesterday on different charges. The operation commanded by the Kajiado superintendent, Elias Makokha, was made in the wake of recent public outcry about increasing incidents of thuggery in the area. Among those arrested were some aliens, alleged chang'aa brewers and other suspects. An Assistant Minister in the Office of the President and Kajiado North MP, Mr John Keen, had warned recently that tough action would be taken against thugs terrorising wananchi in Ngong Division. Ngong councillors had also voiced concern over the increasing number of such incidents.--KNA [Text] [Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 17 Feb 82 p 3]

CSO: 4700/942

HOTEL RESPONDS TO COMPLAINT OF FAVORING COOPERANTS

Maputo DOMINGO in Portuguese 21 Feb 82 p 28

[Article by manager Joaquim Dai: "Serving Only the Cooperants?--The Rovuma Hotel Responds"]

[Excerpts] As the public at large certainly must know, the civil service dining room used to be rather recently where the Rovuma Hotel is located now.

The workers who come to the hotel to eat there are received and served in keeping with the possibilities and availabilities; the average number of patrons is about 900-1,000 per day.

To handle this situation, the hotel has arranged its dining rooms in the following form:

1. Private dining rooms for guests;

2. Dining room for walk-in diners.

The private dining rooms for hotel guests during this phase no longer have the capacity that would enable them to keep up with the number of hotel guests; it was therefore necessary to use a portion of the general dining room (the dining room for walk-in diners) to accommodate the hotel guests although this does not impinge upon the rights which are reserved for them as hotel guests.

The beverage supply capacity at this moment is short of the hotel's requirements; consequently, beverages are served to walk-in diners only in keeping with what is available; however, even without beverages, the hotel continues to serve meals to those who request them.

For this hotel, there is no difference in the treatment of hotel guests, regardless of whether they are citizens or foreigners.

In its daily plan, the hotel guarantees the room, food, and beverage for hotel guests whereas walk-in diners are served in keeping with what is available.

This situation, when experienced by diners who do not try to find out just exactly what is going on from those in responsibility, can give rise to interpretations such as those of our reader Maria Das Dores to whom we would like to explain the situation as follows.

1. It is not true that the Rovuma Hotel serves beverages only to cooperants; as part of its daily plan, it distributes beverages throughout the dining rooms on the basis of what it has received.

2. As our reader mentioned, "Most of the patrons are workers who live far away or even outside the city." The Rovuma Hotel believes that it is its duty to serve them meals, thus giving them the minimum necessary support for restoring their strength for the second period of work--hence the reasonable prices which it charges and which the lady reader herself admitted in her letter.

3. Because the beverage supply situation has fallen short of the hotel's requirements and to improve understanding on the part of walk-in diners, the hotel took care to post next to the front desk a notice with the following content: "In this hotel, the fact that a meal is served does not necessarily mean that beverages will also be served."

4. The Rovuma Hotel accepts constructive criticisms and suggestions from its patrons and feels stimulated, regardless of whether this is done through the complaint register or through personal comments; however it would like to observe that reader Maria Das Dores did not have the intention of correctly availing herself of these rights and instead decided to send the letter to which we are now replying and which can in many ways confuse the public.

5. The Rovuma Hotel realizes that the arrival of cooperants is a necessity for the country's development, resulting from the profound study and knowledge of the shortage of specialists in the country among party and government leadership agencies.

Since Maria Das Dores included in her letter of criticism of the Rovuma Hotel the question as to the rights between cooperants and citizens--since in this hotel there are only hotel guests who are given equal treatment regardless of their origin or nationality--the hotel would like to announce that it is not up to it to clear up this question; at the same time it advises the reader to address such questions directly to the competent party in government agencies.

5058
CSO: 4742/235

GDR TRADE UNION OFFERS ASSISTANCE

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 27 Feb 82 p 3

> [Excerpt] "The Union of Consumer Cooperatives of the GDR will establish material bases with a view to training Mozambican cadres for the cooperative sector in medium-range and long-range terms," said Heinz Fahrenkrog, president of the Union of Consumer Cooperatives of that socialist country, on leaving Mozambique at the end of a visit he has just made.

Another aspect covered by that official has to do with the discovery of the growth of the cooperative movement in Mozambique, particularly in Maputo and Gaza.

Talking specifically about the cooperation agreement signed at the end of the conversations with the National Coordinating Commission for Consumer Cooperatives, he said that one of the areas in which cooperation will have an effect involves the training of cadres for the sector since the development of the cooperatives is currently hampered by the lack of supervisory personnel who could promptly handle the various problems.

From that viewpoint, medium-term and long-term training courses will be given at the International School of the Union of Consumer Cooperatives of the GDR with provisions for the training of 30 students in each course.

In addition to the training to be given in that country, the Union will support local training through the preparation of projects and training programs.

On the other hand, the GDR cooperative agency will support the construction of a personnel training center to be set up in Maputo; technicians from the Union are scheduled to arrive in Mozambique to support the finalization of programs dealing with the establishment and organization of that facility.

5058
CSO: 4742/235

GDR RAILROAD COOPERATION DESCRIBED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Mar 82 p 10

> [Text] The renovation of 70 km of track on the rail line linking Beira to Moatize will begin in June of this year, it was disclosed by engineer Ramiro Lopes, manager, CFM [Mozambique Railroad]-Center in an interview yesterday given to the Collective of Plan 82 of Radio Mozambique.

He said that this work will be done by an enterprise from the GDR together with CFM-Center. That enterprise already has a team in Beira which is drafting the project and preparing the work site.

The 70-km of track on the Beira--Moatize rail line are a part of the section between Dondo and Duerundi. The work will have to be completed in April 1983. According to the blueprints, two sections of track will be replaced throughout the entire track bed, requiring the placement of heavier track, new railroad ties, and ballast. In one-third of the section, the track will be realigned and alternate track will be laid to eliminate curves.

According to engineer Ramiro Lopes, the transportation capacity will be doubled by the time the line renewal project has been completed. Right now it has a capacity for handling seven trains and that will later be increased to 14.

The CFM-Center manager said that freight traffic will not be affected during the actual work, particularly the shipment of coal from the Moatize mines to the port of Beira. Crossing points are being built in the section and that will make it possible to keep the trains running in coordination with the working hours of the engineers assigned to the project.

Alluding to statements made, according to which the project is to be considered a rather ambitious one, engineer Ramiro Lopes said that he can see no reason for considering the project to be of such nature, although he did admit the existence of factors that can influence the project's completion deadline, such as the transportation of material and equipment.

The CFM-Center manager said that proposals have been submitted to increase the coal handling capacity at the terminal in the port of Beira; these proposals will be analyzed on a central level to determine the amount of the investments to be made.

5058
CSO: 4742/235

MAPUTO DENIES ZIMBABWE REPORT ON PIPELINE USE PRICE

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 2 Mar 82 p 5

[Text] Maputo, February 28--The oil pipeline between the Mozambican port of Beira and Zimbabwe should be ready to reopen shortly, following a third round of talks between Cabinet Ministers of the two countries.

Zimbabwean Energy Development Minister Simbi Makoni told reporters here on Saturday that his latest talks with Finance Minister Rui Baltazar and Ports and Surface Transport Minister Alcantara Santos would "make it possible to begin operation" and that the remaining technical requirements should be satisfied "in the shortest possible time."

Mr Makoni said the talks had concerned "the general conditions for operating the pipeline" and had not dealt with the financial question which, he said, was a matter for discussion between the Zimbabwean Government and Lonrho, the private company which owns the pipeline. However, the Minister said he did not expect the issue of tariffs to delay the reopening.

The Mozambican Transport Ministry, quoted by the local magazine Tempo, denied earlier this month Zimbabwean reports that the Maputo Government was asking for 30 dollars a ton for the use of the pipeline. The magazine said most of the delay was due to the fact that Lonrho, the British-based company that built the pipeline and would get most of the transport fees, was asking Zimbabwe for 24 dollars a ton.

Petrol, Diesel

The 300-kilometre-long (200 miles) steel line will pump refined petrol and diesel oil from Beira to the old Feruka refinery near the Zimbabwe border town of Umtali. The refinery will serve as a storage depot until a final decision has been taken on whether to renovate it for full operation, a job that has been estimated at more than 60 million dollars.

With a capacity of 1.2 million tonnes a year, the pipeline is expected to meet Zimbabwe's demand for motor fuel, and the reopening should end the severe shortage which has led to restrictions on motoring in the country since last September.

Mr Makoni said that all other petroleum products, such as aviation fuel, paraffin and lubricants, would be transported from Mozambican ports by railway.

The pipeline agreement is of great political importance to Mozambique and Zimbabwe, since both countries are eager to reduce the regional domination of the South African transport system. (A.F.P.)

CSO: 4700/940

BRIEFS

LAM-SWAZI AIRLINES COOPERATION--A Boeing 737 aircraft of LAM [Airlines of Mozambique] has been making flights for "Royal Air Swazi" since 22 February for a period of 3 weeks. The lease contract for this aircraft, which was signed within the context of SADCC [Conference for Development Coordination in Southern Africa] provides that the crew is to be initially completely Mozambican; in the meantime, however, a course has already been given in Maputo to cabin personnel from "Royal Air Swazi" who will be accompanied by an on-board assistant from LAM. Starting next May, an identical aircraft from LAM will put in about 100 monthly flying hours in the service of that neighboring country, as part of its regular service. This is why one can now see an LAM aircraft also displaying the name "Royal Air Swazi." This airline company is looking into the purchase of Boeing 737 aircraft which are ideal for the type of operations it performs; there are excellent possibilities for Mozambique, still of course within the context of SADCC, to make available its long experience in the fields of maintenance and professional training. LAM, which has very considerable maintenance facilities, at this moment are going through the most thorough strucutural examination and inspection which has ever been performed on an aircraft in Mozambique. The aircraft, which bears registration letters BAC, the only cargo aircraft we have, was practically dismantled for analysis and for the replacement of the main parts of its structure and it should once again be operational by the end of April. [Text] [Maputo DOMINGO in Portuguese 28 Feb 82 p 30] 5058

CSO: 4742/235

SPECULATION CENTERS ON WINDHOEK MAYORAL RACE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Mar 82 p 3

[Text]

SPECULATION is rife about who is to take the city's hot seat at the mayoral elections on Monday.

Mr Sammy Beukes, the sitting Mayor, has announced that he is not available for re-election. Sources close to the Municipality believe that the race is between Ds A G C Yssel and Mrs Joey Olivier with the possibility of a strong challenge from Mr Jack Levinson. Mr Günther Kaschik's name has also been mentioned.

The election is to beld at a special meeting of the City Council to be held directly after the ordinary meeting on Monday at 6 pm. At the special meeting, the outgoing Mayor will present a report which will be discussed.

There will also be elections for the Management Committee, the Deputy Mayor, the Chairman of the Management Committee, its Vice-Chairman and for the various committees of the City Council.

The term of office for the Mayor is one year, but re-election is possible. Mrs Olivier is at present Deputy Mayor and Chairperson of the Traffic and Environment Committees. She has been in the City Council since 1967, and has never been mayor.

Mr Levinson is the longest serving Councillor, and has been in the Council since September 1955. He was Mayor from 1963 to 1965, and is at present the Chairman of the Town Planning Committee.

Ds Yssel has been in the Council since 1970, and was Mayor between 1976 and 1978. He is at present a member of the Management Committee and Chairs the Katutura Advisory Board.

There will possibly be a caucus meeting on Monday afternoon to discuss who will be elected the new Mayor. All Councillors will be present.

CSO: 4700/941

BARNEY BARNES UNRAVELS COLOURED POLITICS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Mar 82 pp 6, 8

[WINDHOEK ADVERTISER Interview With Barney Barnes, time and place not given]

[Text]

WA: What role can Coloured politics play (a) in the immediate future and (b) in an independent SWA.

BB: The Coloured definitely has a role to fill. He is in the fortunate position that he has undergone an evolutionary political change and can now, through his experience, make a contribution to the day-to-day issues.

The Coloured is also in the privileged position that he has both Black and White blood running in his veins and as a result he can be a stabilising poltical factor between Black and White, especially in an independent SWA.

WA: Do you think the recent political changes require an election so that the people can air their views?

BB: I don't think it is necessary to dissolve a government and have an election every time a crisis arises. The whole débacle in Brown politics developed because the Opposition wanted to take advantage of an unimportant matter. It is not difficult to incite emotions, but solving problems is a different thing altogether. This whole affair was blown up by the press. The so-called 2 000 people who demanded my head, and who in fact numbered less than a third of the quoted figure, weren't dissatisfied with the political situation per se but about social issues, especially housing. In any case, my argument was that there were more than 15 000 people who did not demand my head, because in Khomasdal alone there are more than 17 000 people.

The Labour Party will continue on the course followed, namely to do the absolute maximum for the Brown people of SWA. Where the opposition have not been successful in bringing about change through the ballot box they are now trying to violate the process by trying to gain prestige through other ways and means. It was just a storm in a teacup . . . one of those things.

WA: Is there any light at the end of the dark accommodation tunnel?

BB: Although planning is still in the early stages, I will say that I do not agree with Nasboukor's solutions for the housing problem. To solve problems for the sake of a solution is not good enough.

The Brown Executive Committee could solve the problem overnight if only we could obtain funds but we are being handicapped because there isn't clarity about the division of funds for housing.

WA: Racial discrimination is supposed to be abolished but there are still matters such as work permits for Coloureds from SA while Whites don't need permits. How do you feel about this?

BB: This situation applies mainly to the Whites and the Coloureds, the other poulation groups are not really affected by it. Once again the ideal would be standard legislation for all the people of SWA. But because there wasn't legislation applying to Whites from SA working in SWA in the past, the question now arises whether the gates should be opened indiscriminately. What would happen if half of the people from Bonteheuwel arrived here tomorrow? That would definitely hold a threat for the Brown people of SWA. Therefore it is important that work opportunities for Black, Brown and White Southwesters should be protected – but I live for the day when the same legislation will apply to Whites.

In the meantime, however, it is important that there should be control and I don't see this as discrimination against the Coloured people from SA. It is merely a protective measure for the Coloureds of SWA.

WA: Last week, three ethnic groups requested the decomposition of the Ministers' Council and suggested that a more representative government body be created. How do you feel about this issue?

BB: It is the democratic right of any group to air its opinion and I grant them that but I don't feel a government can be dissolved without following the whole democratic process. I don't think there is any government in the world who can satisfy everybody. My modest opinion is that these groups should allow democracy to be followed to its logical conclusion if they are democratic, taking into consideration that the first tier was composed according to the results of the 1978 election.

WA: There have been indications of serious friction within the DTA over the past months. Do you think the DTA is still a factor in South West African politics?

BB: I am still convinced that the DTA is the only umbrella organisation that can beat Swapo in an election. I don't have any doubts about that. If there is talk about friction in the DTA, I can only say this: I would be a worried man if everyone in the DTA always agreed with everything. The fact that there are differences of opinion, and even friction, is only a way in which democracy is allowed to find solutions for problems in a responsible way. Up to now the DTA has succeeded in doing this.

WA: How would you feel about a similar alliance with Swapo, should this organisation come to power in SWA?

BB: I can never lead my party into an alliance with an organisation that shows indication of communism and Leninism in its leanings. This would be leading them from the frying pan into the fire. I don't think Swapo has a single answer for the solution of the political problems of SWA and I think Swapo will lead SWA into becoming yet another satellite state in Africa.

WA: Why are you actively involved in politics?

BB: My involvement in the politics of SWA stretches back a couple of years. I feel a peaceful solution has to be found for the Territory's problems and since politics can be instrumental in making this possible, I feel I can make a contribution. My greatest ideal is to contribute towards a bloodless settlement of the SWA situation.

WA: In the recent past your personal life was brought under focus. There were references to your work as circus organiser and prior to that there was a charge of alleged rape against you. How did this affect your public image?

BB: Any politician should know when he enters public life, that the Opposition will exploit every aspect of his personal life for cheap political propaganda and capital. I try to shy away from cheap and banal politics as far as possible because it cannot help to solve any problems.

I don't think a person's previous occupations can affect your present position at all. My approach has always been that work is honourable and besides, I gained the extinction of being the first non-White ever to organised the administration of a circus group.

With regard to the rape charge it is well known now that it was a political plot and I find it regrettable that certain people have to sink to such a low level that they would apply those methods when they fail to make progress in a democratic way.

Those are the political storms one has to get used to. It is my policy to keep away while a storm is raging, and when the dust has settled I make the right move. I don't think this denigration has caused permanent damage to my image as a politician.

WA: For an outsider Coloured politics looks rather confusing. Can you, in short, explain the issues.

BB: I don't think Brown politics is more confusing than National Party politics in SA. The Labour Party also had its Treurnichts and Hartzenbergs but these elements were eliminated through a purification process. The whole futile excercise was created by ambitious politicians.

persuing their personal aims. I survived five political coup d'etats in one year – a claim that can be equalled by few other African leaders. Firstly I was forced to resign as Chairman of the Executive Committee; after that there was the drama with the election of a new Chairman: then I was unconstitutionally suspended from the party and this had an aftermath in the Supreme Court. The case was settled outside the Court and the former leader had to pay all costs, because he didn't have a leg to stand on. After this came the alleged rape case, and following that an attempt to hijack the Congress of the Labour Party.

However, none of these attempts succeeded. The Labour Party was purified politically in the process and it strengthened the party. Recently highschool children were used to try and muster support against the Labour Party but this was also a total failure.

Problems that are experienced in Brown politics are largely due to the fact that the Labour Party, which is now the representative government of the day, inherited years of bad planning, especially regarding housing, and it is now expected of the party to rectify 30 years' problems in one day. With the so-called split in the Labour Party, when the former leader collaborated with the Opposition to get rid of me in Brown politics, I survived the coup with one vote. Three members of the Labour Party walked over to the Opposition — and all three have since applied for readmission to the party so that the Labour Party recovered its original majority in the House.

It is clear to me that Coloured politics is slowly but surely taking its rightful position, and in this process the Labour Party is stepping forward prominently.

WA: Do you think there is a future for ethnic politics in an independent SWA?

BB: The ideal would, of course, be one Namibia, one nation. That is also the dream of the Labour Party. However, certain aspects have to be taken into consideration in order to realise the ideal. It would be a political mistake to ignore ethnicity. Political theory is all very well and in most cases it has all the answers for political problems, but if political theory cannot be synchronised with practical politics a situation will develop where more problems are created than solved.

Because each group in SWA has its own identity and because the language and cultures differ from group to group, provision will have to be made for the different aspirations in an independent Namibia.

One only has to look at the continent of Africa to realise how important it is not to try and reject ethnicity.

One's aspirations should be to create a national unity from the diversity of the different social, economic and political structures of the 11 population groups in SWA. Ethnicity should not be overemphasised, but should on the other hand, not be lost sight of. To omit ethnicity totally from the political composition can only lead to more dissatisfaction. It is to no one's benefit to solve one problem and to create another in its place. That brings you nowhere.

CSO: 4700/941

MEINERT GROUP CLINCHES MAJOR DEAL

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

THE JOHN MEINERT group has taken over the printing division of the Suidwes-Drukkery Group in a deal which was clinched earlier this week.

John Meinert is the publisher of The Windhoek Advertiser and the Allgemeine Zeitung.

The newspaper, Die Suidwester, will remain in the hands of the NP but will be printed by the John Meinert Group on contract.

The official announcement was made this morning by the Chairman of the Suidwes-Drukkery Board, Mr A H du Plessis.

A major reason for selling to the John Meinert Group, according to Mr Du Plessis, was the probiems the Suidwes-Drukkery Group has had in acquiring and retaining skilled personnel.

The name Suidwes-Drukkery Beperk will be retained as well as the building in Marconi Street, Windhoek.

The John Meinert Group will take over all printing staff, capital equipment and contracts but will also use the Suidwes-Drukkery premises.

Mr Du Plessis requested all existing and former clients of the Suidwes-Drukkery Group to support the printing group's new owners and to continue their relations.

Asked to comment this morning, John Meinert MD, Mr Peter Meinert, who has been directly involved in the negotiations, said that the deal will do much to rationalise the printing and publishing industry in SWA, and this consolidation in turn should do much to improve the financial strength of the industry and the quality of service that it is able to offer.

CSO: 4700/941

REAGAN OFFER TO SA LIKENED TO KISSINGER OFFER TO IAN SMITH

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Mar 82 pp 1-2

[Editorial]

[Text]

Prime Minister Piet Botha would be well-advised to take note of the implications of British Labour Party Michael Foot's threats yesterday.

Addressing an anti-apartheid conference in London, Mr Foot said that a sanctions policy against SA would "figure prominently" in a programme of a future Labour Government.

Whether a sanctions policy will succeed or not is besides the point here, but what is relevant are these factors:

- The threat of sanctions against SA will not end with the conclusion of the SWA issue; apartheid will be the next excuse;
- Apartheid will only be regarded as ended when the ANC succeeds to power; the Buthelezis', like the Muzorewas and Mudges, will never be regarded as totally acceptable;
- SA's hope for permanent improved relations with the West cannot be serious; at best it can only be temporary;
- And Mr Foot is not alone in his sentiments; he has the support of the UN General Assembly, the OAU, the Frontline States, all the Opposition parties in the UK and the vast majority of Democrats in the US. No doubt, the left-leaning parties in France, West Germany and Canada feel the same way.

It should be clear to Mr Botha therefore that selling short on SWA, ostensibly in SA's interests, could turn out to be of only limited value and might even be counter productive.

Promises made to him by the Reagan Administration concerning SWA for example could equal those made by Henry Kissinger to Ian Smith in October 1976, or for want of a better example, the promises made by the Ford Administration to the Vorster Government concerning the strike into Angola a year earlier.

Not that we are counselling against a settlement, all that we are saying is that SA should not refrain from getting the best possible terms in the best interests of Southern Africa.

CSO: 4700/941

CALL FOR KARAKUL INSTITUTE FOR SWA

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Mar 82 p 13

[Text]

SWAKARA-NUUS the Karakul industry's journal, has called for the establishment of a Karakul institute in Namibia.

According to an editorial in the journal, such an institute should have a technical research division and a practical division, for the testing of new techniques.

Research could be done into new techniques in artificial colouring, refinement and manufacture. In the practical division, these new techniques could be tested in a comparatively short time, and if they are successful, breeding-material could be made available.

The journal says the costs of setting up such an Institute should be carried by the producers, through the Karakul boards, the distributors, through the auction houses, wholesalers, retailers, cooperatives etc, and the state. This institute would replace the current "unsatisfactory information service and test farms".

The journal envisages a farming unit of about 50 000 sheep for the institute which would be able to generate its own income, with time, and a proportion of the expenses could be covered in this way.

In a lengthy editorial surveying the problems facing the industry ,Swakara-Nuus argues that one of the big problems facing the industry is the low prices being paid to farmers

"The last word has not been spoken about the price a Swakara fur should fetch to ensure that the industry stabilises again and can compete against other types of small-stock farming. It would seem, however, that it would be in the region of R15 to R16."

Other problems the journal mentions are the drought, inflation and the high cost of money.

"A few lessons could be learnt from the building societies about how they do things — tax-free investments in good times and such things should be looked at."

About the question of competition amongst Karakul distributors, the journal says: "The pointless wasting of money and energy on local competition for the supply and destribution of furs has so far done little or nothing to improve the price or quality of the product".

In a separate news item, the journal reports that the three Karakul-cooperatives, Agra, SAKK and BKB and Hudson's Bay, held discussions in Pretoria recently about possibilities for rationalising the industry's marketing practices. A decision is to be taken on March 16 on how to implement the steps towards rationalisation.

CSO: 4700/941

NEGOTIATIONS UNDERWAY TO PROCESS 1980 CENSUS TAKE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Mar 82 p 5

[Article by David Pieters]

[Text]

CENSUS Chief Mr H Köll said if present negotiations to have SWA's 1980 census survey processed in Windhoek fail, it will take at least another year before the results are released.

This is because present arrangements, to have the SWA census survey processed in Pretoria, are placing the Territory at the back of the queue after SA and all the "constellation states' who must still have their censuses done.

Mr Köll said however, that his office was negotiating for the SWA census to be processed in Windhoek, which would enable a speedier release of the full report.

Meanwhile, the census office is busy with cross-checking preliminary figures from the 1980 census and it is expected that these will be released prior to the full census report, Mr Köll said.

Among the reasons for extra caution in releasing census figures at an early stage without through cross-checking, he added, were the many recent news reports about the exact number of Whites resident in the Territory.

CSO: 4700/941

OKAHANDJA MILITARY SCHOOL HAS SECOND INTAKE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Mar 82 p 5

[Text]

THIS week saw the second intake of candidate junior leaders at the Okahandja Military school, consisting exclusively of Namibians.

In a press release issued in Windhoek by the SWA Territory Force headquarters, the 'large' group is described as consisting of permanent as well as citizen force members.

The candidates all have their Matric or Standard 8. In the past Defence Force members from SA also enrolled in the course.

Last year a pass rate of only 33 percent was achieved, indicating the high standard of the course, the statement says.

The officer commanding the junior leaders' section Captain R Burgess said however that because of stricter selection procedures, a higher pass rate is expected this year.

Captain Burgess also said the students have no need to fear to come forewàrd with their problems. A complaints box is available and any problems will be brought to his immediate attention.

A student committee, as in the past, will be formed, which will meet weekly on an agenda cleared by the officer commanding the Military School.

This committee has proved to be very effective in establishing a healthy relationship between the camp personnel and the students, according to the statement.

Colonel H Janse Van Rensburg, Officer Commanding the School has assured parents that he carries their sons' best interests at heart and asks them to understand that the boys will be going through a tough period of training and instruction.

CSO: 4700/941

TABLE TOP INVESTS IN WALVIS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Mar 82 p 14

[Text]

TABLE TOP is investing R2,5 million in a new white-fish processing factory in Walvis Bay.

The factory is due to open on March 22 and will take over the premises of an old canning factory which closed down a number of years ago. Apart from some structural changes, Table Top has added on a new 1 600-ton cold store and has installed engine rooms for the store.

The factory belonged to Namib Fisheries, but closed down due to the decline in the pelagic fishing industry. The new factory will process mostly hake, which will be smoked and turned into filletted portions, fish fingers and fish cakes.

Initially, the factory will be staffed by 120 factory workers, and will expand to 200 in the next four months. After that, the factory will expand "as we go", according to Mr Robert Wight, the new General Manager.

The factory will only be involved in processing the fish. It will be supplied by Marine Products, a sister company. Fedfood took over Table Top from a British Company two years ago, and also owns Marine Products. As Mr Wight said, the development is "entirely within the family".

"It is a joint venture kept within the Fedfood group", he said.

"Marine Products will supply the trawlers and the fishing expertise and will deliver the fish to the door."

Marine Products will continue with its fishmeal and pelagic fish operations.

The establishment of the processing factory in Walvis Bay will have a ripple effect on local business. Already, Marine Products has bought an additional trawler to add to its fleet. She is the 52 m Cap Blanc Nez from France. The ship is at present still in Cape Town having a new factory deck fitted.

The fish will not be refrigerated on board, but iced, and will be offloaded at the jetty a mere 300m away from the addition, the factory will be supplied with corrugated cartons by a local manufacturer. Plastics will come from Cape Town.

"Initially", Mr Wight said, "the whole of our production is going to SWA and SA. At a later stage, we will be looking at the overseas market."

Transportation will be by rail.

CSO: 4700/941

MERITS OF PRESS CONTROL IN SWA ARGUED

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Mar 82 pp 15-16

[Article by Leon Kok in column: "From the Editor's Desk": "Increased Press Control in SWA: Desirable or Not?"]

[Text]

HOW OFTEN isn't it said in SWA that the press should be brought under increased control.

Most frequent target is Hannes Smith's Windhoek Observer.

Not far behind are Die Republikein and Die Suidwester which face the hardline Nat and DTA protagonists respectively.

And then come the less controversial Meinert Group newspapers (not that Mr Dirk Mudge would necessarily agree).

This urge for greater control worries me intensely, particularly because it seems to be gaining momentum and more important because it strikes at the very essence of the liberty which characterises our political and social system.

I get all the more concerned when such talk emanates from local politicians, bureaucrats and security personnel who are often in a position to do the utmost damage to the press and indeed the system, particularly when their motives seem suspect.

Chief apparent motive in the quest for greater control of the press is to protect the country against the total marxist onslaught.

Significantly, however, I fear that the urge in a great many cases has a strong facist touch to do it, aimed directly at indoctrinating or conditioning the populace.

Or alternatively control of the press is sought as a cover-up means of brutality, corruptive practices, bad management et al.

Put another way, those that have least to hide care least about the activities of the press.

ESSENTIAL ELEMENT

I'm not one who believes in maintaining a free press merely because it looks good to the outside world; I believe in it because it is an essential element of responsible freedom of speech, it is an essential element of free government. Free government is open government.

The freedom of the press however is not a licence for the press to do as it pleases, but it is freedom for it to do its properly appointed task. The press has a duty of prime importance and that is to relate news as it is and to act as a guardian of a whole set of public values.

One definition of news is publication of that which governments would rather have unpublished. This is perhaps an extreme position, but the argument does have considerable merit. Indeed, proof of the pudding is that once a government becomes oppressive, among its first tasks is to muzzle a free press.

This does not mean by the nature of things that the press should take up a strong position against government on every issue that arises, but it does mean that the press should have the right and a duty to report the facts.

IMPOSSIBLE

Often it is demanded of the press that it should be impartial and objective Frankly, that epitomises the impossible and the absurd. Indeed, nothing is more misunderstood than the much publicised principle of impartiality. Some journalists describe themselves as "completely impartial" in the handling of news, but that description is misleading. Nobody, but nobody can be completely impartial in that context. Nor should it be demanded of newspapers. But what can be requested however is basic honesty on the journalist's part — honesty to himself and honesty to his readers.

RDM Ombudsman James McClurg writes that those facts which a reporter sees as primary and those that he sees as secondary (the other side of the story) will in the first place be determined by his temperament, education and social background. Beyond that, he will inevitably be influenced by his working environment and, in the long run, by the policies of the newspapers he serves.

This does not mean that he will be indoctrinated in those policies, but they will certainly seep into his consciousness and help to condition the way that he approaches any assignment in which facts need to be assessed and evaluated.

If, for instance, a reporter's newspaper supports the Government, he will tend to accept statements from official quarters such as the Police and the Defence Force on their face value — after which he may well seek the "other side".

But if his newspaper is anti Government, he will view such statements with caution, if not scepticism. Sometimes he will look elsewhere for information that could form the main thrust of his story. A perfectly honest procedure, but is it objective?

Anyone who doubts this need only compare the reports and headlines in the two main Afrikaans newspapers in SWA on subjects of major national importance.

DAMAGED CREDIBILITY

To many observers, McClurg writes, this dichotomy in the press damages its credibility. True, he says, press partisanship is often excessive, expecially in the news columns where readers search for facts rather than opinions. Yet if public opinion is to mean anything at all in our society, it is essential that newspapers should reflect contrasting points of view — and reflect them vigorously.

In any event, it is my belief that a genuine free press requires partiality as well as impartiality. A newspaper and the journalists it employs must stand for something. There are always things that have to be deprecated.

It is right and proper that The Advertiser, for example, like the ordinary citizen, should be obliged to stand for that which is right, even if it clashes with the interests of the authorities. Indeed, an honest and upright paper should not deny partiality, rather it should proclaim and define it.

Having said that, a newspaper should be tolerant of the inevitable and legitimate opposition of interests that it will come up against. A healthy society undoubtedly requires a certain amount of internal tension while it also requires a competition of interests and ideas. In the realm of the mind too, in philosophy, religion and other facets of life, the progress of our society demands the vigorous pitting of ideas against each other. In fact, only in that way can the best results be achieved.

STAND ALOOF

It is in this respect however that a good newspaper should do its best to practise impartiality in the conventional sense of the word. Such a newspaper needs to stand aloof and view with refined professional detachment all those opposition of interests and values within the country which do not fall outside the scope of the shared loyalty to the country.

There is, of course, some truth in the allegation that the press is attracted by 'negative' stories. Indeed, it is not for nothing that some newspapermen are referred to as 'vultures' — where disaster strikes they wing in. But then the blame surely should not be placed squarely on the shoulders of newspaperment; the vulture press conforms entirely to human nature.

SAAN's London correspondent, Stanley Uys, notes that "it is the vulture press in the world which has the biggest circulation."

"Some of the most vociferous critics of press 'sensationalism' wouldn't read a serious newspaper if you bought it for them", he says.

BORING

"The trouble with 'good' news, in the Soviet sense, is that it is boring to the point of unreadability. And it is deceptive and it is misleading".

It is, of course, true that Southwesters could be a lot more effectively cushioned from bad journalism through the establishment of our own Press Council. Indeed, the sooner this in introduced, the better it will be for all of us. A Press Council would probably bolster the standard of journalism, it would do much to enhance matters of national safety, security and economy and it would help safeguard the rights and privacy of individuals.

COURAGEOUS

Overall, the standard of journalism in SWA is not too bad; it is certainly not characteristic of the immoral, irresponsible yellow press that one finds elsewhere in the world. Some of it is of an extremely high standard, has considerable flair and is most courageous.

In any event the State and public at large are well protected by 30 or more laws which have been adopted from SA and which govern media practice. Some of this legislation is extremely harsh. One local newspaperman said aptly that keeping within newspaper law in SWA is like walking a minefield. And that local newspapers are so infrequently charged for malpractices and sued for damages says a lot for the local press.

This in itself perhaps suggests something else: we don't need increased control and nor do we need new laws.

If there are problems, the existing legislation should just be more effectively applied.

And thats it.

CSO: 4700/941

BRIEFS

SWAPO OFFICIALS, CATHOLIC CHARGED--Radihimise Kahimisie, a Windhoek SWAPO member has been detained by the Security Police under AG 9. Meanwhile, criminal charges have been laid against two SWAPO officials and a Catholic Church employee who were detained also under AG 9 at the end of January. They are Mr Arnold Hans, Secretary of the Windhoek Catholic Justice and Peace Commission, Mr Emmanuel Mwatara, and Mr S Alex Kamaunju. At the time of going to press it was not known what charges were filed against the three. [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Mar 82 p 1]

RIRUAKO, MUNJUKU BURY HATCHET--An attempt to settle old differences between Chief Kuaima Riruako of the Hereros and Chief Munjuku Nguvauva II of the Mbanderus took place in Okakarara this weekend. According to Chief Riruako, the subject of the talks between the two men was the "unification of the Herero nation as a whole." He described the talks as fruitful, but said that no final decisions had been taken. The talks had been held over until a later date, he said, when the discussions so far would be evaluated and decisions made. Chief Riruako said he was "optimistic" about the prospects for unification. [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 10 Mar 82 p 4]

MYSTERY BLAST INVESTIGATION--Police are still investigating the aftermath of a massive mystery blast which flattened one wall and part of the roof of a Kavango tribal office seven kilometers from Kuring Kuru on the border. The explosion, which shattered the night of February 25 for a radius measuring several kilometers, is suspected of having being caused by a bomb, Police say. A Police spokesman in Windhoek said this week that a case of contravention in terms of explosives legislation as well as breaking and entering with attempted theft, might be submitted but that no arrests had been made. It seems that the Police are treating the matter as one of criminal liability rather than as sabotage. The target of the intrusion was apparently a steel safe, not mounted into the office building but too heavy to be transported, according to Police comment. The intruders apparently misjudged the situation regarding the safe and blew the offices apart in places without gaining access to the contents of the safe. The Police spokesman said he did not know what was in the safe because it was too mangled from the blast to have been opened yet. No further details were made available. [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Mar 82 p 4]

CSO: 4700/941

PROJECTS FINANCED BY FAC GRANTS NOTED

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 11 Feb 82 p 2

[Article from BULLETIN DE L'AFRIQUE NOIRE, No 1124]

[Text] At the end of 1981, several development projects (already underway or whose completion often takes 2 years) were financed in Niger by subsidies from the Aid and Cooperation Fund (FAC).

Telecommunications projects, mainly the expansion of our telecommunications network (20 million French francs) and television for schools (53.75 million French francs), garnered most of the FAC subsidies, which totaled 73.75 million French francs (1 French franc = 50 CFA francs).

Public works received 27.6 million French francs in FAC subsidies: facilities on the Tsernaoua-Tahoua road, 6 million francs; the Keita-Ibohamane road, 1.5 million; construction of two bridges over the Maggia (5.2 million francs); the feasibility study for the Kandadji Dam (9.3 million francs); and extension of the railroad of Benin-Niger Joint Organization (OCBN) from Parakou to Niamey (5 million francs).

Rural development received 23.64 million French francs for nine projects, particularly development of the Niger River (development of the Lossa hydroagricultural area and the Tiaguire Basin), which received 9.44 million French francs, and support for INRAN [presumably Agronomic Research Institute of Niger] for training and equipment (350,000 French francs).

Development of agriculture (fourth installment) in the Department of Dosso concerns agricultural extension work on 45,000 hectares (niebe, millet, cotton and peanuts) received 2.2 million French francs, while the project carried out in the same department with aid from the BDPA [Bureau for the Development of Agricultural Production], the CFDT [French Company for the Development of Textile Fibers] and the IRFA [expansion unknown], to be taken over by the World Bank, received 2.65 million French francs.

Rehabilitation of the Dallol Maouri palmyra plantation, whose objective is 2,700 hectares of palmyra trees, received a subsidy of 1 million French francs. Participation in the animal health project in Niger received 2 million francs, while the integrated development of Dosso, financed by the IBRD [International Bank for Reconstruction and Development], the CCCE [Central Fund for Economic Cooperation] and the FAC received 2.6 million francs. Finally, modernization of the grazing area in southern Tamesna, involving the improvement of livestock grazing on 400,000 hectares, obtained 2.2 million French francs from the FAC (and 8.8 million French francs from the CCCE).

Water projects involve total financing from the FAC of 8.32 million francs. They concern construction of wells in the southern region of the country (58 wells drilled by the BRGM [Geological and Mineral Prospecting Office], including 54 by OFEDES [Office of Subsoil Water]), or 2,946,000 French francs, supplying water to rural centers and grazing areas in the Nigerien Liptako (1.78 million French francs), hydrological studies in the Ader Doutchi Maggia (ORSTOM [Overseas Scientific and Technical Research Office]: 500,000 French francs) and the building of mathematical models of the underground water levels in Air and Irhazer (1.2 million French francs).

Village water projects involving the supplying of pumps for 110 wells drilled in Liptako-Gourma, a joint FAC-CCCE operation, received 7 million French francs, including 1.4 million French francs from the FAC. Other hydrological studies with ORSTOM assistance received 500,000 francs.

Finally, several other projects, particularly the solar energy plant at Ouallam, aid to public health, the institute for industrial training, the master plan for the city of Niamey, data on water resources, and so on, received FAC subsidies.

11,464
CSO: 4719/602

PRESIDENT DISCUSSES SENEGAMBIA, ALLEGED LIBYAN ROLE IN COUP

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 16-17 Jan 82 p 16

[Article by Souleymane Gueye: "Libya Implicated in Aborted Coup Attempt"; passages enclosed in slantlines are in italics]

[Excerpts] Banjul APS [Senagalese Press Agency] (Permanent Bureau)--In an interview given over the BBC on Tuesday, Dr Dawda Kairaba Jawara, Gambian chief of state, accused Libya of being involved in the aborted coup attempt of 30 July. We know, the Gambian chief of state asserted, that Libya was in contact with those who tried to overthrow the government. The latter, according to Dr Jawara, had received training and advice from Libyans ever since the events of October 1980 and some of these elements spent time in Libya on several occasions. The Gambian chief of state said that the trial in progress will shed light on Libyan involvement in this affair. He attacked those countries which do not hide their desire to topple Gambia and Senegal, including those nations in the eastern part of the African continent.

Asked about the confederation, Dr Jawara noted that the security sought within the framework of the confederation with Senegal has already permitted Gambia to live under improved conditions. He said this was recognized by the majority of the Gambian people.

The Gambian chief of state also commented on two questions which certain circles had raised regarding the so-called inequality of status of the two states and the Gambian peoples' so-called inferiority complex which could affect them adversely vis-a-vis Senegal.

Dr Jawara pointed out that the treaty establishing the confederation took into consideration certain realities such as the size of the states as well as their populations, without denying Gambia the right to speak out on questions such as the security of the confederated states.

The Gambian chief of state also came out against the so-called inferiority of the Gambian people. He said, /"There is no intrinsic superiority of the Senegalese over the Gambians, and it is up to the Gambians to rise up to the challenge of the confederation."/

Asked about the impact of the executions on a small society like Gambia, Dr Jawara called attention to two factors: first of all, the week of armed terror against the people which resulted in 500 dead and, then, the repercussions on Gambian public opinion if the guilty went unpunished. Dr Jawara also refused to make a distinction between Cherif Dibba and the other detainees charged on the same criminal grounds. According to the Gambian chief of state, it is up to the courts to decide on the fate of the leader of the National Convention Party.

President Jawara, moreover, rejected the charges of corruption against his government which, he stressed, is no more corrupt than any other government.

Dr Jawara listed the measures taken by his government to fight this evil. He nevertheless was of the opinion that /"We cannot make angels of people; it is the duty of each individual to denounce every criminal act."/

The Gambian chief of state also said, /"I expect the highest qualities from my ministers who would be thrown out if they were to deviate from this path."/

In this connection, Dr Jawara said that any minister found committing misdeeds would be brought to justice.

President Jawara rejected any possibility of change in the economic policy of the government. Coup d'etat or not, the government policy has always aimed at raising the economic level of the poor, the Gambian chief of state noted and he rejected Marxist-Leninism as not being in the interests of the Gambian people. President Jawara observed, /"When one considers what the Gambian people inherited from colonialization, one must agree that its government has achieved great progress since Gambia acquired its international sovereignty."/

Finally, President Jawara confirmed that general elections will be held, probably in April. The elections will not lead to a lifting of the state of emergency, but all parties will be allowed to conduct their campaigns and to hold public meetings.

5671
CSO: 4719/510

CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES ADOPTS SECOND 5-YEAR PLAN

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 15 Jan 82 p 20

[Article by Deyda Aidara: "Deputies Adopt Second 5-Year Plan"]

[Text] Following its ratification of the treaty creating Senegambia, the Chamber of Deputies at once began examining and then adopted the Second Five-Year Plan which had been defended by the minister of economic planning and industrial development. It follows from his expose that the plan is an instrument whose size exceeds the size of Gambia itself because it takes into account the prospects offered by the confederation.

Dr Manneh feels that the state is faithful to its democratic options, namely the realization of economic growth and social well-being. The minister said that to achieve this there must be political stability and social justice, foundations for any enduring economic progress. He added that the government is determined to continue the developmental effort despite economic and budgetary difficulties. Although the long-term goals of the First Five-Year Plan as well as those of the Second Plan are similar, it is no less true that priorities have changed. Thus, productive sectors, primarily agriculture, have seen their budgets grow from 16.3 percent to 30 percent, to the detriment of expenditures in equipment and infrastructure which had top priority during the First Plan.

This trend can be understood: agriculture contributes 30 percent to the gross national product and represents 90 percent of the export revenues. The plan also stresses improvement of both rural and urban conditions. To this end, programs for water distribution, moderate-cost housing, swamp reclamation and improvement of sanitation in Banjul are under consideration.

Moreover, funds are provided for the enlargement of the second port of Banjul, which will sustain its economic growth and construction of the bridge and dam on the Gambia River. Dr Manneh also noted that the Gambian Government considers subregional economic integration as regional and that it intends to respect cooperation agreements linking it to neighboring countries or international organizations.

With reference to the gross national product, an average 5.1 percent growth is expected in 1985-1986, or 837 dalasis in real terms. Self-sufficiency in grains will be attained by 1986 with the completion of the "Jahali-Pacharr" rice growing project and the bridge and dam project on the Gambia River.

In the business sector, the Gambian tradition of free exchange will be maintained. At the same time, rigorous controls on inflation will be maintained to strengthen the participation of private enterprises, primarily Gambian, in the national developmental effort, while maintaining the purchasing power of the working masses. As regards the distribution of foreign exchange, the shortage of which will continue over the next 3 years, priority will be given to the import of raw materials and equipment necessary for the completion of projects benefiting from foreign financial participation. Dr Manneh stressed the need to prevent destruction of forest resources and to conserve energy in order to cut down the petroleum bill, which rose from 9 million delasis in 1975 to 26 million delasis during the 1979-1980 fiscal year. Resultant savings would permit investment in certain projects using local resources. Moreover, précise directives are being given to the various state organizations for the proper management of the budget granted as well as to the Central Bank to control the flow of money. Further, the plan anticipates raising the number of students in primary grades from 43,000 to 74,000 in 1985 and raising the literacy level by 48 percent. As far as security is concerned, the various services will be equipped with sufficient means to safeguard territorial integrity and national sovereignty.

5671
CSO: 4719/510

FRENCH, BELGIAN AND CANADIAN FINANCING AGREEMENTS SIGNED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 16-17 Jan 82 p 6

[Article by Ibrahim Fall: "More Than 3 Billion from France, Belgium and Canada"]

[Excerpts] Mr Ousmane Seck, minister of economy and finance, devoted a great part of yesterday afternoon to the signing of financial agreements between our country and France and Belgium. He also received a check for $1 million from the hands of the Canadian ambassador.

Together with Mr Michel de Bonnecorse, head of the French cooperation mission in our country, the minister of economy and finance signed 18 financial agreements totaling 1,892 million CFA francs. This large sum concerns a wide variety of activities, such as the peanut seed program, the Senegal Valley development project, the materialization of an industrial reforestation project, the establishment of the "mineral plan" of Senegal, and so on. In short, the fields of rural development, mining, health, training, and the search for renewable forms of energy will receive distribution from these funds.

During the past year, FAC [Aid and Cooperation Fund] granted our country investment subsidies (nonreimbursable) amounting to 2,500 million CFA francs which permitted financing of 21 projects aimed mainly at regional development in our country. In a speech delivered after the signing of the official documents, Mr Ousmane Seck expressed his pleasure that France is giving our country "significant financial means, permitting it to manage its economic and social development effectively and in depth." Mr Michel de Bonnecorse in turn expressed the hope that in 1981 our cooperation might increase as, moreover, that part of the budget of the French ministry of cooperation devoted to aid to the Third World has gone up by 35 percent.

The second undertaking of the minister of economy and finance was the signing of a 756-million CFA franc financing agreement with Belgian Ambassador Alain Reus. This noninterest-bearing loan, repayble in 20 years with a 10-year deferred payment clause, is for the use of the ICS [Chemical Industry of Senegal] to acquire capital goods equipment and to pay for loans and services linked to this equipment. According to Mr Ousmane Seck, the impact of this aid can only be felt through the Sixth Plan which is based on the premise of a 3.5 percent growth of the gross domestic product in real terms. This expansion should be considerably encouraged by investors in the processing sector. The minister of economy and finance noted that our phosphate production will be positively effected by the inauguration of this project. Just for the Taiba mine alone, production will rise from 1.5 million tons to 2 million tons by 1984 not including an increase in phosphoric acid of which 120,000 tons are to be exported. [sentence and punctuation as published] Mr Ousmane Seck is convinced that the scope of Belgian-Senegalese cooperation is assuming exceptional importance and significance. The Belgian ambassador in turn said he, too, was convinced that this agreement fits perfectly into the framework of cooperation linking our two countries and peoples. Mr Alain Reus also expressed satisfaction that the signing of this agreement coincides with the visit of the chief of state to Brussels next week. week.

Respected Promises

The handing over of a check from the hands of the Canadian ambassador ended the protocol ceremony of the signing of a number of conventions and agreements. Canadian Ambassador Marc Perron presented Mr Ousmane Seck with a check amounting to 3 million Canadian dollars or approximately 720 million CFA francs. This sum derives from the decisions taken by Canada last October during a meeting of Senegalese moneylenders in Paris. It comes as a followup to the signing of a 3-million dollar protocol of understanding last month to be used to cover Senegalese counterparts in development projects funded by Canada. Overall, the sum total of funds received yesterday by the minister of economy and finance comes to 3,368 million CFA francs.

5671
CSO: 4719/510

BOTHA, POLICY MAY SURVIVE DESPITE PARTY RIFT

Prominent Personalities Take Sides

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 26 Feb 82 pp 1-2

[Text] Last night two Nationalist Party veterans, Mr John Vorster and Mr Ben Schoeman, took opposite sides in the prevailing crisis within the Nationalist Party.

Mr Vorster, former state president and also former prime minister, threw his support behind Dr A. P. Treurnicht and his rebel followers.

With respect to Vorster's views Mr Schoeman, a senior minister in Vorster's government and chairman of Dagbreek Trust (the controlling body of the Perskor newspapers) stated: "What he (Vorster) says is of no importance and does not interest me. Mr Botha is on the right track and he has all the necessary support which can be given to him."

Mr Vorster's meddlings against the government were not unexpected among informed circles. For a long time he has been behind the scenes trying to get back into politics...if certain circumstances were to arise. Yesterday, from his home in Obasstrand, he told the media:

"I find nothing wrong with Dr Treurnicht's motivation and actions and with those of the members of parliament who voted with him. I also subscribe full heartedly to their rejection of power sharing in any form whatsoever."

The question among political circles is whether Mr Vorster will now return to active politics. If he does he will probably take over leadership of the rebels from Dr Treurnicht. In the past the men have had sharp differences and at the time when Vorster was prime minister he refused to promote Dr Treurnicht for a long time.

Finally he appointed him deputy minister and Dr Treurnicht remained in that position until, after his election as Transvaal leader, he was appointed as minister by Mr Botha.

At the present time Mr Vorster's only important public office is chancellorship at the Stellenbosch University. A chancellor is elected for life by the convocation of graduates.

It is expected that Mr Vorster will be facing pressure to resign as chancellor if he does not do so on his own volition. The university does not wish to be connected with brotherly political disputes through this situation.

With regard to Mr Vorster, Ben Schoeman also said this to the South African Press Agency: "We have not been able to see eye to eye for a long time."

Doubtful

He told our Johannesburg correspondent that during his premiership Mr Vorster was unable to work out a solution for the coloreds political representation and all he ever said was that this was a problem to be resolved by the people who were to succeed him.

"But now that a promising solution is being tackled he shows anger."

In reaction to Vorster's statement Mr Chris Heunis, the minister for internal affairs and deputy chairman of the Cape Province's Nationalist Party, said that "it is highly doubtful that the former state president could have been informed on the events and motivation of the MPs to whom he referred in his statement."

"This is an element of superficiality which one would not have expected from a person of his experience and status in public life.

"Moreover, he evidently is not aware that his own 1977 proposals are being rejected, unless [of course] he has changed his viewpoint since 1977."

Heunis added: "His motives must therefore be questioned." This is what the South African Press Agency reported.

Minister of Transportation Hendrik Schoeman stated that the entire question of power sharing is being read out of context and this is something which must be viewed as a whole. "I would like to see a prominent man such as a former prime minister and state president, for whom I have the greatest respect, first acquire complete information on the facts before he makes a statement."

Dr Nak van der Merwe, the Free State's leader of the Nationalist Party and minister of environmental affairs, said that with respect to Mr Vorster's remarks he "found it strange that he issued a statement while not knowing what really had happened."

While in Windhoek, when the prime minister heard what Mr Vorster said, he told DIE BURGER: "I do not have any comments on the former state president's statement."

Tension Precedes Directorate Meeting

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 26 Feb 82 pp 1-2

[Article by Alf Ries: "Tension About the Deliberations Grows"]

[Text] The crisis in the Nationalist Party become more charged yesterday as preparations for the critical meeting of the main directorate of the Nationalist Party of Transvaal, which will be held in Pretoria tomorrow, are going full steam ahead. The results of this meeting can be decisive for the future of the party.

The composition of the main directorate is such that this has led to intensive "cultivation" of the members of the main directorate. Supporters of the prime minister as well as the rebels realize that the struggle for the control of the Nationalist Party of Transvaal will be decided at the main directorate's meeting.

The Transvaal main directorate consists of about 230 members. All Transvaal Nationalist members of parliament and provincial council members are officially members of the main directorate. Moreover each electorate in Transvaal elects a main directorate member who is usually the chairman of the division management. The main directorate also has 16 co-opted members.

From the composition of the main directorate it becomes clear that the members of the provincial councils and the elected leaders will be playing a determining role at the meeting. Canvassing for votes has been limited mostly to these two groups. As of last night the information available to DIE BURGER was that the Transvaal Nationalist members of the provincial council, and the members of parliament as well, have overwhelmingly formed ranks behind the prime minister.

The fact that three deputy chairmen of the Transvaal Nationalist Party: Mr Fanie Botha, Hendrik Schoeman and F.W. de Klerk, have unhesitantly teamed up with the prime minister and his leadership has a great deal of weight among the main directorate members, according to authoritative information. Only yesterday these three deputy chairmen conducted long discussions behind closed doors.

A prologue to tomorrow's main directorate meeting is the meeting of the executive committee of the main directorate which was unexpectedly convened yesterday. The meeting took place this morning at 11:30 in Capetown.

Despite conjectures by certain newspapers that the meeting would take place for the purpose of expelling Dr Treurnicht and other Transvaal rebels from the party (and this is within the power of the executive committee) DIE BURGER has learned on good authority that there is only one item on the agenda and that is to discuss the procedure which must be followed in tomorrow's main directorate meeting.

As of last night it was still uncertain whether Dr Treurnicht would be attending today's executive committee meeting. As leader of the Transvaal party he is officially the chairman of the executive committee. Thomas Langley, one of Dr Treurnicht's chief lieutenants, yesterday said that Dr Treurnicht is in Pretoria. Nobody would say whether he will be attending the meeting. If he is not present then the senior deputy chairman of the Transvaal Nationalist Party, Mr Fanie Botha, will probably be seated.

Reconsideration

As of yesterday Mr Langley was planning to prevent the meeting of the executive committee through some legal measures, because he was under the impression that the meeting would be used for expelling Dr Treurnicht from the party. He later told DIE BURGER that in light of the information he received the meeting would be just an "academic exercise" and therefore he abstained from doing so.

In the meantime among the Nationalist MPs there was still some buzzing yesterday about the eventful caucus meeting of the day before yesterday.

Nationalists conducted extensive discussions with some of the 22 rebels who 2 days ago refused to accept the motion of confidence in the prime minister, his leadership and his formulation of party policy.

Some of these rebels were seriously reconsidering their position. They have until Wednesday to return to the Nationalist Party. There is reason for optimism that at least some of the recalcitrant members will promise their support to the prime minister and the party leadership on Wednesday or even before that.

When DIE BURGER questioned several of the 22 rebels about their attitude they replied as follows:

Dirk Poggenpoel, MP for Beauford-West and one of the Cape Province members who voted against the motion: "I am struggling within myself about this matter and I am seeking clarity on what is troubling me."

Viewpoint

The other Cape Province member, Jan Hoon, the MP for Kuruman, said that his position is still unchanged. But in the meantime the district council of the Nationalist Party in the Kuruman constituency sent a telegram to the prime minister saying that the district council attests its undivided faith in the prime minister and regrets the actions of its MP.

Ben Wilkens, the MP for Vertersdorp, said that he is going to talk with his constituency's administration and present his viewpoint to them. "I will be giving an explanation of why I voted against the motion. I will also want to talk with the prime minister if I get the opportunity to do so."

Mrs Bessie Scholtz, the MP for the Germiston-district, said: "I will be giving my answer to the prime minister next week."

Capsper Uys, the MP for Barberton, said that he still stnads where he stood 2 days ago and he will not deviate from that.

Yesterday DIE BURGER erroneously reported that Mr Ferdinand van Heerden, the MP for De Aar, was one of the MPs who was absent from the caucus meeting of two days ago. Yesterday Mr Van Heerden pointed out that he was actually present and that he voted for the motion of confidence in Mr Botha.

Botha Receives Messages of Support

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 26 Mar 82 pp 1-2

[Text] Hundreds of telegrams and messages of wholehearted support for Prime Minister P. W. Botha poured into his office in Capetown yesterday from all over the country.

"Blessings, wisdon and strength are being invoked for you. The country looks up to your strong leadership. As in the past I am squarely behind you." So read the telegram which Mr Botha received from Vice State President Alwyn Schlebusch.

A remarkable characteristic of the telegrams is that the great majority of them are coming from Transvaal. Nationalists in the constituencies whose MPs revolted against the prime minister and his leadership were condemned very sharply. This was especially true for Thomas Langley (Waterkloof) and Dr Willie Snyman (Pietersburg).

The district council of the Nationalist Party branch of Soedin in the Kuruman constituency attested its undivided loyalty to the prime minister and chief executive of the Nationalist Party and regretted the actions of its MP (Jan Hoon).

Senior Senator Wimpie Gouws, of the Free State, sent the following telegram: "We are solidly behind you. Be assured of our intercession for you; blessing and strength upon you."

Johan Uys of Waterkloof wished all success to the prime minister. "I am behind you and the government's policy. I have informed Dr Treurnicht and Mr Langley of this."

From Louwsburg in Northern Natal a Nationalist informs us: "Do what you must do. We go along with you all the way. Power to you."

A telegram from Pietersburg reads: "Get rid of obstructions; Pietersburg supports you. Completely cut off that viper from our bosom once and for all and go on your chosen path until the end."

Thankful

The officials and directorate of the Afrikaans Business Institute assured the prime minister of their full and continued support to the government.

The telegram from Prof Sampie Terreblanche of Stellenbosch reads as follows: "Cometh the hour, cometh the man. I am thankful that you are that man. More power to you."

In the name of several of his colleagues in the executive committe of the Nationalist Party in Pietersburg Mr Jordaan let it be known that they fully support the prime minister.

A large number of present and past public representatives of the Nationalist Party also attested to their support. Mr Johan Lemmer, member of the provincial council for Benoni sent the following telegram: "I am firmly with you and I pray for you." Fanie Labuschagne, an old MP, put it briefly but strongly: "Much luck and courageous leadership."

Coloreds

A telegram from Paul Coetzee of Waterkloof reads as follows: "You may be sure that all realistically thinking Transvaal Nationalists are giving you full support."

Messages of support have been received from several English speaking persons and even from coloreds. Many Nationalist Party branches and district councils, also including Parow, Knysna, Groenpunt and Vryburg have attested their loyalty and support to Mr Botha.

Thys Wessels, provincial council member for Kliprivier, expressed unanimous, unshakable and unrelenting loyalty and support for Mr Botha's leadership and interpretation of policy in the name of the provincial caucus of the Nationalist Party of Natal.

A telegram was received from Gouritsmond in the Southern Cape and it reads as follows: "Much luck with the strong measures for a better order of things for all. Please get rid of Dr Treurnicht and his sympathizers. The country supports you."

An entire load of telegrams has already been sent by air from Capetown to Windhoek where the prime minister is conducting extensive talks on the future of the South-West. The prime minister is expected back in Capetown tomorrow.

Rebels Will Not Join Far Right

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 26 Feb 82 p 2

[Text] Thomas Langley, the MP for Waterkloof, yesterday told DIE BURGER: "I fully reject the suggestion that any of the 22 colleagues who are now under pressure want to join the Reconstituted Nationalist Party."

He was referring to reports that the leader of the Reconstitutes, Mr Jaap Marais, is believed to have said that he has already spoken with one of the 22 MPs and although nothing concrete was discussed he is hoping that some of them will join the Reconstituted Nationalist Party.

Langley said: "I know of no single colleague who has discussed this matter with Jaap Marais."

Invitation

He fully rejected the suggestion that any of them want to join the Reconstitutes.

Mr Langley said that he has learned that Mr Marais is believed to have addressed such a radio invitation to him and his colleagues, "but I do not answer to nonsense."

The day before yesterday Marais criticized Dr Treurnicht because "he did not assume a stand" and ran out of the caucus meeting. "Such an action, as a leader, could have had a demoralizing effect on his supporters. If he had remained at the meeting more MPs would have voted against Botha." So he stated.

Marais said that the threatened split in the Nationalist Party "was to be expected and the possibility that the 22 MPs will return to the fold is very slim, because the dividing line has been drawn too deeply...deeply and clearly."

7964
CSO: 4701/35

SACTU OFFICIAL DISCUSSES FIGHT AGAINST APARTHEID

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Mar 82 p 10

/Press conference of Steve Diamini, SACTU president, in Maputo, 3 March 1982/

[Text] "The role of SACTU [South African Congress of Trade Unions] is to organize the South African workers inside and outside the country in the fight against the hideous regime of 'apartheid,'" said Steve Diamini, president of SACTU, the South African labor union organization, during a press conference given yesterday to the national information organs at ANC [African National Congress] headquarters in Maputo.

Steve Diamini began by placing SACTU in the context of the fight of the South African people for its political freedom; he said that this labor union organization was not born by accident but was established to fight for the improvement of the living conditions of South African workers.

According to the labor union leader, his organization was established in 1955, which means that it has a record of 27 years of constant fight against the oppressor. He also said that SACTU accepts as its members all South African workers, regardless of their color, sex, language, and regardless of whether they are or are not members of South African labor union movements.

"SACTU is also part and parcel of the fight for political freedom. It differs from the other unions because it defends the principle that we will never achieve true freedom without a struggle for political liberation," Steve Diamini added.

He then talked about the fight of the South African workers for their rights and freedoms, adding that this has been a tough fight and that the "apartheid" authorities, soon after the establishment of SACTU, pounced on its leaders, with many of them being arrested and sentenced to longer prison terms.

Some of those fighters perished in the regime's prisons while others are still serving sentences in penal institutions, such as on Robben Island.

He then briefly outlined the history of the South African people's struggle over many years for their political and civic rights, the right to free speech and jobs. He also stressed the unrestrained exploitation to which the people are subjected; he singled out the fact that 80 percent of the best land was distributed to the white settlers. (In the next edition we will publish further details on this press conference.)

5058
CSO: 4742/235

CONTROVERSIAL POLITICAL POWER SHARING EXPLAINED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 26 Feb 82 p 20

[Editorial: "This Is the Nationalist Party Policy"]

[Text] The group of Nationalist members of parliament rebels, who have up to this week to consider their position, allege that their objections are based on the prime minister's formulation of Nationalist Party policy in the political area.

The fact that they have chosen this question as their battle ground had therefore made it possible to capitalize on the present dispute in the Nationalist Party to bring out, at the same time, a greater clarification of exactly where the party stands.

The contributory cause of the dispute was the Transvaal Nationalist Party leader's objections, namely those of Dr A. P. Treurnicht, against the position taken in the Nationalist Party's mouthpiece to the effect that it is only logical that there cannot be more than one government in a country.

With respect to this the prime minister granted that the Nationalist Party editor (Dr Jan Grobler, the MP who is also the party's chief information official) was right, having noted that although a country may have several governing instruments there can be only one central government authority.

Actually it is surprising that other views could be entertained over such an elementary matter. Outside of the political untenability of such views there would also be chaos if, for example, in time of war a country were unable to come out with only one declaration of war. Civil war would necessarily follow if there actually were states within a state, one of the governments of which did not agree with the other. The same is true with respect to a series of other matters ranging from foreign relations to finance.

Both Mr Botha's and Dr Grobler's explanations are based on Nationalist Party policy which was accepted in 1977 by all provincial Nationalist Party congresses, thus by the party's highest authority, and then subsequently confirmed in a general election.

Accordingly the Nationalist Party advocates the idea of an executive state president who is to be elected by an electoral college of 88 parliamentarians: 50 of them members of a white parliament, 25 coloreds and 13 Indians.

Besides this the Nationalist Party advocates a council of cabinets under the chairmanship of the state president. This provides for 14 cabinet members: the three prime ministers of the whites, coloreds and Indians, plus six whites, three coloreds and two Indians.

In the statement he made this week the prime minister referred to this and at the same time asserted that in connection with this the Nationalist Party chooses the ideas of consultations and co-responsibility which he called a form of healthy power sharing which does not impair the principle of self determination.

He expressly rejected the Progressive's approach to power sharing, in view of the fact that the Progressive Party advocates a unitary state; he also reiterated his opposition to the Westminster system of one man, one vote.

Dr Treurnicht's assertion that the prime minister now suddenly follows a Progressive political principle must therefore be weighed against this background as well as his own, the Nationalist Party's congresses and the voters' acceptance of the Nationalist Party's constitutional plan which is now before the Presidential Council still in this form.

It is therefore of great significance that the Transvaal deputy chairman of the Nationalist Party: Ministers Fanie Botha, Hendrik Schoeman and F. W. de Klerk, have expressly disassociated themselves from their provincial leader's efforts to arouse "an erroneous impression on the actual point of contention in a subtle manner." Therefore they also emphasize the fact that the 100 Nationalist MPs, who voted for the motion of confidence in the prime minister at the caucus meeting, are supporting the established Nationalist Party policy.

A further irony of this is that it is the Progressives themselves who regularly take offense at the prime minister's carrying out...the Nationalist Party's policy!

As recently as in the past no-confidence debate in parliament Mr Botha told the opposition leader that he was exactly right in accusing him of that: "I am a Nationalist and I hope to die as one. I am not about to turn around and turn my back on the people to whom I belong. I will not do that at any price on earth."

There can be no doubt on what the Nationalist Party and its leader stand for.

7964
CSO: 4701/35

PARTY CRISIS BLAMED ON AMBIGUITY, FEAR OF REALITY

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 26 Feb 82 p 20

[Editorial: "This Is Not the Time for Gestures"]

[Text] In answer to a question put to him at his press conference of Wednesday Dr Andries Treurnicht stated that "a gesture must certainly be made by the prime minister."

Dr Treurnicht did not say what he meant by this. From his previous statement to the press some people may perhaps deduce that he wants Mr Botha to withdraw his policy statement of Monday or at least revise it drastically. This would be much more than a gesture and there can be no talk of this at all.

The use of the word is significant. A gesture is nothing of substance. It is an act which can be used in creating an impression without saying or doing anything which unmistakably points in a direction concerning which there can be no misunderstanding. We have had more than enough of these, like speeches which are calculated for creating certain impressions without the speaker unambiguously binding himself to a certain viewpoint.

Much of this uncertainty and doubt which have lately existed in politics, and probably contributed to what now has happened at the caucus of the Nationalist Party, is exactly attributable to the fact that too many people have failed to speak openly and honestly and have neglected to look at the realities of South Africa and to present them to others without hesitation. All too many have avoided what they have regarded as thorny politics and have taken refuge in words and phrases which can mean anything at all...or nothing.

The times in which we live are least of all times for gestures. It's time to pay attention to hard reality. Point of views must be clearly presented, and everybody in the party must stick to them. Most of all the points of difference raised in the caucus of the Nationalist Party are anything but subject to gestrues. No gesture from the prime minister, or whosoever, can sweep away the seriousness of these. This is a matter of essential problems which affect the coexistence of the various population groups in South Africa and therefore the survival of the country. Therefore we must not play with words.

7964
CSO: 4701/35

EFFORTS IN NAVAL EXPANSION IN THE FACE OF ARMS EMBARGO

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 26 Feb 82 p 11

[Text] There is talk that South Africa will possibly build or purchase six Israeli frigates of 850 tons each, according to an article in MILITARIA, an official technical periodical of the South African armed forces. MILITARIA is published under the editorialship of the Directorate Documentation Service of the Armed Forces.

The article was written by Private Andre Wessels (BA Hons), a conscript attached to the Chief of Staff, Intelligence, Pretoria.

According to the article the Israeli frigate is equipped with two 75 mm cannons and four of the 30 mm caliber. There are also four Gabriel (or Harpoon) missiles on board, besides six torpedo tubes and two 75 mm Bofore anti-submarine mortars and a helicopter.

This frigate is "excellently suited for our requirements."

The article was written before the anti-submarine frigate, SAS President Kruger, collided at sea and sank.

Unrealistic

"South Africa can also develop and build its own frigates or corvettes. Such a vessel can have a tonnage of 1,000 or 1,400 tons. It can be equipped with one 76 mm cannon, four others of 40 mm and two of 20 mm. Moreover, it can be armed with four Gabriel missiles, six anti-submarine torpedo tubes, an eight-fold Aspide or Crotale sea-to-air missile system and one Lynx helicopter."

Obtaining the Spruce-class torpedo boats from the Americans would have been a good thing, but the choice would have been unrealistic, because these vessels require a large crew.

According to the article, the navy's three Daphne-class submarines are "actually intended for training and patrolling purposes. South Africa would perhaps have liked to have had the British Oberon, and if not, the French Agosta or the Italian Sauro-class submarines or perhaps also the new British type conventional submarine now being planned.

More

These large submarines are necessary because South Africa must be able "to intercept, attack and destroy enemy ships and submarines far from the South African coast in the deep sea."

The current missile carrying patrol boats can still be kept in service for a long time "and it is decidedly necessary that more of these vessels be procured." If the frigates in service are withdrawn and not replaced then the SAS Tafelberg (which was involved in the collision with the SAS President Kruger) "will no longer have a role to fulfill. Although still usable the vessel is already rather old. Should new frigates be obtained, the Tafelberg ought to be retained, because it increases the operational striking-range of the frigate.

Shakeltons

With respect to aircraft Private Wessels says that "it does not appear as though the Buccaneers can be replaced easily in light of the arms boycott. Actually South Africa needs about 50 American Phantoms, F-14 Tomcats, or the British-German-Italian Tornados."

"The days of the seven Shakeltons are counted in more than one respect and it is the Airforce's technical expertise which keeps them flying."

"However, they are inadequate for long range reconnaissance...South Africa needs at least eight Nimrods, Atlantics or Orions, but because of the arms boycott it is improbable that they will be obtained."

"In addition the Albatros reconnaissance aircraft (of which we have 17) are suited for short distance reconnaissance only."

Wasps

"A possible solution is to purchase regular passenger or freight aircraft and convert these as best as possible into navy reconnaissance aircraft."

"The American HS-748 or the Israeli Arava are suitable for this purpose. The Lockheed Hercules C-130, or, if this cannot be obtained, the commercial model L 100-30 can also be converted into navy reconnaissance aircraft."

According to the article South Africa needs most of all helicopters for anti-submarine purposes. "It is to be doubted that the logical successors to the Wasps, that is the Lynx or the Augusta-Bell, could be purchased."

"In the defense budget for 1979 the prime minister announced that South Africa is self sufficient with respect to helicopters. We can only hope that South Africa will also be able to build helicopters for naval reconnaissance, rescue and anti-submarine warfare within the foreseeable future.

7964
CSO: 4701/35

TOWNSHIP RESIDENTS TOLD NOT TO PAY COUNCIL FOR NONEXISTENT SERVICES

Governor's Statement

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 8 Mar 82 p 5

[Text]

UNIP will not allow residents in up-graded areas to pay rates to the Lusaka Urban district council for non-existent services, governor Mr Simon Mwewa said yesterday.

As a humanist organisation UNIP would look at the law obliging people living in council boundaries to pay rates and to check whether the council was providing the required services.

Mr Mwewa was addressing residents of Garden township, after receiving complaints through their ward chairman Mr Sicecani Mwala, that the council had disconnected water supplies to the area because of non payment of service charges by residents.

The residents vowed they would not pay for services which the council had not provided but they would pay when services were made available.

Mr Mwala told Mr Mwewa, who was accompanied by Lusaka district political chairman Mr Dominic Malusa and district youth political chairman Mr William Banda, that as a result of the disconnection of water supplies, some people had gone without water for almost a week.

Mr Mwewa dissociated the council from the decision to disconnect water supplies and promised to investigate the matter.

He directed council officers to inspect the township to see what services the local authority was providing to the people and determine for which ones they should pay.

While the investigations were taking place, the city engineer would be instructed to reconnect water supplies to avoid any possible outbreak of cholera.

Mr Mwewa gave a four-day ultimatum to officers concerned with the water disconnections to explain why they took the action.

The council has now created a wing known as the peri-urban section to deal with affairs of people in up-graded areas in the district. This has replaced the Housing Project Unit which has wound up its operations.

Mr Mwewa paid special tribute to participants in the HPU projects some of whose loan repayments he said reflected over-payment.

'Perhaps Councils Have Had Too Much Freedom'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 8 Mar 82 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

LUSAKA governor Simon Mwewa should not recoil through pressure or otherwise from carrying out his plan to charge tenants rates for services PROVIDED, not promised, by the district council.

Nowadays the paying public is being robbed by councils. Property owners pay rates without corresponding service; residents pay personal levy (which has gone up from K20 to K50 for the highest paid) and rents yet streets are potholed and have no lighting, grass is towering over houses and fire brigades are as good as dead.

So if the Lusaka council stops levying people because it has realised it is not offering the services it must that will be better.

Why should it reap where it has not sown? A walk through Misisi, Chawama, Chaisa, Mandevu, Kanyama or any other township can make you sick and throw up.

Besides unmaintained "roads", there is unbearable stench from refuse dumps and toilets. Nobody seems to care about the communal taps which do not close, yet every year Lusaka complains about drought.

The same goes for most of our district councils. We had thought decentralisation would instil a new sense and change things but they are going down and down.

They have instead adopted a peevish way. Every time they want money they act as if they are two-year-olds; they are not original to think up ways of raising funds.

They usually whine plaintively to the Government: "Allow us to raise rates or we shall not be able to provide services to the public."

When they have raised charges, the services so promised are never provided. People are forced to live in squalor after parting with their money.

Where does the rate-payers' and rent-payers' money go then? Despite the fact that people pay more at present than ten years ago the incidence of disease induced by lack of health facilities has risen.

Perhaps the councils have had too much freedom. Officers and councillors might have been spending public money as if it is personal.

Prime Minister Mundia, under whose office local administration falls, said in Mumbwa at the weekend that some officers paid themselves advances and loans which they did not bother to repay.

A stop must be put to that rot. District councils are short of funds and the little there is should be well looked after and put to profitable use.

What has happened to the commercial undertakings run by councils? Ndola, for instance, has a bus service, a farm and a uniforms factory. Are they not viable ventures?

Projects of this nature should certainly bring revenue to a local authority if they are properly managed.

While efforts to recover arrears from defaulters of rates and rents are being made, councils should be resourceful in other fields. Disconnections of water supplies and evictions are not money-spinners but farming, garages, manufacturing and shops are a sure proposition.

CSO: 4700/943

DBZ DIRECTOR NOTES PROJECT SPENDING SINCE BANK'S INCEPTION

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 8 Mar 82 p 7

[Text]

THE Development Bank of Zambia (DBZ) has approved 268 projects amounting to K124 million since its inception in 1974.

This was said in Lusaka by DBZ managing director Mr Mbamba Nyambe (pictured below) in his address to the Institute of Bankers, Lusaka centre, at Ridgeway hotel last Friday.

He said the bank's short history had taken place against the background of the liberation wars, oil crisis, deteriorating general economic conditions and an acute foreign exchange crisis.

He said of the amount K77 million or 62 per cent was spent on industry, K30 million or 24 per cent for agriculture and ranching and K17 million or 14 per cent on other sectors such as tourism, transport and mining.

Mr Nyambe told the bankers that it was remarkable that almost half of the projects had been approved in the last two years where a total of 118 projects for K62 million was approved.

He dismissed the illusion that the upsurge in investment activity in the last two years was due to the independence in Zimbabwe saying such hopes within the business community had not materialised.

"We have also experienced considerable delays in creating the necessary framework for lending to small scale enterprises which have a potential for alleviating the pressing problem of unemployment in our country," he said.

He criticised poor planning and project preparation by some people before approaching the bank for assistance.

"The idea that the project might fail because of bad planning with consequent losses for all parties concerned apparently ranks low in the investors' mind," he said.

It was however by insisting on high standards in project preparation that the bank had built up an investment portfolio of a successful enterprise with a low failure rate.

CSO: 4700/943

WFP REPRESENTATIVE NOTES WESTERN PROVINCE RELIEF MEASURES

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 11 Mar 82 p 3

[Text]

THE Government, in conjunction with the World Food Programme (WFP) and other agencies has intensified the transportation of food to Sesheke and Senanga districts in Western Province before the area floods early next month.

Deputy representative of WFP in Zambia, Mr Vincent Gondwe said in Lusaka yesterday that about 15 trucks were deployed in the haulage, of food to the famine-stricken area.

Mr Gondwe said three of the trucks loaded with 21 tonnes of cooking fat from Lusaka yesterday headed for the Western Province.

He said the WFP had 36,000 tonnes of maize at Mongu 122 tonnes of beans at Livingstone, and 173 tonnes of fat and 300 tonnes of milk powder in Lusaka, all awaiting transportation to the areas.

All efforts were being made to transport as much food as possible to the two districts before the areas becomes flooded, he said.

Mr Gondwe, who said one of his assistants had just returned from the area, reported that the main roads were slightly boggy because of the rains but the interior roads had improved with the rains because the sandy areas became compact.

He added that this condition was short term because the districts became impassable when they got flooded towards the end of this month and early April.

"This is why we are trying to send as much food as possible so that the people will have enough until the floods subside and we can get into the areas again", he aded.

He hoped that the problem of the pontoon at Sesheke would soon be solved so that the beans at Livingstone could be transported as soon as possible.

Mr Gondwe said Government efforts in the area had been tremendous and there had been a great improvement in the health of the people.

He added that studies, headed by the provincial permanent secretary's office were being undertaken to assess the social welfare needs in order to strengthen the rehabilitation programme in the area.

With the help of WFP, FAO, the UN High Commission for Refugees and other UN agencies, the government had embarked on an agricultural rehabilitation and the district had been provided with seed and fertilizers.

Mr Gondwe, who said WFP had long term plans in the area, said it was hoped that the organisation could provide food for people while they took on projects such as building of schools and clinics.

The WFP, which receives aid in form of money and materials from donors all over the world, has been with the Western Province exercise since March last year and has so far spent K2.5 million.

CSO: 4700/943

BANK OF ZAMBIA REPORTS ON ECONOMIC SITUATION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 11 Mar 82 p 2

[Text]

THE Government Budget recorded an enlarged deficit of K77.4 million during a quarterly financial year ended June 1981, a Bank of Zambia report says.

The report which has just been released in Lusaka attributes this sad state of affairs to problems ranging from shortages of foreign exchange to the sharp fall in revenue receipts from various income sources.

The document almost coincides with that of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) which says Zambia has now good prospects of economic recovery and that this is an opportune time for the international community to share her burden by providing increased help to achieve the goal.

The UNDP report on the country's special economic and disaster assistance says Zambia's external payment arrears stood at K520 million by mid-1981 and in the absence of adequate capital inflow there had been a continuing build-up of external payment arrears.

But the bank June 1981 report says in spite of some welcome developments that took place during the quarter under review, the Zambian economy remained basically weak—a feature that has characterised the past few quarters.

"The underlying cause for the persistent unsatisfactory economic situation has been the poor inflow of export receipts in view of low copper prices on the international market.

"This situation has been reinforced further by cobalt sales which have maintained a step downward trend in the major consuming industrial countries. Consequent upon these adverse developments foreign exchange availability has been extremely tight at the time when the demand for it has continued to rise."

It supports the UNDP version that the country's foreign exchange situation during the current quarter should have worsened considerably but was rescued by the successful negotiations for an extended arrangement in early May with the IMF who agreed to make available to Zambia in foreign exchange K800 million Special Drawing Rights (SDR) over the next three years.

A further salutary effect of the country's recourse to the IMF resources was the reduction in the overall balance of payments deficit to K52.2 million from the deficit of K82.1 million recorded in the quarter ended March, 1981.

It warns: "Without the financial assistance from IMF which helped to reduce the level of the pipeline, the balance of payments deficit was going to be far in excess of K68.3 million which was the decline in net foreign assets between March and June 1981."

Developments in the monetary field were characterised by a deceleration in the rate of total domestic credit creation and marginal increase in total money supply.

The report says total domestic credit which has risen by 5.4 per cent in the preceding quarter increased by only 2.7 per cent during the current period. Whereas net claims on the Government increased by 1.2 per cent, credit to the private sector rose by 7.2 per cent after declining by 1.2 per cent in the March quarter.

CSO: 4700/943

KAUNDA PRAISES USSR

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 9 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

PRESIDENT Kaunda has warned that unless problems confronting man are solved, socialist programmes would never be realised.

International exploitative capitalism and its off-shoots of colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism, Zionism and apartheid on one hand and poverty and its off-shoots of hunger, ignorance, disease, crime and exploitation of man by man on the other, were man's greatest enemies.

Dr Kaunda said Zambia and the Soviet Union cooperated in many ways in this common struggle against the enemies.

Identified

He was speaking at State House before a luncheon he held in honour of a Soviet delegation led by secretary of the Communist Party of Lithuania Republic, Mr Leongidas Shepetis who is speaker of parliament there.

Zambia and the Soviet Union identified each other through the five areas of human endeavour which formed a basis of cooperation with other countries.

The five fields of human endeavour are political, economic, social and cultural, scientific and technical, and defence and security.

Cooperation with any country was judged on how effective such cooperation was in the five areas.

"Happily the Soviet Union and Zambia cooperate through these areas. We cooperate on the basis of non-interference in the international affairs of each other."

Dr Kaunda described the founder of the Soviet Union, Vladimir Lenin, as a destroyer of exploitation. "Lenin struck a powerful blow at exploitation and he is loved by all people who love peace and hate exploitation."

The President said this after receiving a small statue of Lenin presented by the Soviet delegation.

He said what Lenin did was not only for the Soviet Union but for mankind as well.

CSO: 4700/943

MPS URGE GOVERNMENT TO EXPLAIN LEGITIMATE AUTHORITY IN ANGOLA

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

ENTRY into Angola from North-Western and Western provinces is only on visas issued by that country's dissident party UNITA, Parliament heard yesterday.

And Members of Parliament have urged the Party and its Government to explain to the nation who was the legitimate authority in Angola between the MPLA, UNITA and Cubans.

Mr John Kalenga (Mwinilunga West) said if one wanted to buy items from Angola, which was nearer to his area than Lusaka, he was required to surrender his green national registration card to Jonas Savimbi's UNITA, which in turn issued a pass for entry into that country.

"We are getting worried. Who has authority in Angola? Is it UNITA? I am saying this because if you want to go there to buy fish or other items, you get a pass through UNITA offices if you are to travel.

"Zambians should therefore be told of our stand. If Savimbi can serve us, then let us have him. It seems there are two governments there — in fact, three because Cubans are also a government," he added.

But in a point of order, Mr Fleefort Chirwa (Kanyama) asked whether Mr Kalenga was in order to say Angola had three governments.

Making a ruling, Deputy Speaker of the National Assembly Mr Raphael Chota said the situation needed an explanation "because once someone gives a visa, then you have some kind of authority".

Mr Albert Limbo (Sinjembela) asked whether Mr Kalenga was in order to leave out other parts of Western Province where people were also required to be cleared by UNITA to get entry into Angola.

Mr Kalenga said his area was closer to Angola than Lusaka and therefore the Government should help to sort out the matter.

"We have nothing to do with the government in Luanda where we don't go."

CSO: 4700/943

PEACE, SECURITY RESTORED AT ZAIRIAN BORDER TOWNS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 8 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

PEACE, freedom and security returned to the border towns of Mokambo, Sakania and Kasumbalesa following the normalisation of relations between Zambia and Zaire in Kitwe at the weekend.

Immigration and customs officers at Mokambo reported that traffic between Zambia and Zaire on the Pedicle road had started flowing as early as yesterday morning.

Zairean senior border officials were reported to have briefed their officers to give travel documents to travellers on the Pedicle road to Luapula Province.

The briefings were part of instructions contained in a joint communique signed in Kitwe on Saturday after two days of discussions between Zaire and Zambia.

Mr Joseph Bwalya, TIMES OF ZAMBIA advertising branch manager in Kitwe, who travelled to Mokambo on Saturday afternoon, said Zambians who had crossed in to Zaire were told to feel at home as differences arising from the Sakania incident of February 20 had been resolved.

Mr Bwalya said Zairean officials had addressed their officers instructing them to carry out duties properly in the spirit of the Kitwe resolutions on the border situation. "We enjoyed our short stay there."

At Kasumbalesa, a Zairean official who did not want to be named said: "The problem of Sakania was transferred to here by administrative procedure and since it has been resolved, our operations are back to normal".

Relations between Zambia and Zaire soured when Zairean and Zambian security forces exchanged fire on February 20.

No official reason has been given for the fighting.

Copperbelt Member of the Central Committee Mr Alex Shapi said the Sakania incident was so serious that if it was not properly handled it would have strained the relations further.

Following the incident an emergency meeting was arranged to end the tension.

A follow-up meeting on the issue is scheduled for end of March in Lubumbashi but before it takes place a committee of experts drawn from Zambia and Zaire is to meet in Lubumbashi on Wednesday to assess claims of victims of the Sakania fighting.

CSO: 4700/943

UNZA AUTHORITIES HOLD EMERGENCY MEETING TO AVERT CRISIS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 5 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

UNIVERSITY of Zambia authorities at Lusaka Great East Road campus were yesterday locked in an emergency meeting in a last minute bid to avert a crisis under threat that the institution might be closed down because of anti-Government elements among students.

Principal for the Lusaka campus Professor Kasuka Mwauluka, had on Tuesday given the students up to midday yesterday to withdraw a circular critical of the Government or be expelled from the campus.

It was learnt yesterday that the authorities, in a no-nonsense posture, had decided that any further intransigence by the students would lead to the closure of the university.

Prof Mwauluka had told Unzasu officials that the authorities had taken offence at a circular published to coincide with President Kaunda's inauguration of the Institute of Human Relations two weeks ago.

In the circular the executive charged that the institute was designed to mislead the masses and alleged that the Government was corrupt and exploitative.

And as the ultimatum for withdrawing the remarks drew to a close an extraordinary general meeting was convened on Wednesday at which students usurped all executive powers from Unzasu officials and set up a crisis management committee.

Following its decision all the students boycotted classes yesterday morning and demanded that Prof Mwauluka address them and apologise.

At the same time Unza administrators were looked in an emergency meeting over the issue, but later the pro-Vice chancellor Professor Michael Kelly talked to them.

Prof Kelly did not make any concessions, but most of the students resumed classes in the afternoon while administration officials went back into their meeting. It was expected that by last night a decision would have been made on how to solve the crisis.

CSO: 4700/943

UNDP REPORT ON ECONOMIC, DISASTER AID ISSUED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 5 Mar 82 p 4

[Text]

ZAMBIA now has good prospects of economic recovery and it is an opportune time for the international community to share her burden by providing increased help to achieve the goal.

The balance of payments projection shows considerable improvement over 1980 but much will depend on whether copper production can reach the assumed 600,000 tonnes and whether the mineral's price and that of cobalt will be stable.

This is said in a United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) report on Zambia's special economic and disaster assistance just released in Lusaka.

It recalls that in 1979 there was a substantial decline of eight per cent in the Gross Domestic Product.

While some improvements took place in 1980, particularly in agriculture and manufacturing GDP inconsistent prices rose by only about 0.9 per cent.

The report reiterated that an extended fund facility has now been negotiated with the IMF under which Zambia would be able to draw K800 million over the years 1981-84 of which K310 million was to be drawn in 1981.

"This facility is expected to assist greatly in the rehabilitation and increased utilisation of industrial infrastructure as well as to permit the timely import of agricultural inputs.

"The growth-oriented nature of this facility is expected to lead to a considerably better performance in future years," it says.

It recalls the primary objective of this investment programme is to rehabilitate rapidly the existing underutilised industrial infrastructure to maximise the immediate economic and employment impact and thus assist in generating resources for the repayment of the drawings.

In the absence of adequate capital inflows there has been a continuing build-up of external payments arrears to a level of some K472 million at the end of 1980, up from K360 million a year earlier.

In the mid-1981 the arrears stood at about K520 million but will now fall gradually with the utilisation of the IMF facility.

The report says that even with the independence of Zimbabwe the repercussions on Zambia's economy of their earlier struggle are not yet over.

"Zambia's difficulties remain a cause for international concern and there is an urgent need to support measures for economic revitalisation which with international assistance now have excellent prospects for success," it says.

The agricultural sector showed some improvement in 1980 but remained below its performance during 1976-78 which meant food production per capita had fallen significantly during the 1970s.

The manufacturing sector's output increased slightly and achieved a level about equal to the previous high in 1974.

CSO: 4700/943

DISTRICT OFFICIAL URGES REDEFINITION OF ZIMBABWE BORDER ON KARIBA DAM

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 9 Mar 82 p 5

[Text]

THE Party and its Government has been urged to meet the Zimbabwean government to redefine the boundary on the Kariba dam so that Zambian or Zimbabwean fishermen do not stray into each other's territorial waters.

Siavonga district executive secretary Mr Lubasi Mutukwa said yesterday that several fishermen from Zambia had been arrested by Zimbabwean police for straying into Zimbabwean waters.

"We have found that some Zambian fishermen have been poaching in Zimbabwean waters because it is difficult for them to know the boundary in water."

And some Zimbabwean commercial fishermen had strayed into Zambian waters because they too found it difficult to tell the boundary.

Mr Mutukwa said Zambians have had their boats and nets confiscated by Zimbabwean authorities for straying into that country's territorial waters.

He had made representation to the Zimbabwean district administrator across the river who was "understanding" and some Zambians were released.

Mr Mutukwa received a report of Zambian fishermen allegedly being harassed two weeks ago but after investigations it was discovered that the majority of them had in fact been poaching in Zimbabwean waters.

Areas mostly affected were Namoomba and Chirundu. Last year, Member of the Central Committee for Southern Province Mr Mungoni Liso warned fishermen against fishing in Zimbabwean waters. He said Zambia wanted good neighbourliness.

The good relations between Zambia and Zimbabwe should not be ruined because of a few people illegally fishing in foreign waters, he said.

Mr Liso was commenting on reports that some Zambians who had been jailed for fishing in the Zimbabwean waters in courts in Karoi.

CSO: 4700/943

ZNS MEMBERS LEAVE SUSPENDED TO BOOST FOOD PRODUCTION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 5 Mar 82 p 2

[Text]

ALL vacation leave for members of the Zambia National Service running rural reconstruction centres has been suspended with immediate effect in order for them to concentrate on food production.

Announcing this in Kabwe on Wednesday, ZNS deputy commandant Colonel Dickson Zulu called on those not ready to help implement Party and Government policy on food production to get out.

Col Zulu made the announcement when he closed a three-day first planning conference for rural reconstruction centre leaders and agricultural unit commanders at the ZNS skills camp 13 km from Kabwe.

"In order to maximise output in the centres, all vacation leave has been suspended to all centre leaders and centre personnel until after harvest. All centre members of the staff will work in the fields continuously until harvesting is over."

Col Zulu flanked by ZNS commandant, Brigadier-General Tom Fara, informed conference participants that Zambia, "a dynamic country", wanted people who could work on the land and produce more to alleviate the economic burden of the masses.

The Party and its Government initiated the rural reconstruction programme as a backbone to national development.

"We, as members of this programme must set an example to the public. We should not fail the nation through laziness. Let us support the Party by showing the public the spirit of hard work and self-discipline."

Emphasing the need for discipline, Col Zulu said it retarded national progress and a nation of indisciplined people was a disorganised one.

"In order to portray the good picture of Zambia National Service, centre leaders should be a shining example to the public in hard work and food production."

Col Zulu said discipline should not only be expected from ZNS personnel but from peasants in surrounding villages as this was a two-way traffic.

"The village population is the fountain and reservoir of all centre personnel. The relationship between rural reconstruction centre personnel and the villages should be like that of fish and water since the fish cannot live without the latter."

CSO: 4700/943

MUNDIA SAYS NCCM-RCM MERGER WILL AID NATION REGARDING COPPER PRICES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

PRIME Minister Mundia said yesterday that the merger of the two giant mining companies — Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines (NCCM) and Roan Consolidated Mines (RCM) — will give Zambia more influence in determining copper prices.

The merger would make Zambia Consolidated Copper Mines (ZCCM) the second largest company in the world, he said. Another advantage was that the country would save about K200 million in spare parts importation.

Mr Mundia was speaking in Parliament after the Amalgamation of Mining Companies (Special Provisions) and Income Tax (Special Provisions) Bills passed through the committee stage without amendments. The Bills are now in their third reading.

The necessary application had already been made to the High Court of Zambia according to the time table agreed between the parties for implementing the merger expected to take effect on March 31.

Mr Mundia said at present the parties were working towards that date by taking action as contained in their respective undertakings.

If the merger was to be attained on that date, the undertaking of the Government had to be discharged on or before March 17.

"If on that date the merger is not effected for some reason, the whole exercise will have to begin all over. In such event it may take several years to come to the position where we are now seeking to implement the merger."

It was necessary that the amalgamation was not frustrated by anyone including the Government.

Influence

The merger, he said, would make ZCCM the second largest copper company in the world and Zambia would have an influence in determining the price of metal.

CSO: 4700/943

RCM KALENGA MINE CLOSURE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 9 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

ROAN Copper Mines (RCM) is to close down Kalengwa mine in the North-Western Province because the remaining ore stockpiles there cannot be treated economically.

In a statement to workers at the mine, a spokesman said the ore stockpile was declining in copper content and was no longer economically viable.

"It has, therefore been decided, with effect from March 31 1982, to close down Kalengwa mine permanently."

Only a limited number of activities necessary to implement the closure together with dismantling and salvage operations would take place after the end of this month.

Problems at the mine were aggravated by its isolated geographic position and its unique operating problems which led to the mine making losses in excess of other RCM mines.

The mine is in Chizera district in the heart of North-Western Province.

The statement said workers at the mine believed to number about 200 would be laid off "although it is anticipated that a few will be redeployed on the Copperbelt."

Those who will be laid off would be paid their terminal benefits in accordance with provisions of the redundancy agreement signed with the Mineworkers Union of Zambia (MUZ).

Only those qualified may be offered jobs on the Copperbelt depending on vacancies, the statement said.

Meanwhile, Chizera district executive secretary, Major Emmanuel Chisha has said mine assets would be left in the hands of the council until further notice. — Zana.

CSO: 4700/943

GWEMBE, SOME PARTS OF SOUTHERN PROVINCE FACING FAMINE THREAT

Comments on Southern Province Situation

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Mar 82 p 5

[Text]

SOME parts of Southern Province will face famine this year because of the long drought which has hit the region, provincial permanent secretary Mr Edward Himunyanga said in Livingstone yesterday.

His office was waiting for reports from the affected areas to prepare for a fight against starvation.

Chief Moomba of Kalomo said in Livingstone his people faced severe famine as a result of the drought, but refused to confirm reports that Chief Sipatunyana's area in the same district also faced starvation.

Chief Moomba, whose area borders with Sesheke in Western Province, appealed to the Government to take urgent steps to contain the situation because his people were now running out of food.

Travellers from Chief Sipatunyana's area said in Livingstone most of the maize grown by farmers had been destroyed by the severe drought.

Mr Alfred Hapanda and Mr Mathew Sikasale said the Government had sent relief supplies of 8,000 bags of mealie meal to the area, but Mr Himunyanga could not confirm this.

The permanent secretary said: "This is something you and I should expect as a result of this drought. Under decentralisation, we at the provincial level are only waiting to hear from the affected district councils before we act."

Situation in Gwembe Valley

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 9 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpt]

LACK of rains and impassable road may cause a great famine in the Gwembe Valley this year.

The area has not had any rains since December last year and to worsen matters, most areas cannot be reached due to poor roads, according to a Daily Mail investigation.

All along the 74 kilometre road from Gwembe boma to Chipepo Secondary School the effect of the drought could be seen in the stunted maize now turning yellowish and other crops which are withering.

Chipepo Secondary School authorities expressed concern at the drought and said the school would also be greatly affected.

CSO: 4700/943

MINISTER NOTES REASONS FOR FERTILIZER SHORTAGE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 5 Mar 82 p 7

[Excerpt]

FAILURE by Nitrogen Chemicals of Zambia to manufacture 25,000 tonnes of ammonium nitrate ordered by Namboard for the 1981-82 season contributed to the shortage of top dressing fertiliser.

Another reason for the shortage is that out of 35,000 tonnes of urea ordered by Namboard only 31,000 tonnes arrived while 4,000 tonnes cannot be moved from Moatize, Mozambique, by Contract Haulage who are unable to pay toll levy in foreign exchange for vehicles entering Mozambique.

Minister of Agriculture and Water Development Mr Unia Mwila explained this in a ministerial statement in Parliament yesterday on the position of top dressing fertiliser.

His ministry did not at any time deliberately deprive a province of top dressing fertiliser as alleged by some Members of Parliament.

Mr Mwila said the ministry ordered 35,000 tonnes of urea (top dressing fertiliser) for the 1981/82 season.

This was to be topped over with 25,000 tonnes of ammonium nitrate from NCZ.

Of the imported top dressing fertiliser, only 31,000 tonnes arrived in the country, leaving a shortfall of 4,000 tonnes of urea.

The minister said of the total quantity of 25,000 tonnes ammonium nitrate expected to be locally produced only 12,000 tonnes were actually produced and procured by Namboard.

CSO: 4700/943

BRIEFS

FREEDOM HOUSE ON FOREIGN POLICY--Zambia has often been embarrassed by some "careless" remarks on foreign policy issues made by Freedom House, Foreign Affairs Minister Professor Lameck Goma told Parliament yesterday. He thus welcomed a suggestion made by Liuwa MP Mr Nathan Namuchana that from now on foreign issues should be left in the hands of competent authorities. Mr Namuchana deplored some statements made by some officials at Party headquarters "on our foreign policy." Contributing to a debate on the Ministry of Foreign Affairs vote, he said: "I ask the Honourable Minister that those Freedom House officials should be stopped from issuing statements on foreign affairs and leave the matter to competent people." Winding up the debate, Prof Goma said Mr Namuchana had made "a very useful contribution." "I wish to congratulate him for these remarks. Zambia has often been embarrassed by innocent, but careless and sensitive remarks made by certain people on our neighbours." He added that Zambia's stand was that of non-interference in the internal affairs of other countries. [Excerpt] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Mar 82 p 1]

MUNDIA ON GOODS SHORTAGES--The Government hopes to end shortages of cooking oil, stockfeed, washing powder and bath soap towards the end of this year, Prime Minister Mundia said in Mumbwa yesterday. He said Lusaka and Ndola plants of ROP were being expanded to increase capacity and enable the company to produce the commodities in abundance to end queues. "We are hoping that when the expansion programme is completed by September our mothers would no longer queue for cooking oil, washing powder and bath soap." [Excerpt] [Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 7 Mar 82 p 1

STUDENTS TO GDR--One hundred and twenty students leave Lusaka today for the German Democratic Republic (GDR) in a chartered Zambia Airways plane. They have been sponsored by the Zambian Government to undertake various technical and agricultural courses in the GDR. Yesterday, the students were addressed by acting Permanent Secretary for Ministry of Education and Culture, Mr Miles Banda, at Evelyn Home College. Mr Banda called on the students to be good ambassadors of Zambia during their stay in the GDR. [Text] [Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 10 Mar 82 p 3]

MORE MAIZE TO BE IMPORTED--The Government will this year import maize to bridge the gap which may be caused by the late coming of the rains, Prime Minister Mr Nalumino Mundia announced in Mumbwa yesterday. Mr Mundia told cotton, maize and sunflower farmers who assembled at Matala Primary School that the Government was taking measures to ensure that there would be no shortage of maize in the country. He said the idea of importing was to avoid being taken unawares as the nation did not know yet how many bags of maize would be produced this year. Flanked by Central Province Member of the Central Committee Mr Samuel Mbilishi and Freedom House MCC Mr Maxwell Beyani, Mr Mundia commended Mumbwa residents for having contributed a large proportion to the 3.2 million bags produced in the Central Province last year. He said the province was only beaten by farmers in Southern Province who reaped 3.5 million bags. [Excerpt] [Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 8 Mar 82 p 3]

LAYOFFS IN 1981--More than 4,151 workers were declared redundant in 1981 by 142 companies, Minister of Labour and Social Services Mr Basil Kabwe told Parliament. The most affected sector was the construction industry which accounted for almost 50 percent of the redundancies. Speaking in a ministerial statement on Tuesday night when he would up debate on the vote for his ministry, Mr Kabwe said 39,000 workers were sacked between 1975 and 1980. "This situation has not improved as an estimated 4,151 workers were declared redundant in 1981 by 142 companies. This means that nothing much has happened in the way of placing job seekers in employment." The minister said because of the economic crisis the country was going through there had not been an improvement in the unemployment situation. Productivity in many industries had fallen resulting in employers being forced to lay off some workers. A total of 156 strikes involving 76,776 workers were recorded last year. This figure represents an increase of about 30 percent over that of 1980 when there were only 121 strikes. The number of man-days lost in 1981 were 556,408 compared to 79,886 in 1980. He said the record of strikes was not one to be proud of. [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 11 Mar 82 p 5]

EASING OF FERTILIZER CRISIS--About 10,000 tonnes of fertiliser for the 1982/83 season has arrived at the port of Dar es Salaam and will soon be transported to Zambia, Namboard general manager Mr George Chabwera said in Lusaka. Mr Chabwera who was commenting on the present shortage of fertiliser said Namboard still needed a balance of 50 percent to meet the demand. The 10,000 tonnes at the port were still being off-loaded from ships and the Government was now working on the opening of letters of credit for the supply of fertiliser from Saudi Arabia. He did not give the tonnage of fertiliser sought from the Saudis and the cost. Recently the country was hit by a critical shortage of top dressing fertiliser. The worst hit was the Southern Province and Mr Chabwera said then that some fertiliser from areas which had more was being diverted to provinces with less.--Zana [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 Mar 82 p 2]

POLICEMEN DETAINED BY ZAIRIANS--A group of police officers were detained at Mokambo border post by Zairean authorities when the border was temporarily closed two weeks ago, Copperbelt Member of the Central Committee Mr Alex Shapi revealed in Ndola yesterday. But by yesterday it was still not known whether the officers were released after an agreement reached at the regional joint Permanent Commission meeting which ended in Kitwe last Friday night. Yesterday Mufulira district governor Mr Boyd Kaseunga was trying to contact immigration officials at Mokambo to check if the men had been freed. Mr Shapi, who did not say how many police officers were involved, said the meeting agreed to have the men released last Saturday. The matter was being handled by the security sub-committee of the joint permanent Commission. "I have not heard from the Mufulira governor and the police yet whether the men had been released. In fact I will try to check on this one." [Excerpt] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Mar 82 p 1]

CZECHOSLOVAK DELEGATION--Visiting Czechoslovakian minister of foreign trade Mr Bohuslav Urban has assured Zambia of his country's continued assistance in the field of technology and looked forward to fruitful discussions with his Zambian counterpart. Mr Urban was speaking when his five-man delegation paid a courtesy call on Southern Province member of the Central Committee Mr Mungoni Liso. He told Mr Liso that his country will not hesitate to come to Zambia's assistance when invited to do so especially in the field of technology. [Excerpt] [Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 11 Mar 82 p 3]

LUSAKA BLACKOUT--A power failure which started over the lunch hour yesterday virtually paralysed most of Lusaka city centre's Northend area. Among the hardest hit was the Zambia News Agency which experienced a complete news blackout from within and outside the country as all telex machines, telephones and other communications equipment stopped functioning. A Zesco spokesman confirmed the power failure and blamed it on a cable fault behind Impala House which houses the Zana headquarters in Cha Cha Cha road. Because of the power failure senior Zana editors were forced to mount an emergency operation to physically collect and deliver news from the Reuters office in Olympia Park to contributors like Times of Zambia, Zambia Daily Mail and Zambia Broadcasting Services.--Zana [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Mar 82 p 1]

CSO: 4700/943 END

JPRS 80430

29 March 1982

Sub-Saharan Africa Report

No. 2596

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 80430

29 March 1982

SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA REPORT

No. 2596

CONTENTS

CHAD

Condition of Country Said To Be Becoming Desperate
(WEST AFRICA, 1 Mar 82) 1

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Significance of Catholic Church's Revival Noted
(Richard Pennell; WEST AFRICA, 1 Mar 82) 3

GUINEA

DPRK Draft Agreement Signed To Set Up Agronomic Studies Center
(HOROYA, 17-23 Jan 82) 5

LIBERIA

Official Says Agencies To Be Probed for Employment of Illegal Aliens
(J. N. Elliott; NEW LIBERIAN, 26 Feb 82) 7

Indian, Lebanese Businesses Urged To Pay Arrears to British ECG
(Napolein A. Teage; NEW LIBERIAN, 26 Feb 82)..... 9

UN Inter-Agency Mission To Visit in Mid March
(NEW LIBERIAN, 26 Feb 82) 11

Constitution Commission Holding Last in Series of Public Hearings
(Joe Moore Goweh; DAILY OBSERVER, 24 Feb 82) 13

Committee To Study 5-Year Survival Program Proposed by LAMCO
(NEW LIBERIAN, 25 Feb 82) 14

Executive Workshop on Training Policy Postponed
(NEW LIBERIAN, 25 Feb 82) 16

Government Officials Rap 'Improper Planning',
by G. Kparcon Nardoh
Minister Speaks

Peace Corps Workers To Serve Rural Areas in Health, Education
(Klon Hinneh; NEW LIBERIAN, 26 Feb 82) 19

Petroleum Products Shipment Arrives, Another Expected
(NEW LIBERIAN, 26 Feb 82) 20

Briefs
Minister on U.S. Tour 21

MALAWI

Organization Planned To Aid Small Businessmen
(Editorial; DAILY TIMES, 26 Feb 82) 22

High Tobacco Production Expected This Year
(MALAWI NEWS, 20-26 Feb 82) 24

Briefs
Oil Search Next Month 25

MAURITIUS

INTRACORP Arouses Comments, Controversy
(THE NATION, various dates) 26

INTRACORP Follows Capitalist Principles
INTRACORP and Rogers
INTRACORP's Dealings

SENEGAMBIA

Minister Says There Will Be No Rice Shortage This Year
(LE SOLEIL, 27 Jan 82) 30

Tunisian Military Cooperation Discussed During Minister's Visit
(LE SOLEIL, 28 Jan 82) 31

Economy Said To Be Dangerously Biased Against Food Output
(Mark Doyle; WEST AFRICA, 1 Mar 82) 32

SIERRA LEONE

President Calls for Cooperation of People of Kono
(DAILY MAIL, 1 Mar 82) 35

Cuba's Revolutionary Achievements Hailed
(DAILY MAIL, 1 Mar 82) 37

Briefs
Baffin-River Bridge Opens 38
SSD Chief Promoted 38
Muslim Brotherhood 38

SOUTH AFRICA

Nationalist Party on the Verge of a Serious Split
(DIE BURGER, 25 Feb 82) 39

Power Sharing Sparks Revolt, by Alf Ries
Botha Qualifies Power Sharing, by Freek Swart
Treurnicht Against Power Sharing,
Andries Treurnicht Interview
Call for Unity, P.W. Botha Interview
Appeal to Right Wingers
Correspondence Preceding Rightists' Revolt
Absences Noted in Caucus
Transvalers Side With Treurnicht
Rebels Seek Party Control
Fence Sitter, Rebels Comment
Mixed Feelings of Council Members
Progressive Federal Party Reaction
Labor Party Reaction
National Conservative Party Reaction
Council Supports Botha
Support From Deputies
Johannesburg City Council Support
Support From Queenstown District
Orange Free State Support
Support From Minister Schoeman
Support From Natal Members
U.S. Observing South Africa

SWAZILAND

Split in Government Rumored
(James Dlamini; THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND, 5 Mar 82) 64

Reportage on Ermelo Meeting on Kangwane
(THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND, various dates) 65

Black Cultural Alliance, by Nonceba Gumede
Gatsha Attack, by James Dlamini

Ngwenya Joins Fight Against Incorporation of Kangwane
(James Dlamini; THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND, 2 Mar 82) 68

Buthelezi-Mabuza Deal on Kangwane Claimed
(James Dlamini; THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND, 5 Mar 82) 69

Industry Minister on Creation of More Jobs
(Mashumi Twala; THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND, 4 Mar 82) 71

Spanish Auto Firm To Open Factory
(Charity Tshabalal; THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND, 5 Mar 82) 72

Union Accuses Expatriots of 'Plot'
(Mashumi Twala; THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND, 2 Mar 82) 73

Details of Budget Debate Reported
(James Dlamini; THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND, 4 Mar 82) 74

Senators Reject South African Funded Silos Bill
(James Dlamini; THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND, 4 Mar 82) 76

Parliamentarians Call for Pay Equalization
(James Dlamini; THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND, 3 Mar 82) 77

PM Sets Up Joint Development Body
(Mandla Magagula; THE SWAZI OBSERVER, 27 Feb 82) 78

TANZANIA

Tanzanian, Burundian Parties Pledge Increased Cooperation
(Halima Shariff; DAILY NEWS, 3 Mar 82) 80

Nation Will Ratify RFTA Agreement by End of Month
(Elizabeth Marealle; DAILY NEWS, 1 Mar 82) 81

SUDECO Taking Measures To Fill Vacant Posts
(DAILY NEWS, 1 Mar 82) 83

Tanzania, Mozambique Agree on Trade Protocol
(Isaac Mruma; DAILY NEWS, 27 Feb 82) 84

Minister Stresses Consolidation of Existing Mines
(DAILY NEWS, 27 Feb 82) 85

French CGT, Juwata Issue Joint Statement
(Emma Faraji; DAILY NEWS, 27 Feb 82) 86

Certificate Award Ceremony for Youths Completing JKU Scheduled
(Ally Saleh; DAILY NEWS, 28 Feb 82) 87

Zanzibar To Send Ships to Madagascar for Repairs
(Ali Saleh; DAILY NEWS, 27 Feb 82) 88

EEC To Finance Program To Repair Trucks, Busses
(Mkumbwa Ally; DAILY NEWS, 27 Feb 82) 89

Party Secretary Clarifies CCM Constitution on Renting
(DAILY NEWS, 25 Feb 82) 91

Mbeya Cement Plant To Start Production in June
(Charles Kizigha; DAILY NEWS, 25 Feb 82) 92

Shutdown Sugar Factory Resumes Production
(Ally Saleh; DAILY NEWS, 26 Feb 82) 93

Paper Mill Construction Almost Half Completed
(DAILY NEWS, 3 Mar 82) 94

FRG Studies Show Rice Project 'Not Feasible'
(DAILY NEWS, 3 Mar 82) 95

Briefs
Cuban Cooperation Agreement 96
Young Pioneers' Training Hindered 96

UGANDA

Rural Police Force To Be Improved
(Eva Lubwama; UGANDA TIMES, 23 Feb 82) 97

UPPER VOLTA

Food-Aid Self-Help Program Seen Getting Poor Results
(WEST AFRICA, 1 Mar 82) 98

Briefs
Government Pay Held Up 100
Lipad Members Released 100

ZAIRE

Observer of Zairian Community in Brussels Reports
(WEST AFRICA, 8 Mar 82) 101

Briefs
Zambian Border Clash 103

ZAMBIA

Government Officials Admit Civil Service 'Riddled With Inefficiency'
(Francis Mwanza; SUNDAY NEWS, 28 Feb 82) 104

CONDITION OF COUNTRY SAID TO BE BECOMING DESPERATE

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 p 547

[Text] THIS MAGAZINE has written much about the Chad imbroglio. In January we carried an editorial warning that there was a potentially grave situation there. Only in last week's issue we set out the dangers involved in the present total impasse after the special OAU meeting in Nairobi on February 11-12. In Nairobi the OAU line of wholehearted support for the GUNT (Government of National Unity) and President Goukhouni Weddeye seemed to flag, and priority was placed on a firm commitment to a political solution, i.e. reconciliation of the GUNT with the dissident Hissen Habré, with a timetable for a ceasefire and elections, and an OAU withdrawal by June 30.

The OAU's change of tack has clearly been dictated by the impossibility of maintaining the OAU international peacekeeping force in Chad if no-one is willing to pay for it, and by the mounting evidence of an increasingly tense military situation (see our report on page 613). There is understandable concern in different parts of Africa that the OAU had been ensnared in Chad, and should have the courage of its convictions and continue to support the GUNT. As it is, the OAU risks having the worst of all worlds and suffering a serious blow to its prestige.

Behind this concern is disappointment that the international backing for the OAU operation has not been more forthcoming. One of the obstacles to getting any African-based intervention force off the ground, even when first mooted in 1980, was the inability of OAU members themselves, and the unwillingness of outside interested parties, to find the finance. If the idea finally took root last October, it was because guarantees had been given, particularly by the French. But these are apparently not enough to hold the whole action together.

The estimated cost of the OAU force until the June withdrawal has been put at over $150m, which would mean that for a full year it could be up to $300m. Would it be so hard for a wide international consortium of interested parties to find the political will and coherence to put such a package together? Or is it more a question of logistics and co-ordination, rather than finance?

There are contradictory reports from France about the continued enthusiasm of Mitterrand and his government for the GUNT. What doubts exist have certainly been fuelled by the prominent reports in French newspapers, including Le Monde, detailing the extent of Hissen Habré's recent military successes. A report that French arms deliveries to the GUNT are to be stopped was denied. Coming at the same time as the OAU turnabout, President Goukhouni's proclaimed sense of betrayal is understandable. If the military situation is as delicate as seems possible, a major crisis may be imminent.

The irony in this situation that nobody sought for, is that Habré is drawing the benefits now of the situation that existed before the Libyan withdrawal. At that time, international obsessions with Libya caused the US-Cairo-Khartoum alliance (with maybe Saudi Arabia as another interested party) to pick Habré off the ground, and with the aid of money and arms it is scarcely surprising that Habré is carrying on doing what he was programmed to do, even at the expense of embarrassing his backers. What has almost certainly not changed is the hostility of other factions to working with him. This might not matter were he to achieve a substantial military success, but his insistence on a political solution suggests he believes this extremely difficult at present.

The worry for everybody is that the situation appears out of control, and the OAU is stuck there in the middle. As we said on January 18, OAU and Nigerian interests are at stake, those of all other surrounding countries, as well as arguably the future of France's policy in Africa and ultimately the whole range of western relationships with Africa. The policies of the new socialist government in France could, in particular, be put to their first serious test by Chad. Until now M. Mitterrand had seemed to want to keep a high profile neo-Gaullist posture in Africa, maintaining the policies of the last 20 years. Sooner or later this implies a military intervention of some kind and if he is unwilling to do it even for a socialist-leaning government like the GUNT, the question will surely be asked, would the French do it anywhere else?

For Chad, the immediate future appears to be a return to the same old square one, visited so many times before. This time many more reputations are getting involved, and the stakes are still rising, as the condition of the country itself becomes more desperate. The coincidence of the date of OAU withdrawal with the probable opening of the OAU's Tripoli summit is ominous, not least because Libya is being very quiet about Chad at the moment. Not surprisingly, as we mentioned last week, the UN is being mentioned again as a possible saviour, but it would really be coming in to pick up the fragments. This would be one more step towards the internationalisation of the Chad crisis, and there are many who can confirm that it is a furnace that burns all who touch it.

CSO: 4700/936

SIGNIFICANCE OF CATHOLIC CHURCH'S REVIVAL NOTED

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 pp 550-551

[Article by Richard Pennell]

[Text] THE POPE'S visit to Equatorial Guinea received the least coverage of all the four West African countries from which he has just returned. Yet it was one of the most important, certainly to the Catholic community in that unhappy country which is still reeling from the onslaught on the Church by the Macias regime overthrown in 1979.

When the former Spanish colony became independent in 1968 it had one of the highest per capita gross national products in West Africa. It also had one of the highest literacy rates and a Catholic Church which claimed the allegiance of 80 per cent of the population. There was an extensive African priesthood and a black bishop was appointed in 1966. Around 30 per cent of primary schoolchildren were educated in church schools and secondary education was confined to Catholic seminaries. Equatorial Guinea at this time had one of the most intensive religious substructures in Africa.

However, the Church quickly came under attack, partly because the main religious order — the Claretian Fathers — had close links with the Spanish state, and partly because the new dictator, Francisco Macias, saw the Church locally as a power-base which was antagonistic to him. The two bishops, one African the other Spanish, went into exile in 1974, but that only marked the beginning of persecution. Macias proclaimed himself President for Life and assigned to himself a number of titles — including "The only miracle of Equatorial Guinea". In 1974 he demanded that all priests should proclaim from the pulpit "Never without Macias, always with Macias. Down with colonialism and the ambitious". Later he went further and officials of the sole political party were apt to quote a new slogan: "There is no other God than Macias". At the same time a large number of missionaries and religious were expelled, precipitating a further collapse of the education and health services. In 1976 private religious meetings were banned and restrictions put on the movements of priests. Churches were desecrated — one became an arsenal — as were both the cathedrals — one on the mainland the other on the island of Bioko (formerly Fernando Poo). In 1978 the Church itself was banned, and Macias proclaimed Equatorial Guinea as Africa's first atheist state. Six Spanish priests were held in prison and only released when the Spanish Government paid a ransom of about $55,000. The remaining Guinean priests were largely murdered. When Macias was finally overthrown by Teodoro Nguema in 1979, he was tried and sentenced to death. Macias, who was baptised a Catholic, refused to speak to a priest before his execution. "I have nothing to confess," he said, "I have done nothing wrong."

The explanation for Macias's actions may partly lie in the links between the Catholic Church and Spain, the former coloniser. However, he turned on the small Protestant community, on the island since the beginning of the 19th century. Their churches were closed down in 1978 as well. In fact, the terrorist activities of the state under Macias were not confined simply to the two churches. Ethnic groups other than his own were oppressed, and the cocoa plantations collapsed when the Nigerian workers who kept them running fled in terror of their lives.

Once Nguema took over restrictions on the Church were lifted, along with a good deal of the other more oppressive features of Macias's rule. Negotiations with the Nigerians for the return of the plantation workers began at the end of last year. Gradually both secular and religious life began to return to an approximation of normal. When the churches were reopened, people queued outside them to have their children baptised. More importantly, religious workers started to return. The Spanish sent aid and a team of experts to help piece together the shattered economy and infrastructure. With them came 70 religious to help the education system.

Rebuilding Links With Spain

The return of the Catholic Church is, however, closely linked with Nguema's attempts to rebuild links with Spain, which collapsed under Macias, to be replaced by Soviet influence. Spain has committed very large sums of money in an effort to rebuild her prestige in her former colony. Troops have been sent to help to maintain the Obiang government in power, and a great deal of investment in fishing and oil exploration has taken place (West Africa, November 23, 1981).

The return of Spanish priests is one part of this effort.

The revival of the Catholic Church has significance beyond the immediate political considerations, however. Firstly, it is a step towards the rebuilding of Equatorial Guinea's shattered society, as schools and hospitals once again jerk into life. Secondly it marks the end of an all-pervasive terror which characterised the Macias regime. Thirdly it may be seen as part of the return of Spanish influence in the former colony. Finally it restores to the people of Equatorial Guinea themselves freedom of religion. The Pope's visit, which lasted only a few hours on February 18 will, of course, symbolise this last point more clearly. He celebrated Mass in the Plaza de Libertad — but then spent most of the rest of his visit with President Nguema, emphasising the political importance of the visit.

CSO: 4700/936

DPRK DRAFT AGREEMENT SIGNED TO SET UP AGRONOMIC STUDIES CENTER

Conakry HOROYA in French No 2901, 17-23 Jan 82 p 32

[Excerpts] With Comrade Dr Lansana Beavogui, prime minister in charge of planning and statistics and a BPN [National Political Bureau] member, presiding at noon on Wednesday, 13 January 1982, the Primature conference hall was the site of an important ceremony for the signing of a draft agreement between our country and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to establish an Agronomic Studies Center in the Kindia Region.

Going beyond any cult of exclusivity, Wednesday's initialing by Comrade Senainon Behanzin, BPN secretary and minister of FAPA [Agro-Pastoral District Farms] and agricultural cooperatives, and the vice chairman of the DPRK National Agricultural Commission is of major significance because of the scope of the agreement.

Comrade Dr Lansana Beavogui paid a stirring and respectful tribute to the great leader of the Korean people for scheduling this conference, for the interest, attention and concern shown for the development of nonaligned countries, and for selecting Guinea as the site of the West African center.

Finally, the prime minister reaffirmed our country's intention to develop and strengthen the sound ties of productive Guinean-Korean cooperation and then recalled the motivating ideas of our development strategy, whose fundamental basis is the agro-pastoral sector.

The speech by Comrade Dr Lansana Beavogui, prime minister in charge of planning and statistics and a BPN member, followed that of the vice chairman of the DPRK National Agricultural Commission, who is also the head of the delegation.

The vice chairman noted the excellence of Guinean-Korean cooperative relations and the main operating concerns of the Agronomic Studies Center.

The mission's main purpose is to research, perfect and promote new agricultural methods which are suited to our countries' ecoclimatic conditions.

Thus the aim of the Agronomic Studies Center, where agronomists and technicians of Korea, Guinea and other countries in the subregion will work together in perfect harmony, is to encourage our peoples to achieve the much-desired goal of food self-sufficiency.

This means that the initialing of the draft agreement for establishing the Agronomic Center broadens the national economic horizon through the production of decisive programs for diverse training, thus strengthening the enormous efforts made by our party-government to promote agriculture.

11915
CSO: 4719/532

OFFICIAL SAYS AGENCIES TO BE PROBED FOR EMPLOYMENT OF ILLEGAL ALIENS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 26 Feb 82 pp 1, 6

[Article by J. N. Elliott]

[Text] The Immigration Bureau is to begin scrutinizing all Government Ministries and Agencies with a view of uprooting foreign nationals who have not met the immigration requirements, Deputy Immigration Commissioner David M. Barshell disclosed Thursday.

He said the measure is basically to halt the fradulent means which are reportedly being used by some foreigners illegally seeking employment in the country.

Deputy Commissioner Barshell in an interview Thursday with the NEW LIBERIAN, said the Immigration Bureau has observed that some aliens in the employ of government were fradulently masquerading as Liberian citizens while others, he alleged, were in the possession of fake Liberian Citizenship.

Mr. Barshell said the current exercise instituted by his bureau is done annually to uncover aliens that are employed without complying with immigration regulations.

He said all foreign nationals employed by government that are found through investigative scrutiny to have falsified Liberian Citizenship would face immediate repatriation.

BOGUS NATURALIZATION CERTS.

When asked how aliens could possess Naturalization Certificate without meeting the immigration regualtions, Commissioner Barshell explained that before April 12, 1980, some clerks of court at the Temple of Justice issued naturalization certificates to some aliens without the knowledge of the court and the Immigration Bureau. He said this is another issue which the bureau will be investigating shortly.

Explaining the naturalization procedure, Mr. Barshell said before a person can become a citizen, he should first apply for a permit of residence. He said after renewing the permit for two years period, the person may file in a declaration of intention to become a citizen.

If documents of the persons are approved and certified by the bureau, the person is then recommended to the courts for naturalization, Commissioner Barshell explained.

It may be recalled that an alien at the Ministry of Commerce was recently dismissed for falsifying Liberian Citizenship. He was an Assistant Director of Standards.

CSO: 4700/932

INDIAN, LEBANESE BUSINESSES URGED TO PAY ARREARS TO BRITISH ECG

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 26 Feb 82 pp 1,6

[Article by Napoleon A. Teage]

[Text] The Minister of Planning and Economic Affairs, Dr. Byron Tarr, Thursday released the names of 95 Indian and Lebanese firms here that have failed, inspite of repeated warning from government, to settle their arrears with the British Export Credit Guarantee (ECG) in London.

In a note to the Ministry of Information Thursday, Minister Tarr said as a result of the failure of the firms to settle their arears, the British ECG has ceased providing coverage for goods ordered by Liberian firms.

In a recent speech to the Liberian Chamber of Commerce, Minister Tarr urged the firms to speedily pay their arrears, in order that Liberia might continue to benefit from the British ECG coverage.

LETTERS

Minister Tarr also wrote to the leaders of the Indian and Lebanese Communities here, urging them to honour their obligations to the Britisn ECG. However Minister Tarr told the NEW LIBERIAN Thursday that his notes have not been replied nor adhered to by the two Communities.

In recent time, many business houses have been complaining about "bad business" due to what they called "high taxes" coupled also with the alleged failure of banks here to open letters of credit for them.

ECONOMIC STRAIN

However, according to sources close to government, more aids to Liberia in order to boost its economy is a good thing, but added, that "with unscrupulous business practices still going on in the country by several firms, the economy could suffer some set-backs,"

It would be wise, according to another source, if the Ministry of Commerce along with other agencies of government could keep an "eagle's eye" on those who are seemingly bent on "sucking the life-blood of the economy, and creating a bad financial image for the country abroad."

SECOND TIME

This is maintime the second time that the British ECG has suspended providing coverage to goods ordered by Liberian firms. The first occasion was shortly following the April 12 Revolution.

However, through the instrumentality of government, the British Government was able to convince the British ECG to re-consider its action against businesses in Liberia. The line was again opened in early 1981.

In view of Government's efforts, business firms should do all within their means to live up to international commitments confidence is the basis of a sound and heathly economy.

Meanwhile, beginning Monday, the Ministry of Planning through the NEW LIBERIAN will begin publishing the full list of names of the business firms involved, and the amount they owe.

CSO: 4700/932

UN INTER-AGENCY MISSION TO VISIT IN MID-MARCH

Montovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 26 Feb 82 pp 1, 6

[Text] Liberia, currently listed among 61 developed and developing nations of the world as a middle income country, has applied to the United Nations in New York, for a change of status as a Least Developed Country (LDC).

The country made the application mid 1981, as a result of the unfavourable economic condition the Liberian Government is encountering.

Todate, Liberia is among 15 Black African States that have been classified by the International Development Association (IDA), and other related organizations as a middle income country.

According to the World Bank Indicator for 1981, countries classified under the LDC status have per capital income (1960-79) of between $80.00 and $370.00.

Countries listed as middle income earners have per capital income ranging from $380.00 to $4,380.,according to the Indicator.

Liberia, according to the Indicator,has a per capital income of $500.00. She is placed among other middle income African countries such as Egypt,$480,00,Zambia $500.00, Cameroon, $560.00, Nigeria, $670.00; and the Ivory Coast $1,040.

Some Least Developed Countries include Sierra Leone, with a per capital income of $250.00; Tanzania, $260.00, Bangladesh, $80.00, Chad, $110.00 and Ethiopia, $130.00.

U. N. MISSION

On Wednesday, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs here reported that an Inter-Agency Mission of the U.N. is to visit Liberia from March 9 to 17, to consult with government on additional assistance to the country.

The Foreign Ministry release said the mission's visit to Liberia follows a UN. General Assembly's resolution number 36/207, adopted December 17, in response to Liberia's request to be included in the list of Least Developed Countries.

The resolution on Liberia, the release said, affirmed the urgent need for international action to assist the Liberian Government and accordingly, appealed to all member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the UN System and International development and financial institutions to contribute generously, through multilateral and bilateral channels to the reconstruction of and development of Liberia.

CSO: 4700/932

CONSTITUTION COMMISSION HOLDING LAST IN SERIES OF PUBLIC HEARINGS

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 24 Feb 82 pp 1, 10

[Article by Joe Moore Goweh]

[Text]

The last in the series of public hearings being conducted by the National Constitution Commission is slated to be held this month in four localities in Monrovia and its environs.

Already, the Commission has conducted hearings in all of the counties and territories of Liberia in a bid to solicit comments and suggestions on the suspended constitution and what the citizens would like to see in the new document.

According to the itinery from the Commission's headquarters at the OAU Village in Virginia near Monrovia, dates and areas where the hearings will be held are as follows:

Soniwen community, Monrovia City Hall, Thursday, February 25, 5 p.m.; Medical and Dental Association and the Liberia Federation of Labour Unions, Monrovia City Hall, February 25, 7 p.m.; Bassa Community, Monrovia City Hall, Friday, February 26, 5 p.m; and Lorma Quarters Community, Monrovia City Hall, Saturday, February 27, 5 p.m.

Other areas include: Paynesville Community, Paynesville City, Saturday, February 27, 5 p.m.; New Kru Town Community, Sunday, February 28, 2 p.m.; West Point Community, West Point school building, Sunday, February 28, 3 p.m.; and Slipway Community, Slipway, Sunday, February 28, 4 p.m.

The Commission is calling the public in general to these hearings.

CSO: 4700/932

COMMITTEE TO STUDY 5-YEAR SURVIVAL PROGRAM PROPOSED BY LAMCO

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 25 Feb 82 p 3

[Text] A committee comprising of management, B-shareholders and the Liberian government begin a two-day meeting in Monrovia today to study a five-year survival programme proposed by LAMCO management.

Called the Survival and Bridging Programme, its objective is to establish a scheme for the trimming of LAMCO's organization and the reduction of its capital expenditure and operating costs to levels enable the company to survive for the next five years (1982-86).

It is also to establish scheme for the feasible bridging between LAMCO's present operations (based on the Nimba/Gbahm ore deposits) and new operations combining the mining, processing and transportation of the ore from LAMCO Area ore deposits with the crushing, screening, and transportation of Mifergui ore from the Guinean-Nimba ore deposits.

The Minister of Lands, Mines and Energy, Major Fodee Kromah, is to represent the Liberian Government at this meeting which comes at a time when the European Steel Industry, LAMCO's main market, is experiencing severe economic problems, according to Minister Kromah.

PRICE INCREASES

LAMCO is said to be claiming that price increases in 1979 and 1980 after two years of declining prices have not covered even inflationary cost increases experienced in 1980.

According to Minister Kromah, in 1979, LAMCO's operations resulted in a net loss of $32.3 million, while in 1980, net loss amounted to $3.2 million, while 1981 losses amounted to about $21 million.

Shipments declined by 8.6 percent in 1980 to about 7.5 million tons, as compared to 8.1 million tons in 1979. Total revenues increased in 1980 to $110.9 million from $104 million in 1979 primarily due to a 15.8 percent price increase over 1979.

However, the effect of the price increases was largely offset by the decline in shipments. According to LAMCO, costs of production continued to escalate due to general inflation, fuel oil price increases and higher labour costs.

The Joint Venture austerity programme began in 1977 to reduce cash outflow has continued. Major capital expenditures have been postponed, the pellet plant has shut down and some employees have been made redundant.

According to Dr. Kromah, LAMCO has not been able to declare dividends since 1977. As of December 31, 1980, the commulative unpaid dividends amount to $23.3 million and the unpaid amounts of redeemable preferred stocks totalled $14.6 million. Besides, the financial condition of the company continued to deteriorate in such a way that the company finds it difficult to maintain its present level of operations.

GOOD NEWS

Meanwhile, the only good news coming from LAMCO Head Office in Stockholm is that the company has concluded with its German customers a 22 percent price increase for the 1982 deliveries.

According to Minister Kromah, this is a major improvement over 1981 when the company experienced a price reduction of four percent. Also freight rate is expected to be reduced from $8.30 per ton to $6.25 per ton Monrovia-Rotterdam. This reduction in freight rate of $2.05 per ton over 1981 deliveries will result in a one and half cent price escalation also.

Minister Kromah said the Liberian government is aware of the socio-economic problems that would result if operations at LAMCO were shut down; therefore, all efforts must be made to prolong the life of the mine even if its means only to keep our people employed.

The Minister said however that long term objectives must take into account diversification of our economy in order to reduce our dependence on iron ore.

"This can be achieved through an aggressive and progressive mineral development policy that is integrated into the national socio-economic plan - a policy which we are committed to do," he said.

CSO: 4700/932

EXECUTIVE WORKSHOP ON TRAINING POLICY POSTPONED

Government Officials Rap 'Improper Planning'

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 25 Feb 82 pp 3, 6

[Article by G. Kparcon Nardoh]

[Text] Protesting over what they called "improper planning," Cabinet Ministers, heads of Public Corporations and other high ranking government officials Wednesday boycotted an Executive Workshop on Training Policy organized for them by the Institute of Public Administration and the Civil Service Agency.

The officials who had all gathered at the IPA Building in Sinkor for the opening of the workshop, only permitted the Minister of Planning and Economic Affairs, Dr. Byron Tarr, to deliver his keynote address on behalf of the Head of State C-I-C Samuel K. Doe.

The officials argued that the IPA and Civil Service Agency had failed to furnish them with the necessary mechanism surrounding the workshop to have them prepared for discussions.

NO TOPIC

They said there was no topic, outlining the nature and things to be discussed at the workshop ... among other things.

The protest raised by Deputy Justice Minister Captain Eugene Cooper, was strongly supported by Information Minister Lt. Col. Gray D. Allison, Commerce Minister Capt. E.Sumo Jones, Public Works Minister Major Erwin Brooks, all of whom agreed that the workshop be postponed to a later day, at which time the organizers should furnish them, in print, major topics to be duscussed during the workshop.

Civil Service Agency Director General Lennie Kesselly, the chairlady of the workshop, and IPA Director General Austine Freeman, earlier argued that the keynote address delivered by Dr. Tarr contained major issues of the workshop.

MAJOR PLATFORM

But in support of the workshop's postponement,

Special Military Tribunal members Col. Alfred Flomo told the organizers that the workshop was the "major platform" for the second Republic during which (the workshop) things should not be taken lightly. "Manpower development should be the beginning point...the Civil Service should have set guidelines for the workshop," he pointed out.

The workshop which also brought together members of the PRC, the Supreme Court of Liberia and Military Tribunal, members of international organizations, was then rescheduled to a later day.

NO SPECIFIC DATE

According to the organizers, though no specific date was set, the workshop will be held at the same venue four weeks from now, to enable them undergo effective planning.

Because of the importance government attaches to the workshop, the Head of State and Chairman of the PRC, C-I-C Samuel K. Doe, was to deliver the keynote address. But due to some official engagements, he designated the Minister of Planning and Economic Affairs, Dr. S. Byron Tarr, who spoke at the opening.

Minister Speaks

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 25 Feb 82 pp 1, 6

[Text] The Minister of Planning and Economic Affairs Dr. Byron Tarr, said Wednesday that the Institute of Public Administration (IPA) has not efficiently discharged the magnitude of responsibility delegated to it since its establishment in 1969.

Dr. Tarr, delivering the keynote address on behalf of the Head of State at an Executive Workshop on Training Policy sponsored by the IPA and Civil Service Agency, suggested that IPA be transferred to the University of Liberia, with a view to improving the quality of public sector-manpower.

He said IPA was established, among many things, to improve the administrative performance and professional capabilities of the public services through training of personnel researching problems of public administration and holding consultation in public administration with the purpose of developing, for maximum utilization, the potential sources of talent of manpower of the country.

Unfortunately, Dr. Tarr said, "I am not so sure that all these functions have been or are being effectively met. This is a pity," he told high ranking government officials who attended the opening of the workshop Wednesday morning.

He continued: "It is a pity because while improved administrative management is not a panacea for the ills that plague development, because it requires parallel changes in the rest of society, it is nevertheless a strategic point which breaks into the vicious circles that keep a developing society poor."

Liberia, Dr. Tarr said, is in critical need of skilled manpower, for production of which training is vitally necessary for the promotion of national economic development.

He pointed out that the problem with our training program is the quality of its contents, a solution of which, he added, requires, among other things, improving the quality of first-level general education, rather than the establishment of training units in government agencies.

Emphasizing that training for national development is not restricted to in-service training of public sector employees, the nation's chief economic planner said to be meaningful from a development perspective, training must focus on the rural and urban poor, with a view to improving their well-being, as together the rural and urban poor constitute the vast majority of the population, an increase in the productivity of which would contribute substantially to overall national development.

Dr. Tarr told the officials that "As we go about seeking measures for the revitalization of the Liberian economy, let us hope that training, as an instrument of national development, will begin to stir and show some sign of life and dynamism in the years ahead."

CSO: 4700/932

PEACE CORPS WORKERS TO SERVE RURAL AREAS IN HEALTH, EDUCATION

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 26 Feb 82 p 3

[Article by Klon Hinneh]

[Text] One hundred and three Peace Corps Volunteers have taken oath to impart their skills and learning to the people of rural Liberia, after a three-week work orientation program in Gbarnga, Bong County.

The volunteers, some of whom were sworn in on Wednesday and the rest Thursday, are to serve principally in the area of Health and Education.

The volunteers are to be assigned to mostly rural Liberia to instruct various disciplines such as vocational, agriculture, healthand, industrial arts, among others.

During the three-week orientation program, the volunteers were taught various local languages, including Vai, Lorma, Mano, Kru, Kpelle, Gio, Gbandi, Grebo, Sarpoh, Krahn, Gola, and Bassa.

Receiving the volunteers at the Bong County Administrative Building on behalf of Education Minister Dr. George Boley, Assistant Education Minister Tedi Stewart urged them to be committed and dedicated to duty.

Mr. Saye Kenneh, local language coordinator, appealed to the volunteers to go to their various places of assignment with determination.

Present at the ceremony were the American Ambassador to Liberia William L. Swing, Dr. Charles A. Martin, Peace Corps Director; and Bong County Superintendent Badeh Zaza, Emma Johnson, and Prisca Austin.

CSO: 4700/932

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS SHIPMENT ARRIVES, ANOTHER EXPECTED

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 26 Feb 82 p 3

[Text] An oil tanker, the British Tay, discharged 2,000 metric tons of gasoline and 5,000 metric tons of gas oil at the Monrovia Free Port Thursday. The petroleum products were purchased by the Liberia Petroleum Refining Company.

The shipment, according to LPRC sources, is intended to ensure adequate supply of the products on the market.

These products were purchased by LPRC following the reduction of gasoline output as a result of mechanical problems which recently developed at the company's refinery installations at Gardnersville.

Gas shortage hit Monrovia last Sunday evening when motorists had to que at various filling stations around the city for gas for more than three hours.

The situations continued Monday as some motorists contacted said they were finding it difficult to fill their tanks in order to facilitate the transport of passengers to the surburbs of Monrovia.

LPRC officials however assured the public that gas would be in the country for consumption by Thursday.

Meanwhile, another consignment of 5,000 metric tons of gasoline is expected here by the middle of March.

Due to the mechanical breakdown at the refinery, gasoline production at LPRC was reduced from 70,000 gallons per day to 40,000 gallons.

But LPRC sources said Thursday that production at the refinery has been increased from 38,000 gallons to 54,000 per day as engineers of the company strive to correct the fault.

CSO: 4700/932

BRIEFS

MINISTER ON U.S. TOUR--The Assistant Minister of Labour for Trade Union Affairs, Mr. David Zarlee, returned home over the weekend after a 15-week study leave in the United States of America. Mr. Zarlee told reporters upon arrival that the course was fruitful and rewarding. He noted that such exposure was necessary and timely because it afforded him the opportunity to broaden his scope of knowledge in trade union administration, collective bargaining processes and arbitration procedures among other subjects. Minister Zarlee said he would strive to monitor trade union movements and restructure their activities to ensure industrial peace and harmony at the plant level. He lauded the African-American Labour Center in Washington, D.C. who sponsored the fellowship and hoped that other international institutions would follow this example by training representatives from developing countries. [Text] [Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 24 Feb 82 p 3]

CSO: 4700/932

ORGANIZATION PLANNED TO AID SMALL BUSINESSMEN

Blantyre DAILY TIMES in English 26 Feb 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Challenge for Malawian Businessmen"]

[Text]

THE revelation by the Minister of Trade and Industry, Mr. H.Y. Kayira, of plans to form an organisation whose sole purpose will be to assist small-scale businessmen, offfers new hope for the advancement of the industrial sector. And to the aspiring businessmen whose handicap was finance, the organisation will act as a stepping stone for them to enter the business world, thereby seeing their long time dreams come true.

The projected organisation, to be known as Small-scale Enterprise Development Organisation of Malaŵi (SEDOM), is expected to function as an executing agency for the small-scale enterprise development programme which will have Government backing. The aim is to provide financial and technical assistance as well as carry out the development of industrial land and workshops to cater for individual small enterprises owned and managed by Malaŵians privately.

A few years ago, a similar organisation called the Development of Malaŵian Traders Trust was formed. Sponsored by the Ministry of Trade and Industry with funding from Government, commerce and industry and a grant from the United States-based development organisation, Private Agencies Collaborating Together (PACT), it is an extension programme designed to reach people in their places of business.

Unlike the Development of Malaŵian Traders Trust, a private non-profit organisation which was established mainly to assist businessmen to increase their managerial capabilities, the new organisation however, goes a step further, in that in addition to offering technical advice, it will also give businessmen financial back-up.

During the past few years, Malaŵians have been encouraged to take the opportunity which His Excellency the Life President, Ngwazi Dr. H. Kamuzu Banda, created for them to go into business. Although many people had little business experience or capital, they invested whatever they had, plus their ambitious desire to reach an economic take-off stage. Those who worked hard are doing well, while others have still a long way to go. That is why the new organisation has to be lauded for its declared goals.

If other Malaŵians have done well by trial and error, let many more take the challenge and respond to the Government's efforts of promoting small-scale enterprises in a bid to diversify the country's economy.

CSO: 4700/931

HIGH TOBACCO PRODUCTION EXPECTED THIS YEAR

Blantyre MALAWI NEWS in English 20-26 Feb 82 p 1

[Text]

INDICATIONS are that 1982 will be another boom year for Malawi's tobacco farmers - the second in succession after the depressed prices of 1980. The Auction Floors will open on April 14.

Flue-cured tobacco production is expected to come close to last year's total of 19.5 million kilograms, while Burley production will be substantially higher than last year, according to the Tobacco Control Commission (TCC).

The increased Burley crop - estimated at between 23 - 26 million kg. compared to 18.8 million kg. last year - follows the soaring demand for this type of tobacco, which saw prices increase to a record average price of 231.6 tambala per kilogram in 1981.

"Indications are that the market for flue-cured and Burley tobacco — and therefore the prices — should be firm this year, particularly for the better-quality grades," TCC secretary Mr. R.G. Buckingham said this week. "The deciding factor will be quality, however. High grades will always fetch good prices."

WELCOME BOOST

Last year's total tobacco crop of just over 50 million kg. was sold for slightly under K100 million at an average price of 195.92 kg. — a welcome boost to Malawi's farmers and to the country's foreign reserves.

In 1980, the tobacco harvest of 54 million kg. fetched a total of only K59.2 million at an average price of 108.82t/kg.

Mr. Buckingham pointed out that there are no restrictions on growing flue-cured and Burley tobacco. "We would like to see as much as possible grown, provided quality is maintained," he said.

ADMARC

Admarc, which is responsible for purchasing smallholder dark-fired, sun-air cured and oriental tobacco, also expects a good year.

The Corporation's crop controller, Mr. H.W. Kabambe, says the trade requirement is between 2-2.5 million kg. of sun-air cured, 0.8 million kg. of Southern dark-fired, more than 1 million kg. of oriental and 12-14 million kg. of Northern Division dark-fired.

"Except for Northern Division dark fired, Admarc expects to buy from farmers the quantities required by the trade," Mr. Kabambe said.

CSO: 4700/931

BRIEFS

OIL SEARCH NEXT MONTH--The Dutch oil company Shell Exploration is to search for oil and gas on the bed of Lake Malawi under an agreement with the Government, the Malawi News Agency reported this week. Mana quoted a spokesman for the Ministry of Forestry and Natural Resources as saying the work would begin next month. No details of the agreement were given. In a press statement last week the Ministry said that a major oil company would carry out airborne geophysical work after the rains had ceased. The agreement followed an investigation last year by a United States scientific team into fossil pollen in order to build up a picture of climatic changes that have taken place in Malawi over the last few million years. In the course of this investigation, but incidental to it, the scientists were able to demonstrate that over wide areas of the bed of Lake Malawi there exist surprisingly large thicknesses of rocks of a type which may contain oil or gas, the statement said. "While it may be too early to say whether or not oil or gas is indeed present and can economically be brought ashore, there is no doubt that the status of the lake as an exploration target has been raised considerably," the Ministry said. [Text] [Blantyre MALAWI NEWS in English 20-26 Feb 82 p 1]

CSO: 4700/931

INTRACORP AROUSES COMMENTS, CONTROVERSY

INTRACORP Follows Capitalist Principles

Port Louis THE NATION in French 24 Jan 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] An investigation completed by THE NATION has revealed that INTRACORP [Intra-Regional Trading Corporation], the company founded by the MMM whose board chairman is Paul Raymond Berenger and whose managing director, Vishnu Lutchmeenaraidoo, likely MMM candidate, along with Harish Boodhoo, in the Souillac/Riviere des Anguilles district, is and must in fact be managed according to capitalist principles.

INTRACORP has every reason to be satisfied after scarcely two months of operations. The merchant ship "5 Juin" has already been made available to the company for regional trading, in accordance with a political decision of the Seychelles Government of France Albert Rene, a personal friend of Paul Berenger.

Through INTRACORP, television sets assembled in Mauritius will be exported to the Seychelles by the beginning of 1983. A total of 2,000 sets worth some 20 million rupees will initially be exported.

The company intends to export coconuts and salted and frozen fish to the Seychelles. Some 20 tons of "bourgeois" fish are already seeking buyers and are headed for Port Louis, while company officials negotiate an import license. The Ministry of Fishing hesitates in the face of problems that such imports would cause for the community of fishermen and also because of the fact that the "bourgeois" fish is often poisonous, according to ministry experts.

In addition, INTRACORP has decided to yield representation of the Union Lighterage Limited, owner of the "5 Juin," to Rogers. This means a closer bond between Rogers and INTRACORP. The decision came as a surprise to many.

In the meantime, Sir Gaetan Duval held a meeting Thursday at the Cinema Milan in Quatre-Bornes and, before a surprisingly large crowd, joked about the contradictions of the MMM, which mixes politics and trading.

The MMM "moderates" remain completely silent about INTRACORP. Some, less cautious, state that the company reportedly provides jobs for the party's unemployed.

As for the extreme left -- that is, "La Lit Travaiyer" of Jean-Claude Bibi and "La Lit des Classes" of Dr Ram Seegobin -- it refuses to make any statement to the press. However, we recall that members have begun to reread "Les Damnes de la Terre" by Frantz Fanon.

And what is INTRACORP, after all? It is a company founded on 30 November and whose purpose is to promote trade and regional industrial cooperation and to develop an autonomous commercial network in order to sell imported products directly to Mauritian consumers.

According to its bylaws, INTRACORP is also an investment agent for loans and other payments.

The bylaws provide that the company will engage in commerce "as capitalists, financiers, concessionaries, merchants," and will seek outlets for using capital in Mauritius and elsewhere. It can also lease or purchase properties of all kinds (presumably both real and movable property).

The company started with capital amounting to 100,000 rupees, divided into 1,000 shares worth 100 rupees each, 200 of which were bought by Berenger, Bhayat and Lutchmeonaraidoo, each having one-third.

The remaining 800 shares remain under the control of the board of directors, made up of the three above-named persons. The board members can use them "in favor of such persons, companies, body corporate, partnership being shareholders of the company, in proportion to the number of shares 'au prorata' held by them at the date of the allotment or to any person, companies, body corporate or partnership not being shareholders of the company in case of refusal by the shareholders of the company in such terms and conditions as the Board in its absolute discretion may determine and for such consideration as it shall in its absolute discretion think fit." [text in English]

Vishnu Lutchmeenaraidoo is one of the board members of SOGESCO [expansion unknown], a company that has done business in Mauritius for years. He holds 100 promoter's shares in the company, which gives him the right, according to company by-laws, to be general manager of the company, although he has been replaced on the board several times in recent years.

The other shareholders are other members of the Lutchmeenaraidoo family and private parties.

The company began in July 1975 with an authorized capital of 100,000 rupees, divided into 100 promoter's shares, and 900 regular shares. Less than half of the regular shares have been sold.

SOGESCO does business in several sectors, particularly the sale and purchase of real and movable property, the management and administration of commercial and industrial enterprises, the marketing of local and imported products, import-export, the parceling of land, service leasing contracts and hiring.

According to its by-laws, it can engage in construction and own and operate sugar or other properties, with or without plants. It can also buy cane and any other product for processing and resale.

Also according to its by-laws, a member of the board can have an interest, as a board member or shareholder, in any company or, as a board member or partner, in any company or companies with which SOGESCO has contracts or commitments.

INTRACORP and Rogers

Port Louis THE NATION in French 27 Jan 82 p 1

[Text] Under the headline "The MMM Marks Up Points," WEEKEND has announced that the INTRACORP company has apparently yielded rights to Rogers and Company for the Mauritius-Seychelles connection. It would perhaps be fitting to quote the article: "But it is not so much the savoir-faire of the MMM that is impressive, but rather, the way in which its leaders have maneuvered. By taking the initiative in such action and then transferring it to the officials in question (Rogers, Food and Allied, Moroil, the Marketing Office, and so on), the MMM has pulled off a move that few would have imagined. In so doing, it definitely marks up points, on behalf of its credibility in a sector previously little receptive to its politics."

As we reported, the sale of potatoes and onions was negotiated with the Marketing Board a few days ago without any intermediary.

An authorized spokesman for Rogers told us yesterday afternoon that its company has represented Union Lighterage Limited in Mauritius for over 25 years. It is therefore normal for Rogers and Company to be the agents for "5 Juin," just as it previously was for the "Nordvaer."

Some little pushes do more harm than good....

INTRACORP's Dealings

Port Louis THE NATION in French 28 Jan 82 p 1

[Text] In its latest issue, WEEKEND praised INTRACORP for having taken "the initiative in such action and then transferring it to the officials in question." WEEKEND was speaking about the export of certain Mauritian products and the following firms were named: Rogers, Food and Allied, Moroil and the Marketing Office. WEEKEND wrote, and we quote:

"In so doing, it definitely marks up points, on behalf of its credibility in a sector previously little receptive to its politics."

We reported yesterday that Rogers and Company, Ltd., is the agent for the "5 Juin" because it has represented Union Lighterage Limited for over 25 years and that the Marketing Office negotiated the sale of potatoes and onions directly with SEYCOM [expansion unknown].

Food and Allied stated that offers had been made to SEYCOM and that no response had yet been received. It was also reported that INTRACORP did not participate in the discussions.

Moroil told us that the Mauritian company agreed to buy copra from SEYCOM, but that it is still awaiting the Seychelles' decision concerning its offers to supply edible oil. Once again, INTRACORP had nothing to do with the transaction.

But is WEEKEND's information not intriguing? Is there not talk of rights yielded by INTRACORP in order to make public opinion aware of the nationalization of Rogers, Food and Allied, Moroil and to the reorganization of the Marketing Office, according to a formula borrowed from a Marxist manuel?

11,464
CSO: 4719/590

MINISTER SAYS THERE WILL BE NO RICE SHORTAGE THIS YEAR

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 27 Jan 82 p 2

[Excerpt] Following the appearance of the minister of state for finance and economy last month, his colleague, the minister of commerce, Mr Falilou Kane, was invited by ORTS [Office of Senegalese Radio and Television] to appear on its "Current Issues" program. The broadcast was dominated by the problem of rice, and for good reason. Falilou Kane reassured his audience more than once that there will be no shortage of rice this year. There could be no better news for the Senegalese in the beginning of this year. With the price increases (most often illegal) which we had last year, it was quite natural for journalists, listeners and viewers to ask countless questions about the Department of Economic Control. In this regard, the minister of commerce said that although it is certain that government departments will always be criticized, especially when one department is somewhat out of step with different concerns, he is nevertheless convinced that this department is discharging its mission properly. But, he added, the Department of Economic Control is having problems obtaining adequate resources, especially in regions, for watching all roads, monitoring the output of products and regularly monitoring what the many merchants are doing. At the same time, he noted, merchants complain of being visited by Economic Control agents several times on the same day.

As Mr Kane pointed out, it is true that the Ministry of Commerce includes not only Domestic Trade and Economic Control, but Foreign Trade as well, which is just as important. One of its duties is "the regulation of exports. This is the ministry's other arm, which people seem to overlook. It is true that Senegal's foreign trade status is hardly brilliant, despite the many steps taken to improve it. Is it so difficult for Senegal to export more and import less? This is the major problem, not only of Senegal, but of all countries," the minister replied. The problem is one of finding greater and greater resources to meet growing needs. Despite this problem, the minister of commerce remains optimistic. As a result of fishing (while awaiting the exploitation of our petroleum) and the new measures for stimulating imports [as published] (subsidies), the future could be brilliant.

11915
CSO: 4719/532

TUNISIAN MILITARY COOPERATION DISCUSSED DURING MINISTER'S VISIT

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 28 Jan 82 p 4

[Text] (APS [Senegalese Press Agency])--The minister of the armed forces returned to our capital yesterday after making an official visit to Tunisia. Following that visit, the joint communique published revealed that the talks concerned co-operation in the area of military training, visits of military delegations to Senegal and Tunisia and the exchange of military information and practical knowledge.

Mr Daouda Sow was received by the Tunisian prime minister, Mr Mohamed Mzali, to whom he conveyed a message of friendship and the desire for prompt reestablishment of relations for President Habib Bourguiba on behalf of his brother, President Abdou Diouf.

The minister of the armed forces also conveyed to Mr Mzali a fraternal message from Prime Minister Habib Thiam, reiterating the latter's invitation to his Tunisian counterpart to make an official visit to Senegal.

Dr Daouda Sow was also received by Mr Mongi Kooli, the leader of the Destourian Socialist Party, and by Mr Mahmoud Mestiri, secretary of state to the minister of foreign affairs.

After visiting military schools and infrastructures and reviewing problems of joint interest with regard to military cooperation, the two ministers decided on measures to strengthen cooperation between their respective departments, particularly with regard to training military cadres.

Before leaving Tunis, the minister of the armed forces invited the Tunisian minister of national defense to make an official visit to Senegal.

11915
CSO: 4719/532

ECONOMY SAID TO BE DANGEROUSLY BIASED AGAINST FOOD OUTPUT

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 pp 573-574

[Article by Mark Doyle]

[Text] "BRITAIN AND SENEGAL are in the same boat." That was the concluding remark of the Senegalese Minister of Commerce, M. Falilou Kane, at a seminar held recently in London for British businessmen. The comment was indicative of a tendency among Senegalese politicians to attribute economic problems to factors beyond their control, a tendency that has become more marked as the crisis facing the Senegalese economy has deepened.

Few would deny that the Senegalese economy shows characteristics of the dependent relations that many underdeveloped countries face. Added to this, Senegal has suffered drought in ten of the 22 years since independence.

So what is the Senegalese Government doing, apart from organising trade missions, to reduce this dependence?

Last season the rains fell sufficiently early and in sufficient quantity for a "good" crop of groundnuts, the quicksand on which the Senegalese economy is based. It is less clear why the crop is likely to be less than 800,000 tonnes, when a "good" year, according to the Fifth National Plan, should yield some 1.2m. tonnes.

M. Kane gave several reasons for the shortfall, chief among which was that the peasants had been discouraged in previous years, having planted once, twice or even three times without result because the rains did not fall. By last year — and the tendency had developed before then — they had voted with their crops, as it were, and devoted increased acreage to food crops such as maize and millet. "They thought," the minister said, "that cultivating groundnuts wasn't worthwhile because they weren't sure of getting a good harvest or a good price . . . they were beginning to cultivate millet in order to feed themselves" (Souma millet is more resistant to poor rainful than the groundnut).

The minister didn't mention another important factor in the peasants' decision to switch to crops which would ensure, at least, survival; the state monopoly buying and distribution agency, ONCAD, which was disbanded last year with debts estimated at 90,000m. CFA francs, was corrupt: peasants, through their religious leaders — of which more later — said ONCAD distributed poor seeds, unless bribed, underweighed crops and generally "creamed" farmers' profits in its role of intermediary between the farmers and Dakar.

President Diouf's amnesty last year on peasant debt of 21,000m. CFA francs was not remarkable in the context of the other "Bienvenue-Roi-Abdou" stage-managed events. It would have been more remarkable, however, had the authorities thought the peasants could pay those debts.

Dakar's reaction to this, apparently rational, move into food crops by the peasants has been . . . to increase the producer price of groundnuts. The 1981-1982 buying price was increased 40 per cent, to 70 CFA francs per kilo.

Producer prices, since last year's (some say cosmetic) shake-up of buying agencies, are set by Sonacos and Seib (groundnuts) and the CPSP (other products). Those prices to some extent indicate the priorities of the ruling party:

The table shows the increase in buying prices for groundnuts to be in marked contrast to those for millet, sorghum and maize. The producer price of paddy rice

Average producer prices

Product	1974/75	1979/80	1980/81	1981/82
		(CFA francs/kg)
Industrial groundnuts	41.5	45.5	50.0	70.0
Edible groundnuts	51.1	54.5	54.5	80.0
Paddy rice	41.5	41.5	41.5	51.5
Millet, sorghum	30.0	40.0	40.0	50.0
Maize	35.0	37.0	37.0	47.0
Niébé beans	30.0	30.0	30.0	43.0
Cotton	47.0	53.2	53.2	na

was unchanged from 1974 until 1981/1982.

This continued support of the groundnut should be seen in two contexts. First, there is a need to maintain a foreign exchange base to supply the import needs of Dakar and to pay for imports of rice for the main population (one-third of cereal consumption in 1980 was imported). Second, it is important to appease powerful politico-religious leaders who effectively control the groundnut growing areas.

M. Kane's explanation for the increased producer price was that "we want to keep peasants on the land". This would avoid the social tensions found in, for example, Nigeria, where oil wealth had attracted vast numbers to the cities, he added.

Surely, however, people would stay on the land in the same (albeit low) numbers whether they were cultivating food or cash crops. It could be argued that a cash crop, with its focus on the centre from the periphery, worsens rural-urban migration.

The Minister's explanation, moreover, ignores the essential politique of the groundnut. The Mouride brotherhood control about two-thirds of Senegal's peanut crop. Through a tightly-knit and resilient command structure centred on Touba and the Khalifa-General, Abdou Lahatte M'Backé, the Mourides exercise considerable political and economic power. It was no coincidence that one of President Diouf's first priorities on coming to power was to be seen to strengthen his links with the Mourides.

Last February he made a publicised mission en brousse to the Sine-Saloum region, the main groundnut growing region. On the television screens in Dakar we saw, in an interesting example of photo-montage (or was it photo-journalism from a witty employee at ORTS?), the President's head merge into the map and disappear somewhere around Kaolack, one of the centres of the groundnut trade.

The role of the Mourides has sometimes been seen as ambivalent, because they have in the past told disciples to grow food crops rather than become indebted to ONCAD for groundnut seed. (The Koran says a man in debt is not free.) But advocating such a move may, in fact, be a bluff in order to squeeze increased producer prices out of Dakar. The Mourides are as aware that their power, both over their disciples and over Dakar, rests in an exchangeable commodity, as the Parti Socialiste is aware of the dire consequences of displeasing these men.

This January the consumer price of rice was increased by 30 per cent to 105 CFA francs per kilo. When M. Kane announced the price rise, he said it would save 4,000m. CFA francs per year (the government had been subsidising rice) and would help reduce the import bill for rice by discouraging demand and smuggling to neighbouring countries where the price is lower. The minister also said the increase would allow the government to continue supporting the price of, among other products, groundnuts and cotton. He exhorted people to eat more millet despite the fact that the national dish, tcheboudienne, is rice-based. The call for increased consumption of millet would seem to be a contradiction given that millet to a large extent competes for acreage with the groundnut.

However, the exhortation to eat more millet is probably better seen in the context of dissipation of political opposition — the government must, at the very least, be seen to have an alternative to rice. The increase in the price of rice indicates that the government has even more confidence in its policy to divide and neutralise urban discontent than was previously thought.

The increase in the price of rice comes at a time when disposable income is being squeezed. One of the opposition newspapers claimed late last year that the inflation rate was 30 per cent. M. Kane strongly refuted that figure when he was in London. Quoting a report compiled by a consortium of foreign banks, he said the rate for the African index was 8.9 per cent and for the ex-patriate index, 12.9 per cent.

The report to which the Minister was referring was compiled in collaboration with, and with the approval of, the Ministries of Commerce and Finance. It is prefaced thus; (the authors) "do not guarantee either explicitly or implicitly the information or opinions contained in this report which are solely the responsibility of the Government of Senegal".

The rider was a wise addition. Few consultancies would like to stake their reputation on, for example, an urban unemployment figure for Senegal of 17 per cent. There is no mention of underemployment in the report; all "informal sectors" workers are apparently deemed fully employed. These figures in the official report are only matched in temerity by its timing. The inflation rate was calculated up to June, 1981. In July, 1981, a wide range of price increases was announced as part of the International Monetary Fund's stabilisation programme. Negotiations with the fund were successful and a 63m. Special Drawing Rights facility was agreed as well as a 42m. SDR compensatory facility.

As well as the increases in July, in August the price of fertiliser was doubled and sugar was hiked by 25 per cent. These increases will certainly increase the cost of living if not the inflation rate. The recent cost of living increases, moreover, have not been matched by salary increases, at least in the lower echelons. The "Smig" (minimum salary) has not been increased since January, 1981, and stands at 22,500 CFA francs per month.

In 1847, Governor Protêt said "Peanuts will save the economy of Senegal". In fact, the political economy of the groundnut has contributed in large part to creating an economy dangerously biased against food production and towards a small section of the population in the metropolis. The Sixth National Development Plan accords a low priority to agriculture and food production, whereas government services and bureacracy take a characteristically disproportionate percentage of investment plans. In such a context, offering financial incentives to the groundnut producers and political palliatives to the urban population can only be seen as short term exigencies.

CSO: 4700/936

PRESIDENT CALLS FOR COOPERATION OF PEOPLE OF KONO

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 1 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] President Siaka Stevens has appealed to the people of Kono to co-operate with the National Diamond Mining Company (NDMC) to ensure that the Kimberlite mining project succeed without any hinderance, particularly at a time when foreign exchange is required for the importation of industrial goods and other commodities.

Dr Stevens assured the people that Kono will enjoy a special place in the mining agreement for the development of the area, thus ensuring permanent development in the absence of future diamonds exploitation.

Addressing a jubilant crowd of thousands of people including Paramount Chiefs, MPs and party supporters in Kono in his meet the people tour, the President said that past negotiations with mining companies did not reflect the interest of the people.

Any such future negotiation, he said must now reflect the effective participation of government.

On the people's request for the release of land for mining Dr Stevens said it will receive the careful study of government and promised an early action on the issue.

The President announce government's recognition of elected Paramount Chief F. J. Sahr Quee III of Tankoro Chiefdom.

He assured the people of Kono that government would consider the payment of adequate compensation to the family of the late Kumba Sam, killed recently in a Kimberlite Mining accident.

He expressed government's sympathy to the relatives of the deceased and promised adequate compensation to the bereaved.

In a welcome address by the district party chairman, and Minister of Natural Resources, Mr K. C. Gbamanja, the people thanked President Stevens for his interest in them and the area.

They requested for water supply in the chiefdoms and mining areas and the release of lands in the Tankoro Nimikoro, Gbense, Kamara and Fiama Chiefdoms, now that the Kimberiite mining agreement had been signed, in the hope that illicit mining would be reduced, and mined areas rehabilitated.

Don't Use Kono As Springboard

President Siaka Stevens has warned that government would not allow Kono, with its cosmopolitan composition and high density of population, to be used as a springboard for violence and chaos by detractors during the coming general election.

In his address to the people of Kono during his weekend visit, Dr Stevens pointed out that entry into Parliament was not the personal prerogative of any citizen and warned that government would not encourage perpetrators of violence during the elections.

He equated the elections to an examination therein after five years, the electorate is allowed to test their representatives.

CSO: 4700/934

CUBA'S REVOLUTIONARY ACHIEVEMENTS HAILED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 1 Mar 82 p 2

[Text] A lecturer at Fourah Bay College, Dr Wiltshire Johnson, has said that Sierra Leone could derive immense benefit from the Cuban revolutionary experience in the political, philosophical, and socio-economic spheres.

Delivering his keynote address at a one-day seminar at the APC Headquarters to mark the 23rd anniversary of the Cuban Revolution, Dr Johnson however warned that it would be irascible to import the tenets of the Cuban Revolution without modifications despite the fact that certain aspects of their cultural outlook were African.

He pointed out that the Cuban Revolution led by Fidel Castro in 1958 brought to an end some 500 years of foreign and quasi-colonial subjugation.

Dr Johnson noted that despite repeated threats from its more powerful enemies, Cuba had succeeded in evolving an advanced society through the help of a socialist revolutionary doctrine.

"The Cuban Revolution has been so successful that the little Carribean Island has become the mouthpiece of the Non-Aligned Third World," he added.

In his address, the President of the Sierra Leone-Cuba Friendship Society, (SALCUBA), Mr Sosoh Conteh catalougued the achievements of the Cuban Revolution especially its success in completely eradicating illiteracy in its society.

The Cuban Ambassador, Mr Alphonso Herrera, gave a historical sketch of his country including the attack on the Moncada Garrison which he said had precipitated the popular uprising against the Batistan regime.

Ambassador Harrera said Cuba stood up against isolation, hostility, threats, libel and implacable campaign launched by the monopolies that control a large part of the world's Mass Media.

He said the stock of experience and revolutionary ideas that the Cubans inherited from their own history and that of mankind is their most precious treasure.

CSO: 4700/934

BRIEFS

BAFFIN-RIVER BRIDGE OPENS--The Baffin River Bridge and the Army's Kono Koidu/ New Sembehun Road Re-habilitation Project have been formally opened by President Siaka Stevens at the weekend. Dr. Stevens commended Mr. S. R. Kasegbama, MP, for the constituency in which the bridge is located, for his efforts and the various donors including NDMC, the SLST, the Lebanese Community and Mr. Jamil Sahid for re-negotiating with ABU Construction Company for the final phase of the completion of the bridge. The Bridge is 300 feet long and 22 feet wide with footpath on either side. [Text] [Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 1 Mar 82 p 1]

SSD CHIEF PROMOTED--Special Security Division Chief, Mr. T.K. Mansaray has been promoted Chief Superintendent of Police, according to the latest promotion list released this week. Mr. Mansaray, 39, the youngest to become Chief Superintendent of Police, was promoted together with five other officers of the SSD. Also elevated was his second-in-command, Mr. M S. Dumbuya, who now becomes Superintendent of Police, SSD. [Text] [Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 24 Feb 82 p 1]

MUSLIM BROTHERHOOD--Alhaji Sulaiman Koroma, a onetime regional president, Northern Province, of the Sierra Leone Muslim Brotherhood Mission (SLMB) has been confirmed as National President of the Mission. Alhaji's confirmation contained in a letter from the Minister of Social Welfare and Rural Development ends a feud between him and the ranks of SLMB on the one hand and the now deposed President, Alhaji, M. F. Koroma on the other Alhaji M. F. Koroma had succeeded Alhaji Alusine Sesay who died in 1979, as president as was the practice. He had however refused to call a national convention to ratify his appointment as President. According to sources of the SLMB, Alhaji M. F. Koroma had caused the Mission's headquarters to be removed from Magburaka to Bo and this had created some set back to the mission. [Text] [Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 1 Mar 82 p 4]

CSO: 4700/934

NATIONALIST PARTY ON THE VERGE OF A SERIOUS SPLIT

Power Sharing Sparks Revolt

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 pp 1-2

[Article by Alf Ries: "Right Wingers Squabble, Threaten Split in Nationalist Party"]

[Text] Yesterday the Nationalist Party stood on the brink of its most serious split in the past half century. In a day of high political drama 22 of its parliament members, including two ministers, refused to give unqualified support to Prime Minister P. W. Botha, to his leadership and formulation of party policy.

The right wing rebellion against the party leadership is being led by Dr Andries Treurnicht, the leader of the Transvaal branch of the party. Intense efforts to bring about a reconciliation were made yesterday by two senior Transvaal ministers: a saddened Hendrik Schoeman ("I feel I could cry") and F. W. de Klerk.

However, as of last evening, the prospects of a complete reconciliation looked slim, even though some recalcitrant members would probably return to the fold.

The rebels have until Wednesday to reconsider their position and they have the prime minister's assurance that they will be treated "without grudge" if they return to the fold. But if they refuse to do so then the party and the caucus will take disciplinary measures against them.

In the meantime they still enjoy the privilege of party whip which means that they have the same privileges and duties as their colleagues who voted in favor of the motion of confidence in the prime minister.

Yesterday afternoon, during a press conference, Dr Treurnicht said that he does not intend to quit the party or to split it. However, he has aroused the feeling of obstinacy and has indicated that he expects a gesture from the prime minister.

The prime minister and three deputy chairmen of the Transvaal Nationalist Party last night assumed a strong stand against Dr Treurnicht with respect to certain assertions he made during his press conference. The prime minister, who around midnight was still engaged in far-reaching talks in Windhoek dealing with the security and future of the people of the South-West, in an interview with DIE BURGER, pointed out Dr Treurnicht's "disastrous actions" and the "absolute lack of truth" in Dr Treurnicht's accusation concerning a Progressive political principle. In Capetown the three Transvaal deputy chairmen disassociated themselves from their leader and expressed regret for his having tried to create a wrong impression over the actual point of contention, doing so in a subtle way.

The party's revolt can have far-reaching political implications. If these rebels do not return to the Nationalist Party this could lead to a far-reaching political regrouping in the country. Dr Treurnicht's position and that of cabinet colleague, Dr Ferdi Harzenberg, are becoming hard pressed. If they were to leave the party a change in the cabinet would be at hand. It is mainly the Transvaalers who are involved in the rebellion. Twenty of the 22 rebels represent Transvaal constituencies. There is the possibility that the revolt against the party leadership may spread especially among the provincial council members and Nationalist Party officials.

All eyes are aimed at a critical meeting of the Transvaal main directorate which Dr Treurnicht hastily scheduled for Saturday in Pretoria yesterday. Dr Jannie Pieterse, chief secretary of the Nationalist Party for Transvaal, flew to Capetown in haste yesterday to hold talks there.

Yesterday evening Transvaal members of parliament had already begun to organize pressure in the parliament building with an eye to Saturday's main directorate meeting. Some meetings were still being held late into the night.

At Saturday's meeting Dr Treurnicht and his followers will evidently attempt to gain the support of the main directorate for his actions of yesterday. Some observers are of the opinion that whatever will happen Saturday the consequences can be a split on a provincial basis with dangerous implications.

Opposition

Another consequence of a possible split in the party can be that the Progressive Federal Party can be replaced as the official opposition party in parliament. The situation is that 100 Nationalist Party caucus members voted for the motion of confidence in the prime minister, while there were 22 opposing votes. One member Mr Flippie Olivier the MP for Fauresmith, Orange Free State, abstained from voting.

The Progressive Federal Party has 27 members in parliament. If all of the 22 rebels insist in their viewpoint and if they succeed in getting just six of the 19 caucus members who were absent yesterday to their side they could become the new official opposition. Yesterday's dramatic events may also induce the New Republican Party of Mr Vause Raw to reconsider its position.

The crisis in the Nationalist Party was brought to a head in the course of a highly emotional caucus meeting where the difference which arose recently on the interpretation of the Nationalist Party's constitutional policy was discussed intensively.

When the caucus began last night it started out with a discussion of a motion submitted last week by Leon Wessels, the MP for Krugersdorp. Reportedly the motion dealt with South Africa's position in the international world and the interaction between foreign pressure and internal policy. It was learned that Albert Nothnagel, the MP for Innesdal, was the first speaker yesterday. The discussion soon revolved around the threatening crisis in the party. It was immediately clear that Dr Treurnicht's tactic, and that of his supporters, was to conduct a debate on the statement issued on Monday by the prime minister, but most of all on his use of the concept of a healthy power sharing.

Reportedly there were some harsh words about this. Things really began to sizzle when Dr Treurnicht and some of his supporters said that the prime minister was in collusion with Progressive Party terminology. The prime minister reportedly retorted in sharp terms and Dr Treurnicht and his supporters were apparently accused of actually being in collusion with the Reconstituted Nationalist Party, while mention was also made of a meeting the night before on which occasion Dr Treurnicht and his followers are said to have decided on the actions which they would pursue at the caucus.

A large number of parliament members and senior ministers took part in the discussions. Some of them made strong pleas for safeguarding party unity. Thereafter, many members of parliament had great praise for the manner in which Mr Botha handled the matter as chief leader of the party.

Motion Introduced

Reportedly Treurnicht at one stage read out the letter which he wrote to Dr Jan Grobler, the chief information officer of the Nationalist Party, in which he objected to the stand taken by Dr Grobler in the Nationalist Party's gazette NAT-80's to the effect that there can be no more than one government in a country. Obviously Dr Grobler then informed the caucus of his reply to Dr Treurnicht. At one stage Mr Thomas Langley, the MP for Waterkloof and one of Dr Treurnicht's chief lieutenants, accused Dr Grobler of having leaked Dr Treurnicht's letter to the press. Dr Grobler denied this strongly.

At the end of the caucus Senior Minister Fanie Botha introduced a motion of confidence and of unqualified support for the prime minister as chief leader of the party and for his leadership and interpretation of the Nationalist Party's policy.

Reportedly this evoked a heated discussion. Some of the caucus members evidently wanted that the part of the motion, in which confidence in the prime minister was expressed, separated from the rest of the motion. This wish was not granted.

Apparently the motion was put to a vote twice. After the first voting it was pointed out that the opposing votes had to be recorded and thereupon a second vote was taken. Some of the members, including Mr Johan van Zyl the MP for Brentwood, might have come out with an opposing vote at first, but in the second voting he voted for the motion.

Originally there had been confusion about what Dr Treurnicht had done in view of the fact that he and Koos van der Merwe, the MP for Jeppe, had left the caucus during the voting. Later at his press conference Dr Treurnicht himself said that he did vote.

The caucus, which was advanced by one hour because the prime minister had to depart for the South-West for urgent talks there, lasted 3 hours. The first sign of a serious crisis came when Mr Koos van der Merwe stormed out of the caucus chamber a few minutes before 1 o'clock. In going past about 20 newspaper men he cried out emotionally: "I am through with that Progressive P. W. Botha!"

After coming out of the caucus Dr Treurnicht ducked the newspapermen and went straight to his office in the Hendrick Verwoerd Building.

Yesterday afternoon, shortly after 1 o'clock, the caucus members left the caucus chamber in groups. Many showed a tense expression on their faces. The prime minister who also looked tense headed for the cabinet chamber in the parliament building, along with the Nationalist Party's chief whip Mr Alex van Breda, where he made a statement about the events. Shortly thereafter he, along with Foreign Minister Pik Botha and Defense Minister Magnus Malan, left for Windhoek.

In the meanwhile things were buzzing among the members of Parliament. Small groups of MPs who had voted against the motion of confidence in the prime minister hastened to Dr Treurnicht's office where they met behind closed doors. No statements were issued. The entire afternoon was spent in discussing the morning drama thoroughly. At about 5 o'clock the press was advised that Dr Treurnicht would be holding a press conference at 6:30. While a large group of newpapermen waited outside Dr Treurnicht's office to be admitted, Ministers Hendrik Schoeman and F. W. de Klerk unexpectedly came walking up the steps.

Stepped Out

The two went straight to Dr Treurnicht's office, knocked once and entered. They spent about 25 minutes in the office and then came out. Minister De Klerk said that the prime minister was not aware of the attempt because he had gone to the South-West. He added: "I feel that I could cry."

The two ministers, who 2 years ago were instrumental in bringing about peace when the prime minister and Dr Truernicht clashed sharply over the Graven-schoolweek affair, then stepped out. Dr Treurnicht's press conference then got underway. Mr Langley was with him.

Both Minister Schoeman and Minister De Klerk were later spotted at the garden party given by Cape Province Administrator Gener Louw where they were having intensive conversations with other MPs in Leeuwenhof's garden. There were several members of parliament attending the party and at some of the tables it was surprising to see rebel Nationalist MPs talking with colleagues of the prime minister. Earlier some of them were even drinking coffee together in parliament after the events at the caucus.

A relaxed Treurnicht made his first appearance in parliament after dinner. He and members of the opposition were repeatedly making jokes about where he sat in his minister's bench. Dr Treurnicht was having a relaxed conversation with a couple of MPs, including Hendrik Tempel of Ermelo.

One of the characteristics of yesterday's proceedings in the council was the lack of anger or enmity between the groups, but rather friendliness and intensive conversations between Nationalists and Treurnicht men. Anybody who did not know it would have never said that there existed a crisis.

Botha Qualifies Power Sharing

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 1-2

[Article by Freek Swart: "Treurnicht Damages Nationalist Party and Himself"]

[Text] Johannesburg--Last night Prime Minister P. W. Botha, speaking in Windhoek told DIE BURGER that Dr Andries Treurnicht's action in yesterday's caucus meeting was disastrous for himself and damaging to the Nationalist Party at a time when we must stand together in order to best resolve South Africa's urgent problems.

The prime minister was reacting in this manner after learning that Dr Treurnicht, the Transvaal leader of the Nationalist Party, had earlier come out with the statement, at a press conference in Capetown, that it was too much to ask of him "to accept as suddenly the principle of power sharing which is a Progressive Party political principle."

Mr Botha's reaction came after a day of heightened tensions over a threatened split in the Nationalist Party.

The prime minister stated: "The absolute lack of truth in Dr Treurnicht's accusation about a Progressive Party political principle is to be read in the statement I made on Monday in which I said expressly that the Nationalist Party definitely rejects the Progressives' policy and that when we talk of power sharing we mean co-responsibility."

"My statement is distinct and clear for everybody to read. With his story that suddenly there is now an acceptance of the Progressive Party's principle Dr Treurnicht now is looking for a new reason for justifying action . . . a disastrous action for himself and a damaging action to the Nationalist Party."

Mr. Botha emphasized that it is now time for all patriots to stand together.

"That is why the majority of Nationalist members of parliament, who heard Dr Treurnicht speak at the caucus, expressed full confidence in me, after also hearing my viewpoint."

Forced

When it was pointed out to the prime minister that, at his press conference, Dr Treurnicht had stated that a motion presented at the caucus meeting had been "carried through to a point where people apparently knew that I could not give unqualified assent," Mr Botha said; "Oh...his confidence in me, in whosever cabinet he serves, is therefore qualified confidence."

With reference to Dr Treurnicht's position that at the caucus they were forced to vote on the motion while he was engaged in raising several objections against certain qualifications and formulations of the motion before the caucus, Mr Botha said that Dr Treurnicht cannot complain that he did not have the opportunity of presenting the matter at the caucus.

"Dr Treurnicht even spoke three or four times at the caucus and had full opportunity of presenting his case. Moreover one of his supporters, Mr Frank le Roux, the deputy speaker who also voted against me yesterday, was the chairman of the caucus meeting. Thus if Dr Treurnicht did not have the opportunity of presenting his case it is mostly his own man's fault and he should take him to task for that." This is what the prime minister said.

"I provided Dr Treurnicht with an answer every time." Mr Botha went on to say that he found it necessary to speak on these things so that false impressions about these matters could be swept away. "I do not want to argue with him and I want to go on with matters which we must deal with in the interest of the country. I want to repeat my call to all citizens to help me in resolving the country's problems so that civilized standards in our country can prevail."

When he was asked whether he was "visibly shocked" when he came out of the caucus chamber, as the Johannesburg afternoon paper THE STAR had reported, the prime minister laughed and said: "I do not think I was shocked. Perhaps I was a bit in a hurry, because I had to hasten to fly to the South-West for very urgent matters. How can someone with a two-thirds majority behind him in Parliament be shocked?"

"No, one has to put the country's interest above all else, but then someone comes along with the old trick of tripping you."

Treurnicht Against Power Sharing

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 pp 1, 18

[Press Interview with Dr Andries Treurnicht Leader of the Transvall Nationalist Party]

[Text] Yesterday Dr Andries Treurnicht, the leader of the Transvaal Nationalists Party, stated that he and 21 other MPs, who last night voted against the motion of confidence in the prime minister during the caucus meeting, do not intend to quit the party or to cause a split within the party.

However, he also let it be apparent that he now awaits a gesture on the part of the prime minister.

Last night Dr Treurnicht addressed a press conference in his office. At first he read a statement and then proceeded to answer some questions. His statement read as follows:

"I regret the fact that today, at the caucus of the Nationalist Party, as things turned out, a number of members of parliament had to vote against a motion demanding unqualified agreement with the interpretation of policy. These members are standing by the policy of the Nationalist Party as approved by its congresses. We are not considering leaving the party or splitting it.

Unflinching

"We repeat our subscribing to the Nationalist Party's rejection of political power sharing and of a mixed government for whites, coloreds and Asiatics."

"We stand unflinching by the policy of self determination for the whites and we recognize the right of self determination for the other peoples."

"I received a request from ten members of the main directorate for scheduling a meeting of the main directorate in accordance with the constitution. I ordered the chief secretary of the Nationalist Party of Transvaal to call such a meeting for Saturday 27 February at 11 a.m. in Pretoria. The meeting took place in the Vanderhoof Hall."

After this statement Dr Treurnicht answered questions from the press as follows:

[Question] May I ask a question?

[Answer] I will answer a few questions if reasonable.

[Question] You said that you are not giving unqualified support to the prime minister's statement, that is, you do not intend to subscribe to the statement or to accept the motion which was put to the caucus.

[Answer] No, not unqualifiably. The motion was so worded that the prime minister's interpretation of policy is coupled with it most closely and his statement of policy is most closely coupled with the statement he issued. In turn his statement contains a reference to power sharing and this is something to which I cannot subscribe without qualifications. The choice was presented in such a manner that I had to either vote for it without reservations as it was worded or not. I figured that I ought to have the freedom to be able to say that I disagree with certain formulations of the wording.

[Question] Have you personally voted against the motion?

[Answer] Yes, I voted against the motion.

[Question] Some people are saying that this means that the Nationalist Party is splitting. Do you see it that way?

[Answer] Not necessarily. We have serious differences of opinion, but differences of opinion ought not mean that the Nationalist Party is splitting. It was for this reason that I stated that we do not intend to quit the party or to divide it.

[Question] Do you believe that there is a chance for conciliation then?

[Answer] It's not impossible.

[Question] Can the Nationalist Party remain a single entity with these very clear differences in the interpretation of policy?

[Answer] Look, the Nationalist Party has survived greater differences of opinion, but in this case a motion was pushed through on a point which people evidently knew I could not agree with it without qualifications.

[Question] Will you say something about your meeting with Minister F.W. de Klerk and Minister Hendrik Schoeman which took place here just now?

[Answer] The meeting was a very friendly one and we talked about the planned directorate meeting and also about the request which has been made to hold an emergency committee meeting.

[Question] In conjunction with a previous question can we deduce that a trap has been set for you purposely?

[Answer] The motion was presented in such a manner that at a point, where I figured I could express a valid difference of opinion...which at that point I had to oppose.

[Question] What is your position in the cabinet now?

[Answer] I am in the cabinet at the invitation of the prime minister. My presence in the cabinet will terminate if he withdraws his invitation.

[Question] Are you planning to resign as minister?

[Answer] I stick to the answer to your previous question.

[Question] If the prime minister insists on the unconditional acceptance of the motion, what will you do?

[Answer] Well...I have already indicated that if I must submit unconditionally to the motion...that is impossible.

[Question] Will you then have to resign from the Nationalist Party?

[Answer] No, not necessarily. I am a Nationalist and next Saturday we will be having our main directorate meeting and this is a matter for the main directorate to decide.

[Question] What are the special qualifications in the motion with which you cannot agree?

[Answer] We were still in the process of discussing that. While we were discussing it and I raised several objections against certain qualifications and wording of the motion before the caucus, we were forced to vote on the motion.

[Question] Is it not customary that the chief executive be supported not only as a person, but also in his interpretation of policy?

[Answer] That is the ideal situation, but we have very good examples in politics, examples in which I myself was involved, where members were at liberty to say: "I don't feel happy about a certain wording or a certain viewpoint." There are examples of this. I myself was involved in such a case a few years ago and that did not mean that I was forced to leave the party. The prime minister himself has stated that we are a big party with many members and there are differences of accent and opinions, and that is normal in a party.

[Question] Have you any strong hopes for reconciliation?

[Answer] Certain conditions will have to be met now, conditions which perhaps will be set by both sides.

[Question] What is the purpose of this main directorate meeting? What decisions will have to be made there?

[Answer] The main directorate will have to take cognizance of today's events and the main directorate must determine its viewpoint in light of that.

[Question] How do you interpret the prime minister's invitation to the people who voted against the motion to reconsider their position by next Wednesday?

[Answer] That is a gesture on his part, but it does not remove the objections raised at the meeting.

[Question] What about the letter you wrote to Dr Grobler (about an article in NAT 80's), do you have any objections against it being published if we get a hold of it?

[Answer] I did not have any objections against the letter being published, because in my judgement, it is an entirely innocent letter in which I told Dr Grobler that in a certain sense I could not take any pleasure in the issue of NAT 80's unless that could be qualified. No, I don't have any objections.

[Question] Can the deduction be made that your objection to the stance taken in NAT 80's is greater than the objection to the prime minister's statement about power sharing? To what are you actually opposed?

[Answer] The specific meaning contained in NAT 80's raised certain questions in my mind and I thought that in that statement there are certain implications that must be considered very carefully. That is what I asked and I think it still must be done. However, with regard to power sharing the situation is (and this is my estimate): In recent years the Nationalist Party has rejected thoughts of power sharing and I think that for the Nationalist Party to just as as soon accept the principle of power sharing is too much to ask of me.

[Question] Is it not true that the 1977 proposals (of the Nationalist Party) have a large measure of power sharing?

[Answer] We call it consultation and co-responsibility, but I say power sharing is a Progressive Party political principle and the Nationalist Party has expressly rejected that in all of its publications. The prime minister did so also in last year's no-confidence debate of August.

[Question] At first you said that you were talking in the name of the other members (who voted against the motion). Could you mention their names?

[Answer] I think their names will be made known tomorrow.

[Question] What about Mr Sporie van Rensburg, did he also vote against the motion?

[Answer] I did not stay until the end and therefore I did not see who all voted against the motion. I heard from Mr Van Rensburg, but...

[Question] Did you, yourself, vote?

[Answer] I voted. Oh yes, I voted. However, after the voting the proposal was made that the names of those who voted against the motion be noted down. I ran out before that was done.

[Question] Why did you run?

[Answer] I just felt like leaving.

[Question] Could one of the decisions taken Saturday be that a special congress of the Nationalist Party of Transvaal is to be held?

[Answer] Naturally the main directorate is completely free to determine what its future actions will be. It is not outside of its competence to decide whether a national congress is to be held.

[Question] Are you going to ask for a motion of confidence?

[Answer] I am not so set on motions of confidence. (Laughs)...I am going to discuss the situation with the main directorate. It will be up to them to decide.

[Question] If there is to be any reconciliation isn't it so that this must not come only from the prime minister's side?

[Answer] Well...Regardless of what is expected of me, I think that there should be a gesture on the part of the prime minister, definitely so.

[Question] What can be expected of you in this respect?

[Answer] The motion reads: Unqualified adherence to certain interpretations of policy, but the interpretation of policy was coupled to a statement which had been issued, and not every phrase and word of that statement is acceptable to me.

[Question] Do you want to comment on reports that sharp words were exchanged between you and the prime minister at the caucus?

[Answer] No, I don't think there were many sharp words, but the atmosphere was very tense.

Call for Unity

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 3

[Press Interview with Prime Minister P.W. Botha]

[Text] Windhoek--Yesterday Prime Minister P.W. Botha made a strong appeal to all South Afrikaners to unite and to support him and his government in the effort to resolve all the serious problems of southern Africa.

The prime minister arrived in Windhoek yesterday with two of his ministers: Pik Botha and General Magnus Malan, along with a senior delegation of officials and officers, for an important 2 day visit.

After a brief statement at the J.G. Strydon Airport concerning the purpose of his visit to the South-West, reporters began to ask questions.

[Question] How are the events at the caucus going to affect the government's policy for the South-West?

[Answer] I cannot see how that can influence the situation. I am the prime minister of the Republic of South Africa. I was this morning, I still am the prime minister and I have the greater majority of the members of parliament behind me.

[Question] Will Ministers Treurnicht and Hartzenberg remain in the cabinet?

[Answer] That is a matter I will consider when I return to Capetown. In the meantime I have more important things to do.

[Question] Are these people still members of the Nationalist Party?

[Answer] The caucus cannot terminate your membership in the Nationalist Party. Yes they are still members.

[Question] Will they remain members?

[Answer] This is a question you should address to them. I have the majority, the overwhelming majority, of the caucus behind me. I will go on ruling and I am calling on all South Afrikaners to unite to help me and give support to my colleagues in our effort to resolve the very serious problems of southern Africa. We are firmly resolved on doing this. (At this Pik Botha and General Malan shouted: "Hear, hear!"

[Question] Do you want to see them stay in the party?

[Answer] I would like to see as many people as possible support my viewpoint and my leadership, but I cannot force people to do so if they are unwilling.

Further on in the course of the conference Mr Botha said that the South African government is ready to start the second phase of the negotiations on the future of the South-West. This is the main purpose of his visit to this country.

His visit is regarded of critical importance for the international negotiations and also for the internal development.

Appeal to Right Wingers

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 21

[Text] Prime Minister P.W. Botha has appealed to the 22 Nationalist members of parliament, who voted against the motion of confidence in him and his leadership, to seriously reconsider their positions during the next 8 days. If they return to the party they will be treated without any grudge.

Mr Botha brought this out in the open during a press conference immediately following the dramatic caucus meeting which lasted 3 hours.

He said that the caucus conducted a long discussion on the purported differences in the ranks of the Nationalist Party. Various members of the cabinet and of parliament took part in the debate and on several occasions Mr Botha came out with a rejoinder to their statements; He also answered other questions.

Thanks

After the addresses Senior Minister and Leader of Parliament, Fanie Botha, introduced a motion. It stated that the caucus expresses its confidence in, and unqualified support for, the prime minister and chief executive of the Nationalist Party and in his leadership and interpretation of the policy of the Nationalist Party.

Mr Botha said that 100 members voted in favor of the motion, 22 against with one abstention.

"After the motion I expressed my thanks to the caucus for the confidence which it placed on me and for the right it gave me as chief executive to interpret policy."

"I emphasize once more that with respect to any constitutional matter I will give a hearing to the Nationalist Party's congress and if necessary I will consult the country by way of a referendum or referendums."

He added that no constitutional proposals are now before the government and that with respect to this matter a report by the Presidential Council is being awaited.

Appeal

"I intend to follow the path as set out in my statement of a few days ago."

Mr Botha said that towards the end of the meeting he appealed to the members who had voted against the motion to reconsider their position in the next 8 days and to return to the ranks of the party.

Serious

They were elected as Nationalists and he can assure them that the doors are open to them for returning to the Nationalist Party. If they return they will be treated as full members and there will be no grudges. If they fail to return then the party and the caucus will have to take disciplinary measures against them.

Mr Botha said that those who voted against the motion have created a serious situation. They will have to submit to the majority's decision.

In answer to a question Mr Botha said that Dr Andries Treurnicht walked away before the voting.

Correspondence Preceding Rightists'Revolt

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 21

[Text] The exchange of letters between Dr Andries Treurnicht, the Transvaal leader of the Nationalist Party, and Dr Jan Grobler, chief information official of the party, which occasioned the squabble in the Nationalist Party was made available to DIE BURGER yesterday evening by Dr Grobler.

Dr Grobler did this after Dr Treurnicht stated at a press conference yesterday afternoon: "I have no ojbection to the letter being made public, because in my estimation it is an entirely innocent letter in which I told Dr Grobler that I was not altogether pleased with a certain sentence in the issue of NAT 80's unless it were qualified."

On 8 February Dr Treurnicht wrote the following letter in his own handwriting:

Esteemed Colleague

I have taken another look at the most recent NAT 80's and it is very neatly and interestingly arranged. Thanks especially for the insertion of the article on civil service. There is, however, a stance assumed there which has far reaching implications and I think you must look at it again. I am referring to the stance assumed there to the effect that it is logical that in a country there can be no more than one government. That, I think, needs some qualification.

The deduction which can be made from that is that we should have only one government, that it should be a mixed one, that therefore it will have colored and Indian ministers who will be co-governing over me and all whites, etc, etc. This is an entirely unacceptable thought.

Please consider qualifying this in the next issue of NAT 80's, because as it now stands we will not be able to sell it.

Greetings! A.P. Treurnicht.

On 15 February Dr Grobler replied as follows:

Esteemed Dr Treurnicht

Many thanks for your friendly and valued letter of a few days ago, especially for your friendliness and positive notations regarding the latest NAT 80's. Coming from you as an old editor (KERKBODE AND HOOFSTAD) that carries a great deal of meaning. It was a privilege to have carried the item on civil service, because I see that as a prerogative, but also as my task, especially in giving support to ministers (who, through circumstances beyond their control, must stand on the firing line) and in carrying to the public a positive image of them. Nobody can deny that you are handling with care a difficult task which is, at the same time, extremely sensitive. More power to you.

You also referred briefly to the stance I took, namely, that it is simply logical that there cannot be more than one government within a country and then you proceeded to draw certain deductions from that. The stance to which you refer has to do with the question of sovereignty of government over a certain territory. As I understand the 1977 constitutional plan there cannot be any question of unlimited exclusive white sovereignty over the Republic of South Africa. To be sure the proposition to the effect that ministers who deal with domains which are "common" are bound to come into play with each others "parliament" over and over again, is quite clear. To assume that ministers who cover "common" grounds are forever to be exclusively white seems to me to be an erroneous interpretation of the plan. This is also in conflict with the idea of the Council of Cabinets.

I would really appreciate in getting from you a brief interpretation on the particular points of the -77 proposals so as to clarify any obscurities . . . also with the recent viewpoint of the prime minister with respect to the coloreds. I am just as desirous as you are in coming up with a model which we can sell to all the population groups that come under the plan, namely, the Asiatics and the coloreds.

With respect and appreciation. Jan Grobler (MP)

P.S. I would also appreciate your viewpoint on the thinking that we must at all costs take in the 2.5 million coloreds as a block with the whites in order to expand our own power basis and not deliver them to the "black power" position.

Absences Noted in Caucus

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 pp 1-2

[Text] Altogether 123 Nationalist Party members of parliament were present yesterday at the caucus meeting in which 22 of them voted against a motion of confidence in the prime minister and one of them abstained.

The party's caucus consists of 142 MPs; therefore 19 MPs failed to attend the caucus meeting. Among them was the speaker, Mr Hannes du Toit, the MP for Vryburg. The speaker traditionally attends only the first and last caucus meetings of a parliamentary session.

Mr Hans Schoeman, the MP for Noordrand, is the chairman of the caucus. However, he could not attend yesterday's meeting because he had to undergo a heart condition operation in a Johannesburg hospital.

Normally it would have been Hans Ungerer, the MP for Sasolburg, to act as chairman for him; however, Mr Ungerer was out of town and it was Frank le Roux, the deputy speaker and the MP for Brakpan, who chaired yesterday's eventful meeting. He happens to be one of the 22 people who voted against the motion of confidence.

Two Others

Mr Con Botha, MP for Umlazi, had previously given notice that he would be a little late, because he first had to attend an auction. Then, earlier, his wife Leonore was involved in an auto accident and this was the cause for his being too late for the meeting.

Besides Mr Ungerer there were two other Free State MPs who were absent yesterday. They are: Jan van der Berg, MP for Ladybrand, and Daantije Scott, MP for Winburg. In accordance with parliamentary custom both have been paired off and they were not in Capetown all week long.

DIE BURGER was told that there is nothing sinister with respect to the absence of the three Free State MPs. They had been paired off and had signed an apology for the chairman of the caucus for yesterday's absence, doing so in good time.

Opened a New Tractor Plant

Political circles are accepting the fact that the three Free State MPs would have in any case voted in favor of the motion of confidence in the prime minister.

Sarel Hayward, the deputy minister for agriculture and fishing and the MP for Graaff-Reinet, was at Neigel yesterday where he opened a new tractor plant. Thus he too was not present at the caucus meeting.

Others who were also absent were Mr Koos Lloyd (of Roodeplaat), Hans Rabie (Worcester), Gert Kotze (Malmabury), Piet Pretorius (Maraisburg), Ferdinand van Heerden (De Aar) and Willa Hefer (Standerton).

Mr Flip Olivier, the MP for Fauresmith is the member of Parliament who abstained.

Transvalers Side with Treurnicht

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 1

[Text] Of the 22 Nationalist members of parliament who yesterday refused to vote in favor of a motion of confidence in Prime Minister P. W. Botha and his leadership 20 of them are from Transvaal and two from the Cape Province.

One Free Stater, Mr Flip Olivier, abstained. The Natal Nationalist MPs closed ranks unanimously behind the prime minister.

A large number of senior members of Parliament are among the objectors. Two of them are ministers: Dr Andries Treurnicht, the Transvaal leader of the party, and Dr Ferdi Hartzenberg. Mr Frank le Roux, deputy speaker and chairman of the committee, as well as MP for Brakpan, and Mr Thomas Langley, deputy chairman of the committee and MP for Waterkloof, also voted against the motion.

The two from the Cape Province are Jan Hoon, the MP for Kuruman, and Dirk Poggenpoel, MP for Beauford West. Three of the Nationalist Party's whips also figure in the group. They are Hoon, Daan van der Merwe, the MP for Rissik, and Willie van der Merwe, MP for Meyerton.

The complete list of objectors, with the names of their constituencies in parentheses, is as follows:

Dr Andries Treurnicht (Waterber), Dr Ferdi Hartzenberg (Lichtenburg), Jan van Zyl (Sunniside), Dr Willie Snyman (Pietersburg), Ben Wilkens (Ventersdorp), Thomas Langley (Waterkloof), Dan van der Merwe (Rissik) Frank le Roux (Brakpan), Sporie van Rensburg (Rosettenville), Dr Boy Geldenhuis

(Randfontein), S. P. Barnard (Langlaagte), Willie van der Merwe (Meyerton), Karel Swanepoel (Gezina), Casper Uys (Barberton), Hannes Visagie (Nigel), Willie Lemmer (Schweizer-Renerke), Dr Frans van Staden (Koedoesport), Mrs Bessie Scholtz (Germiston District), Louis Theunissen (Transvaal appointee), John Hoon (Kuruman), Dirk Poggenpoel (Beauford West) and Koos van der Merwe (Jeppe).

Rebels Seek Party Control

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 3

[Text] There is a possibility that the 20 Transvaal members of parliament, who refused to support Prime Minister P. W. Botha in a motion of confidence, will try to gain control over the Transvaal Nationalist Party if they should make their break with the party final.

Only two Cape Province MPs voted against the motion.

A decision has already been made for convening the main directorate of the Transvaal Nationalist Party and the meeting has already been scheduled for Saturday.

Moreover it is within the prerogative of the main directorate to convene a special congress of the Transvaal Nationalist Party.

Yesterday politicians pointedout the implications of this to DIE BURGER, though these may simply be theoretical. In the event that such a congress is convened then a motion of confidence in Dr Andries Treurnicht and the 21 other MPs who also voted against the motion yesterday may be introduced and passed.

Untenable

That will mean the Dr Treurnicht will be the leader of the Transvaal Nationalist Party and that the party-organization, machinery and funds will be at his disposal.

The Nationalist Party is organized on a federal basis and therefore such a situation will be untenable. That will also mean that Dr Treurnicht and the Transvaal Nationalist Party will be left out of the federal system.

Outside

The implication will then be that this group will be sitting in parliament as the Transvaal Nationalist Party in opposition to the Nationalist Party.

Moreover the 47 Transvaal MPs who supported the prime minister yesterday will not be counted as members of the Nationalist Party in Transvaal and they will thus find themselves technically outside of the Transvaal Nationalist Party.

But in parliament they will, however, be regarded as Nationalist Party MPs. They will then have to be included in the Nationalist Party on a federal basis in the rest of the country.

Fence Sitter, Rebels Comment

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 21

[Text] Flip Olivier, the MP for Fauresmith and the only member of parliament who abstained from voting in yesterday's eventful caucus meeting, still refuses to say what his viewpoint is.

Yesterday he made the following statement to DIE BURGER: "I believe that colorlessness or the lack of courage to express oneself in accordance with one's convictions may never be a part of an honest politician."

"There must be no doubt that I have definite and strong convictions with respect to certain points of policy in South African politics. I will make my viewpoints known within a week in a clear and frank manner."

Jan Hoon, the MP for Kuruman and one of the 22 members of parliament who yesterday voted against a motion of confidence in the prime minister, has this comment for DIE BURGER: "I made a promise to my electors that if I find problems in the Nationalist Party I will discuss the matter with them and create the opportunity of doing so."

This will take place at the earliest possible opportunity.

Dr Boy Geldenhuis, the MP for Randfontein and also one of the 22 MPs, said that he has a mandate from his electors. "I interpret that to mean that I cannot give approval to a possible interpretation of Nationalist Party policy in the sense that it would constitute power sharing . . . either healthy or unhealthy."

He hopes to discuss things with his executive committee on Monday evening and he added: "I am in their hands."

Karel Swanepoel, yet another member of the 22 MPs and the MP for Gezina, said that a motion of confidence in the prime minister would be no problem for him. However, the motion which was introduced in the caucus yesterday had another element which was unacceptable to him.

Mixed Feelings of Council Members

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 3

[Text] Three of the five Pretorian Provincial Council's members, whose team mates in the parliament voted against the motion of confidence in Prime Minister P. W. Botha, did not wish to assume a stand on this matter yesterday. The other two members of the provincial council were not available for their comments.

Strong support in favor of Mr Botha's policy statement was expressed by four other Pretorian members of the provincial council.

Pier Grobler (Roodeplaat) let it be known without hesitation that he supports Mr Botha unqualifiedly. Ben Nortman (Pretoria-Central) said that he has always been a P.W. Botha man, while Hannes Hattingh (Verwoerdburg) made it known that he stands by the Nationalist Party's policy as interpreted by the prime minister.

Jakie Kruger (Rissik), whose MP, Daan van der Merwe, voted against the motion yesterday, was one of the members of the provincial council who "first wants to know what goes on" before he makes any comments. "It wouldn't make any sense to react simply on the basis of reports." This is what Kruger said. He will come up with his point of view as soon as he has complete information on this matter.

Reason

Steyn van der Spuy (Wtaerkloof), a team-mate of Tom Langley, did not wish to say anything yesterday.

F.W. Morkel (Koedoespoort), whose MP, Dr Frans van Staden, voted against Mr Botha, did not wish to say whether he supports his MP. "If ever there was a time to let reason speak instead of sentimentality that time is now. We must remain calm." This is what he had to say.

B.D.T. Boshoff of Sunnyside and chairman of the provincial council could not be found, but his MP is Jan van Zyl, a Treurnicht supporter.

Leaders

Mr M.F. Reinecke (Gezina), a former party official, could not be reached for a comment either, but his MP, Mr Karel Swanepoel, voted against the motion yesterday.

L.J. Fourie (Innesdal) did not wish to make any comments saying that party "leaders" must be consulted first.

Fanie Schoeman (Pretoria-East), the leader of the Nationalist Party in the provincial council, could not be reached for a comment.

Progressive Federal Party Reaction

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 21

[Text] Johannesburg--Yesterday official opposition leader, Dr Van Zyl Slabbert, said that the unity of the Nationalist Party has been destroyed and South African politics have entered a "totally new" era.

Dr Slabbert, who arrived early yesterday evening to address a municipal election meeting in support of the Progressive Federal Party, made some comments on the Nationalist Party's caucus meeting in Capetown yesterday where 22 Nationalist Party MPs voted against a motion of confidence in Prime Minister P.W. Botha.

"It appears as though the votes of no confidence in the prime minister clearly marks the split in the Nationalist Party. Whatever happened today is irrevocable." South African politics have now entered a totally new era and the effects of future developments will have a profound influence on the future course of South African politics." This was Dr Slabbert's comment.

In answer to the question as to whether the leader of the Nationalist Party of Transvaal, Dr Andries Treurnicht, is actually planning a right wing splinter of the ruling party Dr Slabbert said: "He has not yet given a clear indication of the direction he is taking."

When he was asked whether the Progressive Federal Party would be willing to enter into an agreement with the New Republican Party so that the Progressives can remain as the official opposition if Dr Treurnicht and his followers were to decide to secede, Dr Slabbert replied: "No not at any price. We will have to see what happens."

Labor Party Reaction

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 21

[Text] Johannesburg--Rev Alan Hendrickse, leader of the Labor Party, in commenting on the latest developments in the Nationalist Party, yesterday stated that the opportunity has presented itself for Prime Minister P.W. Botha to move immediately and actually in the direction of reform.

"The prime minister has a clear mandate in the sense that more than 80 percent of the caucus supports him. Along with the great number of people who support reform Mr Botha will be getting far more support than he can now lose."

He went on to say: "I would like to see the prime minister present his views clearly on the question of power sharing and power division. Division of power is unacceptable to the Labor Party."

"However I believe that Mr Botha will be able to realize his ideals audaciously and full of confidence with the necessary perserverance. We hope he will move in a clear direction which will point to reform."

National Conservative Party Reaction

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 18

[Text] The National Conservative Party will not tolerate any form of political power sharing with the coloreds, according to a statement made by its leader Connie Mulder last evening.

Commenting on the Nationalist Party split of yesterday Dr Mulder said that there is no such thing as a healthy power sharing.

"The white parliament must in all circumstances remain white and sovereign. The Party also states that it is willing to collaborate with other parties and groups which are dedicated to the smother of the Botha-government's leftist inclinations."

Council Supports Botha

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 1

[Text] Yesterday afternoon, at a special caucus meeting of the Cape Province's Provincial Council, the Nationalist Party there expressed its unanimous confidence in Prime Minister P.W. Botha as leader of the Nationalist Party and also subscribed to the prime minister's right to interpret party policy.

Strength

The 44 members of the caucus reconfirmed once again their loyalty to Mr Botha as leader of the Nationalist Party.

Pietie Loubser, the Leader of the Nationalist Party in the Cape Province's Provincial Council, made a statement at the end of the caucus meeting and said that the caucus also indetifies itself unanimously with the interpretation which Mr Botha has attached to the controversial front page article in NAT 80's. In the article Dr Jan Grobler, chief information official of the Nationalist Party and the editor of NAT 80's, stated that it is logical to say that there can be only one government in the country.

The caucus of this Nationalist party's provincial council also prayed for strength for the prime minister for the road which he has undertaken and assured him of its unanimous loyalty.

Support from Deputies

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 pp 1-2

[Text] The deputy chairmen of the Nationalist Party of Transvaal issued a statement last evening disassociating themselves from Dr Treurnicht's revolt against Prime Minister P.W. Botha. Dr Treurnicht is their provincial party leader.

In their statement the three deputy chairmen: Fanie Botha (minister of manpower), F.W. de Klerk (minister of minerals and energy affairs) and Hendrik Schoeman (minister of transportation), said that they "find it regrettable that Dr Treurnicht tried, in a subtle manner, to create the wrong impression about the actual point of dispute in yesterday morning's Nationalist Party caucus meeting."

"Creating the impression of profound differences of principle was unnecessary and against the interests of the Nationalist Party."

"Dr Treurnicht stated that he and those who voted against the motion of confidence in the prime minister are respecting certain political viewpoints and consequently he suggested that the prime minister and the other 101 (cabinet members, deputy ministers and MPs) who actually supported the motion are deviating from established Nationalist Party policy."

But this is an unfair and unreasonable suggestion and is based on the erroneous interpretation of what took place in the caucus and of what the prime minister stated.

"The actual basic problem with which we are dealing is the refusal of Dr Treurnicht and of the MPs involved to give unqualified support to the prime minister as chief executive of the Nationalist Party and to recognize the prime minister's role as the final interpreter of Nationalist Party policy with final responsibility to the Nationalist Party."

"We call upon the Nationalists of Transvaal to remain calm and to offer an opportunity to the appointed controlling bodies to discuss the matter in a peaceful atmosphere."

"Our purpose shall be to insure loyalty to the Nationalist Party's chosen chief executive through such deliberations and thus serve the best interests of the Nationalist Party and of South Africa." This is how the statement read.

Johannesburg City Council Support

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 3

[Text] Johannesburg--There appeared to be very strong support for Prime Minister P.W. Botha yesterday among Nationalist Party candidates in the city council elections in Johannesburg when they expressed themselves in favor of Botha's concept of power sharing and his efforts at bringing about better relations.

Carel Venter, the Nationalist Party leader in the city council gave his full support to Mr Botha and said: "I maintain my party's viewpoint. I will either stand or fall with it, but I will not deviate from it."

One of the city council's candidate (a sitting council member) said: "Perhaps Dr Andries Treurnicht has no knowledge of third level administration and therefore he has not given thought to the decisive elections contest going on in Johannesburg."

The Nationalist Party caucus will be meeting this evening at 9 o'clock for discussing the events in Capetown. Mr Venter said that following the meeting a statement will be issued presenting the viewpoints of the city council candidates.

Election

Personally he simply wants to say that he is a nationalist and a contender in the elections as a Nationalist candidate. He associates himself with the party leaders and accepts the responsibility which this entails.

Deputy Mayor Danie van Zyl said that due to the serious disposition with which his party has tackled the election he is sure that "the Nationalist Party can yet cut through this knot."

In Randburg Nationalist Party team leader Ernst Pienaar, the chairman of the city council's executive committee, said that at the municipal level his party is fighting for the interest of Randburg and politics on a national level is of secondary importance.

The Nationalist Party's policy in Randburg is that in all respects the town is the party's first priority. "If any Nationalist Party candidate has a contrasting view he must, in his personal capacity, get in touch with the media." This is what Mr Pienaar said.

Hilmer Kruger, a young candidate from the thickly populated section of the city, says that he supports Botha's initiative to the fullest and regrets the actions of Dr Treurnicht and of those MPs who have voted against the idea of co-responsibility, especially because of Botha's desire to improve relations.

Kruger said: "The Nationalist Party does not need this kind of a party split at this juncture."

Piet Grobler, a candidate and one of the old guards said: "I am sticking with P.W. Botha. I cannot support the others. Dr Treurnicht is always a trouble-maker and always at the wrong time."

Ernst Fabel, a candidate in one of Johannesburg's southern districts, said that Dr Treurnicht has played right into the hands of the Progressive Federal Party. "This blunder has been made at the most inappropriate moment. He has ignored Johannesburg."

Policy

Johan Fick had strong condemnation for this and said: "This is not the time for brotherly disputes in South Africa."

Willie van Rensburg, also a candidate in one of the southern districts, is of the opinion that these events will have an influence on the undecided vote in the city. He said that the policy of the Nationalist Party has not yet changed. He supports the principles of the policy.

Support from Queenstown District

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 21

[Text] A motion of full confidence in the Nationalist Party and in the prime minister, P.W. Botha, and especially in Mr Botha's leadership in the application of party policy, was accepted unanimously yesterday at a meeting of the Nationalist Party's Stutterheim District Council in the Queenstown electorate. Mr Dawid van Onselen is the chairman of the district council.

Orange Free State Support

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 3

[Text] "Crises affect the marrow of any leader...so does the present crisis." This was the statement made yesterday by Dr Nak van der Merwe, the Free State's leader of the Nationalist Party speaking on yesterday's events at the weekly Nationalist Party caucus meeting.

Van der Merwe said: "However, the choice for me is very clear. I am unqualifiably behind the prime minister and the Nationalist Party."

Support from Minister Schoeman

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 3

[Text] Johannesburg--"Prime Minister P.W. Botha must stick to his guns and must not allow himself to be intimidated and must continue on with his policy, because he is on the right track." This is what Ban Schoeman, the well-known former minister, said here yesterday.

Mr Schoeman was commenting on yesterday's Capetown events when at a caucus meeting of the Nationalist Party 22 members of parliament voted against a motion of confidence in the prime minister.

Mr Schoeman said: "This is regrettable, because I support the direction which the prime minister is following. The time has come for us to give the prime minister our full support and for us to close ranks. His task is difficult enough."

He said that the 22 members of parliament have committed an error. "They must return to the party, use their reason and stand by the prime minister."

He said that he does not think that the events point to a swing to the right on the part of the voters.

Support from Natal Members

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 3

[Text] Owen Horwood, minister of finances and Natal leader of the Nationalist Party told DIE BURGER yesterday that he is very proud of the Natal Nationalist Party members of parliament who unanimously supported the prime minister.

Mr Horwood said that he entertains great expectations for the Nationalist Party in Natal.

"I myself am solidly behind the prime minister. The Nationalist Party is strong and solid. We now know exactly where we stand. The time has come for every Nationalist to put aside trifles. If this is done the Nationalist Party will become even stronger to the good of South Africa."

U.S. Observing South Africa

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 3

[Text] Washington--The United States government is watching the political events in South Africa with interest and it is "taking cognizance that the matter which is now being debated entails a movement in the direction of a broader participation in politics by means of power sharing."

The viewpoint of the United States State Department is that the Reagan Administration has stated on several occasions that a process of change is going on in South Africa and that the government of Mr P.W. Botha has committed itself to such a process. It is not the task of the United States to prescribe solutions for South Africa's domestic problems, according to the State Department's view.

7964
CSO: 4701/34

SPLIT IN GOVERNMENT RUMORED

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 5 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by James Dlamini]

[Text]

AN MP said yesterday rumours were circulating about "divisions" in the government.

"There is a popular rumour that the Cabinet is divided into factions," Mr. S.M. Dlamini said. "These divisions, I understand, are so serious that, if our politics was any other way than what it is, we would have experienced what has just happened in South Africa," he said, in an obvious reference to the split in the Nationalist Party in South Africa.

"One hears that there is faction under this priest and that under some other person," he said.

At this stage the Deputy Minister in the Deputy Prime Minister's Office Prince Bhekimpi stood up and said: "Where did you get all that from? Anyway you are speaking out of order. We are speaking about the appropriation of monies here, not the things you are saying."

Another MP Mr. E.P. Mamba, stood up on a point of order while Prince Bhekimpi was speaking and said: "I think the honourable member is perfectly in order and within his rights."

The Speaker ruled that Mr. Dlamini was in order and within his rights, but said he had to support his allegations with facts.

"I dare say that if we have been doing things the way we are doing now, we wouldn't have lasted this long. I am well experienced as an MP, Mr. Dlamini said. "As a politician I have a right to find out from the Prime Minister what is going on in this place."

He further accused Cabinet Ministers of setting a bad example among civil servants were running their own businesses during working hours because they copy the example set by their ministers. "They must set a good example," he said.

"If it means coming to work and leaving on time, then they must do so," he said. "Why are so many Ministers not here now? If I phoned their offices would I find them?" he asked.

He also commented on the recent dismissal of a permanent secretary. "Its the first time I have seen it done. Why are the others who are doing all sorts of things not sacked. Don't tell me that they are all clean and clear."

CSO: 4700/933

REPORTAGE ON ERMELO MEETING ON KANGWANE

Black Cultural Alliance

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 25 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Nonceba Gumede]

[Text]

MEMBERS of the Black Cultural Alliance of South Africa are meeting in Ermelo and will end their discussions tomorrow with a rally at which the Ka-Ngwane homeland unification issue with Swaziland will be discussed.

The alliance, which is headed by Chief Gatsha Buthelezi as chairman, includes the Inkatha National Movement of Kwa-Zulu, Inyandza National Movement of Ka-Ngwane and the Coloured Labour Party of South Africa.

The Chief Minister of Ka-Ngwane, Mr Nganani Enos Mabuza, said in a telephone interview that the proposed incorporation of Ka-Ngwane into Swaziland would feature prominently during the discussions at the Ermelo meeting.

Asked why he kept talking about the issue of incorporation when others spoke of border adjustments, Mr Mabuza said the South African Deputy Minister of Co-operation and Development, Mr J.G. Wentzel, told him about incorporation on December 1 last year.

"The question of border adjustments is to dodge the issue because the main aim behind the talks is actually incorporation," Mr Mabuza said.

He said the Ka-Ngwane issue would be discussed at length at the rally tomorrow with everyone given a chance to speak out.

He declined to give further details about the meeting saying more information could be given by the chairman of the Alliance, Chief Buthelezi, chief minister of KwaZulu.

On the expulsion of Chief Ngomane and Chief Mdluli from being members of their Regional authorities and the Ka-Ngwane Legislative Assembly, Mr Mabuza said the two chiefs were "expelled by their Regional Authorities and the Assembly and not by him or his Cabinet."

"I and my Cabinet had nothing to do with that. If they have anything to say to that, it should be directed to the bodies concerned", he said.

Asked why he was against what the South African Government seem to be in agreement with the request of His Majesty, King Sobhuza II, about border adjustment. Mr Mabuza said he and his followers wanted nothing more than good relations with Swaziland.

"The dispute arose when they wanted us to agree to have incorporation and we felt that it was irrelevant and unconstitutional," he added. He denied that he and his followers and the Ka-Ngwane Parliament were enemies of Swaziland as alleged by his opponents.

Meanwhile the leader of the Ka-Ngwane pro-unification group, Mr David Lukhele, has accused Chief Gatsha Buthelezi of continued support of Mr Mabuza and his subsequent involvement in the Ngwavuma refugee dilemma.

He said Chief Buthelezi was responsible for the creation of the Ngwavuma Refugee camp of the Mngomezulu people in eastern Swaziland.

He said that Chief Buthelezi wanted to create the same situation in the Ka-Ngwane homeland.

Gatsha Attack

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 1 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by James Dlamini]

[Text]

THE Black Alliance of South Africa has bitterly condemned Swaziland and South Africa for their stand on the incorporation of KaNgwane into Swaziland.

The alliance held a convention in Ermelo at the weekend, which was attended by, among others, South African homeland leader, Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, Chief Minister of KwaZulu. The alliance comprises a number of homeland leaders in South Africa.

KaNgwane's homeland leader, Mr Enos Mabuza, used the platform provided by the convention to seek support from the alliance through Chief Gatsha and others.

At the end of the conference, a strongly-worded resolution condemning Swaziland and South Africa for their stand of the incorporation of KaNgwane was passed.

A mass rally was held at Ermelo Stadium yesterday at which Mr Mabuza gave a long impassioned speech and appealed to the alliance and his fellow Swazis in the Republic, who turned up in their thousands, for support.

Chief Gatsha also attacked Swaziland for what he called it's expansionist motives. In his speech, Mr Mabuza stated that, throughout negotiations with South Africa, he and his colleagues were brought under the impression that it was the Swaziland government which initiated the talks on the proposed incorporation of KaNgwane into Swaziland.

"We were also made to understand that it was Swaziland which had told the South African government to refuse the granting of self governing status to KaNgwane as this would thwart the incorporation initiatives," he said.

A recent statement by the Swaziland government which appeared in The Times of Swaziland, Mr Mabuza said, had come to the KaNgwane people as a surprise.

"Welcome as the statement might seem, we remain sceptical because in essence, the statement might be a tactical move on Swaziland's part to play down the issue and avoid censure by the Organisation of African Unity," he said.

Contrast

The statement, the said, had come as a surprise to KaNgwane because it was in sharp contrast with the facts and information at his homeland's disposal.

The Swaziland government statement denied that Swaziland and South Africa have held any talks on unification or incorporation of any area of the Republic of South Africa into Swaziland "as stated in some press media."

The statement also pointed out that the sole purpose of the talks between the two countries were to negotiate a mutually acceptable formula for border and boundary adjustment in order to settle amicably a long outstanding issue.

Mr Mabuza said the arrogant attitude and irresponsible statements by Swaziland representatives, "whom we regard as leaders who should know better, have contributed enormously to the deterioration of KaNgwane's relationship with Swaziland.

"We have in the past done everything possible to foster and maintain the best of relations with that country. We, however, refuse to allow our cultural ties with Swaziland to be exploited in order to enhance and give credibility to an internationally unacceptable political ideology, while depriving us of our rights as citizens of this country (South Africa)."

He told the rally that should Swaziland persist on pressurising South Africa to incorporate KaNgwane, her actions would be interpreted as nothing more than the promotion of an expansionist policy.

Nxumalo Speaks Out on Talks

THE term incorporation has never been used in the present land talks between Swaziland and South Africa.

Swaziland is seeking the inification of the Swazi people as requested many times by Swazis in the disputed areas in the Republic.

King Sobhuza's roving ambassador, Dr. Sishayi Nxumalo, has disclosed that the Swazis in the disputed areas made their request in petitions addressed to King Sobhuza II and Pretoria.

Dr. Nxumalo, who was reacting to remarks made by KaNgwane's Chief Minister, Mr. Enos Mabuza, last week, said if Mr. Mabuza wanted to see proof of his people's true wishes, he should read for himself the petitions by the Swazis in his area in 1978.

Dr. Nxumalo said, after the boundary adjustments have been made, those Swazis living in the affected areas who do not wish to live under King Sobhuza will be free to leave.

"Those opposed to the unification of the Swazis under the kingship of His Majesty King Sobhuza II will have to seek other places to live from Pretoria," said Dr. Nxumalo. "If Mr. Mabuza feels he has a solution for such people he should come up with it now instead of twisting my words to suit his own motives."

He explained that the drawing of Swaziland's boundaries had never been completed before independence. "Nevertheless, there is clear evidence both by way of beacons denoting historical sites of Swazi royal kraals as well as properly documented proof that the areas claimed by Swaziland which now happen to include the part called KaNgwane were, and still remain Swazi territory."

CSO: 4700/933

NGWENYA JOINS FIGHT AGAINST INCORPORATION OF KANGWANE

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 2 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by James Dlamini]

[Text]

PI'd former Swaziland opposition MP, Bhekithemba Ngwenya, has joined the campaign fighting the incorporation of KaNgwane into Swaziland.

Well placed political sources in KaNgwane said Ngwenya has been seen at political meetings with the homeland leader, Mr. Enos Mabuza.

He addressed a political meeting in Barberton in January and spoke against incorporation.

According to the sources, the meeting was organised by Mr. Mabuza, who is rallying support for his opposition to the incorporation of Swazi-occupied territory in the Republic.

A Minister in Mr. Mabuza's legislative assembly said Ngwenya could not attend the rally in Ermelo last Sunday because he was "indisposed."

Elections

Mr. Ngwenya was declared a foreigner by a special tribunal after he had won a seat in the Swaziland Parliament in the 1972 general elections under the now defunct Independence Constitution.

He was a member of the now banned opposition party. He petitioned the High Court and the tribunal's decision was nullified.

Mr. Ngwenya's politics were socialist-oriented while he was in Swaziland. It is not clear whether he is brushing shoulders with Bantustan leaders because he has changed his mind about apartheid or whether he is doing it to punish Swaziland for deporting him. He was not available for comment.

Saga

It is understood that Mabuza is using a number of other South African Swazi who were deported from Swaziland in his campaign.

Other developments in the KaNgwane saga:

The former Director for Education in Swaziland, Mr. S.S. Mahlalela, is now a senior official in the homeland department of education. It is understood that he is being groomed for Minister of Educationa. Mr. Mahlalela attended a conference of the Black Alliance of South Africa in Ermelo recently. He is now a pro-Mabuza activist.

The conference was hostile to Swaziland. It consists of a group of homeland leaders consisting among others of Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, coloured and Indian leaders. The Coloured and Indian leaders represent a minority of their people, because the majority of coloured and Indians reject the system under which they are working.

Chief Buthelezi reacted angrily when a South African journalist suggested that the alliance was a debating society. He said "people who think like that need their heads examined and called him an activist journalist.

At the end of the conference, a resolution was passed alleging that pro-incorporation KaNgwane politicians, Mr. David Lukhele, had made malicious and libellous statements against Buthelezi and Mabuza. Lukhele is alleged to have accused Chief Buthelezi of influencing Mabuza to oppose incorporation.

It is stated that Buthelezi and Mabuza have allied themselves to oppose incorporation of KaNgwane and some areas KwaZulu being claimed on historical grounds.

CSO: 4700/933

BUTHELEZI-MABUZA DEAL ON KANGWANE CLAIMED

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 5 Mar 82 p 8

[Article by James Dlamini: "Homelands' Marriage of Convenience"]

[Text]

IT is now clear that homeland leaders Gatsha Buthelezi of KwaZulud and Enos Mabuza of KaNgwane have intered into a political marriage of convinience.

Mabuza, desperate to hang on to power in KaNgwane is waging a war of words against Swaziland's claim to KaNgwane. He is looking for allies and support from all possible sources. Buthelezi is also clinging onto land being claimed by Swaziland.

Swaziland has refused to discuss the matter with Buthelezi and Mabuza has not been approached on this issue. Realising they are on the same boat, it seems they have decided to rub shoulders, despite the fact that KaNgwane itself has once sought the same land in Zululand to be included in the Swazi homeland.

In fact, Mabuza's opposition is said to have suggested that Mabuza was Buthelezi's puppet. KaNgwane sources also say Buthelezi prefers Mabuza because he is not pressing on with claims to a strip of land around the Ngwavuma area and further deep into KwaZulu.

Their argument is the same. It is namely that if South Africa incorporates KaNgwane and the strip of land in Zululand into Swaziland then it must incorporat Gazankulu to Mozambique, Bophutatswana to Botswana, Venda to Zimbabwe etcetera.

They further argue that boundaries in Africa are legally accepted as they are, with disregard to ethnicism and with no regard to whether or not they were abitrarily drawn.

But pro-unification KaNgwane elements say, according to their understanding of these boundary principles, refer to land taken by conquests, or which were found unoccupied.

The homelands mentioned by Buthelezi and Mabuza, namely Gazankulu, Bopotatswana Venda and others were taken by conquests and are covered by such concepts.

Conquests

KaNgwane and the areas claimed by Swaziland were not taken by conquests, it is argued. Pongola, Ngwavuma and the whole stretch of land occupied in Zululand was Swazi territory, while Natal was governed by the British by virtue of conquest. The Swazi Kings at the time had the defence strategy of allocating land to a strong tribe between Swaziland and a warlike tribe.

This was so that when the war-like tribes tried to unvade Swaziland, troops would have been exhausted by the time they made their way through.

The Swazis were eager to avoid Zulu incursions while the Boers wanted to build a port at Kosie Bay. The British got the news that the Swazis were negotiating with the Boers. The British were not happy about this as they wanted the Boers to use British port facilities as this provided them with revenue.

The British decided to occupy this area and that way, the deal was baked. In the Eastern Transvaal, the land was loaned to Boer farmers for sheep grazing. This meant that the Boers could give the land back as anything loaned can be returned. It is then argued that the case of KaNgwane and Pongola cannot be equated with the other homeland areas.

When I asked chief Buthelezi how he would feel if his colleague, Mabuza demanded that area for KaNgwane as Lukhele had done, he seemed to be taken by surprise and tactically avoided the question, obviously worried about Mabuza's reaction. Mabuza who was sitting next to Chief Buthelezi raised eyebrows and seemed to be keen to hear Buthelezi's answer.

Buthelezi started wise cracking to avoid questions. Each time he was asked a tricky question and the delegates realised he wanted to avoid it they would boo and shout support after he had made any sketchy answer.

Another unsatisfactory answer he gave was when he was asked if he had any historical claim to this area. He said: "Dingane bones are in this area." The history books which have not yet been challeged state clearly that King Dingane of the Zulus died as a fugitive in Swaziland after his armies had been defeated. Swazis stabbed him to death in Swaziland, according to history.

It is obvious that he didn't have anything to say because he must have read some Zulu history, especially about such a famous King as Dingane.

Chief Buthelezi said at first the Swaziland Government co-operated with him to discuss the matter. But then, he said a delegation comprising among others Dr. Sishayi Nxumalo and Velaphi Dlamini approached him to inform that they were laying a claim over the Tembe and other areas

"We had a meeting with Koonhorf in Cape Town and a subsequent date was made for further discussions," Chief Buthelezi said. "But the next time I came, Koonhorf told me that the Swazi delegation was not prepared to discuss anything with me because they did not recognise me," Chief Buthelezi said.

NOTE: Hundreds of Matsenjwa and Mngomezulu refugees in Ndzevane and Lubuli fled from this disputed area to Swaziland. They claim that they were ill treated by Chief Buthelezi's men for identifying themselves with Swaziland and refusing to be taught Zulu customs.

CSO: 4700/933

INDUSTRY MINISTER ON CREATION OF MORE JOBS

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 4 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Mashumi Twala]

[Text]

MORE than 3,000 jobs will be created with the establishment of about 40 companies expected soon.

According to Minister of Industry and Commerce, Prince Nqaba in a prepared speech read by Principal Secretary, Mr. Percy Magomezulu, the Minister said negotiations were at an advanced stage with potential investors.

Prince Nqaba was speaking at the farewell function in honour of outgoing member of the German technical assistance scheme, Dr. Karl Altgayer, held at the Yen Sonn Hotel recently.

He said he was pleased that through the National Industrial Development Corporation's project division, headed by Dr. Altgayer, a 70 percent level of the planned jobs to be created in the country had already been achieved.

"This is encouraging," he said.

He added that he expected the balance of 30 percent to be achieved by the end of the Development Plan next year.

"Job creation can be achieved through a vigorous, systematic and co-ordinated campaign to solicit investors from outside Swaziland," said the Minister.

He urged the NIDCS to pursue other alternatives in addition to existing ones to create more jobs. He said:

"Included here must be investment promotion campaigns, faster decision making in providing facilities to enable manufacturing operations to commence."

Prince Nqaba thanked the West German government for providing E1,700,000 to the NIDCS for the extension and expansion of the technical co-operation agreement.

"For this, we are indeed most grateful and is a demonstration that the West German government is still prepared to assist us to grow and needless to say that we, would not want to see anything disturbing our very warm relationship," he said.

CSO: 4700/933

SPANISH AUTO FIRM TO OPEN FACTORY

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 5 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Charity Tshabalal]

[Text]

SPAIN is to establish a truck manufacturering plant in Swaziland to produce both for local consumption and export to African countries."

The leader of the delegation from Spain is Swaziland's Consular General to Spain, Mr. Rafael Cacas Ortega, said.

The Spanish trade mission currently in Swaziland, to look into possible ways of investing in the Kingdom, held discussions with the Deputy Prime Minister, Ben Nsibandze, Minister for Commerce Industry Mines and Tourism, PRINCE Nqaba, NIDCS, Economic Planning and Statistics and Tibiyo TakaNgwane.

Mr. Rafael Cacas Ortega said, "Spanish and South Americans, wants to find out for themselves, how they can invest their money fruitfully, in the country. His delegation included Bankers, miners and industrialists.

The trade mission's visit was a follow up, to the Deputy Prime Minister's visit to Spain in 1980, during which he invited Spanish and South American investors to Swaziland with the aim of creating job opportunities and training of local people in the industry.

During an interview, Mr. Casa Ortega said, they have already identified places where the Spanish could invest in the country. He said these were in the mining and agricultural projects.

The Consul General also said Spain was interested in financing other projects in the country, aimed at developing Swaziland into a developing Swaziland into an economical viable state.

He said his delegation was happy to work in close consultation with people like, Deputy Director for Geological Survey and Mines, Prince Khuzulwandle who has been helpful to the mission.

CSO: 4700/933

UNION ACCUSES EXPATRIOTS OF 'PLOT'

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 2 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Mashumi Twala]

[Text]

EXPATRIATES have formed an organisation to oppose localisation of posts. They are understood to be drafting a letter to the government asking that Swazis should not be promoted, but should remain in the lowest levels of employment.

These and many other allegations have been made by the Swaziland Bank Workers Union.

In a statement, the union has set out in detail their feelings and views on five major areas of employment and the government policies affecting them.

The areas are: localisation, racial discrimination, equal pay for equal work, localisation of posts and the issue of work permits.

The union expresses "deep concern" that there are people who are not at all clear about the policy of localisation.

It says there has been a concerted effort by employers to recruit young and inexperienced expatriates from Zimbabwe, Mauritius and the Far East.

"Workers of this country expect and deserve protection from their own government from such dangerous exploitation," it says. "As workers, we are determined not to involve ourselves in politics, but this is on a clear understanding that those who are involved in politics will look into out interest and give us the necessary protection."

The union alleges that certain highly placed Swazi public officers have become tools by which expatriates have set themselves to achieve economic domination in both the employment and business sectors.

"We would, therefore, wish to know if government has decided to change the policy that was clearly stated and accepted by workers at independence, and has been clearly restated by the present Deputy Prime Minister? the statement asks.

The union says racial discrimination is common when it comes to pay. They contest that there are salary scales reserved for white expatriates and salary scales for Swazis. "This problem is perpetrated by the present system where posts are never advertised where it is felt such posts could attract either a Swazi or white expatriate. When advertisements are published, salary scales are never published and in this way, businesses and companies ensure that when a white expatriate is appointed, the scale reserved for whites is given to them. But should a Swazi, who is qualified, become available, then a lower scale reserved for Swazis or Africans is used."

An appeal is made by the union to the government to take appropriate action and to exercise strict control in the issue of work permits to ensure that these are issued only where there are no nationals available for such jobs.

"A situation where this country is used as a dumping ground for foreigners who cannot work in their own countries must be stopped."

The union criticises the domination by Portuguese of the motor and garage industries and that "we find it extremely unexplainable the situation where there is at this stage of development, not a single professionally qualified accountant in this country."

The union feels the training of accountants is the responsibility of the operating firms and asks government to ensure that a stop is made on the importation of foreigners to do this job.

In their statement, the union deplores what they call "the recent closure of wholesale shops," in which government has participation through the NIDCS. "What did the local directors of Metro Cash and Carry do to avert the closure we witnessed a few weeks ago? Absolutely nothing.

CSO: 4700/933

DETAILS OF BUDGET DEBATE REPORTED

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 4 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by James Dlamini]

[Text]

AN MP yesterday warned: "Lets kill all the mice before they finish all the money we have."

"These money-eating mice are making us poorer everyday," Mr. A.S.V. Dlamini said. "I have a solution: Parliament should go all out and kill all of them. Unless we do this, all our funds will continue disappearing and foreign aid donors will be scared off."

He was commenting on the Minister of Finance's appropriation Bill.

"In his budget speech, the Minister talks of E35 million to come from international aid sources. Does he realise that these people are becoming reluctant to give us their money because of our mice," he said. "People don't want to give their money to mice," he added.

Former Deputy Prime Minister, Dr. Zonke Khumalo, once told the King that money in the Tisuka Taka Ngwane Fund had been eaten by mice.

Freak

In a freak case, before Parliamentary proceedings started, the clerk at table read a report by a technician who stated that the recording system had broken down on Tuesday...because some electrical wiring had been eaten by mice!

The House burst out laughing because of the reference to mice.

The Speaker said: "Mice again! These horrible creatures, they just eat up everything".

Points raised during the proceedings:

Mr. E.P. Mamba criticised ministers for not reporting progress on projects. "We release funds for projects, but the ministries just go to sleep," he said. "You hear ministries complaining of lack of funds. We release funds, and when it is their turn to report, they never do it," he said.

"I support the honourable member, who said he will not support the capital expenditure. If I were a Minister I would realise that as a politician, my main responsibility is to the people and make sure that they see me successfully completing my projects," he said. "Don't just sit around and say the boys are working."

He demanded that the Budget should be debated after the public accounts committee had scrutinised the Auditor General's Report. He also suggested that the budgeting system should be changed in order to meet priorities instead of indulging in projects which are irrelevent to national aspirations.

"If you go asking people one by one in the streets about some government projects you will find they don't like them", he added.

Warning

"I want to sound this warning: Unless the ministers go back to their offices and meet their collective responsibility the ship is going to sink," he said.

Another MP, Mr. D.M. Shongwe, said the country's raw materials were providing jobs for other people in the processing industry in foreign countries. He said processing industries should be started locally to reduce unemployment.

CSO: 4700/933

SENATORS REJECT SOUTH AFRICAN FUNDED SILOS BILL

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 4 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by James Dlamini]

[Text]

A BILL seeking to authorise the Minister of Finance, Mr. James Simelane, to borrow E1.7 million from South Africa has been thrown out of the Senate.

The Senators voted seven against and five in favour.

Three of the five who voted in favour were Cabinet Ministers which means only two independent MPs supported the Bill. The Minister said the money was to be borrowed from the South African Development Corporation.

The Minister said the money was needed to build strategic maize silos. The intention, he said, was to build silos in strategic centres in the country for emergency food shortages such as in times of famine and political turmoil.

The Bill was passed by the House of Assembly last month after much controversial debate. The Senators said if the Minister wanted to borrow money he must do so from other sources and not from South Africa. The Senators also argued that the country did not produce enough maize to justify the construction of silos.

The Bill still stands one last chance of becoming law. Procedurally, when a money bill has been passed by the House of Assembly and thrown out of the Senate, it is taken to the King for scrutiny after seven days.

CSO: 4700/933

PARLIAMENTARIANS CALL FOR PAY EQUALIZATION

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 3 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by James Dlamini]

[Text]

TWO Members of Parliament yesterday warned: "Close the pay gap or there will be trouble."

The MPs said the pay gap between the low and higher income groups in the public service was too high and unacceptable to the public.

They warned that such imbalances in salaries created resentments among the people. "You are dividing the people," Mr. S.M. Dlamini warned the government.

He said salaries should be restructured to close this gap. He was commenting on the Minister of Finance's 1982-83 budget. In the budget it is revealed that E20 million is allocation for pay rises in the civil service.

"If the lowest paid are to get say five per cent, the middle group should get three per cent and the highly paid two or even one per cent," Mr. Dlamini said.

"The Minister spoke of pay reviews for civil servants; I wonder how genuine this is," another MP, Prince Maquba asked. "Usually when there are pay rises, it is the top people who benefit from this and the lowly paid hardly get anything.

"My concern is that when the people in the government speak of pay rises, they usually mean pay rises for themselves," the Prince added. "They get the lion's share."

"Twenty per cent of a meagre salary is nothing, but 20 per cent of E1,000 is a lot of money," he said. He pointed out that the cost of living for the lowest paid group went up by 30 per cent and for the highly paid by only 18 per cent.

"This E20 million should be fairly distributed," he said.

Mr. S.M. Dlamini also criticised the Minister of Finance Mr. James Simelane for expecting parliament to debate his capital budget before the parliamentary public accounts committee scrutinises the Auditor General's Report.

"I am not prepared to debate capital expenditure unless the Minister makes a convincing explanations. I am only going to debate recurrent expenditure. I am also not going to support your budget," Mr. Dlamini said.

Mr. Dlamini also complained that parliament, from time to time released funds for organisations like the NIDCS, but there were no explanations on how these funds were utilised.

"I want to know what happened to the funds we released to develop an agricultural project at Makhobeni, because up to now I can't see anything being developed in that area," he said. "We were told a tin mine was to be opened at Sinceni, a hotel was to be built in Pigg's Peak, but up to now we don't see anything," he said.

"Large stretches of land have been bought, but to my dismay, they are not being developed.

"We have not been told of new big companies opening up to provide new jobs. What is the Minister of Industry doing. Is he stopping companies from opening or something?" he asked.

Another MP, Mr. E.P. Mamba suggested that recurrent expenditure could be so high because government was releasing salaries to pay people who have long left the public service.

CSO: 4700/933

PM SETS UP JOINT DEVELOPMENT BODY

Mbabane THE SWAZI OBSERVER in English 27 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Mandla Magagula]

[Text] THE Prime Minister, Prince Mabandla, has made a major break-through by bringing the Government and Tibiyo Taka Ngwane to co-operate in the development of the country in order to avoid duplication of activities.

Last week, the Prime Minister called and chaired a meeting of representatives from his Government and Tibiyo, of which he is chairman of the Board of Trustees.

The meeting formed a joint steering committee to work on a study of the Usushwana, Usutu and Ngwavuma river basins to explore what agricultural projects could be undertaken there.

It also formed a working committee chaired by Mr Goshe Szokolay, chairman of the Simunye to monitor the day to day activities of the consultants working on the study and ensure that the terms of reference are adhered to.

The Prime Minister addressed a joint meeting of the two sides in Mbabane and told them that they should co-ordinate their efforts to avoid duplication while working on development projects, the Acting Secretary to the Cabinet, Mr John Mngomezulu, said yesterday.

A conflict of interests came to light when Government wanted to get a foreign loan for consultants to undertake the study of the Usushwana, Usutu and Ngwavuma river basins, only to find that Tibiyo had already commissioned Tate and Lyle to do the work from its own funds.

Tibiyo's argument was that seeing that they were using funds from within the country, it was not necessary for Government to borrow money from outside for the same project, informed sources said.

Prince Mabandla then stepped in and formed the 12-man steering committee, consisting of six members from each side under the chairmanship of the Principal Secretary for Economic Planning and Statistics, Mr Vusi Sikhondze.

The members from Government are Mr Ray Strydom, Principal Secretary for Finance, Mr Arthur Khoza, Principal Secretary for Agriculture and Co-operatives, Mr Percy Mngomezulu, Principal Secretary for Commerce, Industry, Mines and Tourism, Mr Mordecai Khumalo, Principal Secretary for Home Affairs and Mr Gilbert Mabila, Principal Secretary for Works, Power and Communications.

Tibiyo is represented by Mr Sipho Dlamini, General Manager, Mr Goshe Szokolay, Mr Frank Kockott, Mr David Mtetwa, Project Manager, Mr Robert Friedlander, Legal Adviser, and Mr John Ranger, Simunye General Manager.

The study involves the three rivers and their tributaries and its aim is to determine the potential of each of the basins to establish irrigation schemes.

The study will also determine what crops can be produced in those basins.

It had been agreed that Tate and Lyle should go ahead with the study and they had already started their work, the sources said.

Observers believe the coming together of Government and the national organisation will speed up the development of the country as there will be no more duplication of activities by the two sides.

It is also generally believed that a successful conclusion of the study will go a long way in helping to achieve self-sufficiency in food production, which has evaded the country since independence almost 12 years ago.

Observers believe the prime Minister's achievement in bringing together his Government and Tibiyo will go a long way to improve relations between the two sides.

CSO: 4700/933

TANZANIAN, BURUNDIAN PARTIES PLEDGE INCREASED COOPERATION

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 3 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Halima Shariff]

[Text]

TANZANIA's Chama Cha Mapinduzi and Burundi's UPRONA have pledged increased co-operation and exchange of information and experiences in order to bring about mass development in the two countries.

The pledge was made in Dar es Salaam yesterday during the last round of consultations between senior CCM officials and those of the visiting UPRONA delegation which ended its seven-day stay in Tanzania yesterday. The Burundi team is expected to leave for home today.

The CCM Chief Executive Secretary, Ndugu Daudi Mwakawago, who led a six-man team to the talks, emphasised the exchange of information and experiences in order to foster mass development.

In this way, he said, the peoples of the two countries could learn more from each other and added: "They could identify the problems they faced and evaluate the progress made."

Ndugu Mwakawago told the visitors that since Tanzania was going through a difficult economic period, CCM was doing all it could to increase production, especially of food and cash crops.

He said CCM was currently implementing one of its major programmes — the National Economic Survival Programme (NESP)—approved last year. NESP's objectives are the production of enough food crops and boosting the country's foreign exchange resources by selling more abroad.

The UPRONA Secretary-General, Ndugu Emile Mwaroha, said the existing co-operation between the two parties should be strengthened and added that fraternity would enable the two countries to solve some of their problems which were mainly economic.

On UPRONA's immediate tasks, he said the Party was stressing the establishment of co-operatives and bolstering rural development. He added Burundi had embarked on a villagisation programme and said Tanzania's experience in this area would immensely benefit his country.

The Burundi delegation called on the CCM Chairman, Mwalimu Nyerere, and the Vice-Chairman, Ndugu Aboud Jumbe, in Pemba yesterday.

During their one-week stay in the country, the UPRONA leaders visited Lindi and Mtwara regions to inspect various projects undertaken by people in villages and CCM's efforts in rural development.

CSO: 4700/929

NATION WILL RATIFY RFTA AGREEMENT BY END OF MONTH

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 1 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Elizabeth Marealle]

[Text] TANZANIA will ratify the agreement to establish a Ruvuma Free Trade Association (RFTA) between Tanzania and Mozambique by the end of this month, Trade Minister, Ali Mchumo, told Shihata over the weekend.

Speaking on the outcome of a two-day session of the sub-commission of the Tanzania-Mozambique Joint Commission for economic Cooperation held in the city last week, he said Trade Ministers from the two countries urged the two governments to hasten exchange of instruments of ratification.

He said the agreement to set up RFTA signed by Trade Ministers of the two countries during the sub commission meeting held in Maputo, Mozambique in November last year seeks to create a free trade area as an integral part of the Association.

The association is intended to promote economic development in the area by expanding trade through reduction and progressive elimination of tariff barriers in goods to be traded between the two countries.

Ndugu Mchumo said the Sub-Commission meeting in Dar es Salaam instructed importing and exporting firms involved in the common import and export policies to meet to finalise their discussion as soon as possible.

The common import policy would involve bulky purchase of cereals, fertilizer and industrial chemicals while the two countries would export in bulk — tea, timber, cashewnut and sisal.

On selling tea under the proposed common export policy, he said international broking firms have been invited to inspect tea auctioning facilities in Maputo, Nacala, Mozambique and Dar es Salaam, and recommended those to be used by both.

Ndugu Mchumo said the Sub Commission meeting in Dar es Salaam instructed Mozambique to invite Zaire and Malawi while Tanzania was instructed to invite Rwanda and Burundi to utilise the common facility after receiving the broking firms proposals.

He further said the Sub Commission has directed banking officials, followed by central bank governors of the two countries to meet in order to review past payment arrangements and to reconcile last year's trade balance.

The meeting also agreed to ensure that a large precentage of goods traded between the two countries should be moved on "our national shipping lines as far as possible".

Among other things the RFTA treaty requires member states to cooperate fully in promoting trade and coordinating their economic plans particularly in the industrial sector.

It requires member states to conclude annual trade protocols determining the types, qualities and value of the products to exchange between them during that year.

The Agreement which comes into force on the day the two government ratify it stipulates that after five years member states shall determine the effect of tariff reduction and after another five years external tariff would no longer be imposed.

The Sub Commission also reviewed and signed the report on the implementation of the 1981 annual trade protocol and later on instructed trade officials to analyse the trade performance and work out details on this year's trade protocol.

Tanzania exports to Mozambique items like textiles, aluminium sheets, cocoa, beans and hoes while Mozambique sells to Tanzania goods like welding electrodes, tyres, tubes and sewing machines.

Trade between Tanzania and Mozambique has grown steadily since 1978 when the trade agreement was signed between them in August 1978 despite economic constraints facing them.

In 1978 Tanzania exported goods worth 107.767 million/- and imported items worth 37.832 million/- while in 1979 trade figures were 128.095 million/- in exports and 16.678 million/- in imports.

Imports in 1980 amounted to 21.877 million/- and export were 139.956 million/- and last year the volume of trade for both countries was expected to level at 150 million/-.

CSO: 4700/929

SUDECO TAKING MEASURES TO FILL VACANT POSTS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 1 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] THE Sugar Development Corporation (SUDECO) is taking measures to fill the posts left vacant by officials who have been retired, dismissed or forced to resign during the past four months, a senior official of the corporation said in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

The official told Shihata that SUDECO had at the moment eleven vacant posts to fill to reduce a heavy workload now being shouldered by some of the corporation's staff.

The vacant places are that of a general manager (one post), SUDECO secretary (one post), marketing director (one post) depot manager (one post), insurance officer (one), stores officer (one) and store keepers (five).

He said the corporation was working closely with the parent ministry of agriculture on the issue. "We are working very hard to inject new blood into the corporation to ensure more efficient services to the people".

He added that the corporation had already advertised the vacant posts in the local press but declined to mention the number of applications they had received so far for each post.

The post of general manager and corporation secretary fell vacant in October last year after former general manager, A. D. Munthali and Corporation Secretary William Kijugo were retired in the public interest.

That of the marketing director was vacated early last month, by Ndugu S. F. Urio who resigned after a parliamentary probe committee found him implicated in malpractices in the corporation.

Former depot manager, A. Simba and his assistant Ndugu T.E. Sawe were dismissed recently for alleged malpractices. Also dismissed were five store keepers, Alois Kasimili, Moshi Kambi, Asharae Mtambulio, Raphael Marandu and Rwebangila and an import and export official A. Mashotu. Those whose services were terminated include S.L. Christopher, an insurance official and S.P. Renson, a distribution manager. Another official J.A. Mwamatandala was demoted.

CSO: 4700/929

TANZANIA, MOZAMBIQUE AGREE ON TRADE PROTOCOL

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 27 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Excerpt]

TANZANIA and Mozambique have agreed on a trade protocol under which a number of commodities will be exchanged between the two countries this year and have also agreed to intensify efforts to expand trade in other items not covered by the protocol.

The Acting Commissioner for Foreign Trade in the Ministry of Trade, Ndugu A.A. Abbas, said yesterday in Dar es Salaam that under the protocol, Tanzania will export to Mozambique aluminium sheets and circles, cocoa beans and hoes.

She will import from her southern neighbour welding electrodes, tyres and tubes and sewing machines.

The agreement to sell goods to each other under the protocol and to strengthen existing trade ties between the two countries was reached during a week-long meeting of officials from the two countries. The meeting ended in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

"In addition to exchanging goods listed in the protocol, the two countries have agreed to intensify efforts to expand trade in other items not covered by the protocol but which either of them may be in need of", Ndugu Abbas said.

He explained that the protocol was only a manifestation of the trade between the two countries but there were no boundaries to trade between them.

Officials of the two countries met in Dar es Salaam as the task force on trade of the Tanzania-Mozambique Sub-commission on trade. They reviewed implementation of an earlier protocol signed in 1981 before working out on the 1982 one.

Tanzania's Minister for Trade, Ndugu Ali Mchumo, and the Mozambican Minister for Foreign Trade, Ndugu Salomao Manguwambe signed the implementation report for the 1981 protocol in Dar es Salaam on Tuesday.

The acting commissioner for external trade said during the talks Tanzania mentioned the items she wanted to buy from Mozambique but which were not in the protocol such as paraffin cookers, viscose fibres and some other goods. Mozambique on the other hand said the goods availability would have to be ascertained before saying whether they could export them to Tanzania.

Ndugu Abbas said Tanzania told the Mozambican delegation that she should sell enamel copper wire, fish nets, crates for soft drinks, timber products, steel drums and enamel ware.

The Mozambican side said they would have to confirm back home first whether there were possibilities of ordering these items.

CSO: 4700/929

MINISTER STRESSES CONSOLIDATION OF EXISTING MINES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 27 Feb 82 p 1

[Text] Tanzania has identified location of her mineral wealth and the major task facing the Ministry of Minerals is to mobilise funds and equipment to exploit them, the Minister, Ndugu Jackson Makwetta, said in Dar es Salaam on Thursday.

He added, however, that his ministry would concentrate on consolidating existing mines instead of embarking on new projects which would overstretch the meagre financial resources available.

Speaking at a farewell party in honour of outgoing minister John Malecela, who takes up the Communications and Transport portfolio, Ndugu Makwetta said the government would, however, continue to encourage willing investers to develop the field.

"We are lucky in that we already know where our important mineral deposits area. What remains is exploitation, but we don't have the necessary equipment..... It takes money to make money in minerals."

Earlier, Ndugu Malecela explained that development of the minerals sector called for integrated efforts by virtually all sectors especially the transport sector.

He said his ministry was working out plans to ferry phosphates from the Minjingu mines in Hanang District, Arusha Region, which start operation later this year.

The Minister pointed out that the Ministry of minerals, formed a year ago, had laid the foundation for the development of the minerals sector and urged further efforts "to restore the prominence of this sector in the national development."

In their message, employees of the ministry who organised the party lauded Ndugu Malecela's contribution as minister, pointing out that several important projects took off during his term in office.

They cited the opening of the Buckreef gold mine in Geita District, Mwanza Region, the Minjingu phosphate mine in Arusha and the Songwe-Kiwira, Ilima and Mchuchuma coal mines as indicative of the minister's contribution.

FRENCH CGT, JUWATA ISSUE JOINT STATEMENT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 27 Feb 82 p 3

[Article by Emma Faraji]

[Excerpt]

THE French Workers Confederation (C.G.T.) and the Union of Tanzania Workers (JUWATA) yesterday called for increased cooperation between workers of the capitalist and developing countries to struggle against exploitation by transnational corporations.

The call was made at the end of a five-day official visit to Tanzania by the CGT delegation led by Confederal Secretary of CGT Ndugu Pierre Gensous.

The two unions further agreed to strengthen information exchange as a step towards enhancing bilateral relations.

In a joint statement they pledged to uphold the principles of non-interference and mutual respect and also supported the principles of self-determination without foreign interference.

Both parties supported the United Nations resolution 435 as a basis for the independence of Namibia and called on the boer regime and the so-called western Contact Group to implement it so that Namibia could gain independence this year.

Continual support for national liberation movements in Africa and elsewhere was reaffirmed with a resolution to continue to muster support for putting an end to apartheid in South Africa.

They also called for the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) in all negotiations towards attaining the right of Palestinians to a free and independence state.

The trade unionists also emphasized that the Indian Ocean be left zone free of military rivalry and agreed that the use of Diego Garcia as a military base is an escalation of aggressive policy.

They pledged to continue to advocate for peace and security in the world and to work effortlessly towards a just and more equitable world economic situation.

The CGT delegation which leaves Dar es Salaam this morning invited a JUWATA official to the CGT's 41st Congress in June this year, and the invitation was accepted.

CSO: 4700/929

CERTIFICATE AWARD CEREMONY FOR YOUTHS COMPLETING JKU SCHEDULED

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 28 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Ally Saleh]

[Text] SOME 850 youths who completed their one-year compulsory service with Jeshi la Kujenga Uchumi (JKU) will be awarded their certificates today at a ceremony at Kama Camp.

A JKU official said yesterday that this would be the seventh batch to complete JKU course since it was created and the fourth since the service was made compulsory.

The guest of honour at today's pass-out parade will be the Zanzibar Urban and West Party Secretary, Ndugu Swahiri Silima, who will also present the certificates.

Another 240 youths who completed the same course received their certificates in Pemba on Friday during a ceremony at Maani Camp in Pandani.

The next intake of 2,000 Form Three and Form Four leavers is expected to enter various camps on March 8.

The official said JKU had already notified all of those concerned with the call-up.

He also said for the first time 132 Form Six leavers would be admitted to the camps.

JKU, he added, was communicating with the Isles' Ministry of Education so as to get the names of the Isles university graduates eligible for JKU service.

The official warned that stern measures would be taken against those evading the call-up.

The camps which the school leavers join for an initial three-month basic military training are Upenja and Bambi in Zanzibar, and Chambani in Pemba after which the youths are posted to Machui, Kama, Dunga and Cheju in Zanzibar and Maani in Pemba where they do production work.

CSO: 4700/929

ZANZIBAR TO SEND SHIPS TO MADAGASCAR FOR REPAIRS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 27 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Ali Saleh]

[Text]

THE Zanzibar Government is planning to send her steamers for repairs to the Diego Soares dry dock in Malagasy instead of sending them to Mombasa, Kenya.

This was revealed by the Director of Planning and Administration in the Zanzibar Ministry of Transport and Communications, Ndugu Sheha Mohamed when talking to newsmen yesterday.

He said the Isles government had learnt that the Diego Soares dry dock had modern facilities and that it was more efficient than the Mombasa one.

He said that the Zanzibar Shipping Agency General Manager, Ndugu Humphrey Shaibu, was expected to leave here soon for Malagasy to finalise arrangements with the Malagasy authorities.

He said Ndugu Shaibu was expected to sign a contract on behalf of the Isles government binding the agency and the Malagasy counterparts.

To start with, if all goes well, the first ships to be sent to Malagasy for their annual repairs will be mv Maendeleo and mv Mapinduzi, both passenger ships, and oil tanker mv Ukombozi.

Plans were underway, he said, to look for another dry dock of international standard along the east coast where Zanzibar would send her other ships; mv Africa and an oil tanker mv Uhuru.

On the Mombasa dry dock, he said it was somehow overcrowded and causing delays.

Zanzibar has been sending her ships to the Mombasa dry dock for several years and one of the government-owned ships mv Jamhuri was undergoing repairs there now.

It is now more than five months since the ship was sent there for repairs, and it was not yet back, according to Ndugu Mohamed who remarked: "We cannot afford to let our ships stay that long at a dry dock".

Ndugu Mohamed has commended crew members of the mv Mapinduzi who repaired the ship's generator, saving over 400,000/- in foreign currency.

CSO: 4700/929

EEC TO FINANCE PROGRAM TO REPAIR TRUCKS, BUSSES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 27 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Mkumbwa Ally]

[Text] TENDERS for the supply of vehicle components, spare parts and raw materials for body construction will be floated next month under a rehabilitation programme involving 1,300 trucks and buses financed by a 112 million/- European Economic Community (EEC) grant.

The Chairman and Managing Director of the National Transport Corporation (NTC) which will supervise implementation of the project, Ndugu Melkizedeck Sanare, said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the tenders would be awarded on June 30.

He added that delivery would be completed two months later and that the entire project was scheduled for completion 18 months after advertising the tenders.

The project involves rehabilitation of 600 trucks and buses for some 20 public institutions and the Ministry of Works and the construction of bodies on 700 chasis delayed by the shortage of imported raw materials.

The programme is expected to inject into the national transport capacity an addition of over 12,000 tonnes benefiting mainly trucking departments in the agricultural, industrial and transport sectors.

In a statement after a joint meeting between the NTC, EEC and project beneficiaries held in the city, Ndugu Sanare explained that the components and materials would be sold at "relatively cheaper prices" because they would be exempted from custom duty and tax.

The body construction raw materials would be sold to body building firms at normal market prices, he said, adding that the revenues would be credited to a special account operated by NTC and which would be utilized for projects in the road transport sector.

Ndugu Sanare told the meeting that the components to be imported from the EEC, Africa, Carribean and Pacific (ACP) countries and Zimbabwe would include complete new engines to be sold to beneficiaries in exchange for the old ones.

He explained that arrangements were being made to embark on a second phase of the rehabilitation project which would involve reconditioning of some of the old engines.

He said the beneficiaries in collaboration with the NTC and vehicle franchise dealers will identify the vehicles to be rehabilitated which should be operational but have broken down for lack of components and other parts.

The vehicles should be five to 10-tonners of EEC origin (Fiat, Leyland/Albion and Mercedes Benz makes) and must be five years old or less, he explained.

The EEC delegate in Tanzania, Mr. Benno Haffner, told the meeting that the project was intended to supplement government efforts in developing transport capacity and not as a substitute of national plans.

He explained that the EEC would employ a monitoring team for the project to ensure that the laid down terms were implemented. Particular care would be taken to ascertain that the new engines were installed intact without being cannibalised, he added.

Mr. Haffner said the outcome of the project which he described as a "test programme" would determine further EEC assistance in the country's transport sector.

Some 68 million/- of the grant will be spent on importation of vehicle components and related parts, 22.4 million/- on raw materials for construction of bodies and the remaining 21.6million/- on contingencies.

Under the grant, manufacturers of the imported parts and their local agents would provide skilled mechanics to assist with the component installation. Ndugu Sanare said in the statement that some of the vehicles would be rehabilitated at the workshop of beneficiaries and others at dealers' workshops.

The project beneficiaries include the National Bus Service (Kamata), Usafiri Dar es Salaam (UDA), National Milling Corporation, tea and cotton authorities, Tanzania Wood Industry, General Agricultural Products Export Corporation, Regional Transport Companies and the Board of Internal Trade.

Others are the Tanzania Wood Industry, Tanzania Breweries Limited, Tanzania Railways Corporation, Sugar Development Corporation, Zambia, Tanzania Road Services. Dar es Salaam City Council, National Cold Chains Operations and the Ministry of Works.

Mwananchi Engineering and Contracting Company, Coast Region Transport Co-operative Society, Tanzania Electric Supply Company and the Posts and Telecommunications Corporation are also listed under the programme.

CSO: 4700/929

PARTY SECRETARY CLARIFIES CCM CONSTITUTION ON RENTING

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 25 Feb 82 p 3

[Excerpt]

PARTY members who rent some of the rooms in houses they own and live in will not be put to task for violating the Party constitution, the Party Chief Executive Secretary, Ndugu Daudi Mwakawago, clarified in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

But, he said, a Party member or leader who builds another house for renting be violating the CCM Constitution and would not be excused.

Ndugu Mwakawago said: "A person who builds more than one house for the purpose of earning money through renting or any other commercial purpose is not with us. This fellow builds houses in several places purely for business. He does not aim at helping the houseless either.

Ndugu Mwakawago was closing a seminar for members of the Dar es Salaam Regional Party Executive Committee at the Adult Education Centre.

He called for the formation of ideological discussion groups which will meet regularly to discuss issues at hand. Such groups would accord Party members, in particular, opportunities to express their views and learn from others.

He said issues arising out of the seminar and those which need clarification should be sent to the headquarters for action.

He called on the districts and regions to arrange similar seminars at branch level.

He said the Party Guidelines should be extensively discussed. "It (Mwongozo) has many concepts which cannot be discussed in one or two days," he said.

He said, for example, the concept of criticism and self-criticism was easy to talk about but difficult to put into practice without first grasping its theory.

He said in order for people to understand the new changes in the Party constitution, the CCM electoral procedures and the National Economic Survival Programme (NESP), they had to be very conversant with the Party Guidelines.

CSO: 4700/929

MBEYA CEMENT PLANT TO START PRODUCTION IN JUNE

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 25 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Charles Kizigha]

[Text] THE Mbeya cement factory is expected to start production this June when the new Mbeya power station will be generating 10 megawatts of electricity instead of the present less than one megawatt.

The Managing Director of the Tanzania Electric Supply Company Limited (TANESCO), Ndugu L.S. Mosha, told the "Daily News" yesterday that the power currently supplied to the factory was not meant for running the plant but for essential services.

He said the cement factory should have started production by now had it not been for the delay of the new Mbeya power station project which was about a yeasand a half behind schedule.

He explained that the project was delayed because of non-availability of local materials particularly cement and steel. He added that there were also some serious construction problems but declined further details.

Ndugu Mosha said that the plant alone needed 7.5 megawatts of electricity when operating at full capacity.

However, he said, the first of the six generators of the new Mbeya power station estimated to cost 110m/- is expected to be commissioned on March 30, this year, with the generating capacity of 2.5megawatts.

Ndugu Mosha said two more generators of 2.5 megawatts each will be commissioned this May and by the end of June another generator of 2.5 megawatts would be installed bringing to 10MW the total power output.

The managing director said that another two generators of three megawatts each will be installed in August by TANESCO bringing power output at the new station to 16 MW.

He said that the machinery for the project was procured through grants and suppliers' credit from Finland and United Kingdom.

Meanwhile, a Shihata dispatch, from Mbeya has said the cement factory whose construction was completed early last year was running losses of up to 24m/- every month due to delays in starting production because of an acute power shortage currently hitting Mbeya.

CSO: 4700/929

SHUTDOWN SUGAR FACTORY RESUMES PRODUCTION

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 26 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Ally Saleh]

[Excerpt]

THE state-owned Mahonda sugar factory which grounded to a halt slightly over a year ago resumed production yesterday.

An official of the factory, Ndugu Mohammed Ngasama, said that the factory technicians had succeeded to repair the defective machines after acquiring the spare parts from abroad.

He said the factory had ordered its spares long ago but there was communication break-down somewhere. "The battle was very hard but we have won at last" he said confidently.

The factory, Ndugu Ngasama elaborated now aims at producing 600 tons of sugar a day instead of the previous 400 tons.

He, however, declined comment on the extent of loss incurred during the one-year closure of the factory.

The closure of the factory had forced the administration to lay off 1000 workers both in the factory and in the sugar plantation.

The resumption of sugar production and the projected output would alleviate the present sugar shortages in the Isles.

However the factory will be under one month trial programme before normal production resumes for commercial purposes.

The rate of sugar output will also affect the liquor and perfume production by two-fold, Ndugu Ngasama said.

The factory produces a range of liquors and perfumes but has found a reasonable external market to earn the Isle foreign currency.

CSO: 4700/929

PAPER MILL CONSTRUCTION ALMOST HALF COMPLETED

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 3 Mar 82 p 3

[Text]

FORTY per cent of the construction work on the Southern Paper and Pulp Mill project has been completed and trial production is scheduled to commence towards the end of next year the Project General Manager Ndugu Juma Omari Lweno has said.

Addressing visiting members of the Parliamentary Finance and Economic Committee, Ndugu Lweno said 50 per cent of the construction equipment had arrived at the site and that all the civil works designs had been completed. The mechanical engineering works design is also near completion, he added.

The Project executed in two phases is expected to start with an output of 60,000 tons of paper per year meeting local demand and leaving ample product for export to neighbouring countries. Tanzania needs some 25,000 tons of paper a year.

Presently all the paper is imported. The Mufindi mill is expected to save the country some 446 million/- per annum in foreign exchange.

The factory is expected to consume 283,000 cubic metres of wood from the Sao Hill forests and 65,000,000 litres of water a day when in production.

Mill site facilities for a labour force of over 1,000 people, include a primary school, a hospital, a bank, a post office and a police station.

The entire project costing (2,500 million/-) is co-financed by the World Bank, the Commonwealth Development Corporation, the Kuwait Arab Development Bank, the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries, the Nordic Investment Bank, the Swedish International Development Authority KFW of West Germany and the National Development Corporation.

CSO: 4700/929

FRG STUDIES SHOW RICE PROJECT 'NOT FEASIBLE'

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 3 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

THE Tanga-based Lower Mkomazi project which was to have been turned into a large-scale rice growing irrigation scheme, has been abandoned because it is "technically not feasible."

According to feasibility studies conducted on the area by a Federal Republic of Germany (FRG) consultancy firm, Hydroplan Rodeco and Instrupa, "the soils in the valley are full of saline and have very low rate of percolation that it was not possible to wash off salts through drainage systems."

A statement issued by the Ministry of Agriculture in Dar es Salaam yesterday said the Ministry "has no immediate plans to develop the valley for irrigation farming purposes on account of what the consultants have reported."

Briefing Shihata on the decision to drop the project, the Director of Irrigation Division in the Ministry Ndugu H. Mwinyigoha, said it was wrong to cling to something which had been technically proved to be unsuitable.

He said the FRG Government, which funded feasibility studies on the valley through a 16 million/- grant, has expressed its willingness to finance any other project in any area proved to be suitable for development.

The Lower Mkomazi project, in Korogwe District, was first conceived and appraised by a United Nations Food and Agricultural Organisation (FAO) reconnaissance team in 1950.

The project's possible potentiality for agricultural undertaking was revived by an FRG consultancy firm, AHT Consultants, when it conducted feasibility studies for the Tanga Region Master Plan.

Ndugu Mwinyigoha explained that the government's interest on the project was motivated by the successes scored by the Mombo Irrigation Scheme whose results he described as "encouraging."

Meanwhile, the Ministry has thanked the FRG Government and its Agency for the financial assistance she extended to the project.

"Although there have been some technical limitations on this one, we hope other areas can be earmarked in the future for similar co-operation development," Ndugu Mwinyigoha said.

CSO: 4700/929

BRIEFS

CUBAN COOPERATION AGREEMENT--Tanzania and Cuba yesterday signed an agreement aimed at intensifying the existing co-operation between the two countries in the fields of education, culture and information. The Principal Secretary in the Ministry of Information and Culture, Ndugu G. Tibakweitira, signed on behalf of Tanzania while the Cuban Ambassador in Tanzania, Ndugu Oscar Fernandez Padilla signed on behalf of his country, at a short ceremony held in Ndugu Tibakweitira's office. Under the two year agreement covering July this year up to June 1984, the two countries shall exchange educational delegations which will study the type of education provided in their countries so as to enlighten one another when ascertaining scholarships. Ndugu Tibakweitira explained that under a special cultural programme, Cuba, which is highly advanced in music, would despatch to Tanzania two music experts who will teach local musicians [Text] [Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 28 Feb 82 p 1]

YOUNG PIONEERS' TRAINING HINDERED--The Youth Organisation said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that training of young pioneers in the country was being hindered by lack of premises and facilities. In its message to CCM Chairman Mwalimu Nyerere, the Organisation leaders said despite that Mwalimu was very keen on the issue the Organisation had neither fitting premises nor facilities for training the pioneers during their free time. The message was read by an Assistant Secretary, Ndugu N. Mvanga, during an occasion climaxing the week-long celebrations to mark the 18th Anniversary of the Pioneer Movement in Tanzania, at the State House. Mwalimu was the guest of honour. The Organisation pointed out that the buildings offered by Mwalimu for training and recreation of children have been let to the Tanzania People's Defence Forces (TPDG). "You have been encouraging youth leaders to go and learn from the Democratic Republic of Korea how to develop and take care of the youths. But when they come back they find themselves with neither the premises nor facilities with which to help train the children," Ndugu Mvanga said. [Excerpt] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 2 Mar 82 p 1]

CSO: 4700/929

RURAL POLICE FORCE TO BE IMPROVED

Kampala UGANDA TIMES in English 23 Feb 82 p 3

[Article by Eva Lubwama]

[Text] The government is putting emphasis on the improvement of the quality of the District Administration Police Force. The force will maintain law and order in the rural areas with full responsibility.

Acting under secretary administration, ministry of local government Mr. Francis Mukama said this when he met district administration Police officers in Jinja, Kamuli and Iganga recently.

Mr Mukama said the administration police force derived its existence from the constitution.

Mr Mukama said the police force as stated in the constitution, shall be employed throughout Uganda to prevent and detect crime, apprehend offenders, preserve law and order, protect property and enforce all laws and regulations with which they are directly charged.

He said the same force can be called upon to exercise military duties and shall be entitled to arms.

Mr Mukama said the policy which governs the district administration police forces also spells their ranks and duties.

"Officers of an administration police force shall have the same powers, duties and responsibilities as those of the usual police officers, he said.

He noted that each of the 33 districts has its administration police force except Kampala. He said the Uganda Police is generally urban or sub-urban oriented while administration force was of a rural nature.

Mr Mukama said "the ministry encourages all district administrations to have administration police forces and to recruit personnel to man them.

The government is, therefore, taking steps to quicken the functions of the police force. He pointed out that contacts have been made especially with the ministry of Justice and that of Internal Affairs to enable the police force to attend prosecutors law courses at the Uganda Police Training Institutions.

CSO: 4700/931

FOOD-AID SELF-HELP PROGRAM SEEN GETTING POOR RESULTS

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 pp 575-576

[Article: "Dangers of Paying for Work With Food"]

[Text] "SO EXTENSIVELY has the food aid mentality permeated the way of life in Upper Volta that rather than act as an incentive to community improvement, food aid has the opposite effect: it is an assurance that in spite of bad land-use practises that lead to eroded and exhausted soil and marginal harvests, there will be food to eat, there will be food aid."

That quotation from a recent project report, while extreme in its view, must lead us to at least question the validity of the new World Food Programme scheme for Upper Volta, described in West Africa (January 25) as "the largest in support of rural development ever to be introduced in West Africa."

The theory behind Food For Work projects is that the food aid will provide an incentive to local groups to undertake community development work. It is assumed by the sponsors that the food supplied will be matched by an equivalent increase in project participation. We must straight away distinguish between types of projects: I am not talking about large-scale road building or other public works, but about community level small scale projects. A starting point for success at this level is that the villagers accept the identified problem as their own, and recognise that the problem will not go away unless they are prepared to tackle it themselves on a permanent basis.

"One of the groups made its expectations of food aid known gradually . . . The other group . . . learnt it would receive no sacks of food, repeated its demand for food several times and each time received the explanation that the project did not give food in exchange for participation in efforts to improve their own village.

"If these demands or expectations of food aid are considered to be a problem to community development in a rural, agriculturally orientated setting, then one obvious solution to the problem should be to distribute the food to those members of the community who have participated in the project. In Upper Volta sacks of food can be easily obtained for distribution to participants in a project like this one.

"However, no food aid was distributed. Observations by the project directrice indicated that the use of food aid as an incentive to farmers to participate in community development work have distorted their conception of the value, long and short term, of the work, and have concomitantly undermined the interest that a farmer usually has in the future of his community. Often, among farmers who have received food aid in the past for participation in community development projects, the overriding concern is with food aid (when and just how much of it will be distributed) rather than with the development work or its effect on their village or their families.

"To a small project these two interests — food aid and rural community development — are mutually exclusive. Interest in one precludes a genuine interest in the other. The solution . . . is to work with the farmers whose interest is not in receiving food for their work, but rather in improving their farms and their village with their work."

This is just one example. There are many others from Upper Volta. There are many others from around the world. One is led to conclude that the food aid distributed to this type of self-help village-based project does not act as an incentive to local participation, but rather that it results in an unwillingness to undertake any more community projects unless food aid is supplied. Thus you run the risk of jeopardising the remarkable initiatives which are already taking place in villages around the country.

Upper Volta is, of course, a country with few natural resources apart from its people, and there is a grain deficit this year as in previous years. But if this means that there is a need for food aid within the community, then would it not be wise to look at alternative methods of distribution? Otherwise you threaten the very village level mobilisation which the Government agrees is the only way in the long term to achieve their priority of food self-sufficiency.

One good example of this level of problem in Upper Volta is that of land management. Heavy rainfall onto poor soil with inadequate or non-existent protection has led to heavy erosion and resultant land degradation. The problem is growing and more and more land is becoming unusable. Until each villager recognises the need to change land use practices in his or her daily life, no amount of foreign aid projects will resolve the issue. Any project must therefore be based around the villagers' desire to solve the problem: such desire does exist and is resulting in large numbers of successful village-level projects in Upper Volta, as your correspondent discovered.

But where does the food aid fit into this?

The project report quoted at the beginning of this article explains what happened in two villages. "At two of the villages that have worked with the project, work aimed at reclaiming a degraded piece of land in the community ended eight to ten months after it began — long before any conclusive results had been seen. But this time there were no longer any hopes on the part of these two village groups of receiving food aid from the project as payment for the work already done and as encouragement to continue the use of run-off systems in the village.

CSO: 4700/930

BRIEFS

GOVERNMENT PAY HELD UP--Civil servants received promisory notes instead of salaries last month and the same is to happen at the end of this month. The Ministry of Finance issued a statement explaining the action: "The Treasury has been severely depleted by large sums of money drawn on money orders intended for civil servants who are in fact either dead, sacked or not at work". There would be strict checks on the destination of salary money orders in the future, the Ministry added. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 680]

LIPAD MEMBERS RELEASED--Lipad (the Patriotic League for Development) has announced that its four members arrested January 16 were freed after just under a month in gaol. The arrested men were Philippe Ouedraogo, Yacouba Ouedraogo, Hamidou Coulibaly and Felix Ouedraogo. M. P. Ouedraogo was a former Director General of the Tambao project and an adviser to the Prime Minister. Dr Coulibaly was a former President of a special commission set up to study constitutional matters. M. F. Ouedraogo was Director of the National Printers. The reason for their arrests was given by the Minister of Justice, M. Bema Ouattara as "an administrative enquiry with relation to the editorial direction of the newspaper le Patriote". 2,000 copies of the 22nd issue of le Patriote were seized on the same day as the arrests. The cover of the 22nd issue had a picture of M. Soumane Touré, the Trade Union leader. Inside was a "call to arms" signed by 13 trade unions. M. Touré is the (Absent) leader of the trades union congress, the (suspended) Confédération Syndicale Voltaique. He is sought by the authorities for illegal calls to strike. The ban on strikes has since been rescinded (West Africa, February 22), but M. Touré has been on the run since last November with, the authorities claim, secret documents which could "compromise State security." M. Touré is also Head of the Ougadougou branch of Lipad. Le Patriote is the organ of Lipad and carries social, economic and political analysis. Its circulation (2,000) is almost as large as that of l'Observateur, the independent daily (w,500). [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 680]

CSO: 4700/930

OBSERVER OF ZAIRIAN COMMUNITY IN BRUSSELS REPORTS

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 pp 636-637

[Article: "Zaire the Congo and the Belgians"]

[Text] EIGHT AND a half years in Brussels is bound to leave some marks. Readers will bear with me while I work some of them out of my system, from time to time. This week is one of those occasions, beginning with a few thoughts about Zaire. It will surprise no one if I say that you can find out a great deal about Zaire in Brussels. It is not just the shadow of the colonial past (which is often a grim shadow — monuments still exist in the Tervueren Africa Museum, or in the Cinquantenaire Park showing robust women symbolising Belgium bringing "civilisation" to the Congo: ironic relics of a now shattered complacency). There is an important population of Zairois throughout Belgium — a few who settled before independence, others who have married local women, but the majority come under the loose heading of students, which, aside from the bona fide students, covers not only sundry groups of political exiles, but also those sent to watch them.

There are a few exiles in their own right, the most distinguished being former Prime Minister Nguza Karl-I-Bond, who has now taken up residence in Rhode St. Genèse, a fashionable suburb in south Brussels, where President Mobutu also reportedly has properties. The Zairois of Brussels, it is said by other Africans, keep somewhat to themselves, hence the area around the Maison Africaine (one of the large student hostels), an area of cafes and night-clubs like the Vatican and the Mambo, is sometimes known as Matonge or Bakongo, after quartiers of Kinshasa. The original Vatican, incidentally, is a well-known Kinshasa club, named one feels in a moment of inspired satire, possibly after too much communion wine.

Opposition groups were well to the fore at an event I attended shortly before leaving the Belgian capital — the première of a full-length feature documentary film called Du Zaire au Congo made by a team of Belgian cinéastes. The title of the film ('From Zaire to the Congo') was explained by one of them as being not so much a prophecy, as an attempt to relate the present to the past and to explain the present by the past. The present was clearly put across in the opening sequences of scenes from Kolwezi 1978, using the Shaba affair as an illustration of the continuing parlous state of the country. But the bulk of the film was an excellent montage of old newsreel shots of the years of the Congo crisis, from 1960 to 1965. The story was interspersed with songs by the Gabonese guitarist Pierre Akendengue, based on poems by one of the participants in the panel discussion which followed the film, Zairois academic C. K. Lumuna-Sando. These were intended to give the film a more structured framework by highlighting the moments of tragedy, such as the fall of Lumumba or hollow farce, such as Tshombe's 1964 return from Belgium with a so-called "portfolio" of shares. But the old black and white film could really have been left to speak for itself as in Lumumba's emotion-charged speech in front of King Baudouin on June 30 in Leopoldville. Akendengue is a talented musician, and his work here was good in its own right, but in the context of the film, superfluous. The film also contained a number of cracks, that, had the makers not been Belgian, might have brought the criticism that it was "anti-Belgian". For example, the heavily ironic saying: "telle métropole, telle colonie" (such a metropolis, such a colony, or even, what a metropolis, what a colony), or the drawing from the now notorious 1930s children's book "Tintin au Congo", showing the boy hero and his dog descending from an aircraft, with the caption "Welcome Tintin and Milou" rapidly juxtaposed to a shot of Baudouin and his queen also descending from an aircraft.

The old newsreels ranged from the Round Table of 1960 under the chandeliers of Brussels, the pleasure-loving whites of the Congo before the fall, to the violence of the mutiny, the arrival of the United Nations, and the intertwined destinies of Kasavubu, Adoula, Tshombe, Hammarskjold, with Lumumba and his fate towering over the whole 90 minutes. In the discussion afterwards, Lumuna-Sando, taxed with presenting Lumumbist propaganda, said that Lumumba needed no propaganda: the facts spoke for themselves. Certainly, the glimpses of Lumumba in newsreel re-awakened all the old feelings of fascination, shame and sadness at the man's unfulfilled potential. And it is clear that his magic lives on.

It is remarkable that a film plus debate about events of 20 years ago could draw an audience of over 800, including many, many Belgians, who are still clearly disturbed and uneasy at the Belgian responsibility, both in colonising and de-colonising, the Congo. There was only muted mention in the film of Mobutu, and the discussion hardly touched on the present, apart from a short statement by a representative of Amnesty International as to why Zaire was a cause of priority concern for them at the moment. The stands of the different movements in the foyer of the hall where the film was shown more than made up for the gap, although the bulk of publications are circulated through a Belgian-registered organisation called the Zaire Committee. This publishes every three months Info-Zaire, which attempts to offer independent information as to the situation in Zaire, rarely in evidence, they say, in the Belgian press (my own experience bears this out to some extent, although the Flemish press is reportedly more critical than the French-language press).

All of which is by way of indicating that I hope to be able to present in West Africa a greater coverage of Zaire than hitherto. Zaire, it is true, is really Central Africa, but by its very size it is also West and East, and what happens there has bearing on all of Africa.

CSO: 4700/930

BRIEFS

ZAMBIAN BORDER CLASH--Following an exchange of shots between Zairois and Zambian soldiers on the border near Mulfulira, Zimbia, thousands of Zambians were reported to have fled their villages near the border. Some of the Zambians fled to Zairois territory, and their return was immediately demanded by Lusaka. A Zambian government spokesman said, however, that the demand was followed by Zaire closing the border at Sakania which is the border post for Zambians seeking to cross from the Zambian copperbelt into Luapula province. The spokesman said that the border incident was "very serious". There has been tension on the Zaire-Zambia border in the vicinity of the Copperbelt for some time, and last year a meeting between Presidents Kaunda and Mobutu to discuss disputed territory in the area proved fruitless. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, P Mar 82 p 680]

CSO: 4700/930

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS ADMIT CIVIL SERVICE 'RIDDLED WITH INEFFICIENCY'

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 28 Feb 82 p 2

[Article by Francis Mwanza]

[Text]

WHEN President Kenneth Kaunda's chief adversary, the late Simon Mwansa Kapwepwe, quit the ruling United National Independence Party (UNIP) to form his own political party, which was later banned, he said of the Zambian hierarchy:

"The whole leadership is corrupt. The nation has no discipline, neither has it got a disciplined party to carry out the revolution."

That was ten years ago. Today, Kaunda and other top government and party officials have publicly admitted that the Zambian Civil Service is riddled with indiscipline and inefficiency.

Hardly a day now passes without an expose involving government officials, let alone those of UNIP.

Secretary to the Zambian cabinet, Evans Willima, said indiscipline is manifested in laziness and truancy, thefts, dishonesty and lack of integrity in what some civil servants say or do resulting in lies and rumour-mongering and low productivity.

He instanced lack of punctuality in arriving at work and in actual starting of work; lack of genuine loyalty to the President and commitment to the Party resulting in corruption and unpatriotic acts; and carelessness towards government property.

State secrets are not kept; too often civil servants are found discussing top secret matters in public places.

Financial scandals are rife. A top government official stands accused of conniving to swindle the government over the controversial TAW International Leasing Corporation.

TAW was to supply Zambia with 300 trucks and 400 trailers following the closure of the then Zambia-Rhodesia border in January 1973. For breaking the contract, Zambia coughed up more than three million pounds (54m/-) for damages.

A number of top government officials are to appear in court over the swindling of funds of a disaster fund.

Commented the Times of Zambia: "The indictment against Zambia's civil servants is that they don't report for work, they steal public money and property, they idle in offices, they lack integrity — they are guilty of every conceivable official vice..... it should..... not be there at all as it is not serving a purpose. It is an 'evil service.' "

Recently, President Kaunda lambasted civil servants for lack of loyalty by misadvising political leaders on matters of national importance. In Parliament ministers have issued wrong information because of being misinformed.

President Kaunda has himself been a casualty. In less than twelve months he has made three appointments to high offices which exposed him.

He appointed a commander of Zambia Air Force and three days later suspended him pending investigations; a minister was unconstitutionally appointed; and the latest case involves a man suspended by his employers for allegedly swindling the public institution of more than 1,620,000/-.

The worst culprits, it is widely agreed, are officers in foreign missions. One deposited public funds amounting to 108,000/-. Another, in a case that caused Zambia great embarrassment, sold for 36,000/- an "end user" certificate; which purported to show that the Zambian Government wanted to buy arms for a special unit, to two British journalists from The Observer newspaper which exposed the scandal.

Willima said the Civil Service has failed to deliver the goods to the people and has become a breeding ground for conflicts, lies, rumour-mongering and misunderstandings.

He added: "We badly need discipline in the Civil Service if we are to improve our performance."

Urgent measures to salvage the Civil Service have been called for relentlessly, but as of now, little seems to have changed.

Last April, President Kaunda ordered party chiefs and government bosses to revamp their organisations. The year 1982 has been declared a year of discipline and "if need be heads will roll."

In recent government reshuffles three junior ministers were sacked, and two permanent secretaries dropped for "failing to make the grade".

A commission of inquiry, appointed by President Kaunda, is looking into the Civil Service. It is widely believed that the establishment has been prompted by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) which, as a condition for having given Zambia financial aid, demanded the pruning of the Civil Service.

CSO: 4700/929

END

JPRS 80437

30 March 1982

Sub-Saharan Africa Report

No. 2597

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 80437

30 March 1982

SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA REPORT

No. 2597

CONTENTS

ANGOLA

Briefs

Delegation Returns From Zaire 1
Undisciplined Construction Workers 1
Unemployment Leads to Crime 2

GHANA

Groundwork Seen Ready for Cooperation With USSR
(GHANAIAN TIMES, 5 Mar 82) 3

No Problem Foreseen for Petroleum Products
(Wendy Asiama; DAILY GRAPHIC, 27 Feb 82) 5

Textbook Banned for 'Atrocious Political Propaganda'
(DAILY GRAPHIC, 1 Mar 82) 7

Methodist Church Official Castigated on PDC Statement
(DAILY GRAPHIC, various dates) 9

Uncaring Religion Seen Dangerous, Editorial
Church PDC's Advocated, Editorial
Vetting Committee Invitation

Briefs

Prisons Directors Investigated 12
ADB Water Loan 12
Libyan Newsprint Donation 12
Owusu Vetted 12
Compulsory African Culture 13

MOZAMBIQUE

Machel on Attributes of Newly Appointed Military Leaders
(Samora Machel; NOTICIAS, 5 Mar 82) 14

Good Relations Between USSR, Mozambican Workers in Mosopesca
(DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE, 18 Jan 82) 17

Present, Past GDR Educational Assistance Report
(Artur Ricardo; DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE, 23 Feb 82) 19

Energy Official on Cahora Bassa Issue, Cooperation With Portugal
(Abdul Magid Osman Interview; TEMPO, 14 Feb 82) 21

Shortage of Charcoal, Other Fuel Plagues Beira
(DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE, 15 Feb 82) 25

CARBOMOC Production Shortages Seen Corrected
(NOTICIAS, 24 Feb 82) 27

Events Mark Cultural Cooperation With Brazil
(NOTICIAS, 24 Feb 82) 28

Briefs
People's Stores in Private Hands 29
Czech Knitting Industry Assistance 29
Railroad Accident 30
Mabor Immobilized 30
Battery Firm Works Under Capacity 30
Dutch Food Donation 30

NIGERIA

President's Contingency Fund Reported in Danger
(DAILY TIMES, 4 Mar 82) 31

Rejection by House, by Aliu Zubair
Senate Cuts Down Amount, by Anene Ugoani

Biography of President Shehu Shagari Published
(NEW NIGERIAN, 8 Mar 82) 33

Minister Reported Calling DCM's Report 'Concoction'
(Chris Agulefo Lagos; DAILY STAR, 6 Mar 82) 35

All Local Government Committees Officially Replaced
(DAILY TIMES, various dates) 36

Declared Illegal, Dissolved, by Taiwo Okutubo
New Appointees

'STAR' Appeals to Electoral Commission on Deadline
(Editorial; DAILY STAR, 10 Mar 82) 38

Idea of Impeaching Plateau State Governor Dropped
(M. A. Aliyu Biu; SUNDAY NEW NIGERIAN, 7 Mar 82) 39

Crisis Over Governor Said Dividing Kaduna House
(Tajudeen Ajibade; SUNDAY NEW NIGERIAN, 7 Mar 82) 40

Bendel Governor Alli Urged To 'Resign Honorably'
(Andrew Isibor; NEW NIGERIAN, 3 Mar 82) 41

Kaduna Governor Sues Kaduna Assembly Again
(Francis Talabi; NEW NIGERIAN, 3 Mar 82) 42

Merger of Four Parties Reportedly Came Too Late
(Biodun Awani; DAILY TIMES, 8 Mar 82) 43

People From Various Parties Reportedly Cross to NPN
(NEW NIGERIAN, various dates) 44

Bendel Members From NPP
Plateau NPP, GNPP Members

Azikiwe, Awolowo Reportedly 'Sold Out Their People'
(NEW NIGERIAN, 5 Mar 82) 46

Negative Reaction Reported To Decision on State Policy
(Editorial; NEW NIGERIAN, 5 Mar 82) 47

Columnist Discusses New State Creation
(Clem Baiye; NEW NIGERIAN, 4 Mar 82) 48

Money Earmarked for Railway Transportation
(Niyi Olaguniju; NEW NIGERIAN, 5 Mar 82) 50

Abuja International Airport To Operate in June
(Ibrahim Biu; NEW NIGERIAN, 4 Mar 82) 51

Pilots, Flight Engineers Involved in Strike Action
(Various sources, various dates) 52

Original Cause Described
Work-to-Rule Action, by Yinka Guedon
Association Divided

Journalists Union Protests Arrest of 'THE PUNCH' Editor
(Odafe Othihiwa; DAILY TIMES, 9 Mar 82) 54

Further Reportage on Student Rioting
(Adebisi Adekunle; NEW NIGERIAN, 3 Mar 82) 55

Illegal Markets Said on Increase in Lagos
(Ayodele Akinkitu, Innovent Eze; DAILY TIMES, 8 Mar 82) ... 56

Briefs
'Anti-Rigging' Election Squad 58
'Radio Lagos' Searched 58
Subcommittees for New States 58
Islamic Book Publisher 59
Osogbo Steel Company 59
Kaduna Water Shortage 59
Budget Omits New States 59
Drought Aid Said Diverted 60
Party Registration Deadline 60

SOUTH AFRICA

Prime Minister Botha Defines Goals, Principles
(THE CITIZEN, various dates) 61

Goals Defined
Guiding Principles

NP Split Final, Treurnicht To Form Party
(Editorial; THE CITIZEN, 15 Mar 82) 63

Marais: 'Treurnicht Won't Get HNP People'
(THE CITIZEN, 15 Mar 82) 65

De Klerk To Clarify NP Position on Split
(THE CITIZEN, 15 Mar 82) 66

General Malan Claims SWAPO Uses Country's Uniforms for Terrorism
(THE CITIZEN, 13 Mar 82) 67

Nation To Blame for Poor Image Says Sports Chief
(Ivor Crews; THE CITIZEN, 13 Mar 82) 68

Search for Whites Involved in Terrorist Attack Alleged
(THE CITIZEN, 15 Mar 82) 69

Berger, Pillay Prison Sentences Reduced
(THE CITIZEN, 13 Mar 82) 70

Hijack Trial: Court May Get 'In Camera' Plea
(Tim Clarke; THE CITIZEN, 15 Mar 82) 71

Increase in Iscor Sales Reported
(THE CITIZEN, 13 Mar 82) 72

Briefs
Transkei Attracts Industry 73
Sasol Costs 73
Light Oil 73
Squatters' Hunger Strike 74

UGANDA

Resigned 'TIMES' Editor Deplores Government Press Ownership
(DAILY NATION, 2 Mar 82) 75

Briefs
Australian Army Training 77

ZAMBIA

Kaunda Announces Formation of Four Companies To Revamp Economy
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 13 Mar 82) 78

Details of Announcement
Companies Must 'Operate on Business Lines', Editorial

Minister Says Government To Start Teaching of Socialism in Schools
(Various sources, various dates) 81

'Sensitive' Issue
Opposition of Religious Groups

Zulu Says Zambia-Zaire Emergency Meeting Settled Most Problems
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 15 Mar 82) 83

Tanzania, Zambia Sign Treaty Establishing Cooperation Body
(SUNDAY TIMES, 14 Mar 82) 84

Talks With Tanzania To Solve Tazara Operational Problems Underway
(DAILY MAIL, 13 Mar 82) 85

Government To Set Up Youth Employment Placement Body
(DAILY MAIL, 13 Mar 82) 86

Government To Alleviate Famine in Southern Province if Need Arises
(DAILY MAIL, 13 Mar 82) 87

Archbishop Attacks Present Educational System
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 15 Mar 82) 88

Bank of Zambia Issues Quarterly Report for June 1981
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 15 Mar 82) 89

NCCM Employees To Be Under RCM During Pre-Merger Transition
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 12 Mar 82) 91

Airways Corporation Seeking Replacements for Boeing 707s
(TIMES OF ZAMBIA, 15 Mar 82) 92

Briefs
Chomba in Saudi Arabia 93
Czechoslovak Trade Agreement 93

BRIEFS

DELEGATION RETURNS FROM ZAIRE--The JMPLA-[Youth Movement of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola] Youth of the Party delegation returned last Sunday to Luanda after a 3-day meeting with the youth organizations of Zaire and the Congo in Kinshasa; Domingos Bartolomeu, the JMPLA first national secretary and a member of the party Central Committee, headed the delegation. In a statement to the press on his arrival, Bartolomeu termed the meeting very successful, stressing there were no disagreements during the wideranging discussions. Bartolomeu visited Brazzaville prior to his departure for the Zairian capital and met with Congolese Labor Party leaders, took part in a solidarity meeting and visited several production centers. In the joint communique issued at the end of the tripartite meeting, the youth organizations condemned the constant aggression by the racist South African Government against the free, sovereign territory of the People's Republic of Angola. In the document, the three organizations also denounced the African policy of imperialist powers which perpetuates the oppression and exploitation of the people of the continent and restated their willingness to intensify their work in the Assembly of South Africa. The JMPLA-Youth of the Party, the JSC and the JMPR [Youth of the Popular Movement of the Revolution] will show their solidarity with all youth organizations throughout the world struggling against imperialism, neocolonialism and racism and are ready to promote and strengthen the bonds of friendship. [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 23 Feb 82 p 11] 9479

UNDISCIPLINED CONSTRUCTION WORKERS--Malanje--The Malanje Provincial Commissariat will withdraw the Ministry of Construction staff workers from all municipalities and relocate them at provincial headquarters to achieve serious collaboration between the labor force and state budget officers. Ordered by the first consultative council of the Malanje Provincial Commissariat headed by Col Ludy Kissassunda, this measure was taken because those workers lived in the municipalities without doing their duties. According to information ANGOP obtained from the commissariat, the construction workers frequently ignored the directives of the municipal commissioners and were passive about their work plans. "This situation can be seen in the very poor state of most roads, many hindering the movement of people and goods," stressed the same source. The commissariat measure stipulates that municipal and road projects will now be done by crews sent directly from the city of Malanje. [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 19 Feb 82 p 3] 9479

UNEMPLOYMENT LEADS TO CRIME--In Calemba, one of the most populous, unpretentious neighborhoods of Luanda, robberies are increasing all the time because of the high unemployment rate, the main reason for this and other problems like shady ventures and disorderly conduct. We must understand that around 40 percent of the nearly 15,000 residents are unemployed or have no desire to work, preferring to live the easy life, involved in inappropriate activities unworthy of the kind of society we are trying to create in our country. The buildings of various party, mass and government organizations in the neighborhood and a few residences of honest workers are continually broken into by marginal individuals who take advantage of the inadequate security measures by the reduced number of Organization of Popular Defense soldiers. That organization cannot properly provide for the security and physical safety of the residents and has not received enough help from other organizations, mainly the residents' committees which do not carry out their duties. [Excerpt] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 23 Feb 82 p 2] 9479

CSO: 4742/231

GROUNDWORK SEEN READY FOR COOPERATION WITH USSR

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 5 Mar 82 p 4

[Text] The Republic of Ghana is marking the 25th year of its independence. These years are filled with events important for its history and relations with many countries, including the Soviet Union. Immediately after Ghana became independent the two countries established mutually advantageous economic relations.

In August 1960 the USSR and Ghana signed an inter-governmental agreement on economic and technical co-operation which put bilateral co-operation on an official footing. Co-operation with the Soviet Union was meant to build the foundations of Ghana's economic independence.

Thus, the USSR assisted in establishing three rice-growing state farms for which the total of about 6,000 hectares of virgin land were put to use. The Soviet Union equipped these farms with more than five million rubles' worth of farming machines and equipment.

In 1966 the large-panel ferroconcrete constructions factory in Accra was about to be put into operation. This house-building combin was to have an annual capacity of 70,000 square metres of living floor space.

A machine-builders Training Centre for 250 students and a Refining Plant to produce 25 tons of gold annually were nearing completion.

Soviet-Ghanaian economic co-operation was suspended in 1966. The transnational corporations did not like it that the young African state was striving for economic independence. The process was delayed for many years and the projects which were to serve as the basis of national economic independence were laid up.

The 70s saw a renewal of bilateral economic relations which. however. did not reach the 1966 level.

There is every opportunity for restoring the economic relations between the USSR and Ghana. The Soviet Union is ready to develop bilateral co-operation. Last year a draft contract for restoring the Adidome state farms was sent to Ghana.

The Soviet side has agreed to build up a hospital for 200 beds. oil tanks. and to promote the transportation system on the Volta Lake.

Simultaneously, Soviet organizations have sent to Ghana their proposals on completing the laid-up projects and supplying the required spare parts and materials.

It will be no exaggeration to say that here is a very real groundwork for the continuation and further development of the Soviet-Ghanaian economic and technical co-operation.

CSO: 4700/966

NO PROBLEM FORESEEN FOR PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 27 Feb 82 pp 1, 5

[Article by Wendy Asiama]

[Text] Nigeria has excluded Ghana from the list of countries which enjoy a special 90-day credit facility for the payment of crude oil supplied by her.

This is the result of Ghana's inability to meet her financial obligations under the agreement.

Disclosing this in an interview yesterday, a spokesman for the petroleum department of the Ministry of Fuel and Power said since the third week of last January the country had not received any crude oil from Nigeria.

As at yesterday, Ghana's oil import bill and indebtedness to Nigeria stood at $98 million dollars.

The spokesman indicated that there were more bills in the pipeline which were yet to mature and thus the debt might finally shoot up to about $100 million.

According to him the department does not anticipate any problems with petroleum products now because Ghana has a reserve of refined products and some crude oil which will keep the country going for a while.

It will be recalled that the Nigerian Government threatened to stop the supply of crude oil to Ghana by the end of last year.

This compelled the deposed President, Dr. Hilla Limann to rush to Lagos on December 23 last year to renegotiate the payment of Ghana's debt to Nigeria.

Meanwhile a government delegation has returned to Accra from Lagos after negotiating with the Nigerian Government over the settlement of the debt.

And as a precautionary measure, the government has granted the five major oil companies operating in the country ¢3 million worth of import licence, outside this year's planned budget, to bring in lubricants to avoid a possible shortage.

The companies are Texaco, British Petroleum, Shell, Goil, and Mobil.

Shell Ghana Limited is therefore expecting a quantity of lubricants from the Ivory Coast soon to augment the present stock.

CSO: 4700/965

TEXTBOOK BANNED FOR 'ATROCIOUS POLITICAL PROPAGANDA'

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 1 Mar 82 pp 1, 4

[Excerpts] The Ministry of Education has explained that it decided to ban the use of the book "Modern English for Junior Secondary and Common Entrance Candidates" because of "its poor scholarship and atrocious political propaganda."

And in the words of the Education Secretary, Ms Ama Ata Aidoo, the book "is a good example of the blatant prostitution of knowledge and scholarship that has been going on for sometime now in the country."

It is the conviction of the Secretary that the use of the 116-page book co-authored by one Nana Yaw Barimah and three others would not be proper because its contents and style would be "inimical to the progressive education" of the country's youth.

Ms Aidoo who is also a writer observed that the use of such books are contributory factor to the poor quality of education given to children, being complained about by everybody for some time now.

The book contains a series of ungrammatical and unidiomatic English as well as distortions of geographical and other facts.

Now on the atrocious political propaganda the authors devoted two pages--44 and 45--to discredit the erstwhile Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) on, its effort, to eliminate 'Kalabule' among others.

'Graphic' made efforts to get in touch with the chief author and his colleagues but without success.

However it learnt that the chief author has written to the Education Secretary pleading for leniency.

According to him he is neither a politician nor an anti-revolutionary and should not be treated as such.

Nana Yaw Barimah admitted that one of the comprehension works, apparently, pages 44-45 "is prejudicial to national issues."

The chief author said: "I am a revolutionist and pragmatist and will not do anything to sabotage the success of this revolution."

He stated that he directed the publishers to delete the block for that particular issue from the book.

CSC: 4700/965

METHODIST CHURCH OFFICIAL CASTIGATED ON PDC STATEMENT

Uncaring Religion Seen Dangerous

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 3 Mar 82 p 2

[Editorial]

[Text] A LEADING member of the clergy is reported to have called on the Provisional National Defence Council to disband all the people's defence committees, because in his own words, "it is impossible for all of us to rule the country at once."

The Right Reverend S. B. Essamuah, who is president of the Methodist Church of Ghana, is said to have also observed that the committees have attracted only the lazy, never-do-well and the power hungry individuals in the society.

He said also that it was totally wrong for anybody to even suggest that it was the older generation who had let the nation down and therefore the youth should now take over the reins of government

Such sentiments are significant not only because Rev. Essamuah is the head of the Methodist Church; the said Rev. Minister is occasionally referred to as a "radical" minister.

It is the opinion of the 'GRAPHIC' that before the reverend minister moves from church to church to infect innocent Ghanaians with his dangerous statements, a little piece of education will be necessary.

It is unfortunate that the 'radical' minister RUNS AWAY from the ROOTS of the problems of this society. It is not a question of the old versus the young. It is neither the encouragement of never-do-well individuals to form defence committees. Nor is it just a simple question of all of us ruling the country at once.

Unfortunately, Rev. Essamuah has not suggested any other form of government. He talks of "modern societies" as if they were conjured from the skies.

Are Ghanaians being told that the head of the Methodist Church is not aware that the so-called western "democracy" or "free society" has meant NOTHING to the hungry, exploited and suppressed people all over the world?

It is sad always to comment on IDEAS which would properly be termed irrelevant. At a time when patriotic Ghanaians,christians or non-christians are beginning to fashion a system where people who labour will enjoy the fruits of their sweat; at a time when defence committees are themselves purging their ranks of dishonest, and corrupt members; at a time when producers of the wealth of the nation, old and young, are joining forces to capture political and economic power, it is definitely out of a confused mind that such sentiments from Rev. Essamuah can flow.

At a time when the people of Ghana are going to celebrate 25 years of independence with a new sense of direction, such so-called "radical" ideas of the reverend minister can only belong to the dusty cupboards of die-hard re-actionaries.

Christians should better be ware which way their religion is taking them.

A religion that does not RELATE to the society in which it operates can at the least be described as DANGEROUS.

Church PDC's Advocated

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 4 Mar 82 p 2

[Editorial]

[Text] YESTERDAY, we published on our back page a report attributed to Rev. Essamuah, president of the Methodist Church of Ghana. We also carried an editorial in which we sought to educate the honourable reverand minister about the demands and aspirations of the people at the moment.

The reverend minister, in a few words, was condemning the establishment of people's defence committees.

We feel concerned that the head of a large congregation of christians should kick against a system that seeks to expose the corrupt, dishonest and anti-people elements in the society. The defence committees, if anything, should be encouraged in all churches throughout the country.

It is common knowledge that some self-respecting christians belong also to lodges in whose cupboards can be found human skulls. It is also not a secret that in spite of the regular exhortation on church-goers to repent, a good number of "kalabule" people were probably the first to register their presence in churches every Sunday.

It is a matter of deep regret that although this revolution is making attempts to restore the dignity of the human person, some people should see it as something else. Already, there are claims that the "communist boys" are here again.

The 'GRAPHIC' wishes to take this opportunity to invite all church members to examine critically the positive aspects of this revolution. Excesses on the part of enthusiasts, or confusions arising on the labour front should be expected in a situation where fresh attempts at socio-economic restructuring are being made.

When the naked robbery of the wealth of the nation was going on, it did not affect the life-styles of non-christians only. All christians who, beyond the church doors, were part of the exploited class, were impoverished by the system we had before the revolution. Suffering has no boundaries, and that is why a lot of christians joined the bandwagon to Agege and other places. Calling for the abolition of people's defence committees as Rev. Essamuah is doing, is indeed misplaced and negative.

Let the churches form people's defence committees to get rid of those who pose as pious people in the church buildings and turn exploiters after church service. It is not just by being in business that one becomes an exploiter; it is an attitude of those who want to hold on to privileges they have acquired as a result of the old corrupt system. We call on the churches to join the REVOLUTION in a POSITIVE manner. The sweets of this historic effort will be enjoyed by all the people — christian and non-christian alike.

Vetting Committee Invitation

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 4 Mar 82 p 8

[Text] The Citizens Vetting Committee yesterday invited the Reverend S. B. Essamuah to its sittings.

Rev Essamuah, president of the Methodist Church of Ghana, who has never been to any of the sittings of the committee, is alleged to have stated that in order to be fair the committee should allow lawyers to appear at its sittings at Parliament House.

This invitation is to enable Rev Essamuah to observe things for himself, an announcement from the Secretariat of the PNDC said.

CSO: 4700/965

BRIEFS

PRISONS DIRECTORS INVESTIGATED--The National Investigations Committee (NIC) has ordered the immediate suspension of Mr G. A. Acquah-Gaisie as Director of Prisons pending the completion of investigations into allegations made against him. According tc a statement issued by the committee in Accra yesterday, members of the general public are invited to come forward with any information they may have about allegations levelled against Mr Acquah-Gaisie. Such information, should be directed to the Public Relations Directorate of the People's Armed Forces by tomorrow at 7.30 a.m. Meanwhile, the NIC has invited Mr Quaison and Mr E. K. Oppong, former directors of prisons to report to the office of the committee at 6 p.m. today without fail. [Text] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 23 Feb 82 p 1]

ADB WATER LOAN--The Accra/Tema Metropolitan Area will be supplied with extra 15 million gallons of water daily as from April. This follows the completion of work on the ¢16 million water project at Weija started in July, 1978. It is expected that the intermittent water shortage experienced in some parts of Accra such as Dansoman, Odorkor and Abeka will be over as from April. The Assakum Engineering Construction Limited which undertook the project explained to newsmen that provision had been made to provide extra 30 million gallons of water daily to Accra and its suburbs on completion of the third phase of the project. Mr Gilbert Kporku, project manager for the company, who conducted newsmen round the project site disclosed that one-third of the cost of the project was met with funds provided by the African Development Bank. [Text] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 27 Feb 82 p 8]

LIBYAN NEWSPRINT DONATION--Thirty tonnes of newsprint have arrived from Libya to help the two national dailies--the 'Daily Graphic' and the 'Ghanaian Times' to increase their circulation figures. According to an official of the Embassy of the Libya Arab Jamahiriya, the newsprint is a gift from the people of Libya to the Provisional National Defence Council. He said an additional 30 tonnes of the newsprint would arrive later to augment the present stock. [Text] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 3 Mar 82 p 1]

OWUSU VETTED--Mr Victor Owusu, leader of the disbanded All people's Party (APP), is to report to the Citizens Vetting Committee (CVC) at Parliament House at 10 a.m. today without fail. An announcement from the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC), named the other persons who are to report to the committee as Mr Kwame Nvanteh, an industrialist and Mr K. A. Gbedemah, one time Finance Minister and leader of the National Alliance of Liberals in the Second Republic. Others are Mr Peter Ala Adjetey, a lawyer and former Member of Parliament for Kpeshie, Mr R. S. Amegashie, a commissioner for Lands and Mineral Resources in the National Liberation Council government and Mr E. N. Omaboe, also a Commissioner for Finance and Economic Planing in the same regime. The rest are Mr G.K.E. Turkson, Mr J. H. Frimpong-Ansah, one-time Governor of the Bank of Ghana and a director of Standard Bank International, Mr Ibrahim Mahama, Mr Tsagli, formerly of UTC Textiles, Accra and Mr Hope Tamakloe. [Excerpt] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 4 Mar 82 p 5]

COMPULSORY AFRICAN CULTURE--The teaching of Ghanaian culture will be made compulsory in all elementary schools in the country as from next academic year. The move is to ensure that the youth live and grow with their culture and also to project the Ghanaian personality. Mr Asiedu Yirenkyi, Culture and Tourism Secretary, disclosed this at a re-orientation seminar for leaders and members of concert parties at the Arts Centre in Accra yesterday. He stated that pupils in middle schools would be encouraged to compete yearly in the singing of patriotic songs and secondary school students would compete in drama and dancing. The Secretary reminded participants in the seminar that they should critically examine the contents of their shows, their life-styles and their effects on their audience. Mr Yirenkyi pointed out that no effort should be spared in eliminating downgrading aspects in their performances. He gave as an example the smearing of faces of actors and said such a ruse was initially introduced to ridicule the blackman. Any performance which is designed to provoke laughter should not be done in a way as to ridicule the African, he advised. [Excerpt] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 5 Mar 82 p 1]

CSO: 4700/966

MACHEL ON ATTRIBUTES OF NEWLY APPOINTED MILITARY LEADERS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpts from address by President Samora Machel, delivered in Chaimite, Mozambique, on 4 March 1982]

> [Excerpts] "It is through close ties with the people that the army gains more maturity and class consciouness; our army is there to serve the people, the revolution and socialism and to keep its weapons aimed against reaction," declared Marshal Samora Machel, commander-in-chief of the FPLM [Armed forces of Mozambique), speaking yesterday in Chaimite at a ceremony installing the new assistant chief of staff of the FPLM, the military commanders of nine provinces and the commanders of two motorized infantry brigades. Following is the text of Marshal Machel's address.

Comrade members of the Permanent Political Committee of the FRELIMO Party Central Committee;

Comrade members of the Council of Ministers;

Comrade officers of the Armed Forces of Mozambique:

The history of military arts teaches us that no army is strong without a strong command.

It teaches us that no matter how good an army's soldiers may be, if the command is weak its mission is irreparably compromised.

Today, we are installing high officers of our armed forces, to strengthen the leadership of our army. They have a weighty responsibility to help strengthen the role of our army in the struggle for the territorial integrity and sovereignty of our country.

They have the weighty responsibility of carrying on the tradition of the glorious Popular Forces for the Liberation of Mozambique, combining the military struggle with political work among the masses.

Specifically, it is their duty, in cooperation with the local structures, to:

--mobilize the people for the tasks of building socialism;
--establish the party and see that, where they exist, the party organs function correctly;
--organize the people in communal villages and engage them in collective forms of production;
--engage the soldiers under their command in productive tasks to help implement the Central State Plan for 1982 and to make their own military units self-sufficient, in accordance with the principle that "an army that is not productive is a parasitic army."

During the war, all of you were also political commissars.

The creation of a modern socialist army is not imcompatible with this principle.

On the contrary, it is through close links with the people that an army gains more maturity and class consciousness. Our army is here to serve the people, the revolution and socialism and to keep its weapons trained on reaction.

It was the mission of our army, before any action, to make a detailed reconnaissance of the area where it would be fighting.

--It had to know the customs, the traditions and the culture of the people.
--It had to know the degree to which the people were willing to cooperate with the army.
--It had to know the geography of the area and the position of the enemy.
--It had to know the essence of the social phenomena existing in the area.

Thus our army could define very precisely the strategy and tactics to employ in its contacts with the people, in their enlistment and in the eradication of the enemy.

These are traditions which our army must adopt again for greater efficiency and fighting ability. The people must be a source of continuing inspiration to the army. An army without ties to the people is a capitalist army.

The generals and other officers commissioned today also have a responsibility to further enhance the military prestige of our armed forces,
--improving its combat readiness;
--improving its technical, strategic and tactical efficiency;
--establishing correct relations between the people and the armed forces.

The units which you will be commanding must be primarily concerned with insuring the necessary peace and tranquillity so that the people may engage more fully in building the socialist nation.

In cooperation with other defense and security forces and in close collaboration with the people, the units which you are to command must see that unrest and disorder do not become the norm in the areas where they operate.

Your past struggle has given you an even greater responsibility. You are all veterans of the armed struggle for national liberation.

You are the ones who have written the new and glorious pages in the history of our army; you have contributed to the enrichment of socialist military science and art.

You must know how to command like the military chiefs you are. You must be familiar with the life and problems of the soldiers; you must know how to be judicious in the decisions you make.

You must be modest and generous--these are characteristics of our people--but you must also know how to be severe when the situation demands it.

We are certain that you will carry out the mission which you have just been assigned with dedication and with the sacrifice of your very lives. You have proved your dedication in the past; you have proved it in the present. This is a guarantee that you will take up and carry out your mission in defense of the people, the FRELIMO Party and the socialist nation.

I wish you good work and much success in the performance of your mission.

The struggle continues!

Thank you very much.

6362
CSO: 4742/233

GOOD RELATIONS BETWEEN USSR, MOZAMBICAN WORKERS IN MOSOPESCA

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 18 Jan 82 p 14

[Text] MOSOPESCA, the joint Mozambican-Soviet fishing enterprise, is planning this year to recover two shrimpboats which have been out of service for 5 years and to do repairs and maintenance on two other semioperational vessels also used for shrimping.

According to information given to us by Jose Carlos Lopes Pereira, director of the enterprise, in addition to ensuring fulfillment of the goals set by the PEC [Central State Plan], MOSOPESCA is also planning this year to continue its training and specialization program for Mozambican workers. To this end, more local theoretical and practical courses will be given and more Mozambicans will be sent abroad for training, mainly to the USSR and the GDR.

Jose Carlos Pereira also told our reporter that it will not be possible to expand our fishing fleet before next year. MOSOPESCA, the only enterprise the country engaged in supplying the domestic market with fish, currently has four industrial trawlers used for fishing. Each one has a maximum annual capacity of 1,500 tons of fish.

What is MOSOPESCA?

As we said at the beginning of this article, MOSOPESCA is a joint Mozambican-Soviet fishing enterprise. It was established 3 years ago following agreements signed between the People's Republic of Mozambique and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in the area of fishing.

Besides catching fish for the domestic market, MOSOPESCA is also involved in catching shrimp for export. Its headquarters are in Maputo and it operates along the coasts of that region and in Beira, Quelimane and Nacala.

Last year, according to Jose Lopes Pereira, the enterprise met the PFC targets 112 percent. Last year's production was 6,780 tons of fish, or 1,000 tons more than the total for 1980. As for shrimp, MOSOPESCA caught 150 tons last year, thus exceeding by 120 tons the 1980 production of only 30 tons.

For this year, as a result of the project to recover more boats and to do maintenance on the others, the enterprise has a target of 6,100 tons of fish and 190 tons of shrimp. Addressing this subject, Jose Carlos Pereira stressed that despite "these other activities, our prospects for this year are quite promising. We will naturally have to make a greater effort, but everything indicates that we will meet our targets." He concluded by pointing out that relations between Mozambican and Soviet workers in the enterprise are good and promising.

9805
CSO: 4742/229

PRESENT, PAST GDR EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE REPORT

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 23 Feb 82 pp 10, 16

[Article by Artur Ricardo]

[Excerpt] A group of 40 Mozambicans closely connected with educational services in our country will leave for the GDR next Thursday. The group includes district delegates, sector chiefs and instructors from all the training centers for primary school teachers in Mozambique.

In that socialist country, the district delegates and educational sector chiefs will study the Management and Organization of Work and will also attend classes in Marxism-Leninism.

The instructors will specialize in the disciplines currently taught in the training centers, such as teaching methods, psychology and Marxism-Leninism. All the individuals will be distributed between the Halle Teaching Institute and the Potsdam Center, in the GDR.

DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE learned from Focas Sandaliu, an individual with the National Directorate of Education, that this action is within the framework of the Scientific Cooperation Accord signed in 1978 between the MEC [Ministry of Education and Culture] and the GDR Ministry of National Education. The agreement provides for the training of Mozambican cadres in the European country.

The members of the group were selected from all the provinces in Mozambique through the provincial directorates of education. They have already received intensive training in the basics of the German language, which will enable them to assimilate quickly the instruction imparted in German.

They will remain in the GDR for 11 months. Thus, they will return to the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique] in December of this year, and at the beginning of the 1983 school year they will be ready to work in the various educational sectors to which they will be assigned. After their training, they will be assigned according to the needs of each province.

Teachers Start Off in August

Sandaliu noted that, in addition to these individuals, another group of 29 secondary school teachers with prior working experience will go to the GDR in August, for training in chemistry, physics, biology, mathematics, psychology and socialist education.

These individuals have completed the ninth class, and also come from all the provinces in the country. They are all currently in the city of Maputo, and starting next week they will attend classes in German, taught by staff members of the Eduardo Mondlane University with the assistance of a group of GDR cooperants serving in the capital.

According to our informant, this will make it possible for them to enter various universities and attend the above-mentioned classes as soon as they arrive in the GDR, without having to attend German classes first.

"These 29 teachers will remain in the GDR for 4 years. When they return, they will train other Mozambican instructors and will not be teaching in the secondary schools, as you may already have gathered," said Sandaliu.

From 1979 to 1982

As we mentioned earlier, these initiatives are included in the scientific cooperation accord signed in 1979 between the two education ministries, providing for the training of Mozambican educational cadres in this socialist country. The year this important document was signed, 31 district delegates of the Ministry of Education and Culture and 10 individuals from the 14 training centers left for the GDR. They are now serving in all the Mozambican provinces.

In 1980, the accord was further enriched. In addition to the 21 delegates and 10 instructors who were sent to the GDR, it was established that our MEC would send secondary school teachers and sector chiefs, personnel linked to education in the provincial directorates.

Thus, last year, 31 district delegates, 11 instructors, 26 secondary school teachers and 10 primary school sector chiefs were able to go to the GDR.

Illness

As we learned during our conversation with Focas Sandaliu, both the group that will leave on 25 February and the one that will leave in August have been in the nation's capital since last November.

"When they arrived here they were given a physical examination. We were quite concerned when the doctors told us that 85 percent of them were suffering from a disease called schistosomiasis. They had to undergo treatment for a period of 30 to 40 days. Fortunately, at the end of this period it was confirmed that they were all in excellent health," said our informant.

6362
CSO: 4742/240

ENERGY OFFICIAL ON CAHORA BASSA ISSUE, COOPERATION WITH PORTUGAL

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 14 Feb 82 pp 12-14

[Interview with Abdul Magid Osman, Mozambican secretary of state for coal and hydrocarbons, granted to DIARIO DE NOTICIAS, in Portugal, during a recent visit]

[Excerpt] Abdul Magid Osman, our secretary of state for coal and hydrocarbons, recently led a Mozambican delegation to Portugal, where it met with Portuguese authorities to discuss issues related to the Cahora Bassa Hydroelectric Project.

On that occasion, Osman granted an interview to the Portuguese newspaper DIARIO DE NOTICIAS, in which he discussed aspects of the exploitation of Mozambique's mineral resources, as well as the utilization of Cahora Bassa electric power. For its interest, we are reprinting the interview in its entirety.

The prospects for economic cooperation between Portugal and Mozambique are vast, now that there is a "significant political understanding between the two countries," Dr Abdul Magid Osman, Mozambique's secretary of state for coal and hydrocarbons, told DIARIO DE NOTICIAS. "Regardless of the differences in their political systems both peoples have much to gain by working together."

In our interview with Osman, who was leading a Mozambican delegation in Lisbon to discuss issues pertaining to the Cahora Bassa Hydroelectric Project, he talked about the problems involved in this huge undertaking, in which Portugal has invested some 40 million contos, and also discussed other topics of interest to both countries.

NOTICIAS: What countries is Mozambique considering for its coal exports?

Osman: Almost all the European countries are interested in our coal: Italy, France, Switzerland and Finland, for example, and now Portugal as well. We are not discussing the possibility that Portugal could join with other European countries to obtain Mozambican coal, at medium and long range. In the case of gas, we are negotiating with some countries that normally--like those I mentioned--work with the petrochemical industry. Through QUIMIGAL [Quimica de Portugal] and, to a certain extent, through PARTEX, Portugal is also taking part.

NOTICIAS: From what we know, however, you are having difficulties transporting you coal. How are you solving them?

Osman: We are, in fact, having problems moving our coal. To solve them, we have to rebuild the Beira-Moatize railway. (The coal is located in the Moatize region.) Our immediate task is to solve the problem of the rail line, which is our primary concern. After that, the problem is interrelated with the problem of developing the port of Beira, which, at the regional level, should be serving other neighboring countries as well as Mozambique: Malawi, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

NOTICIAS: And regarding petroleum?

Osman: We are doing some work here. Seismic studies are in progress. We have started some work with Shell, and this year we expect to move into a second phase, signing contracts with various international companies.

NOTICIAS: The prospects?

Osman: They are good.

Cahora Bassa Issue

NOTICIAS: Mozambique wants to renegotiate the rates charged to South Africa for electric power supplied from Cahora Bassa. The Pretoria Governemtn, however, argues that the supply is irregular because of interruptions caused by sabotage to the transmission system inside Mozambique. How are you planning to solve the problem?

Osman: Perhaps the problem should be stated in a slightly different way. South Africa purchases electric power from Cahora Bassa, not just at a lower cost than is customary on the international market, but a ridiculous price, and this rate was in effect even before there was any interruption in the supply. What is happening here is that they are using this circumstance to try to obfuscate the basic issue. This is not to say that we do not recognize the great difficulty in negotiating with South Africa when the power supply is irregular. The issue here is to find out who is responsible for the sabotage that is interrupting the power supply. It is very clear to us that South Africa is to blame. We think the groups acting in Mozambique are an extension of the South African army itself. It is in this context that the problem must be resolved. It is not just a question of taking security measures.

NOTICIAS: In the current discussions in Lisbon, there was talk of alternative uses for the Cahora Bassa power. What alternatives, aside from the industrial projects that are under consideration in connection with the dam?

Osman: We have to put the question in terms of the market economy. Thus, there are several options for negotiation, establishing really just relations regarding a product which we have for sale. One option would be, for example, to supply power to Zimbabwe and, in return, to obtain from that country some of the products Portugal needs. Zimbabwe has large coal deposits. For its part, Portugal is thinking in terms of thermoelectric plants. Well, without precluding the possibility that Mozambique could come to supply coal to Portugal, Zimbabwe might be interested in trading its coal for electric power. As we all know, it is impossible to export electric power, but it is possible to export coal, and all of Europe, including Portugal, is betting on coal as a source of energy. Contrary to what has happened up to now--and we recognize that Portugal has a very large debt and is justifiably concerned about reducing this responsibility quickly--Cahora Bassa must be seen in a broader perspective. It should not be setting the two countries apart, but bringing them together.

Notable Political Understanding

NOTICIAS: That fact is that, in the recent past, Cahora Bassa has caused serious differences between the two countries. Have these differences been definitely settled?

Osman: That situation has been overcome. With the visit of our foreign affairs minister, after a meeting on Cahora Bassa, through the visit by Leonardo Mathais to Maputo and the Mozambican visit of President Ramalho Eanes, a climate of understanding and cordiality has been created, making it possible to discuss the problems without the emotion that is apt to lead to rifts. There are always problems when you are developing relations of cooperation, but they can be examined dispassionately, avoiding an impasse. We are trying to overcome the problems to arrive at a model of cooperation with Portugal. Your country presents a specific situation; you do not have the aspirations that other powers may be nursing.

NOTICIAS: Neocolonialist aspirations?

Osman: Sure. Mozambique has much to offer Portugal. Let us sit down together, then, and see what we can do--we ourselves, with the potential Portugal has, together with what other European countries can offer.

NOTICIAS: The discussions the Mozambican delegation had in Lisbon--were they positive?

Osman: Very positive. Our purpose was to take up matters related to Cahora Bassa, but also to pursue discussions initiated during the presidential visit regarding some cooperation-related action. Both the Portuguese and Mozambican delegations came away from the discussions feeling that Cahora Bassa could be a nucleus of cooperation between Mozambique and Portugal. This will mean advantages for Mozambique (when we present proposals such as those we discussed, we are thinking about the economic development of Mozambique) and for Portugal (because it will enable Portugal to solve some problems).

NOTICIAS: You have already presented proposals?

Osman: Yes. Very soon, a Portuguese delegation should come to Mozambique--and, if possible, to neighboring countries--to discuss some of the details of our proposals.

Difficult But Firm Path

NOTICIAS: What are the prospects for cooperation in other sectors?

Osman: If we analyze the Portuguese and Mozambican economies, we find that the prospects for cooperation are vast. Portugal imports large amounts of aluminum, sugar, meat and some grains. Mozambique has great potential in these areas. In turn, Portugal offers its great capacity to rebuild railways, a great tradition in the construction sector, a certain agricultural tradition, for example.

There are several sectors in which, once trade relations and economic consultation between the two countries are initiated and established, the programs will emerge naturally, in practical terms.

NOTICIAS: What do you feel must be done to this end?

Osman: The great objectives, which are often difficult to achieve, require great effort. When we present our proposals, we are aware that their implementation may not be easy, but we think it is possible to bring them about. To do this, it is important that the authorities of the two countries meet with one another and that the Portuguese businessmen make more frequent trips to Mozambique. The warmth and kindness with which we have been received at this time are possible only because we have reached this political understanding. Regardless of the differences in their political systems, Portugal and Mozambique have much to gain by going forward together.

6362
CSO: 4742/240

SHORTAGE OF CHARCOAL, OTHER FUEL PLAGUES BEIRA

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 15 Feb 82 pp 2, 10

[Commentary: "Cook With What"]

[Excerpt] Housewives (and not only housewives) are complaining that they have no way to cook their meals. Not everyone has an electric stove, obviously, and it is not easy to find wood here in the city. As if this were not enough, making the situation more troublesome, there is a shortage of domestic gas and oil.

Given this picture, charcoal emerged a while ago as an alternative fuel. At that time we saw many families and even hotels and similar establishments joining an already vast multitude of charcoal consumers.

It was a brief ray of sunshine, because in recent months even charcoal has become scarce--even though it is known to be produced not far from the capital of Sofala, namely in Dondo and Nhangau, and although we know that at least 600 individuals in the various districts of the city of Beira are authorized to sell it. "What are we going to cook with now?" people are asking.

Anyone who has been using charcoal for some time to cook her meals and to heat the irons to press her clothes is well aware that this is not the first charcoal crisis--so to speak--to occur in Beira. There comes a time every year when charcoal becomes scarcer, little by little, until the situation becomes actually troublesome, forcing people to go on great marches in search of charcoal, if they can find it at all. It is an old problem, for which practical and definite solutions have yet to be found.

The charcoal consumed in Beira is produced, as we said, in Dondo and Nhangau. The production sites are generally some distance from the highway and, in many cases, even far from the trails that penetrate the jungle. It is there that the collier fells the trees, sets up his furnaces, burn the charcoal, bags it and waits for his customers to arrive, who buy if from him to sell in Beira.

Rain Major Obstacle

In the dry season there is no big problem. Trails are open and the trucks can reach the production sites to load up. As it happens, however, this is not the dry season. The heavy rains that fell in December and January turned the trails to mud, which makes it difficult for trucks to reach the production areas. Hence, from that time on, a limited number of retailers have been going to Dondo to pick up the charcoal.

Suggestion

The factors mentioned above should be taken into account these days when we look for an explanation of the current charcoal crisis in Beira. Explaining the problem, however, is not enough. It is important to find solutions. Since the problem comes up every year with the return of the rainy season, and since it is known--even though not precisely--when the rains will come, we feel it is possible to find some way to at least reduce the size of the problem. It is a matter of picking up large amounts of charcoal from the production sites during the dry season and stockpiling it in (a) determined location(s). This charcoal would serve to alleviate the crisis in the rainy season. Obviously, this would not solve the current crisis, but it might help to solve the next one. Why not try it?

6362
CSO: 4742/240

CARBOMOC PRODUCTION SHORTAGES SEEN CORRECTED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 24 Feb 82 p 8

> [Text] "The lack of production materiel that prevented a quick resumption of operations in the CARBOMOC mines, in Tete, at the beginning of this year has been practically eliminated," the RM [Republic of Mozambique] Planning Group writes, citing the management of the Mozambican coal enterprise.

According to the same source, Carbonifera de Mozambique, in Tete, did not mine coal during the first 20 days of this year in the four mines currently in operation, because of problems with the provision of production items.

As a result of that suspension, CARBOMOC registered a daily production deficit of about 2 tons [sic] of coal, which would have been sold on the foreign market at $35 to $40 per ton. The company was idle for an equal period at the end of last year.

Specifically, the suspension is due to the shortage of explosives used to break up the coal, according to CARBOMOC's economic and production directors, who add that the shortage was accompanied by a lack of material to repair the lifts that carry the coal from the bottom of the mines to the funnel.

However, the workers at CARBOMOC are not completely idle, the Planning Group adds. The more than 2,000 employees of the company have resumed production, now that the shortage of production items which prevented the speedy resumption of mining operations has apparently eased.

The workers at the CARBOMOC mines in Tete have a reputation for industriousness, despite the difficult working conditions they face.

About 90 percent of the production material used in coal mining must be imported, including the dump trucks needed to transport the coal for drying and subsequent treatment.

To reduce imports, information from the company management indicates that the country may begin to produce explosives for coal mining operations.

The study now being drafted is one of the first firm steps taken to solve or minimize the problems of importing production materiel.

6362
CSO: 4742/233

EVENTS MARK CULTURAL COOPERATION WITH BRAZIL

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 24 Feb 82 p 1

[Text] About 7,000 books, from 112 publishers, which will later be delivered to the Association of Mozambican Writers to form its library, have been on public display since Tuesday afternoon in the exhibition hall of TRADIMEX, in Maputo.

The exhibit, described by the organizers as the largest presentation of Brazilian publications in another country to date, is an initiative of the INLD (National Book and Record Institute) and the Mozambican Wroters Association, with the cooperation of the Brazilian Book Council.

The Brazilian publishing exhibit is the result of contacts established during FACIM/81 [1981 Maputo International Fair] by the INLD, and was arranged following a visit to Brazil by the Institute's director.

The works exhibited, by authors of various origins, range from sports literature to art and children's books, including a number of technical and scientific works.

The books on display, which will familiarize the reading public with the Brazilian publishing scene, will be presented to the Mozambican Writers Association following the exhibition to form the nucleus of its future library.

n addition to this exhibit, other events are taking place in Maputo, illustrating aspects of Brazilian cultural life. In the courtyard of the Executive Council there is a public exhibit of contemporary etchings by 12 Brazilian artists. From 15 to 21 February, the Cinema Avenida presented a Week of Brazilian Films, showing seven films.

In the nation's capital there is also a series of lectures by prominent figures in Brazil's cultural life.

This evening at 2100 hours, in the amphitheater of the Faculty of Medicine, there will be a lecture on the topic "History: Theory and Practice," by Nelson Wernick Sodre.

Wernick Sodre is a distinguished Brazilian essayist, professor and historian and a member of the World Peace Council.

6362
CSO: 4742/233

BRIEFS

PEOPLE'S STORES IN PRIVATE HANDS--Julio Kazembe, head of the Technical Directorate of the Ministry of Home Trade, told our reporter that the program to close out the People's Stores Enterprise had been 97.5 percent completed by December. He added that the program was subject to slight delays because of various problems, including a lack of candidates, bookkeeping delays, disorganized accounting records, and problems in the operations of some provincial liquidating commissions. Begun in March 1980, following guidelines prepared by the top leaders of the party and the government as part of the Political and Organizational Offensive, the closeout procedure was accelerated in 1981. Although work was intensive during the first year, some difficulties related to the concept of the transfer of the People's Stores Enterprise to private hands delayed the work. Asked about what arrangements were made for workers affected by the transfer, Julio Kazembe replied as follows: "To ensure that no former employees of the enterprise are idle, the provincial liquidating commissions sent lists of the workers affected to the provincial labor directorates. However, a shortage of jobs and the unwillingness of some workers to accept certain types of work have meant that some workers are unemployed. [Excerpts] [Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 25 Jan 82 p 2] 9805

CZECH KNITTING INDUSTRY ASSISTANCE--The Knitting Factory Union, which is located in the outskirts of Maputo and manufactures sportswear and socks for men, wome, children, will be expanded by mid-1983 to increase production and to ensure the domestic supply of these goods that are currently popular consumer articles in the country. According to information gathered by our reporter from Antonio Martins, the director of that factory, the expansion project was approved by the Ministry of Industry and Energy, and an agreement with Czechoslovakia, through the firm INVESTA, which provides for the supply and assembly of 122 sock knitting machines with a capacity to produce 4,789,000 pairs a year, has already been signed. The contract for delivery of this large amount of machinery was signed last year by the Office of Textile Research and Projects, and agency under the Ministry of Industry and Energy, and INVESTA. According to Antonio Martins, the project is already being implemented. The first step is to select 22 persons to leave for Czechoslovakia in March. For 6 months, these Mozambicans will attend courses on electricity and repair of knitting machines in that socialist country. Some of these persons are already involved in a pretraining program at the Knitting Factory Union. [Excerpts] [Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 28 Jan 82 p 4] 9805

RAILROAD ACCIDENT--There are 5 dead and 66 wounded following a railway accident between passenger train 101 and freight train 155, which occurred at 1:00 pm last Monday 3 kilometers from Ressano Garcia. Both trains were coming from Maputo. The first train left the main station heading for that border town, while the other departed from the Triagem station with 40 tank cars containing 2,100 liters of fuel, heading for South Africa. The damages incurred have not yet been calculated. Part of the passenger train with three cars is said to be irrepairable, as it was totally destroyed. [Excerpts] [Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 13 Jan 82 p 16] 9805

MABOR IMMOBILIZED--The rubber manufacturing plant MABOR of Mozambique, with headquarters in Maputo, was closed toward the end of last year. The only information is that a shortage of raw materials is the main reason for the shutdown. MABOR is one of the strategic firms under the control of the Council of Ministers and has traditionally exceeded the production targets set for it. [Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 20 Jan 82 p 3] 9805

BATTERY FIRM WORKS UNDER CAPACITY--Victor Guimaraes, the industrial director of TUDOR, said that production of automobile batteries should be resumed in June 1982. This company, the only one in Mozambique which manufactures regular batteries and car batteries, is paralyzed by a lack of raw materials. The director said this year's available raw materials will be enough for only 7 months. In recent years, there has been a constant shortage of regular batteries and car batteries on the national market. This situation concerns many Mozambicans. The battery shortage directly affects the people in the rural areas where there is no electricity. The situation is made worse because these people have limited access to newspapers and periodicals. The radio is the only source of national and international news for them. The current shortage in our country makes this means of mass communication useless. "TUDOR is not responsible for the shortage of regular and car batteries and refuses to accept any responsibility for this problem. We have a staff of trained workers and machinery capable of producing batteries for the whole country," said Guimaraes in an interview with Radio Mozambique. He also said that half the factory's work force has been laid off. "In March, April and May, they will not be able to make medium-size R14 or normal-size R20 batteries but production of batteries should begin again in June," he stressed again. "We are very concerned about supplying the people. The factory management has written often to our governing body about the problem. Unfortunately, we have not received a satisfactory response. If the situation continues, we will have to lay off all workers in a few months," Guimaraes concluded. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 23 Feb 82 p 3] 9479

DUTCH FOOD DONATION--The Dutch Government has placed another 48 million meticals at the disposal of the People's Republic of Mozambique for food assistance, according to a communique distributed to the press by the Embassy of the Kingdom of the Netherlands in Maputo. According to the communique, an agreement will be concluded soon between the embassy and the National Planning Commission. It adds that the Dutch charge d'affairs in Maputo "is confident that it will be implemented very soon, to alleviate the serious food shortage, primarily in the provinces affected by the drougth." This additional sum placed at the disposal of the RPM by the Netherlands is in response to the appeal made last week by our Council of Ministers to the international community. After announcing that the coastal districts of Cabo Delgado and Nampula provinces have been declared natural disaster areas as a result of the prolonged 2-year drought, disrupting normal life for the people of the region, the Council of Ministers determined several actions to be taken by the government organs. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 24 Feb 82 p 8] 6362

CSO: 4742/233

PRESIDENT'S CONTINGENCY FUND REPORTED IN DANGER

Rejection by House

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 4 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Aliu Zubair]

[Text]

THE House of Representatives has rejected a provision of more than N250 million, proposed as contingency funds in the 1982 draft budgets.

Sitting in a committee of the whole House yesterday, the House unanimously rejected the provision as "the account of money spent from such provisions in the subsequent years were never rendered".

In its report to the House in respect of this fund, the House sub-committee on appropriations observed that the provision was not properly established by law, as required by the constitution.

Pointing out that the provision also contravened section 77 of the Constitution, the committee submitted that N27 million had already been approved for the President in respect of margin for increased cost and emergency provision.

However, it expressed disappointment that, despite requests for details of expenditure on the contingency vote, no effort was made by the Federal Government to supply them.

The committee, however, recommended that the fund be looked into with a view to ascertaining the present position, considering the anomalies inherent in its operation.

The contingency fund was established under the Finance (Control) and (Management) Act 1958.

The House, however approved N50 million for the educationally-disadvantaged areas of the country, N2 million for the welfare of Nigerian students overseas, while more than N3 million was approved for the development of state branches of the National Library.

Under the consolidated revenue fund charges, N13,485,880 was approved for the judiciary, N120,700 for the Law Reform Commission, N38,000 for the Federal Judicial Service Commission, N101,440 for the National Industrial Court and N300,000 for the National Population Commission.

It also approved a recurrent and capital estimate of N115,312,380 and N11,580,280 respectively for the Ministry of Social Development, Youth, Sports and Culture.

Senate Cuts Down Amount

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 4 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Anene Ugoani]

[Text] THE Senate yesterday reduced the N150 million contingency fund for this year to only two million.

In taking that decision, the Senate cut off N148,980.00 from the bulk sum voted for the President to give financial relief in times of disaster.

A strong fight put up by the Senate leader, Dr. Olusola Saraki, Colonel Ali, Senator Ibrahim Dimis and Senator Albo Dambatta could not save the emergency fund.

To satisfy those who wanted the N150,000 million cut, Senator Ali had a slash of 10k but the Senate President Dr. Joseph Wayas overruled him, saying his amendment came too late.

Despite the alarming cut, Senator David Oke (UPN – Ondo) demanded that the whole money be deleted but was out-voted.

Explaining the Senate reason for the cut to the "Daily Times" last night, Senator Emmanuel Ogunleye said it could have been illegal to approve anything higher than N2 million.

Senator Ogunleye said the 1968 Act puts the maximum fund that could be set aside for contingencies at N2 million.

He said that until the Act was repealed, the National Assembly would only be "risking" another litigation by approving the N150m.

Senator Ogunleye said President Shagari was free to bring a supplementary budget, if he needed money for contingencies.

CSO: 4700/949

BIOGRAPHY OF PRESIDENT SHEHU SHAGARI PUBLISHED

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 8 Mar 82 p 12

[Book Review]

[Text]

ABOUT THE AUTHOR AND THE BOOK:

Most Nigerians know little about their President — because they have not been told much about him. A book on his life and politics, titled SHEHU SHAGARI: A BIOGRAPHY OF NIGERIA'S FIRST EXECUTIVE PRESIDENT, will soon be released. It is authored by one of Nigeria's gifted political historians, Okion Ojigbo, who wrote 200 DAYS TO ETERNITY: THE ADMINISTRATION OF GENERAL MURTALA MUHAMMED and NIGERIAN RETURNS TO CIVILIAN RULE.

A political scientist by training from the University of California, Berkeley, Okion Ojigbo has also co-authored and edited other, books as well as written over half a dozen articles in international scholarly journals. He is also the General Editor of the W.W. Norton (New York) Series on Africa which has published Professor William Bascom's AFRICAN ART: A CULTURAL PERSPECTIVE. Besides his academic training, Ojigbo has the additional background of having worked very closely in the "corridor of power" which has placed him in a vantage position to understand and articulate the workings and intricacies of the nation's highest office, the Presidency. He served as Senior Assistant Secretary in the State House under the dynamic General Murtala Muhammed who laid the smooth 5-stage programme for the nation's return to civilian rule, and as the Principal Private Secretary to Murtala's successor, General Olusegun Obasanjo, who carried through the programmes to their successful execution and the peaceful handing-over to a civilian government in October 1979. Lastly, Okion Ojigbo has the tremendous advantage of having worked closely with President Shehu Shagari who gave his permission and concrete support to the project and bared his heart about his life and his politics in building a just, peaceful, stable, unified, and economically developed nation. The President's biography is being delayed in order to include in it the historic visit of His Holiness Pope John II who is here in Nigeria at the unique invitation by President Shehu Shagari, himself a man of piety and a devout Muslim.

Okion Ojigbo's biography of the President is a detailed and fascinating 3-year research project on the life and politics of Alhaji Shehu Shagari, Nigeria's First Executive President after nearly a decade and half of military rule. The research is thorough while the author has most effectively woven his series of meetings with the President into the body literature, thereby making the presentation breathtaking. The vividness and lucidity give the book life and soul, confirming an enviable rapport between subject and author. Indeed, the depth of the biography confirms that Okion Ojigbo was granted a very rare privilege by the President to look into his past life and probe his mind in order to fathom an understanding of the politics of Nigeria's No. 1 Citizen, sharing in that frankness and close association some of the rare moments of our national history. The quiet hours with the President and the rare opportunity to read his private papers would tend to confirm that not only does the author know President Shehu Shagari well (even more than most of the President's official appointees) but also he has been given a unique chance to tell the nation and the rest of the world more about our President, thereby filling a gap which the President's own official information unit has not brought out effectively.

This fascinating biography of the Nigerian President looks at the birth and youth of Alhaji Shehu Shagari, formerly known as Shehu Yabo, who later became the Parliamentary Secretary to the late Prime Minister, Alhaji Sir Abubakar Tafawa Balewa. It is the captivating story, never told before, of the crisis of the first few hours to appoint an acting Prime Minister to deputise for Balewa and of the momentous anticlimax of the official taking-over by the army from notes taken down on the back of scrap paper, retrieved from a wastepaper basket, at the crucial meeting between Major-General Aguiyi-Ironsi and what remained of Balewa's Cabinet.

The military years saw Alhaji Shehu Shagari as the "envoy of peace" to the Vatican, Switzerland and France; the ultimate result was the preservation of the unity of the nation. He is the effective force in the execution of the policy of "no victors, no vanquished", and succeeds in the repeal of "security risk" classification on former Biafrans — including all those former Biafrans who actively contested and participated in the 1979 elections to usher in the Second Republic. What others agressively sought Shagari was persuaded to accept and who, when asked what personal qualities he will bring to the Presidency, did not talk about himself but about the qualities of WHOEVER becomes the President, namely, uprightness, integrity, humility, accommodation and restraint in order to maintain the nation's unity and enhance the political stability the military was bequeathing to its civilian successor. He not only considered a woman for Vice President, but also forced what the author call the "Gang-up of four minus one" which the President defeats as well as win two subsequent legal battles - what the Association of Lagos Market Women who went to congratulate the President-elect reduced to economic terms: a potential buyer who offers only ₦6.00 to a market women for her wares should not be angry with another buyer who offers ₦12.50!

President Shagari's first term in office, Ojigbo persuasively argues in the biography, has promoted intergration and stability, as his respect for the rule of law such as in the case of Shugaba and the Revenue Allication Bill also do; all helped to sustain confidence in Shagari's Administration. But you also want to read about the background and intricacies of his pardon of Yakubu Gowon - as well as the still pending case of Biafran secessionist leader, Ojukwu. The author maintains that President Shagari believes in tolerance, and he has been magnanimous. Ojigbo writes that President Shagari's personal qualities bring into sharp focus the indelible words, of the late President Kwame Nkrumah who said: "Africa needs a new type of citizen, a dedicated, modest, honest, informed man. A man who abhors greed and detests vanity. A new type of man whose humility is his strength and whose integrity is his greatness." All these qualities have been emphatic in Shagari's domestic policies, be they the issues of economic development, social and welfare programmes or in agricultural projects. Not only has he placed emphasis on steel such as the Aladja Steel Complex at Aladja, but also in the diversification of new industrial projects throughout the country irrespective of the political affiliation or party leanings of the areas.

There are also his efforts in international affairs, such as his triumphal achievement in the independence of Zimbabwe, a battle Shagari started in New Zealand in November 1965 as soon as Ian Smith proclaimed his illegal Unilateral Declaration of Independence (UDI). It was a memorable occasion, so much so that the New Zealand Christchurch Star as well as other papers reported in 1965 that "delegates and journalists both agreed that the speech of Alhaji Shehu Shagari was one of the most impressive speeches they had ever heard from the Chambers of the New Zealand House of Representatives. It was a speech filled with quiet logic and human concern." That battle he started in 1965 ended in what Shagari called "A victory for Africa", again due to his active role in the negotiations and the Lancaster House talks. He forges along in his efforts in international politics, such as his pressure on France over the Cameroun incidence and wins the "Triumph for Restraint" in face of severe political pressure from the home front. And there are other areas.

This is an enviable biography, not only because of the depth and quality of the research and write-up but also because the author has the tremendous advantage of the inside track. Only few— very few— people know and can write the story of President Shehu Shagari with such eloquence and lucidity. Indeed, it is more than the story of Shagari; it is the story of Nigeria's 80 million people. It is an enrapturing and quite voluminuous book - over 500 pages of serious literature and an additional 60 pages of colour plates, not a collection of speeches - but written in a very fluid and enjoyable manner. One wonders if the book couldn't have been split into two volumes; but that in itself would do injustice both to the President and to the reader. Have the courage - and create the time - to read this book. You will find it a fascinating experience and deeply enriching in your understanding of the politics of this nation of which Alhaji Shehu Shagari is its first Executive President.

CSO: 4700/954

MINISTER REPORTED CALLING DCM'S REPORT 'CONCOCTION'

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 6 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Chris Agulefo Lagos]

[Text]

THE Minister for External Affairs, Professor Isiaya Audu has declared before the panel investigating the Finance Committee of the House of Representatives that the impression he gathered from the report of Mr Fred Allison pertaining to the committee's tour of Switzerland, was that it was concocted, full of imagination and a falsehood.

Professor Audu was speaking on the report of Mr Fred Allison, the recalled deputy chief of mission at the Nigerian Embassy in Switzerland, which was sent to him by the incumbent ambassador, Alhaji Yahaya Kwande so that the minister could by himself discern the authenticity or otherwise of the report which the ambassador had earlier rejected.

The minister also confirmed to the committe that he had in all honesty heard about the alleged bribery on the members of the committee, of which Mr Ralph Obioha is the chairman, mostly through the mass media.

Another revelation made by the minister was that Mr Ralph Obioha and Mr Fred Allison were classmates at the Kings College, Lagos, and had since not been in cordial relations.

The minister's revelations were cut short however when he realised that the document he was reading from 'contained some elements of confidentiality', and members of the press and the public were prevailed upon to allow the committee to sit in camera.

Members of the press who were covering the proceedings of the panel regarded as a 'public sitting' were not happy that the evidence of such a key witness could not be covered for public consumption, with the fear that such evidence might be swept under the carpet.

However other testimonies at the committee have indicated that they were unable to find evidence of corrupt practises among members who went on the tour.

Evidence

These are the evidence of Honourable Ali Kaita who also is a member of the Finance Committee. He told the panel that he has independently conducted investigations in view of his affiliation with the members but could not trace any incriminating evidence. He did not undertake the tour with other members.

Other witnesses who testified before the panel were the Consul-General of Nigeria in New York, Dr A. Angulu, the Charge D'Affairs in Argentina, Mr Douglas Kemba and the Chief of Protocol in London, Mr Abubakar Udu who were unanimous in their plea of "sorry" to the panel that it was unfortunate they could not be of much help to the panel.

Meanwhile the panel has sat for 15 days and more people are billed to testify before it.

CSO: 4700/950

ALL LOCAL GOVERNMENT COMMITTEES OFFICIALLY REPLACED

Declared Illegal, Dissolved

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 9 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Taiwo Okutubo]

[Text]

ALL the 23 local government committees in Lagos State have been dissolved.

According to an official announcement in Lagos yesterday, the dissolution was ordered by Governor Lateef Jakande in compliance with the judgment of a Lagos High Court.

Last Friday, Mr. Justice Ademola Adeoba declared as "unconstitutional, null and void" the dissolution of eight local government councils and the appointment two years ago of councillors to run the 23 local government committees.

He then declared a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants, their servants and agents from the management of local government councils.

Mr. Justice Adeoba also ordered the Governor and his "agents" not to appoint chairmen of the committees as the Local State Local Government Law 1980, Lagos State Council (amendment, temporary and interim provisions law) of 1980 were illegal and of no effect whatsoever, since they contravened the Constitution.

In a dramatic move at dawn yesterday, Governor Jakande announced the dissolution of all the 23 committees and handed the affairs of the various councils to council managers, who would report to the Commissioner for Local Government and Chieftaincy Matters, Alhaji Ganiyu Olawale Dawodu, through the permanent secretary in the Ministry of Local Government.

Governor Jakande thanked all the councillors and the chairmen of the dissolved councils and expressed delight that they had performed very well.

The announcement said the councils would be run by the council managers until new arrangements were made.

The dissolution announcement came to council workers and the councillors themselves as a shock.

At the mainland and Lagos island local government offices yesterday, workers were seen discussing in groups. At the mainland office, the council manager, Mr. Dawodu held series of meetings with senior employees.

Work however went on as usual in all the council offices, but a number of chairmen of various committees did not show up and those who did left immediately they heard the news.

Meanwhile, the Commissioner for Local Government, is expected to hold an important meeting with the council managers and top officials.

New Appointees

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 10 Mar 82 p 40

[Text] A NEW Local Government (Amendment) Law has been passed by Lagos State legislators.

And within hours, 23 new men were named to head the newly-created local government management committees.

The 23 old committees were declared "unconstitutional" last Friday by Mr. Justice Ademola Adeoba, ruling that two laws under which they were set up were "illegal and of no effect".

These were the Lagos State Local Government Law 1980 and the Lagos State Council (Amendment Temporary and Interim Provisions Law) 1980.

In a dramatic move at dawn on Monday, Governor Lateef Jakande dissolved the 23 illegal committees and handed the management of local government over to council managers, who were to report directly to the Commissioner of Local Government, Alhaji Ganiyu Dawodu.

Yesterday, Governor Jakande said he was "completely satisfied" that the new committees were "lawful, and altogether justified in the public interest."

He added: "In a democracy like ours, we must expect and tolerate reasonable and unreasonable criticisms, sensible and senseless opposition, and all manner of devices by political opponents to obstruct the implementation of our programmes." I welcome our political opponents to the arena in which we are all actors, for I am confident that they will always be worsted in any encounter with us".

Alhaji Jakande said the NPN, which had sought a court order declaring the old committees illegal, had tried since 1979, to "create confusion in the state".

He added: "But we will not allow them to have their way."

CSO: 4700/949

'STAR' APPEALS TO ELECTORAL COMMISSION ON DEADLINE

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 10 Mar 82 p 2

[Editorial in the column "Comment": "The FEDECO March 21 Deadline"]

[Text]

THE Federal Electoral Commission (FEDECO), as a vital machinery entrusted with the onerous duties and responsibilities of conducting elections in Nigeria, appears, as manifest in the delay of the local government elections, not to have the reputation of an organisation handling its national affairs with speed and despatch.

THIS might be the reason why, when out of the blue and without sufficient notice, it gave its ultimatum of March 21, 1982, as the dead-line for political groups to register with FEDECO for the 1983 general elections.

WE of the Daily Star strongly believe that this is rather a precipitate action and a FEDECO politicking exercise. We are of the opinion that the first and foremost duty of FEDECO is to conduct and supervise elections that are free and fair in accordance with the principles of democratic processes, in a congenial political atmosphere, free from intimidation, political tuggery, violence and harassment of voters in favour of any political party.

WE fail to see how the political associations can meet all the constitutional requirements demanded for them within the time table specified by FEDECO. We recall that the same hurried action led to the registration of only five out of more than 50 political associations in 1978.

WHAT we are stressing here is that more time should be given for the registration exercise to avoid the repeat performance, mutual antagonism and the political ballyhoo and bad blood that characterised the 1978 registration imbroglio.

GIVEN the slow speed with which FEDECO approaches its duties, the March 21 dead-line appears a political strategy to frustrate the moves of the four political parties, NPP, UPN, PRP and the GNPP, in their alignment exercise, in time, before the 1983 elections. A new political association has to work out its constitution and agree on its symbol and flag. And of course, for the political association or group to qualify as a political party and be registered by FEDECO, it must have functional offices in the 19 states to give it a national orientation, acceptance and credibility.

SURELY the FEDECO rigid time table does not give the political groups any breathing space for them to work out the relevant modalities to satisfy FEDECO's requirements, and this would mean disenfranchisement for some groups until when another opportunity presents itself.

THIS type of political trend is not good for the healthy growth of our political system and democracy, which should envisage the widest possible representation of the people, and not a teleguided democracy.

WE are therefore appealing to FEDECO to extend the time table sufficiently to give political groups time to do their jobs properly.

FOR FEDECO to enjoy the confidence of all Nigerians, it must refuse to allow itself to be manipulated by any political party for partisan gains. It has to stand firm to retain its credibility as an impartial organ of the government, the political situation in the country notwithstanding, for if it behaves otherwise, the political stability, national unity and concord of the nation could be at grave risk.

CSO: 4700/950

IDEA OF IMPEACHING PLATEAU STATE GOVERNOR DROPPED

Kaduna SUNDAY NEW NIGERIAN in English 7 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by M. A. Aliyu Biu]

[Text] TWO major reasons have compelled those wishing to impeach the Plateau State Deputy Governor, Alhaji Muhammadu Danladi Yakubu, to drop the whole idea.

The first reason was the inability of the House of Assembly to get two-thirds of its legislators to sign the impeachment notice and secondly, "the exercise came too late".

Giving this latest development on the impeachment furore to the Sunday New Nigerian in Jos, last Wednesday, an NPP legislator representing Keana Constituency, Alhaji Aliyu Mohammed Elayo "the Owelle of Keana" explained that most of his colleagues in the House from the lower Plateau, refused to co-operate to sign the impeachment notice "due to a number of developments".

Alhaji Elayo who was one of the legislators seriously kicking against the impeachment of Alhaji Danladi Yakubu, however, denied that 17 members of the House had signed the impeachment notice and condemned the rumour that some legislators were being given 5,000 Naira to sign the impeachment notice.

He said that these allegations are wicked and unfounded, "because there is nothing like an impeachment notice. All you have been hearing is just rumour"

However, sources hinted that even if the legislators co-operated and signed the impeachment notice, the House cannot get at least 36 of its members to make-up for the two-third majority, as required by the constitution.

The sources explained that out of the 48 members in the House, there are three vacant seats, and all the nine NPN legislators and the three GNPP legislators and the one UPN member, totalling 16 were against impeaching the deputy governor.

When contacted to comment on the issue, the Deputy Governor, Alhaji Muhammadu Danladi said that if any body has the courage to impeach him, let him go ahead.

Alhaji Danladi Yakubu said that he has since developed thick skin and remained unshaken about his impeachment "because I am daily becoming more consolidated. "After all, impeachment is not the end of life. What happened to Alhaji Bibi Farouk, former Deputy Governor of Kano State or Alhaji Balarabe Musa, former Kaduna State Governor. Are they not living?"

The deputy governor said that he is not worried at all adding, "I wish to repeat my call with the agitators for a Nasarawa State to have a round table conference with us demanding for the creation of Middle Belt State, to find solutions to our differences".

He said that he does not care whether one referred to the area calling for the Middle Belt State as "Top, Bottom or Middle Belt State, because all what the agitators for a Nassarawa State are doing was following my foot steps. which is a credit to me"

CSO: 4700/954

CRISIS OVER GOVERNOR SAID DIVIDING KADUNA HOUSE

Kaduna SUNDAY NEW NIGERIAN in English 7 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Tajudeen Ajibade]

[Text]

A SERIOUS internal political crisis is now looming in the Kaduna State Chapter of the National Party of Nigeria (NPN).

Informed sources said the crisis which has generated a lot of bickerings among top partymen in the state has now extended to the State House of Assembly.

According to a Sunday New Nigerian investigation, the party crisis emanated from a series of caucus meetings said to have been held in Kaduna township and environs on who is to be fielded as gubernatorial candidate for the party in the state come the 1983 general elections.

The investigation revealed that in the centre of the crisis are the Chairman of the party, Alhaji Sulaiman Ahmed, Alhaji Lawal Kaita PLO Kano, Alhaji Iro Dan-Musa, Minister for FCDA and the Speaker of the Kaduna State House of Assembly Alhaji Mamman Abubakar Dan-Musa.

The Sunday New Nigerian also gathered that on the other side of the power tussle are: Alhaji Haliru Abdullahi, National Vice-chairman of the NPN, Alhaji Sani Zango-Daura and their supporters in the State House of Assembly.

According to a dependable political source, what sparked off the row was a recent caucus meeting allegedly held by 41 elected members of the NPN in the State House of Assembly and some other frontline members where it agreed to impeach speaker Mamman Dan Musa because of his loyalty to one side.

Another political source alleged that those who attended the meeting were given 50,000 Naira each to support the impeachment of the speaker.

The crisis which has now divided members of the assembly into two groups has resulted in accusations and counter-accusations among the members.

One side claims that the state chairman of the party and his bench-men want to cause confusion within the party and to impose somebody very unpopular on the masses in Kaduna as gubernatorial candidate in 1983.

They accused the presidential assistant in Kano, Alhaji Lawal Kaita as the brain behind the crisis. He was alleged to be sponsoring one M. T. Usman, the former Federal Director of Works, his close associate for the 1983 race in the state.

The other group accused members of the Assembly who allegedly attended the meeting, including the publicity secretary of the party in the state, Alhaji Sani Zango Daura, Alhaji Haliru Abdullahi of being afraid of their popularity and bent on causing a crisis within the party.

CSO: 4700/954

BENDEL GOVERNOR ALLI URGED TO 'RESIGN HONORABLY'

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 3 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Andrew Isibor]

[Text]

PROFESSOR Ambrose Alli, Governor of Bendel State, has been called upon to resign honourably in view of the allegations of wrong-doings, inefficiency and unconstitutional acts made against him by top members of the Unity Party of Nigeria (UPN) in the state.

A member of the National Executive Council of the National Party of Nigeria (NPN), Chief Edwin Clark made the call at a press conference in Benin City.

Chief Clark pointed out that there was enough evidence of alleged open corruption, administrative bungling financial and moral bankruptcy, inept handling of the state's economy and education system and serious fraud to merit the immediate impeachment of Governor Alli as demanded by the Solidarity Council of the UPN.

He lamented that the state House of Assembly was now unwillinng to impeach the governor because, according to him, the House was aiding and abetting Governor Alli in all his impeachable affairs.

He further told newsmen that the state government, apart from being financially bankrupt, had so neglected its responsibilities up to a stage where it no longer had the will to govern and had them abandoned its responsibilities to the people.

Chief Clark accused the governor of spending public funds recklessly and fraudulently without regards to appropriation law and frequently outside budgetary allocations.

'Usually, the governor brings in supplementary appropriation bills to the legislature, long after the money had been spent knowing fully well that the House of Assembly dominated by his partymen would normally rubber-stamp its approval, contrary to sections 112 to 115 of the constitution', he added.

As a result of this mismanagement of funds, he pointed out that there was no real relationship between budgeted allocations and the actual expenditure of Governor Alli's administration.

Chief Clark told newsmen that all the alleged illegal expenditure of Governor Alli, including the public funds spent for the burial of his father, the installation of his wife as a chief at Ile-Ife, boosting of meetings of the so-called 'progressive' governors and the four parties alliance were contained in all the unconstitutional supplementary appropriation bills.

He called on members of the state House of Assembly to live up to expectation and check the executive's financial excesses.

CSO: 4700/954

KADUNA GOVERNOR SUES KADUNA ASSEMBLY AGAIN

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 3 Mar 82 p 9

[Article by Francis Talabi]

[Text]

THE Governor of Kaduna State Alhaji Abu Musa Rimi has again instituted an action against the Kaduna State House of Assembly at the Kaduna High Court.

The suit which was jointly filed by the state governor and the attorney-general of Kaduna State was instituted by Malam Aliyu Umar from the attorney-general's chamber.

In the suit, plaintiffs are seeking a declaration that the provisions of sub-section 3 of section 4 of the Local Government Law 1977 as contained under section 5 of the Local Government (Amendment) Law, 1982 are inconsistent with the provision of section 7 (2) (4) of the Constitution of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, 1979.

They are praying the court to declare that the provisions of section 6 of the Local Government (Amendment) Law 1982 are inconsistent with the provisions of section 5 (2) of the constitution.

They are also seeking a declaration that the provisions of sub-section (3) of section 4 AA of the local government law 1977 as contained under section 7 of the Local Government (Amendment) Law 1982 are inconsistent with the provisions of section 4 (7) and section 5 (2) of the constitution as they amounted to a violation of the constitution and violation of the principles of separation of powers as enshrined in the constitution.

Plaintiffs are also seeking a declaration that the provisions of section 4 (f) of the Local Government Law 1977 as contained under section 9 of the Local Government (Amendment) Law, 1982 are inconsistent with the provisions of seciton 4 (7) and section 5 (2) of the constitution as they amounted to a violation of the principles of separation of powers as enshrined in the constitution.

The new writ is to be mentioned before a Kaduna High Court Judge, Mr. Justice V.J.O. Chigbue on March 30 this year.

CSO: 4700/954

MERGER OF FOUR PARTIES REPORTEDLY CAME TOO LATE

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 8 Mar 82 p 48

[Article by Biodun Awani]

[Text]

THE "progressive parties" — UPN, NPP, GNPP and PRP — cannot form a single party to fight the 1983 general elections, Professor Ayodele Awojobi has said.

"All they can do now is going to be similar to how they won the governorship election in Kaduna in 1979", he added.

Speaking at the weekly radio O-Y-O programme "Meeting Point" in Ibadan at the week-end, Professor Awojobi, said it was very "easy to talk of a merger on papers, but constitutionally, it is too late for them to merge".

He noted that this was because the "progressives" had not lived long enough to know themselves and it was impossible for them to merge and form a party which would be supreme over their various parties.

On the question of the "Progressive" Presidential candidate, Prof. Awojobi said that, if Chief Obafemi Awolowo and Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe were "locked together at Nsukka for three hours chat, they would come out to announce who is stepping down for the other".

He said the Presidential candidate would not present any difficulty to the "progressives" because what is important is controlling the National Assembly and having as many governors as possible".

Commenting on the issue of ex-military officers coming into politics, Prof. Awojobi said that, as citizens, they were entitled to declare their interest "and go into partisan politics".

He stressed that, however, each of them needed to know the difference between a military and a constitutional government, adding that, as "politicians which they are contemplating to be, they should understand they would have to beg and lobby instead of issuing orders as they were used to".

CSO: 4700/949

PEOPLE FROM VARIOUS PARTIES REPORTEDLY CROSS TO NPN

Bendel Members from NPP

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 5 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] MORE than 50,000 members of the Nigerian People's Party (NPP) in Bendel North Senatorial District consisting of Owan, Agbazilo, Okpebho, Etsako and Akoko Edo Local Government areas of Bendel State have declared for the National Party of Nigeria (NPN).

The North Senatorial District leader of the NPP, Mr. T.J.O. Itakpe announced their declaration for the NPN when about 200 representatives of the new converts paid a solidarity visit to the former military governor of the state, Dr. Osaigbovo Ogbemudia in Benin City.

The new converts include the NPP chairmen in the five local government areas. They are Chief M. Uwadia (Owan), Mr. S.E. Momoh (Agbazilo), Mr. E. Ettah (Etsako), Mr. F. Moses (Akoko-Ede) and Mr. Ohue Mathew (Okpebho).

In his speech, the senatorial leader, Mr. Itakpe said that the NPP members opted for the NPN because of the recent declaration for the NPN by Dr. Ogbemudia.

He added that they were also provoked by the so-called formation of alliance between their former party (NPP) and the notorious UPN.

Mr. Itakpe pointed out that Dr. Ogbemudia's joining the NPN had suddenly changed the political situation in the state.

This, he said, had caused serious confusions in other political parties, adding that members of other parties were now working towards opting for the NPN because of Dr. Ogbemudia.

Addressing the new converts, Dr. Ogbemudia, on behalf of the state Chairman of the NPN, Mr. Tayo Akpata, welcomed them to the party and congratulated them for their courage and foresight.

He told the new converts that the chairmen of the NPN in their respective areas were waiting to welcome them to the party.

Plateau NPP, GNPP Members

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 6 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] A LARGE number of Nigerian Peoples Party (NPP) and Great Nigeria Peoples Party (GNPP) supporters in Lafia Local Government area of Plateau State have decamped to the National Party of Nigeria (NPN).

Presenting the decampees to the National Vice-Chairman of the party, Alhaji Shettima Ali Monguno, at a rally attended by more than 100,000 people in Lafia town last weekend, the Benue State Special Assistant to the President, Alhaji Yahaya Sabo, Marafan Lafia, said that the entire Lafia Local Government and its environ have been 'NPN ised.'

Alhaji Yahaya Sabo said that as far as Lafia was concerned, 'you should put your mind at rest and go home and relax, because we have completed our job here. All we are waiting for is when FEDECO would ask us to go and vote and NPN will emerge victorious.'

Replying, Alhaji Shettima Ali Monguno thanked all those who have decamped to the NPN for realising their mistakes of voting for the wrong party during the 1979 elections.

Alhaji Shettima Ali Monguno conveyed President Shehu Shagari's congratulatory messages and that of the National Secretariat of the party to the NPN leaders in the state, for conducting peaceful elections.

The national deputy chairman called on all NPN supporters to co-operate fully and support their leader.

Speaking at the rally, the Minister for Transport, Alhaji Umaru Dikko, said that whenever other political parties hear the NPN slogan 'Aminci', they tremble.

Alhaji Umaru Dikko said that Chief Obafemi Awolowo, the UPN national leader was daily becoming frightened to stand for the presidential election with President Shehu Shagari in the 1983 general elections, 'because he has realised that even his supporters admire President Shehu and since elections are being held through secret ballot boxes, he was not sure whether he will get their votes.'

Alhaji Umaru Dikko said that because they have not betrayed the trust, and confidence reposed in the NPN at the federal level, the Almighty Allah who knew of sincerity of purpose, trust and peace, recently exposed a businessman who wanted to topple the government, simply because he failed to secure government contracts.

In his speech, the Aviation Minister, Mr. John Jatau Khadiya, told other party supporters who are yet to decamp to do so.

CSO: 4700/945

AZIKIWE, AWOLOWO REPORTEDLY 'SOLD OUT THEIR PEOPLE'

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 5 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] DR. Chuba Okadigbo, Special Adviser to the President on Political Affairs, has said that Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe of the Nigerian People's Party (NPP) 'sold out' the interests of his people by his recent boycott of the meeting of the five political party leaders on creation of new states.

The followers of Dr. Azikiwe have demonstrated that they were for the creation of more states by signing petitions for the creation of Anambra, Ebonyi, Abia, and Aba states out of the present Imo and Anambra states and Port Harcourt out of the Rivers State as well as Anioma State from Bendel, he pointed out.

Dr. Okadigbo who was speaking to the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN), said that the leader of the Unity Party of Nigeria (UPN), Chief Obafemi Awolowo was also guilty of the same offence.

He maintained that the President, Alhaji Shehu Shagari did not exceed his powers in summoning the meeting of the five political party leaders over the creation of new states in the country.

According to the presidential adviser on political affairs, the creation of states involved financial, administrative, executive and political considerations which required the co-operation of all political parties, the National Assembly and the Federal Government, he added.

He said that the demand for the creation of states was an important national issue and that the President was only giving positive direction to the yearnings of the people.

Dr. Okadigbo described the meeting as a success because 'it underlines the merit of consensus with regards to the solutions of national problems'.

He said that the non-attendance of leaders of the UPN and the NPP was indicative of 'the hypocrisy' of these leaders since the meeting was in fact at the instance of leaders of the five political parties.

Dr. Okadigbo described the participation of the leader of the GNPP, Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim, in the meeting, as the beginning of the end of the 'progressive' alliance.

And in another release, the Deputy National publicity Secretary of the National Party of Nigeria (NPN), Chief Abiola Ogundokun, has said that the absence of Chief Obafemi Awolowo and Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe has clearly shown the nation that they were opposed to the creation of new states in the country.

'By their failure to turn up for the meeting, these two leaders have clearly shown the nation that they are opposed to the creation of new states in the country simply because they have been rejected by the people who they intended to rule by all means', he declared.

Chief Ogundokun pointed out that these two leaders have been preaching 'politics of deceit' and their various publicity machinery have been propagating various ideas with a view of making people believe that they have many followers.

The party viewed the absence of both Chief Awolowo and Dr. Azikiwe at the meeting as an act of 'sabotage and calculated attempt to frustrate' the genuine intentions of President Shagari's administration in pursuit of creation of more states.

'It is only interesting that Chief Awolowo who had been campaigning that he would create more states if voted into power has now decided to show no interest in the matter.'

The party however urged Nigerians to rise to their civic responsibilities by exposing the evil intentions of these leaders and reject them at the polls in the next elections.

CSO: 4700/945

NEGATIVE REACTION REPORTED TO DECISION ON STATE POLICE

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 5 Mar 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Our Police System"]

[Text] AS is to be expected, the "progressives" have not been happy with the Supreme Court's judgment on their public order suit against the Federal Government. Three state governments namely, Borno, Ogun and Bendel had in effect wanted the control of police for purposes of maintaining law and order to be vested in state governors, rather than with the Inspector-General of Police. The Supreme Court judged that to do so would be unconstitutional and ironically, that far from depriving the governors of any powers, the President's modification of the law in fact gave them powers they did not have under the constitution i.e. the power to veto a Commissioner of Police by virtue of the provision that a commissioner must consult with the governor of his state command.

Since this judgment was delivered early last month, the "progressives" have been reacting to it in a negative way. One of them, Alhaji Ganiyu Ajayi, the speaker of the Ogun House of Assembly, was reported to have said recently that governors and not police commissioners should still have the power to permit the holding of public meetings. That of course, is wishful thinking considering the Supreme Court's vedict. Still we do not expect that we have heard the last word on the matter for two obvious reasons. First there is a powerful opinion that cuts across party lines, which believes we should have more than one police force. Secondly, but related to this, is the fact that at any rate it is a contradiction in terms to have a central policing system in a federation.

Obviously this contradiction cannot be resolved overnight if only because the law which establishes one police force for the country is rooted in the constitution and cannot therefore be altered without amending the constitution—a patently cumbersome thing to do. Here at the New Nigerian we wonder if it is even sensible to seek to alter the present arrangement, the contradiction in it notwithstanding. Those who want either state (and even local government) police or a governor to have the ultimate responsibility for law and order in the present arrangement, do so mainly on the ground that the police is being abused. But if abuse is the determining factor on what police system we should have, it should be obvious that state or local government police is a dangerous advocacy. Our experience in this country has demonstrated quite clearly that the chances of abuse of power increase in inverse proportion to the level of government—i.e. the lower the level the more the abuse. A glaring example, right now, is the spate of strikes all over the country. Whereas the federal authorities probably suspect sabotage in say the NEPA strike, they have not behaved in an arbitrary manner and ordered anybody's sack. This sharply contrasts with the actions of the Anambra State Government over the recent teachers' strike action whereby Governor Jim Nwobodo ordered the instant dismissal of their leaders. The probability is that if he had a police force, the teachers would all have been behind bars. But this highhanded behaviour of Governor Nwobodo's probably has more to do with the threshold of political tolerance at the lower levels of government than in any streak for highhandedness which may be in his blood.

In the light of all this, we should all accept the present arrangement as satisfactory. Rather than undermine the Nigeria Police by word or deeds, those who are dissatisfied by their actions should seek redress in our courts of Law.

CSO: 4700/945

COLUMNIST DISCUSSES NEW STATE CREATION

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 4 Mar 82 p 7

[Article by Clem Baye in the column "Political Watch": "New States: Spirit, Letter and Reality"]

[Text]

THANKS to NEPA's efficiency I could not watch Shugaba Darman Abdulrahman's historic handshake with President Shehu Shagari at the State House last week. But from the accounts heard so far, it appears that the President stood up to the six footer from Maiduguri, at least none of the two parties parted with a sprained elbow. Politics is full of ironies. One could never have predicted that someday, the Majority Leader of the GNPP in Borno State House of Assembly, who but for the intervention of the judiciary, would have been deported, would be in a warm handshake with the President.

The meeting of all political party leaders at which this took place was not as much of a flop as the 'progressive' media would have us believe. Of the five political parties recognised by FEDECO, three were present at the meeting. Some will argue that the President should have invited the 'Imoudu faction' of the PRP because it has the support of a majority of members at the National Assembly as opposed to the Malam Aminu Kano faction which was invited. That would not have helped matters much because there is a 'Mahmud Waziri faction' in the GNPP which could also claim a right of participation. The same goes for Senator Nathaniel Anah's clique which, though expelled from the NPP has all the same managed to catch the headlines in a few media houses.

The NPP and UPN which were absent from the talks argued that the President went beyond his powers. On this matter, both parties must have impressed themselves and their supporters and no more. The very fact that the constitution does not include provisions for an all party discussion and or agreement does not make unconstitutional the president's decision to invite the parties to discuss modalities of state creation. It was in a similar vein that the President carried the issue of remuneration for the executive and the legislature to the National Economic Council (NEC). Though the power of fixing remuneration for those categories of public officers was that of the National Assembly, the way and manner some legislatures were going to fix salaries and perquisites regardless of our financial capabilities made guidelines from the NEC the only wise option.

Section 8 of the constitution spells out the conditions to be met before states are created. The requirements are very rigorous but these have not deterred those advocating for more states. The point here is that so many demands have been made such that any careless handling of the issue could result either in a deadlock or in an unparalleled confusion. Last Saturday's edition of the Daily Times quoted Governor Bisi Onabanjo of Ogun State as having said, 'on the whole, the question of state demand has become so ridiculous as it has risen to 50.' The governor's apprehensions are shared by this writer. It is strange that with such apprehensions by a leading member of the UPN, the party could announce that since the constitution had spelt out clearly the criteria for creation of states, there was absolutely no reason for it to attend the State House, Ribadu Road conference.

If I were asked to make a choice, I would say that one of the most remarkable pronouncements on the demand for more states was made by Mr. Alfred Diete Spiff, then Military Governor of Rivers State. Referring to a group calling for the creation of a Port Harcourt State out of his domain, the former governor said something to this effect: 'Some people are so used to agitation that if they have nothing to agitate against they will agitate against their grandmother'. More recently, there was the warning to the legislature purportedly issued by Alhaji Usman Faruk in his capacity as Chairman of the National Movement for the Creation of More States. (NASA).

He warned legislators not to be tardy in the creation of more states, with a suggestion that those found wanting would not be re-elected. It is instructive that Alhaji Usman Faruk's outfit is not known as the National Association of State Agitators

The cumbersome procedure for the creation of more states was designed by and large to distinguish state 'agitators' from state 'creators'. This does not solve all problems associated with the creation of more states. There is first of all, the issue of 'agitators' messing up the procedure to deny the 'creators' from having their way. Take for example, the situation in Plateau State where the Deputy Governor, Alhaji Danladi Yakubu virtually became a political because he championed the cause of the Middle Belt State Movement. The state government tried in vain to make the clamour look foolish but in the end resolved to beat the Middle Belt State supporters at their game. The executive and legislature have now floated a movement for the creation of Nassarawa State.

One of the greatest stumbling blocks is the requirement that a proposal for the creation of a new state must be supported by, among others, two thirds majority of members of the local government council affected. Some would argue that 'local government councils' should be taken to mean democratically elected councils. So far, none of the state governments has been bold enough to test its popularity at the local government level. All have appointed new local government councils. This means, in effect that if indeed the spirit of the constitution has been violated, then there is an impediment in the way of the process of state creation. Somebody will raise the matter pretty soon in the law courts, if our 'litigious propensity' is anything to go by. Related to this is the referendum stipulated in this section. Senate Leader, Dr. Abubakar Olusola Saraki once said that in view of the strict requirements laid down in the constitution, new states may not be created before 1983 elections. Of course the senator was not so much concerned with the constitutional problems as with his constituency in Kwara State, where he has been doing all he can to prevent the creation of Kogi State. The fact that he had ulterior motives for making that statement does not render inoperative the issues he raised. A referendum will be conducted on the basis of an electoral roll which can only be produced by the Federal Electoral Commission. The Electoral Bill has not been passed into law. And with the 1983 elections just near the corner, FEDECO would have too much on its plate.

Constitutional and proceedural problems apart, there is the question of how many states we can conveniently cope with. Since there is no upper limit imposed it could be infered that more and more states should be created until we perhaps reach the point of absolute absurdity, that is, a state for every citizen who desires one. If this were the only reason for calling a meeting of the five political parties then it would have been worthwhile. The brief given to the 17-man committee does not specifically include the question of maximum member of states but there is clearly a need for a consensus on this. I suspect though that the issue of maximum member could come under the sixth item which reads: 'to consider and make recommendations on any other matter relevant to the exercise of creation of new states'.

Assuming a consensus were reached on the number of new states feasible in the light of our rickety economy there remains the matter of speed. There ought to be an agreement among all the legislatures ensuring a speedy deliberation of the bill in the legislature at both national and state level.

In the end, it is a reconciliation of the letter and the spirit of the constitution with the realities of our economy which will help us avoid an impasse.

CSO: 4700/955

MONEY EARMARKED FOR RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 5 Mar 82 p 9

[Article by Niyi Olaguniju]

[Text]

A SUM of 30 billion Naira has been earmarked by the Federal Government to boost the development of railway transportation system in the Fourth National Development Plan.

This was disclosed by the Minister of Transport, Dr. Umaru Dikko in a key note address he delivered at the formal inauguration of the Nigeria Chapter of International Cargo Handling Co-ordination Association (ICHCA) in Lagos on Wednesday.

As part of the programme, a sum of 1.2 billion Naira has been set aside to link Port Harcourt railway lines and Ajaokuta steel city.

He said that the Federal Government had developed ultra-modern airports in fourteen capital cities in the country while the Nigeria Airways had purchased about 25 planes including 6 medium/long haul jets.

"The government has endeavoured to develop and assure the continued and expanding availability of fast, safe and economical services needed in a growing and changing economy", he declared.

The minister said that with the inauguration of the Nigeria chapter of ICHCA, the association would develop 'a strong consulting role' to the government in achieving her objectives in the national transport sector.

He however hoped that the association would present some proposals that would assist his ministry in harmonising the efforts of 'various sectors' that 'have impact on our transportation system.'

In his own address, the chairman of the Nigeria chapter of the association and the General Manager of the Nigeria Ports Authority, Alhaji B.M. Tukur promised that his association would assist the Federal Government in achieving her objectives towards the improvement of the national transport system in the country.

The Nigeria chapter of the association is the first national chapter in Africa.

CSO: 4700/955

ABUJA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT TO OPERATE IN JUNE

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 4 Mar 82 p 16

[Article by Ibrahim Biu]

[Text] THE international airport at Abuja, the new federal capital will go into operation by June this year.

This was disclosed by Alhaji Abubakar Wodi, a member of the Federal Capital Development Authority (FCDA) board, on behalf of the minister in charge of Abuja while briefing Governor Aper Aku of Benue State on Tuesday when the governor visited the project in continuation of his four-day official visit to Niger State.

Alhaji Abubakar said that provision of necessary infrastructures, at the airport would be completed within four months from now.

The airport is capable of handling one million passengers annually.

He told the governor that other projects completed at Abuja included the Jabi Dam which will supply water to the accelerated district of Abuja. The bigger lower Usman Dam will be completed next year he said.

Alhaji Abubakar said that the land use pattern for the first phase of the project has been completed and that work has already started on two out of the six districts at Abuja which will accommodate 25,000 people.

The board member also told the governor that construction of roads within the city, has reached advanced stage.

Governor Aku said he was impressed by the progress so far made at Abuja but appealed to the staff of the FCDA to be more dedicated to work so that the project could be completed within schedule.

Earlier, in his welcome address, the Emir of Suleja, Alhaji Ibrahim Dodo Musa had appealed to the governor to regard interstate visit as an instrument of peace and progress.

The emir also said our politicians should allow democracy to prevail and should not allow tribal interests to becloud their senses of judgment.

Governor Aku was on arrival given a rousing welcome at both Minna and Suleja where hundreds of thousands of Niger State indigenes turned out to welcome him.

The Governor was met at a few kilometres outside Suleja by his Niger State counterpart Alhaji Awwal Ibrahim, his deputy, Alhaji Idris Alhassan, commissioners and officials of NPN.

At the Emir of Minna's Palace, the emir, Alhaji Ahmadu Bahago described the governor as a peace-loving individual and an attractive public officer. The emir called for continued co-operation between Benue and Niger states.

Governor Aku yesterday visited the Shiroro Hydro-electric project and the Chanchaga Clay Bricks project.

He was expected to visit Bida and Kontagora before he proceeds to Sokoto State today.

CSO: 4700/955

PILOTS, FLIG'" ENGINEERS INVOLVED IN STRIKE ACTION

Original Cause Described

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 3 Mar 82 p 13

[Text]

THE Nigerian Airline Pilots and Flight Engineers of the Nigeria Airways have threatened to go on strike from today if the suspension order on one of their counterparts Captain W. Okakpu, is not rescinded.

A statement from the Airline Pilots and Flight Engineers Association of Nigeria, which was signed by its President, Captain Tunde Ashafa, said in Lagos that Captain Okakpu was suspended on February 27 by the deputy managing director with immediate effect and without pay.

According to the statement, Captain Okakpu arrived at the domestic terminal on Saturday, February 27, at 6 a.m. to operate Nigeria Airways Flight WT250 to Enugu.

The statement explained that the flight which was scheduled to take off at 7 a.m. could not take off until 10 a.m. due to lack of fuel at the domestic terminal.

Captain Okakpu was said to have taxied the plane to the international terminal with the boarded passenger to refuel.

At this stage, a passenger on board the aircraft was alleged to have insulted Captain Okakpu as a result of the delay and Captain Okakpu asked the passenger to disembark.

But the statement pointed out that the deputy managing director ordered the captain to take the passenger with others which he claimed was a contravention of the international regulation.

Work-to-Rule Action

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 5 Mar 82 p 9

[Article by Yinka Guedon]

[Excerpt]

As a result of Captain Okapku's alleged suspension by the Deputy Managing Director of the Nigeria Airways' Captain N.O. Nnachi all pilots and flight engineers have embarked on work-to-rule action until further notice.

According to a communique issued at the end of a three-hour meeting on Wednesday, the association said it would not allow the illegal and unilateral action by Captain Nnachi to increase the scope of the present unfavourable labour situation in the country.

However, flights according to the president of the association could not be regular, adding "this will be left to the discretion of the pilots handling particular flights.

The president also explained that it had just discovered that the suspension was unilaterally carried out by Captain Nnachi.

The president added that they rescinded the decision to embark on total strike action because of appeals from the National Assembly, the director of flight operations, the director of field services, chief pilot and controller of industrial relations.

Association Divided

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 5 Mar 82 p 40

[Excerpts]

PILOTS and flight engineers association of Nigeria was divided yesterday over whether its members should work-to-rule.

Most pilots and flight engineers interviewed by the Daily Times said they would like to continue flight operations until the 21-day ultimatum given to the mangement expired.

Then, they may paralyse operations but would adopt constitutional methods in pursuit of their demands, they said.

They also said that they had taken into consideration the hardship that would be encountered by air travellers if they went on a sudden strike.

Meanwhile, flight operations throughout the country were normal yesterday with only four cancellations due to technical faults.

CSO: 4700/950

JOURNALISTS UNION PROTESTS ARREST OF 'THE PUNCH' EDITOR

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 9 Mar 82 p 40

[Article by Odafe Othihiwa]

[Text]

DETECTIVES of Alagbon Close yesterday whisked away the editor of the Punch Newspaper, Mr. Tayo Kehinde.

Four policemen drove into the Punch premises at Onipetesi, Ikeja in a car with registration number BDA 4022E and took him away. The editor was however released yesterday evening.

Meanwhile the Nigerian Union of Journalists (Lagos State) Council has condemned the arrest of Mr. Kehinde.

A statement issued in Lagos yesterday and signed by the chairman, Mr. Tunde Odesanya, said the arrest of the editor "gives journalists in this state and indeed the whole Federation ceuse for grave concern".

The statement added: "the NUJ feels harassed if its members are not allowed to practise their profession under a free atmosphere.

"If the Punch editor has committed any offence he should be prosecuted under the law of the land as provided for under democratic system of government.

"Arrests of journalists by security men can only generate ill-feeling and build up a bad image for the government.

"We appeal to the Federal Government in the name of fair-play and justice to please intervene in this matter by advising the security forces of this country to allow journalists to practise their profession.

Mr. Kehinde should be released or be prosecuted but not brow-beaten with arrests", Mr. Odesanya pleaded.

CSO: 4700/949

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON STUDENT RIOTING

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 3 Mar 82 p 9

[Article by Adebisi Adekunle]

[Text]

THIRTEEN students of the Women Teachers' College (WTC) Birnin Kebbi in Sokoto State have been dismissed and 10 others suspended for their involvement in the recent senior students and teaching staff clash in the school.

This followed a recommendation of the school's Board of Governors to the state Ministry of Education.

The students involved include eight form five students and five form four students.

According to a statement signed by the Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Education, Alhaji Yahaya Abdulkarim stated that the suspended form five students are required to sit for their Grade Two Teachers' examination.

The statement added that the form four students suspended are to report next session to the school authority, adding that they should however repeat the same class.

Those expelled are Maimuna Musa, Larai Ibrahim, Fatima Coker, Matha Kaka, Bayi Sarkin Pawa, Musile Ganiyu Adamu, Ibrahim, Ruth Samuel, Augustine Agwiino, Rakiya Salihu, Lydia Amos, Grace Yohana and Anthonio Asikele.

Those suspended are Hassi Shehu, Fatima Jabbo, Fatima Nagambo, Asibi Aliba, Rabsi Atto, Balaraba Ibrahim, Mary Dominic, Luba Abubakar, Kulu Malami and Sa'a Abdullahi.

The statement directed that the school should be re-opened immediately and all the students must sign an undertaken to be of good behaviour and obey the college rules and regulations before being re-admitted.

The suspended students would also sign an undertaken to be of good behaviour after their suspension, the statement added.

The students had on February 13, this year beat up the principal and the teachers and damaged many school's properties.

CSO: 4700/954

ILLEGAL MARKETS SAID ON INCREASE IN LAGOS

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 8 Mar 82 p 7

[Article by Ayodele Akinkutu and Innocent Eze]

[Text] ONE of the many laws some residents of Lagos break with impunity is that banning street trading. Depending on one's sense of humour, it amuses to watch traders in an unbridled flagrant disregard for constituted authority display their wares right beside signposts with the inscription."
inscription, "STREET TRADING PROHIBITED."

In the early 70s it was a usual sight to see city council officials in an attempt to enforce the law go in hot pursuit of hawkers, in the main; small children. And when some of them are caught, both goods and children are bundled into council vans and driven to the police station.

The violation of this law has grown from strength to strength probably as a gentleman puts it "the law enforcement agents are not displaying enough guts to put an end to the problem." From little pockets of traders in the late 70s, illegal markets have grown to such proportion as to become "a thorn in the flesh."

In the past what you get to buy from hawkers and street traders are mostly provision such as milk, sugar, all kinds of beverages. These days however as if confirming Nigeria's petronaira age, the range of items runs from the 2 kobo a piece Tom-Tom or the Bazooka Joe Chewing gum through children, ladies and gents wears, electrical goods and appliances, motor spare parts and accessories, house hold utensils, imported and locally made shoes, towels and bed sheets.

According to Livinus who sells trousers and shirts at Oshodi, "if you want to have the modern look come to us, satisfaction guaranteed." And Simeon a trader at Tinubu who claimed to have been in the business for three years opined "just name any article you want, we stock them." Consumers who are keen on buying foodstuff or replenishing their soup pots are also welcomed in these markets.

Street trading thrives most in the following areas of Lagos, on the island, Tinubu Square and environs, Marina, Broad Street, the area behind Leventis Stores, Idumota and environs including Ebute Ero, Ereko, Obun Eko, Nnamdi Azikiwe street, Balogun and Martins Street. On the mainland, Yaba bus stop is the nerve centre of street markets and it has incorporated the area along Ojuelegba Road in the vicinity of Tejuosho market. Along Agege Motor Road at Oshodi business is also very brisk.

Traders of both sexes in these markets cut accross the major ethnic groups and age barriers. The Igbos mainly men in their teens and 20s sell in the main imported men and women's wears, shoes and electronics. While the Yoruba women mainly young mothers, some their children straddled to their backs, are selling fresh eggs, fruits, children's dresses, towels, bed sheets, house hold utensils, their men sell empty as well as recorded cassettes, and long-playing records of both indigenous and foreign artistes, wrist watches, handkerchiefs, biro pens.

Hausa men, their goods displayed on small tables sell sweets (Tom Tom and Jenka chewing gum), cigarettes, batteries, mosquito coil, multifarious capsules. In this age of free education some young kids also hawk ice water in plastic buckets using the same plastic cup for all comers.

Customer canvassing in these markets is a beauty in itself. The traders employ various gimmicks with the underlying belief that every passerby is a potential buyer. While some of the traders jingle bells to attract attention coupled with endless chants of "one, one naira; 20, 20 naira, before na 40, 40 naira, now it is 20, 20 naira, "some of the women would startle the unwary with "customer, daddy, brother which one you wan buy?" Loud speakers have also become a feature of these markets.

Things have not always been like this. It could be remembered that shortly before FESTAC 77, Tinubu Square and environs, including the premises of the Central Bank, was a beggars' haven. Today traders have adroitly dislodged the remnants of the beggars' colony that were not officially carted away in the hustle and bustle of the preparation for Festac 77.

Any open space, pavements, sidewalks, shoulders of the roads that are generally pedestrians' thoroughfare have become markets. Carriageways and streets meant to conveniently ease the passage of vehicles are partially taken over by traders during the day. Pedestrians run the high risk of being crushed to death by vehicles in certain areas of Lagos during peak periods.

Anybody walking along John Street in the Ebute Ero area of Lagos or towards the Idumota end of Nnamdi Azikiwe street is between "the devil and the blue sea." While trying to manoeuvre his way through wares that have taken over the sidewalk, he must at the same time be on the look-out for "molue" buses plying these routes. At Yaba bus stop pedestrians and vehicles contest for the right of way.

While Lagos traffic jam with its attendant pressure on the nerves of commuters have been around for sometime, the ever-growing illegal markets have worsened the situation. At Balogun a woman trader Mama Toyin when confronted with the fact that traders and customers darting across the road were responsible for the traffic jams retorted "how can traders cause go-slow? Go-slow has been there all along".

"Molue and Danfo drivers are reputed for their impatience, however when they get to Yaba, Tejuosho market area, Idumota Ereko, Balogun, Martins Street, Nnamdi Azikiwe Street, their break-neck speed is reduced to a crawl. And according to a driver, "if we dont drive like this at Idumota, we would be killing people every second."

Speaking on the issue Mr. R. A. Kuoye a resident of Ilupeju is of the opinion that these illegal markets create a general picture of rowdiness; "these people however have to eat and take care of their responsibilities hence they resort to selling goods anywhere they can find." He believed that it was not unlikely some of these markets harbour hoodlums. And an area that readily comes to mind is the back of Leventis Stores Lagos where no matter what time of the day, a thick smell of Idian hemp pervades the air.

The remedy in his opinion would be for the government to construct more markets where fees are cheap enough for these traders. "For in the words of Titus Emeka a trader at Oshodi," how much do we make from these petty, petty business as to pay all those money the government charges for a stall in the markets.?"

Both the police and local government officials have many times raided these illegal markets. "Just last December," a resident of Oshodi Mr. Tola Alemu witnessed as "gun-totting policemen and officials of a local government raided the Oshodi illegal market; they not only took away a truck-load of goods but left behind in their wake wrecked and burnt display counters." This case of government organs visiting arson on the citizen was explained away by a trader as an act of window-dressing. "Generally these officials leave us in peace, but recently the governor was visiting this area and they wanted to make the whole place look clean."

Mr. Alemu also held the strong belief that these markets were being propped up by government officials. Elucidating further," watched in dismay sometimes last year as a young woman bustling with juvenile blood engage a man in physical combat at Tinubu, the bone of contention was the refusal of the young woman to pay a certain levy imposed on all illegal traders in the area".

In another interview at Tinubu a trader declared with some vehemence "the law banning street trading is man-made while the law that says thou shall not go hungry is a natural law." He was ready to break man's law because "I dont want to steal And the same goes for all these men. The women too don't want to become prostitutes. Brother, it is a simple matter, tell the government to help us by leaving us alone."

A "mere" identity card was not enough to put Alhaji B. A. T. Habib chairman of the Lagos State Market Development Board in the mood to talk to a journalist. "A journalist wishing to speak with me must bring a letter of introduction from his editor." Had the almighty chairman granted this reporter an interview, we would have talked about what normally happens to goods confiscated from illegal markets, and whether there is any project in the pipeline to settle these traders, trying to earn aliving at huge cost to public peace, health and orderliness, somewhere in the immediate future.

CSO: 4700/950

BRIEFS

'ANTI-RIGGING' ELECTION SQUAD--An 'anti-rigging squad' will emerge in 1983 to ensure a free and fair general elections, Dr. K. O. Mbadiwe have announced in Lagos. [as published] Dr. Mbadiwe, who was talking to reporters at the National Assembly, said the squad would strictly watch the UPN and its political allies. In his usual style, he thundered: "Reactionaries can never ascend the political throne of Nigeria. There will be an anti-rigging squad that will introduce anti-rigging measures. They took us by surprise in 1979. Let there be no attempt of any political gangsterism in Nigeria. I will see to it that gangsters in this country don't climb up the throne. I will sweep them out". Dr. Mbadiwe told newsmen that it was a great injustice to pay the Ibos only ₦40 at the end of the civil war irrespective of any amount of money they presented for exchange into Nigerian currency. He asked: "How can you give people ₦40 no matter how much they put in the bank or presented?" [Text] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 4 Mar 82 p 2]

'RADIO LAGOS' SEARCHED--A team of security officers yesterday visited the offices of the Lagos State Broadcasting Corporation. The two-man team demanded for copies of stories broadcast on Radio Lagos during the NEPA crisis. The security men were quoted as saying that they required the scripts to prepare certain reports for the government. It was gathered that the securitymen had a long chat with top officials of Radio Lagos before they left. Attempts to reach the Director of News of Radio Lagos, Mr Abiodun Adeniyi, failed. But a principal editor on duty last night, Mr Tunde Adegoke, confirmed that securitymen visited the radio station earlier in the day. He however, refused to give further details saying, "It is above me." [Text] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 6 Mar 82 p 1]

SUBCOMMITTEES FOR NEW STATES--Two sub-committees have been set up to examine two major areas relating to the creation of new states. They are to be known as Political and Legal sub-committees. The two bodies were set up after six hours of deliberations by the 17-man committee on the creation of new states. A communique issued at the end of the meeting stated that the two sub-committees were expected to submit their reports to the states committee for further deliberation and consideration along with other items on its terms of reference. Two parties, the NPP and the UPN, did not attend the meeting. Both parties had written President Shehu Shagari informing him of their decision not to attend. Present at the meeting were Senate President, Dr. Joseph Wayas. President's adviser on political affairs, Dr.

Chuba Okadigbo, and Alhaji Suleman Audu represented the executive. Senator David Dafinone for NPN, Alhaji Musa Musawa for the PRP; Mr. Basil Ukaegbu (GNPP) were also present. Mr C. J. Ojukwu and Mr Apaga Waba for for House of Representatives, Senator Jafar Manga and Senator Abba Ali represented the senate. [as published] [Text] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 10 Mar 82 p 1]

ISLAMIC BOOK PUBLISHER—The Hudahuda Publishing Company Limited--publishers of Islamic books--was formally launched in Zaria at the weekend. In his keynote address, the chief launcher, Sheikh Abubakar Gumi said one of the objectives of the company was to enhance the publication of Islamic books on various aspects of Islamic religion and bring about unity among muslims. He however urged the management of the company not to rest on its oars. [Text] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 5 Mar 82 p 16]

OSOGBO STEEL COMPANY--The Osogbo Steel Rolling Company will be commissioned by President Shehu Shagari, in October this year. This was disclosed by the Minister for Steel Development, Malam Mamman Ali Makele, while receiving the first consignment of 250 tonnes of billets from Delta Steel Plant, Aladja in Osogbo on Monday. He said that from the 25 tonnes of billet, the Osogbo Steel Rolling Mill would produce iron rods, wires and other materials. According to the minister, by May this year, water would be supplied to the steel plant all-year round from Eko-Eude dam. He disclosed that between July and August this year, NEPA would supply power to the steel plant adding that work on the 33 KV supply line to the rolling mill would be completed soon. He pointed out that work on the railway line to the rolling mill was now in progress adding that transportation to the mill would not be a problem wanted. Malam Makele disclosed that the rolling mill would produce about 210,000 tonnes of materials in a year adding that more than 1,000 workers would be employed by the mill. [By Yinka Dagunduro] [Text] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 5 Mar 82 p 16]

KADUNA WATER SHORTAGE--An acute shortage of water yesterday hit Kaduna town. However the water shortage has not affected the Kaduna South. The Kaduna State Water Board in a statement yesterday said the water shortage was sequel to the breakdown of one of its standby generators at the Kaduna North Waterworks. The board gave the assurance that normal water supply would be restored as soon as repair work on the generator is effected. [Text] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 6 Mar 82 p 1]

BUDGET OMITS NEW STATES--The Director of Budget and Special Adviser to the President on Budget Affairs, Chief J. A. Akinyele has stated that no grant will be provided for any newly-created state under the present revenue allocation formula. Chief Akinyele made this known while exchanging ideas with the new U.S. Ambassador in Nigeria, Mr. Pikering in his office this week. 'There is no provision from the constitution for grants-in-aid for any new state. The present system should stay for sometime', he declared. Chief Akinyele pointed out that the present administration placed high priority on agriculture and 0.999 billion Naira which represented about 13.5 per cent of the capital project has been allocated to the sector which included the development of water resources. Replying, Mr. Pickering [as published] announced that the United States Government had been working very hard to increase the number of American agriculturalists to come to Nigeria to assist in the agricultural development programme of this country. Other subjects discussed during the meeting include external finance for states. [By Niyi Olagunju] [Text] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 6 Mar 82 p 1]

DROUGHT AID SAID DIVERTED--The Kano State Governor, Alhaji Mohammed Abubakar Rimi, has said that out of the 2.5 million Naira given to the drought victims in the state only one million Naira has since been released to the state government. The governor disclosed this while receiving the 1981 hajj report submitted to him by the state Pilgrims Welfare Agency at the Government House, Kano. Governor Rimi alleged that 1.5 million Naira has been withheld by the Federal Government officials in Lagos on the pretext of purchasing tractors and food for the victims. He condemned the allocation of the hajj seats to the Presidential Assistant in the state, Alnaji Lawal Kaita and alleged that the seats were sold at exhorbitant rates to intending pilgrims. Governor Rimi noted that the charter of private aircrafts in the operation cost the Federal Government millions of Naira. He regretted that thousands of intending pilgrims who paid their money through private airlines did not perform the hajj and were not refunded. Alhaji Abubakar Rimi, called on the Federal Government to increase the number of aircrafts for both domestic and international flights. [Text] [Kaduna New NIGERIAN in English 8 Mar 82 p 9]

PARTY REGISTRATION DEADLINE--Political associations interested in being registered as political parties have been asked to apply to the Federal Electoral Commission (FEDECO) for registration. Closing date is Monday, March 21, 1982. A public notice issued by the Executive Secretary of FEDECO, Alhaji S. Barda, yesterday, said the application should be in accordance with the provisions of section 78 to 80 of the Electoral Act of 1977 and section 202 of the constitution. The notice said that applications should be made on form PP1 in the Schedule to the Political Parties (Registration, etc.) (Amendment) Regulation 1978 published at L.N. 60 of 1978 in the supplement to official gazzette No. 51 Vol. 65 of November 16, 1978. It added that the forms were available at FEDECO headquarters. The notice said application forms must be submitted with 10 copies each of the association's constitution and programme. [Text] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 3 Mar 82 p 1]

CSO: 4700/954

PRIME MINISTER BOTHA DEFINES GOALS, PRINCIPLES

Goals Defined

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Mar 82 p 8

[Text]

THE Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, conceded yesterday that it was "hard to match the means to the goals" — and went on to describe in glowing terms his master plan for a confederation of states for South Africa.

Mr Botha said that the objectives of his, and every responsible government, were to attain a better quality of life for all citizens.

But sometimes it was hard to watch "the means to the goals".

He said: "I may know where I want to go, but not how to get there — or there may be several alternative courses from which I must choose one."

Opening the seventh session of the Gazankulu Legislative Assembly at Giyani, Mr Botha said that his government, like that of Gazankulu, aimed at furthering the happiness and well-being, both spiritual and material, of all its people.

And simply, it was his government's aim to improve the quality of life of all population groups because it wished to keep revolution out of South Africa.

"And because we wish to uphold in this land, the principles of civilisation and of Christanity."

Some people would say that this could only be achieved by an authoritarian Marxist order — a dictatorship.

"I for one, have no doubt, however, that such an option would lead to economic instability and to bloodshed.

"Communism does not bring peace and progress. Nowhere in the world has communism improved the actual quality of life of people," said Mr Botha.

A one-man, one-vote system within a unitary state, as advocated by some people, held that all people were equal and denied the existence of minority groups.

Such a system failed to face up to the realities and would result in chaos because it did not take account of the history, character and ideals of the various nations.

Outlining the government's policy of the right to self-determination in a geographic context of the various nations in South Africa, Mr Botha went on to describe the principle of his confederal plan.

He said that the government had committed itself to a policy of consultation and ongoing negotiation.

A confederation of states would recognise not only the right to self-determination within each state, but also the inter-dependence of sovereign states, the need and necessity for co-operation aimed at the furtherance of common objectives.

"A confederation is an association, alliance or union of sovereign independent states, without any super government and formed by treaty for the achievement of specific objectives," said Mr Botha.

Each state would retain its own sovereignty and governmental autonomy, except insofar as it expressly assigned government powers to a central organ.

"Clearly, therefore, the authority of the central organ is, and will, always remain subject to the will of the respective member states.

"Action is co-ordinated, it is true, but no central authority with an independent power base of its own comes into being," said Mr Botha.

Each member state was at liberty to withdraw from any projects or fields of co-operation — a confederation did not act always as a unit, since liaison was voluntary in the first place and of an inter-statal nature in the second.

The various countries would not be bound to the confederation by ceding their internal authority, their right to self-determination, "unless, of course, they have done so of their own accord."

The reason for establishing a confederation was to promote common objectives. A confederation was eminently suited to give substance and meaning to the need for inter-statal co-operation.

Hardly anyone would deny that, in South Africa, co-operation in the economic, social and technological fields was needed and was essential.

"We believe that a confederation of states is in the best interests of Southern Africa, and in the best interests of every inhabitant," he said.

Guiding Principles

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Mar 82 p 2

[Text]

THE Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, last night set out a number of principles on which he was leading the Government towards a constitutional dispensation for Whites, Coloureds, Indians and Blacks.

The first was the protection of the right to self-determination of South Africa's Whites, which was a safeguard for stability, orderly government and progress in Southern Africa.

Second was fair treatment for other population groups and peoples in Southern Africa. Thirdly there was the striving for economic progress and stability without which there was no hope of a secure South Africa.

Mr Botha said he was advancing a Southern Africa which would not subscribe to communism but could take its place in the free world, particularly against the background of the subcontinent's strategic importance and the value of its mineral wealth to the free world.

These principles collectively had to be the guarantee for the preservation of civilised values and standards in Southern Africa, said the Prime Minister. For this the Government would keep fighting and to this it would remain true.

Mr Botha said the falling away, as he put it, of Dr Treurnicht and his followers from the National Party would make no difference to the pace at which he acted because they had never been an obstacle to him.

The Prime Minister said he acted in the light of the threat against South Africa, of the population, economic and other realities with which he had to deal, and the pace at which he moved was determined by these realities. He did not let himself be held back or diverted by subordinate considerations.

Mr Botha said the Treurnicht falling away could have been avoided if those concerned had been willing to abide by majority decisions of party institutions. He did not believe that it was over concepts that they had splintered off.

— Sapa.

CSO: 4700/951

NP SPLIT FINAL, TREURNICHT TO FORM PARTY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Mar 82 p 6

[Editorial]

[Text] THE NATIONAL PARTY split is final. That is the message that comes from weekend developments on both sides.

Dr Treurnicht and his supporters have cleared the way for the formation of a new party.

The new Transvaal leader of the NP, Mr F W de Klerk, has announced that the rebel MPs who are still in the party are to be kicked out of it.

Waterberg and Lichtenberg, where Dr Treurnicht and Dr Ferdi Hartzenberg, former Cabinet Ministers, received overwhelming votes of confidence despite the presence of Mr De Klerk and other Ministers, served notice that the breakaways are assured of strong support in some of the constituencies they represent, and that the battle is not to be dismissed, like one or two Nationalist newspapers have tried to do, with the customary contempt for people who leave the party.

The breakaway to the Right has been in progress ever since Dr Albert Hertzog and Mr Jaap Marais were expelled in 1969, but it never had the stamp of acceptability for dedicated, true-blue Nationalists.

The 200 000 votes which Mr Jaap Marais' Herstigte Nasionale Party received in the last election were not a sign that he was suddenly the new leader for whom conservatives were looking.

Besides the Right-wing "kaffer op sy plek" racialists he had acquired from the start, there were for-the-time-being supporters like public servants griping about their pay, Nationalists opposed to mixing of parks in their areas, and issues like the rises in the cost of essentials that brought him votes.

But for most conservative Nationalists, Mr Jaap Marais was too crude a racialist, too much of a rabble-rousing extremist, to win their support.

If they were to break from the NP, they would need a leader who would have the personal image and political strength of character that would make it easy for them to fall in behind him.

Dr Treurnicht is that kind of man; Mr Jaap Marais never was.

Indeed, like it or not, what has happened is that there is now a defection from the NP of traditionalists — people who still have faith in separate development, who wish to preserve White sovereignty at all costs, and who will not have any truck with Coloured Cabinet Ministers and Coloureds and Indians in healthy or any other power sharing with Whites.

They have a cause, they have a leader, and they will next Saturday have a party.

What we are seeing is a rift that will run right through Afrikanerdom and its institutions — the Broederbond, the Rapportryers, the Afrikaanse Taal en Kultuurvereniging, the teachers, the public servants, the police, the academics, the farmers.

It will not be just a split but a gulf. And the battle will not only be waged between the NP and the Right-wing parties, but within the NP, from grassroots level up.

Since we have believed that Afrikaner unity is essential if the country is to be strong enough to meet and overcome the onslaught against it, we have watched the collapse of this unity with concern.

Others welcome it, however, because they see in the Afrikaner rift an opportunity for a realignment of political forces which will enable the Government, with new allies, to bring about changes in such a form and to such an extent that a new verligte era will dawn for South Africa.

The contrary might also prove likely, namely, that the extent of the revolt against the Government's reformist policies might result in the Government having to take a more careful approach to reform.

It would then not go as far as it intended.

Dr Treurnicht has not been against change, he has insisted all along, but against any diminution of the White man's sovereignty over his affairs.

He may argue about what the Government intends, but in the end he will have to say what he and his party are prepared to do for other races.

He simply cannot be Dr No — as his critics have always called him — for ever. He must present his own platform.

Then, and only then, can he be judged dispassionately. Then, and only then, will we know what Dr Treurnicht and his new party are all about.

CSO: 4700/951

MARAIS: 'TREURNICHT WON'T GET HNP PEOPLE'

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] NOT many members of the Herstigte Nasionale Party are likely to leave the party to support Dr Andries Treurnicht, according to Mr Jaap Marais, leader of the HNP.

"It's all wishful thinking," Mr Marais said in Pretoria yesterday, when he was aked to comment about a report which had appeared in an Afrikaans Sunday newspaper suggesting he had great fears as many of his followers intended leaving him in order to support Dr Andries Treurnicht.

Speaking from his home Mr Marais said he did not have any indications of a significant exodus from the HNP to Dr Treurnicht's proposed Independent National Party.

At this stage Mr Marais did not see eye to eye with Dr Treurnicht on matters of policy. Mr Marais said co-operation between the two parties would only be possible if Dr Treurnicht was willing to accept a policy statement on separate development made by the National Party in 1948.

Mr Marais said the Treurnicht camp was at the moment very much concerned with the concept of the sharing of power that had been reportedly announced by the National Party.

"Dr Treurnicht and his 22 defectors were morally committed to the line taken by the National Party in slowly allowing apartheid to break down in the social and economic spheres. Now that they have their backs to the wall and the breaking down of apartheid in the political field had become a stark reality, they are forced to admit they made an error of judgement," Mr Marais said.

"Their present conduct casts a grave slur on their political integrity. They find themselves in rather an unenviable position of having to account for their actions to the electorate."

Referring to the possibility of a surprise election in May, Mr Marais said he believed the National Party wanted to unseat Dr Treurnicht's followers before they could get a firm foothold in the political arena.

Mr Marais also said the Independent National Party was more concerned about setting up an administrative structure to fight an election than transmitting their message to the electorate.

CSO: 4700/951

DE KLERK TO CLARIFY NP POSITION ON SPLIT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Mar 82 p 2

[Text] CAPE TOWN. — Mr F W de Klerk, leader of the Transvaal National Party yesterday called upon all Nationalists in the Transvaal who are confused by the latest developments within the NP to attend a meeting in the Boksburg City Hall on Wednesday evening, where he will clearly state what the Government's basic attitude is with regard to the developments.

He said in an interview with The Citizen "it is clear the Treurnicht group is moving away from policies which they have supported and defended over the past few years.

"I call upon our supporters to attend Wednesday's Boksburg meeting where I will clarify the conflicting points of difference which are now developing."

Mr De Klerk, referring to the two meetings in Dr Treurnicht's Waterberg constituency and in Dr Ferdi Hartzenberg's were accepted in the two breakaway MPs, said the results had not come as a surprise to him.

"In fact, advance inquiries indicated far poorer results and the outcome is not considered as a defeat.

"It is, however, necessary to prove that the National Party does not hesitate to fearlessly and openly defend its policy and actions.

"It is also important to demonstrate to loyal Nationalists — and there are many who have their doubts about the Treurnicht group — that I and my colleagues in the Transvaal NP executive support them, and will do so in the struggle ahead.

"It has become clear that the Treurnicht group has shamelessly abused the well-intended local discussions to attack the National Party on a broad front, to create wrong impressions, and to organise demonstrations.

"This fact, coupled with the announced intention of the group, necessitates a new approach.

"As a result, I will recommend to the executive on Monday that the party membership of all those who do not abide by head committee decisions be summarily terminated.

"In future they will not be allowed to attend or address any party meetings.

"We will continue with local initiatives to inform committee members and members of the public about the true facts.

"In addition, we will prevent, in an orderly way, anyone misusing National Party committees in support of the Treurnicht group.

"The head committee's gracious approach towards a possible reconciliation has been trodden underfoot and is being abused by the Treurnicht group," Mr De Klerk said.

CSO: 4700/951

GENERAL MALAN CLAIMS SWAPO USES COUNTRY'S UNIFORMS FOR TERRORISM

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Mar 82 p 4

[Text] THE Defence Force was investigating allegations by a Kavango chief, a general dealer and a headmaster that two innocent members of the local population were shot by security forces on or about February 22 and 23 this year, the Minister of Defence, General Magnus Malan, said yesterday.

Replying to a question by Mr Harry Schwarz (PFP, Yeoville), Gen Malan said it was also alleged that the chief was intimidated by having mortar fire aimed at his kraal and by being threatened with a firearm to make women available for immoral purposes. Further, it was said that detainess were assaulted and maltreated and detained in a corrugated iron building of limited size.

He could not say when the investigation would be completed because this depended on the availability of witnesses who were spread over a wide area. Some were difficult to contact.

Gen Malan said that, in a revolutionary onslaught, such as the one that was being waged against South West Africa and South Africa, one of the most important weapons of the enemy was propaganda in which an important element was discrediting the security forces.

"A number of examples of this have appeared in the media recently.

"Information has also been received that, in a certain training camp in central Angola, Swapo terrorists are being trained and equipped with SA Defence Force uniforms to commit acts of sabotage and intimidation among the local population with the express purpose of bringing the Black elements of the SWA territorial force into discredit among their own people.

"The Defence Force is involved in SWA in a situation where force has to be applied to counter the armed attacks from across the border in order to protect the local population. Acts of violence may unfortunately be perpertrated by individuals against the local population.

"In an effort to eliminate any doubt with regard to the bona fides of the Defence Force in this regard, channels of communication have been established along which the local population can bring any alleged atrocities to the attention of the SWA Territorial Force.

"Local leaders assured the chief of the Defence Force during a recent meeting in Windhoek that these measures were functioning effectively.

"Among these leaders was Mr Peter Kalangula of Owambo, where the biggest anti-insurgency operations take place.

"In addition the chief of the Defence Force instructed, during the same visit, that the system of formal meetings between local leaders and the Defence Force headquarters across the whole operational area, should take place at regular intervals to discuss matters pertaining to relations.

"These channels of communication are mainly applicable to the local population, but any organisation, or person, is free to approach me, the Chief of the Defence Force, the Chief of the Army, the General Officer Commanding SWA Territory Force or any of his local commanders at any time in this regard." — Sapa.

CSO: 4700/951

NATION TO BLAME FOR POOR IMAGE SAYS SPORTS CHIEF

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Mar 82 p 11

[Article by Ivor Crews]

[Text] SOUTH AFRICA has no-one but itself to blame for its unfavourable image abroad, said Mr Tommie Campbell, chairman of the International Fairness in Sport movement at a press conference at Jan Smuts Airport yesterday.

"You have done nothing for your image abroad. People overseas don't know about the changes in sport over here, but they certainly know all about apartheid.

"What you need is the people to sell the image of freedom in sport overseas. Absolutely nothing is being done to enhance South Africa's sporting image abroad.

"The only people who are doing anything about it are men like Dr Danie Craven and Gary Player."

Mr Campbell is visiting South Africa to attend a dinner for the Pro-Nutro Sporting Greats which will be held at the Wanderers on Tuesday night.

He will also be meeting sports officials and administrators to promote Freedom in Sport.

Commenting on the current tour of South Africa by the SAB English side, Mr Campbell said: "It is a good thing for cricket. While my movement had nothing to do with the tour, we defend the right of an individual sportsman to play where and when he likes to earn a living."

There had been talk of the White and Black cricketing nations becoming polarised. "If that happens, it will be a tragedy for cricket.

"The Third World countries which put out the blacklist have the most to lose, as they will be missing out seeing some of the best cricketers in the world.

"With the English side now playing in your country, the eyes of the world are focused on South African cricket. Some of your players who are virtually unknown overseas will now come under the spotlight, and that can only be good for the game here.

"The public here and overseas are sick to the teeth of politics in sport. Take the Olympic Games. The partial boycott of the games by some countries had no effect on Russia's policy."

According to British law, there was nothing the British Government could do to prevent the MCC from touring South Africa if they wished to do so.

"The best way for South Africa to gain readmittance to the ICC is to convince the world of the changes that have been made over here.

"The overseas Press are anti-South African and anti-aparthied. The average man in the street hears only about apartheid, and nothing about the good that is being done for sport here.

"One of the biggest problems is that the decision-makers in world cricket are afraid to commit themselves and are hiding behind politics.

CSO: 4700/951

SEARCH FOR WHITES INVOLVED IN TERRORIST ATTACK ALLEGED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] A NEWSPAPER report stating that three White terrorists who had allegedly attacked the military base at Voortrekkerhoogte last August were sought by police in England could not be confirmed in Pretoria yesterday.

A police spokesman told The Citizen yesterday that the newspaper in which the report appeared, did not identify its sources and the police had no knowledge of the so-called man hunt.

According to the report, three White men used a powerful Russian-built rocket launcher in the attack and the police were hard on the heels of the men who had fled South Africa shortly afterwards.

Sources in Britain and South Africa were alleged to have confirmed that Pretoria had made a formal request to the British Government for the men to be returned to South Africa to stand trial.

The three had reportedly lived together in a house in Pretoria for a short while before they launched the attack on Voortrekkerhoogte.

"They left the country a few days after the attack on board a scheduled commercial flight," the report said.

Responsibility for the attack was claimed at the time by a spokesman of the banned African National Congress in Dar-es-Salaam. It was reported that Russian-manufactured 122 mm rockets were used.

A rocket launcher was later found by the police. The rockets were fired from Laudium, the Indian residential area near Voortrekkerhoogte.

CSO: 4700/951

BERGER, PILLAY PRISON SENTENCES REDUCED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Mar 82 p 2

[Text] GRAHAMSTOWN. — A Rhodes University lecturer, Guy Berger and a student of journalism, Devandiren Pillay had their effective prison sentences cut by half in the Grahamstown Supreme Court yesterday, when judgement was handed down in their appeal.

Berger, (25), will now serve two years instead of four on two counts under the Internal Security Act -membership of the banned African National Congress and activities which furthered its interest.

Pillays (21), will serve an effective one year instead of two for the same offences. As he and Berger were sentenced in Port Elizabeth last March, this means Pillay will be out of jail later this month.

At their regional court trial both Berger and Tillay were sentenced to three years' jail, with one year suspended, on the membership count. For activities which furthered the direct or indirect interests of the ANC, Berger was sentenced to four years' imprisonment, of which two years were suspended, and Pillay to two years with one suspended.

In the case of Berger, the magistrate ordered the sentences to run consecutively while in Pillay's case, they ran concurrently.

About 30 Rhodes students and lecturers were in court to hear part of the appeal judgment read. In it, Mr Justice Kannemeyer overruled the regional court magistrate by finding that in Berger's case the effective sentences on both counts should run concurrently.

He said the second count, dealing with ANC-associated activities, was the substantive one which had led to the presumption of ANC membership for which the two men had been convicted on the first first count.

This conviction flowed from acts which were among those admitted under count two and the State Advocate, Mr W L Kingsley, had correctly conceded that the sentences should run concurrently be added.

However, Mr Justice Kannemeyer said he did not consider that the magistrate was correct in imposing a sentence on Berger which was twice as heavy as Pillay's since Pillay had distributed more literature to others than had Berger and he had also made available a tape-recording of the ANC president Oliver Tambo's New Year message to some eight people.

Bearing in mind that both men had been "deprived of their liberty" for approximately seven months before their trial he considered an effective two-year sentence for Berger and one year for Pillay appropriate.

Both men had their sentences for ANC membership changed to 18 months' imprisonment, with six months suspended. On the activities count Berger was sentenced to three years with one year suspended. These would run concurrently, the judge rules. — Sapa

CSO: 4700/951

HIJACK TRIAL: COURT MAY GET 'IN CAMERA' PLEA

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Tim Clarke in Durban]

[Text] Sensitive evidence which will be led in the trial of 43 White men facing charges under the Civil Aviation Offences Act in the Pietermaritzburg Supreme Court, might lead to several applications being made for evidence being held in camera, both by the defence and the State.

Mr Michael Hannon, who is appearing for 25 of the accused in the trial, said at the closure of proceedings on Friday that he might apply to the acting Judge President of Natal, Mr Justice Neville James, for some of the evidence to be held in camera.

Mr Hannon, who was working on the case over the weekend, declined to go further than this when approached.

Similarly, The Citizen learned in Pietermaritzburg last week, that the State may also lodge application at a later state for evidence to be led in camera.

The Citizen learned that the application for evidence to be heard in camera, does not apply to the evidence given by Lt Col Jacobus Mouton who gave evidence for the State on Friday.

Col Mouton is to be cross-examined by the defence on Monday, when the trial enters its fifth day in the Supreme Court Pietermaritzburg.

A report appearing in a Natal newspaper that the captain and crew of the Air India Boeing involved in the alleged hijack would not be coming to South Africa to give evidence, was put to Mr Cecil Rees, the Attorney-General of Natal, but Mr Rees declined to comment.

If the captain and crew of the aircraft, who constitute 14 witnesses in all, do not come, the length of the trial could be shortened considerably.

It was learned yesterday that two members from the International Commission of Jurists will attend the trial next week as observers. Also, four members from the Legal Rights Society, a little-known movement in the US, will attend the trial.

A spokesman for the group, Mr Arnold Right of Seattle told The Citizen yesterday that the case had aroused tremendous interest in the United States. He said he and his three associates would be reporting back on proceedings to the American Bar Council and also to the Civil Rights League.

CSO: 4700/951

INCREASE IN ISCOR SALES REPORTED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Mar 82 p 10

[Text] ISCOR's net sales have shot up by 1 486 percent over the past 20 years, representing an increase of R124-million to R1 907-million.

These statistics were made known yesterday by Mr Hendrik Samuels, chairman of Iscor's pension fund. He was speaking at the occasion of the presentation of 106 long-service awards to employees who had been with the company for between 20 and 40 years.

Breaking down these figures Mr Samuels said that this represented a net profit increase since the 1981/2 year of 133 percent — from R37-million to R83-million — before the deduction of tax.

Tribute

In paying tribute to the long-service award recipients Mr Samuels said that Iscor's growth was largely due to its dedicated employees who didn't leave the corporation after undergoing their basic training.

"No country can develop to its full potential unless its iron and steel industry had developed properly," said Mr Samuels quoting the late Prime Minister of South Africa, Gen J B M Hertzog.

He added that the corporation had not only made a major contribution in the overall development of the country, but had also played a prime roll towards leading the republic to independence as far as imports were concerned.

CSO: 4700/951

BRIEFS

TRANSKEI ATTRACTS INDUSTRY--Umtata.--The Transkei Government has taken a major step in its efforts to attract more industries with the announcement that industrialists may now buy and own land in the industrial areas of Transkei. This is a major shift from Transkei Government policy, which previously allowed industrialists only leasehold ownership. Mr Sonny Tarr, managing director of the Transkei Development Corporation, who made the announcement on behalf of Transkei's Prime Minister, Chief George Matanzima, said: "This is an important step in the right direction. The Transkei Government deserves all the credit for this decision. This change in policy, together with the imminent announcement by the South African Government of the proposed new and more attractive concessions to be offered to industrialists moving to the national states, will certainly add greater impetus to the attraction of more industries to Transkei than in the past, particularly in view of the fact that Transkei is being included in the highest priority development region." He said this meant that industrialists investing in Transkei could now look forward to capital growth appreciation on their investments. It also meant that the corporation could dispose of industrial buildings and recycle the money for further development. He said buildings built in 1975 had virtually doubled in value. Funds from the money market could now be used for development, as industrialists could borrow money against the value of the land to purchase property and buildings. This would give industrialists total security of tenure. Mr Tarr said this would also relieve the corporation and Transkei Government of the burden of financing industrial development. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 5 Mar 82 p 20]

SASOL COSTS--The latest estimated total cost of Sasol II and Sasol III was R5 775,1-million, the Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs, Mr F W De Klerk, said. Replying to a question by Mr Theo Aronson (NP Nominated), he said the cost of Sasol II was R2 449,1-million and Sasol III, expected to be complete in 1984/85, R3 276-million. Sasol II would employ about 7 800 people and Sasol III, which received certain auxiliary services from Sasol II, about 3 400. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Mar 82 p 4]

LIGHT OIL--Discoveries of light oil, producing 304 cubic metres a day, were made last year in a number of holes drilled in the sea bed south of Mossel Bay, the Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs, Mr F W De Klerk, said.

Replying to a question by Mr John Malcomess (PFP Port Elizabeth Central), Mr De Klerk said gas producing 2,75 million cubic metres had also been found. Prospecting for oil at sea in 1981 had cost R65,28-million. Nothing was spent on searching for oil on land. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Mar 82 p 4]

SQUATTERS' HUNGER STRIKE--Cape Town.--Gaunt and drawn with hunger and exhaustion, the 56 squatters in St George's Cathedral yesterday reiterated their stand: "We will remain here until we die, or until Dr Koornhof tells us we can legally remain in Cape Town." One woman, four months' pregnant and known only as Nozibele, has been taken away suffering from unscheduled labour pains and bleeding as the fast went into its third day. Another woman, five months' pregnant, has refused to take the food which could mean life for her unborn child. "If the child must be sacrificed so all of us can live like people here, then let it die," she said.--Sapa. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Mar 82 p 11]

CSO: 4700/951

RESIGNED 'TIMES' EDITOR DEPLORES GOVERNMENT PRESS OWNERSHIP

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 2 Mar 82 p 10

[Text] Ugandan journalist, Mukotani Rugyendo who resigned his post as Editor-In-Chief of the government-owned UGANDA TIMES in Kampala last December told me how publicity-seeking politicians plagued him out of his job.

"Editing a newspaper in the present situation in Uganda is difficult," the 32-year old journalist told me when he called at Nation House. "It's terrible when the paper is owned by the government.

"With a government newspaper, everybody who's somebody thinks they must have a column. When someone attends an insignificant up-country rally, he expects to read it in the newspaper the next morning. You find you have to appease people by giving them a paragraph or two--very much against what you feel as a journalist.

"And that's not the only trouble. Everyone in power regards the newspaper as a dumping ground for his brothers, sisters, cousins and what-have-you. In the end, you have a small paper which is over-established and with the wrong kind of staff."

Mukotani sat on the hot seat for only nine months. His predecessor had been sacked in hardly more than a year.

"That's why there are no journalists in Uganda who want to work in the paper any more," says Mukotani. The journalists have instead decided to start their own papers to compete with the UGANDA TIMES. And there are now not less than 30 daily, weekly, fortnightly and monthly newspapers in that tiny country.

But all of them trail far behind the UGANDA TIMES in circulation, which at its best reaches some 30,000 copies.

Mukotani resigned when the dichotomy between his feelings as a professional and the expectations of the politicians reached an unbearable point.

"Just out of nowhere, people started scaring me out of my job, threatening my life. Some were saying they wanted me imprisoned. But I was impeccable--as clean as a blank slate.

"But friends came to me and said from what they had heard, they didn't think it was wise for me to continue working at the paper. That's when I quit.

"There's no way a government newspaper can be free. Journalism should be allowed to develop on its own--editorial and advertising supporting each other."

CSO: 4700/945

BRIEFS

AUSTRALIAN ARMY TRAINING--Australia will contribute 4 people to a 36-member commonwealth military team which has been sent to assist in training the Ugandan army. A spokesman for the commonwealth secretariat in London said Australia would also donate $50,000 to the project. The commonwealth secretary general, Mr Ramphal, said the team was a collective commonwealth response to a request from the Ugandan Government made during the heads of government meeting in Melbourne last October. [Text] [BK061255 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 1230 GMT 6 Mar 82]

CSO: 4700/944

KAUNDA ANNOUNCES FORMATION OF FOUR COMPANIES TO REVAMP ECONOMY

Details of Announcement

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 13 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

PRESIDENT Kaunda yesterday announced the formation of four companies in the continued Party and Government efforts to revamp the economy and reduce corruption in parastatals.

The companies are the Zambia National Tender Board, the Zambia National Audit Services, the Zambia National Forwarding and Clearing Company, and the Legal Service Corporation.

The Zambia National Tender Board, which will stamp out corruption will need legislation while the other three companies would start functioning immediately.

Dr Kaunda announced the formation of "new regime of companies" at an early working State House Press conference and said they were intended to institute a system of checks and balances in the parastatal sector; afford the Party and its Government necessary information over its assets; and introduce economies in the operation of the companies concerned.

He appointed Supreme Court judge Mr Justice Brendan Cullinan as head of the Legal Services Corporation which would provide legal services to Zimco and all parastatal companies.

It is expected that the new companies would save the country millions of Kwacha.

Dr Kaunda recalled how one of the forwarding companies in Zambia tried to swindle the Party and its Government of K5 million in foreign exchange.

"A few years ago, this forwarding and clearing company overcharged us to the tune of K5 million and had it not been for vigilant Party militants at places of work we were going to lose.

"At another time, another company nearly overcharged us K2 million," he said.

This was the ugliest side of capitalism. "How do you rob a poor country like Zambia of K5 million in foreign exchange?"

The Zambia National Tender Board would replace all existing facilities for tender now serving Party and its Government and all parastatal organisations including copper mining companies.

There would be a semi-autonomous divisional tender board for the mining sector and other parastatal organisations.

The company would be responsible for the supervision, regulation and coordination of the functions of the divisional tender boards.

This arrangement would ensure that buying for all goods required by institutions were made from the most economical sources available.

The President said the Party and its Government could no longer accept the existing practices where some institutions in the country bought their requirements at double the cost at which other organisations obtained the same items.

The tender board company would be the principal and authoritative source of information on the supply of commodities for Zambia.

Dr Kaunda said he would like Prime Minister Mundia to be chairman of the tender board company to direct operations.

He regretted a situation where a company or parastatal firm left one or two persons to decide on its requirements.

"It has now been felt that Party committees at work, trade unions and management would choose one or two representatives each who would sit together and decide where to get requirements for their firm."

This decision to let one or two people to get requirements for a firm had introduced an element of corruption.

The Zambia National Forwarding and Clearing Company would be concerned with foreign trade.

The formation of this organisation was intended to help the Government and parastatal organisations take charge of their purchases at source.

Legal services

The company would choose routes by which goods were to be imported into the country bearing in mind the need to use the most economic routes.

Dr Kaunda said the decision to establish the Legal Services Corporation was taken by the Party and its Government some time back.

"The conditions are now efficacious for this decision to be implemented."

The firm would provide legal services to Zimco and all parastatal organisations at the normal fees charged by practitioners.

It is expected that considerable savings would result to the companies concerned.

Another company, the Zambia National Audit Services, would carry out audit work for the Zimco group of companies.

The President said the company would operate like an ordinary firm of auditors charging normal audit fees.

The Zambia National Audit Services would act as a "watch dog" for the Government and it is expected that substantial savings would be made on audit expenses by the companies concerned and that the service would provide facilities for the training of Zambians in this type of work.

There would be cooperation between the auditor-general, the Zambia National Audit Services and the parliamentary select committee on parastatal bodies.

Replying to a question, Dr Kaunda said most companies under Zimco were doing well and had recovered except in some areas like agriculture, transportation and mining.

Very soon the two mining companies, Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines (NCCM) and Roan Consolidated Mines (RCM) would be merged.

He thanked all those who had cooperated including the minority shareholders, the Party and its Government and the two mining companies in seeing that the merger was effected before the end of this year.

Companies Must 'Operate on Business Lines'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 13 Mar 82 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] THE formation of the four new companies which were announced by President Kaunda yesterday is most welcome because for a long time now the Party and its Government has been plundered through corruption, overcharging for services rendered and many other malpractices

But we hasten to caution that the success of the companies lies in how they will be run.

As President Kaunda rightly pointed out when he was asked whether loss-making parastatals would be scrapped, it isn't the policy in setting up public organisations that is wrong but "poor management and wrong attitudes" by the people running them.

Every effort must therefore be made to consolidate limping companies like UBZ, Zambia Airways, Namboard, Zambia Sugar, et cetera, but not to liquidate them.

If it is change of management, infusion of more funds or availability of raw materials that is required let's go for that problem and remove it to enable the particular parastatal to operate normally.

The newly formed companies will need a similar atmosphere if they have to be watchdogs with the real teeth to bite and institute "checks and balances" in the parastatal sector.

Each one is vital in its own right. Some people entrusted with buying goods for the Government are rich today because of "commissions" they obtained on contracts they signed without regard to the loss to the nation.

There is a voluminous catalogue of cases in which Zambia has been milked out of millions of Kwacha through dubious contracts both at home and abroad.

If the ZNTB is going to screen all tenders even for hospitals and schools there is likelihood that the Government will make a saving.

The example cited by President Kaunda that one clearing company charged the State K5 million one day and claimed K2 million the next day shows how the nation is being robbed.

Ask any importer and he is bound to confirm that clearing charges in Zambia are not only staggering but "killing".

Anybody who has sought the services of a legal practitioner, especially in a civil suit, will tell you that he really coughed up. No wonder many of our lawyers (some of them who have barely left university) rush into private practice. There is money there.

It is our hope therefore that the Government will regulate legal costs and not allow its Legal Service Corporation jump on the bandwagon and exploit the Zimco companies whose cases it will handle.

At the moment these companies are paying heavily to solicitors even for straightforward cases like failing to display prices or defaulting on Zambia National Provident Fund payments.

The corporation will advise managements to avoid certain things which lead them into unnecessary litigation and paying huge sums in costs.

The Industrial Relations Court handles more cases from parastatals than private companies because some managements ignore simple and basic rules of procedure. They even break agreements with trade unions.

The setting up of the Zambia National Audit Services is likely to ease the strain on the auditor-general's office which is crying for qualified manpower.

The auditor-general has done a commendable job since the Public Audit Act became effective in 1980. Misdeeds and malpractices in parastatal companies have become known because of his critical eye. We hope the new organisation will do the same if not better.

The President stressed that the four companies should operate on business lines. That is crucial if they have to compete with private enterprise in offering quality services and making genuine profit for the State.

So let them get off the ground and stand on their own feet; they should not become liabilities like many of their sisters in the parastatal sector.

CSO: 4700/968

MINISTER SAYS GOVERNMENT TO START TEACHING OF SOCIALISM IN SCHOOLS

'Sensitive' Issue

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 12 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

THE Government is to introduce the teaching of socialism in schools, Minister of Education and Culture Mr Frederick Hapunda confirmed in Lusaka yesterday.

But this should not be seen as a move to stop the teaching of religion in schools, the minister said.

Many people viewed the matter as a "very sensitive one" and until the Government made a policy statement he was not prepared to discuss the issue in detail, he said in an interview.

But some people have got wind of the Government plans and were concerned about the developments.

Opposition of Religious Groups

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 14 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

PLANS by the Government to introduce the teaching of socialism in schools have provoked strong opposition from religious groups including the National Council of Catholic Women.

The move has been interpreted as part of a plot by the Party and its Government to suppress religious freedom in Zambia.

Yesterday Minister of Education and Culture Mr Frederick Hapunda did not turn up at a meeting convened by the Zambia Association of Religious Teachers (Zaret) and the Catholic women at the Evelyn Hone College.

The meeting was held in the wake of confirmation by Mr Hapunda on Thursday that the ministry would soon introduce the teaching of socialism in all schools.

A spokesman for the meeting said although the minister had been summoned in "good time to prepare for the meeting" he had sent a message that he was unable to come "due to unforeseen circumstances."

Despite the minister's absence the meeting went ahead and criticised Government plans to implement the teaching of socialism in schools. According to the participants socialism and Christianity were contradictory and could not go together.

Referring to the minister's absence, a spokesman said at the meeting "we had expected the minister to address us today regarding Government policy on socialism, but unfortunately, he is unable to come because of unforeseen circumstances.

Representatives had gone to Mr Hapunda's office to discuss with him the need to "clarify" the matter because it hinged on the Party and its Government's policy.

Among some of the issues raised during the meeting in Mr Hapunda's office, said the spokesman, was why the Government believed "Christianity hampered development."

CSO: 4700/968

ZULU SAYS ZAMBIA-ZAIRE EMERGENCY MEETING SETTLED MOST PROBLEMS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt] ZAMBIA has agreed to compensate families of three Zairean soldiers killed during border skirmishes at Sakania last month, it has been learnt.

A highly placed source said at Kasumbalesa border that Zambia agreed to atone families of victims of the border clash and Zaire would pay for wounded Zambians and their impounded essential commodities.

Leader of the Zambian delegation, Copperbelt police chief Mr Julius Zulu said the emergency meeting of the Zambia/Zaire joint Permanent commission settled most of last month's problems adding that a programme of action would soon be launched to straighten up things.

He declined to give details of the meeting saying he had to brief the provincial Member of the Central Committee Mr Alex Shapi before releasing details to the Press.

But according to the source another key issue of removing troops from the border areas ended in deadlock.

The source said both sides agreed to many important issues that would bring the two countries closer than ever before.

The delegation was composed of Mr Zulu, regional immigration officer Mr Felix Lisulo, Copperbelt brigade commander Colonel, Zambia Army Martin Mulopa, chief Special general Branch officer for Copperbelt Mr Mulonda Mulonda and Zambia deputy counsul-general in Lubumbashi Mr Daniel Mulima.

Welcoming the delegation at the border was Chililabombwe district governor Mr Bonaventure Lubilo and police officer in charge Mr Jackson Mengo.

CSO: 4700/968

TANZANIA, ZAMBIA SIGN TREATY ESTABLISHING COOPERATION BODY

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 14 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

TANZANIA and Zambia yesterday signed a treaty establishing a joint permanent commission of cooperation.

Presidents Kaunda and Julius Nyerere signed the treaty at State House in Lusaka.

Dr Nyerere flew back home yesterday after a two-day talks with his counterpart which centred on bilateral relations and matters of mutual interest, especially those relating to the Tazara's operations.

A joint communique issued after their talks said the two leaders examined in detail the operation of Tazara and matters affecting the port of Dar es Salaam, Zambia Railways and payment procedures.

The two presidents agreed on various measures to improve operations of joint institutions. No details were released.

They also explored the means of expanding the scope of their cooperation and exchanged views on the political, economic and social cooperation between Dar and Lusaka.

The communique said the commission would be responsible among others for planning and implementation of bilateral programmes of cooperation.

"It would prepare studies and investigation leading to the determination of the most appropriate form of cooperation especially in economic development, trade relations, markets and marketing arrangements and other fields."

As regards regional cooperation in Eastern and Southern Africa, the two leaders reaffirmed their commitments to the aims and principles of the Southern African Development Coordination Conference (SADCC) objectives.

Presidents Kaunda and Nyerere reiterated their desire to continue to hold regular consultations on issues of mutual interest.

CSO: 4700/968

TALKS WITH TANZANIA TO SOLVE TAZARA OPERATIONAL PROBLEMS UNDERWAY

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 13 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] CRUCIAL bilateral talks aimed at solving Tazara operational problems got underway at State House last night.

Presidents Kaunda and Julius Nyerere of Tanzania both expressed the need for intensified bilateral co-operation in order to strengthen relations.

Welcoming his counterpart, Dr Kaunda said it was time the two countries concentrated on development now that most of the neighbouring countries were free.

The President praised Dr Nyerere and the Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM) party for helping Zambia at a time when the Ian Smith regime closed the southern route.

I reply, Dr Nyerere expressed concern at the problems that have beset Tazara and hoped the two countries would work together to resolve them.

He praised Dr Kaunda and Zambia for the uncompromising stand on the liberation struggle in this region, adding that no country in Africa had sacrificed so much as Zambia.

This meeting is a follow up to one held at Mbala in January and will culminate in the signing of a Joint Permanent Commission.

Dr Nyerere, who arrived yesterday leading a 36-man delegation, was met at the Lusaka International Airport by Dr Kaunda, Party Secretary-General Humphrey Mulemba, Prime Minister Nalumino Mundia, Secretary of State for Defence and Security Grey Zulu, Central Committee members, ministers and other Party and Government officials.

CSO: 4700/968

GOVERNMENT TO SET UP YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PLACEMENT BODY

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 13 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

THE Government is to set up a Youth Employment Placement Body to help unemployed youths to find jobs, Youth and Sports Minister, General Kingsley Chinkuli told Parliament yesterday.

Winding up debate on his ministry's estimates, Gen. Chinkuli said the main function of such a body would be to place graduates in suitable employment in consultation with labour market agencies.

But, he said for such a body to succeed, there was need to carry out a national survey of manpower requirements in various economic, socio-economic and industrial sectors to determine the available job opportunities.

He said the number of unemployed youths had reaches a staggering 2,264,203 compared to 1,087,900 youths employed in the formal sector.

Of the unemployed, 1,326,897 are still in institutions of learning, the minister said.

Describing this situation as "serious," Gen. Chinkuli said his ministry would continue to identify workable strategies that could increase youth occupation in gainful activities.

CSO: 4700/968

GOVERNMENT TO ALLEVIATE FAMINE IN SOUTHERN PROVINCE IF NEED ARISES

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 13 Mar 82 p 3

[Text]

THE government will take measures to alleviate famine in drought stricken parts of the Southern Province if need arises, provincial Central Committee member, Mr Mungoni Liso said yesterday.

Mr Liso said district councils have been instructed to monitor the food situation and submit a detailed report before a possible food relief operation could be put into motion.

Although the situation was not very serious, he said areas like Gwembe, Namwala and certain parts of Kalomo could face serious food problem.

"We have however, asked district governors not to raise the people's hopes that the government will take food to their door steps but that food will be made available at central points in areas when the situation is bad," he said.

Persistent reports of a looming famine have reached the provincial headquarters and several chiefs have urged the Party and its Government to take measures to avert starvation.

Chief Moomba, whose area borders with Sesheke in Western Province said recently that his people were running out of food because of the severe drought that had hit his area.

Provincial Permanent Secretary, Mr Edward Himunyanga confirmed last week that some parts of the province would face famine this year and that his office was waiting for reports from affected areas to prepare for a fight against hunger.

CSO: 4700/968

ARCHBISHOP ATTACKS PRESENT EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt] Archbishop Emmanuel Milingo has attacked the present educational system because it stresses "white-collar" jobs forcing the youth to shun manual work.

Speaking during a Youth Sunday service at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross in Lusaka, he called on education planners to check the present system which was a slur on the nation.

"People abroad from whom we borrow money to finance our educational programmes say we produce lazy intellectuals who dislike manual work," Archbishop Milingo said in his speech.

President Kaunda, his wife Betty, Party Secretary-General Mulemba, Prime Minister Mundia and Secretary of State for Defence and Security Zulu were among hundreds of people who attended the service.

"The fact that many educated youths cannot find jobs is evidence that we are missing something in our education."

Archbishop Milingo added that the prevailing attitude of educated youths, clearly showed that they had a misguided evaluation of themselves and their role in society.

Building

They were so money-minded that what counted on completion of their studies were the "Ministry of Finance and the Bank of Zambia," he said.

While the two institutions had their importance, they were mere treasuries and could, therefore, not be considered as prime elements in national building.

The monies on which the two institutions had responsibility, were generated from production, hence the need for emphasis on the productive sectors.

"I believe that the youth should first be taught the need for productivity and that productivity is not only in the office, but in the initiative from individuals who can embark on self-employment schemes.

"The fact that we have so many Form Five school leavers who are educated above an average youth, and to believe that they are still unable to do something in their life and that they only know the Ministry of Finance and the Bank of Zambia as the life-blood of this country, shows we are missing something."

The dislike for manual work by the Zambian youth was slowly becoming clear to other nations and it was putting the country's reputation into disrepute.

The Roman Catholic Archbishop made a passionate plea to the youth to help transform the country and challenged them to think of ways in which they would contribute to the nation's welfare.

He said as the youth embarked on different projects this week in observance of the Youth Week, they should be encouraged by the Party.

CSO: 4700/968

BANK OF ZAMBIA ISSUES QUARTERLY REPORT FOR JUNE 1981

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Mar 82 p 2

[Text]

THE Bank of Zambia total assets and liabilities stood at K1,141.5 million in June last year, reflecting a rise of K82 million or 7.7 per cent over the previous quarter.

But during the period Zambia's total primary liquidity declined by K23.3 million as against increases of K14.6 million and K74.8 million in the corresponding quarter of 1980 and in the first quarter of 1981.

The increase in the bank's assets was accounted for by nearly all the items except advances to the Government which remained at K178.2 million.

This is said in the Bank of Zambia quarterly financial report for June 1981 which says on the annual basis treasury bills held by the State bank rose by K223.4 million or 44.5 per cent from June 1980.

This development occurred mainly because of a sharp fall in receipts from traditional sources of Government finances such as mineral revenue, foreign trade and domestic taxes, unaccompaied by a similar decline in expenditure.

"The Bank of Zambia's foreign exchange holdings increased by K6.9 million to K53.3 million during the quarter under review. The rise was solely because of increased Bank of Zambia holding of convertable currencies which amounted to K44.5 million this quarter," it says.

Of the other bank foreign exchange assets, gold remained unchanged at K8.4 million whereas Special Drawing Rights (SDR) fell from K0.7 million in the last quarter to K0.4 million.

The rise in Bank of Zambia liabilities of K82 million was accounted for by other deposits comprising largely the Kwacha counterpart of IMF resources.

The consolidated assets and liabilities of the commercial banks registered a decline of K22.4 million from K1.638.2 million in he first quarter of 1981 to K1.613.8 million in the second quarter.

"A substantial decrease of K35.9 million in commercial banks liabilities to banks abroad largely accounted for the decrease in the banks' total liabilities.

Marginal declines were recorded in Government and demand deposits, and commercial banks' liabilities to Bank of Zambia which together amounted to K13.6 million.

On the liquidity position, the report says the fall observed during the current quarter was largely because of substantial declines of K68.2 million net foreign assets of the monetary authority.

This decline was assisted by treasury bills outside Bank of Zambia which went down by K13.8 million. The decrease in primary liquidity should have been greater had it not been for Bank of Zambia other items and monetary authority net claims on the Government which rose by K78 million and K29.7 million respectively.

The report says: "The decrease recorded in total primary liquidity had the greatest impact on commercial banks liquidity which fell by K27 million.

Total money supply recorded a smaller increase of 0.5 per cent from K891.3 million at the end of March, 1981 to K896 million at the end of June, the same year.

The increase in money supply was caused by the K6.9 million rise in narrow money (defined to include currency outside banks and demand deposits) from K522.1 million in the previous quarter to K529 million in this quarter.

Narrow money has risen steadily each quarter since June, 1980 to record an annual increase of K55.9 million or 11.8 per cent.

The bulk of the rise in narrow money was attributed to increases in currency outside banks which rose by K9.4 million or 6.2 per cent during the quarter.

CSO: 4700/968

NCCM EMPLOYEES TO BE UNDER RCM DURING PRE-MERGER TRANSITION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 12 Mar 82 p 5

[Excerpt] EMPLOYEES of Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines (NCCM) have received letters from managing directors of NCCM and Roan Consolidated Mines (RCM) Mr Francis Kaunda and Mr David Phiri respectively informing them they are now under RCM during the transition period which will lead to the merger of the two companies on March 31.

The letters dated February 17 and counter-signed by Mr Kaunda and Mr Phiri assure the workers of their employment and that the merger would not "adversely affect conditions of service with RCM".

A spokesman for NCCM in Kitwe confirmed the letters had been sent to all workers.

On February 15, the directors of RCM and NCCM, among other things, approved the merger as being in the interests of the two mining giants and the terms of the merger as being fair and reasonable.

The letter reads in part:

"Apropos of this, the boards will be making recommendations to the ordinary shareholders of their two companies that they, the shareholders, should vote in favour of the resolutions approving the merger at extraodinary general meetings which have been convened for March 17, 1982."

The two managing directors appealed to the workers "to follow the Press which is likely to cover this historic event in greater detail".

British high commissioner to Zambia Mr John Johnson has said Britain welcomed the merger of the two mining companies as it would create more jobs for young British engineers.

Zambia still needed technical personnel for its mining industry to increase copper and cobalt production.

CSO: 4700/968

AIRWAYS CORPORATION SEEKING REPLACEMENTS FOR BOEING 707S

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

THE European Economic Community (EEC) will not allow the use of Boeing 707 aircraft on its market by 1988 because of the noise.

And Zambia Airways Corporation is working out details to buy a more efficient and modern aircraft to meet these conditions.

Confirming the EEC's 1988 deadline, the airline's managing director Mr Oliver Chama said in Lusaka yesterday the corporation was now busy evaluating costs and other requirements in conformity with the new developments.

Asked what would happen to the 707s, Mr Chama said the aircraft would be deployed on regional routes and international networks where noise regulations had not yet become a subject of controversy.

"It is true that we are now busy looking for a long-range wide-body plane which will replace the Boeing 707 on European markets," said Mr Chama.

Feeder

The corporation was considering the introduction of a smaller aircraft on domestic routes to run as a feeder on routes where the Hawker Siddeley was not operating economically.

He admitted that the Hawker Siddeley 748 was presently not running economically on domestic routes because of Government-controlled fares which normally fell far below operating costs.

"Technically the HS 748 is an economic plane given economic fares although we are planning the introduction of a smaller plane to help it on other routes."

The air industry all over the world today was going through a turbulent period as escalating fuel and spare parts costs eroded profits.

"It is therefore important that something is done to arrest the situation because airlines cannot go on operating indefinitely on losses."

CSO: 4700/968

BRIEFS

CHOMBA IN SAUDI ARABIA--Riyadh, Sunday--Home Affairs Minister Mr Frederick Chomba arrived here yesterday for a four-day visit to Saudi Arabia. Last night Mr Chomba attended a dinner given in his honour by Prince Naif Bin Abdul Aziz and today he is expected to attend another dinner hosted by the governor of Riyadh. Mr Chomba and his delegation was met on arrival at the airport by his Saudi Arabian counterpart, Zambian ambassador to Saudi Arabia Mr Matiya Ngalande and several officials from the Saudi interior ministry. [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Mar 82 p 1]

CZECHOSLOVAK TRADE AGREEMENT--Zambia and Czechoslovakia yesterday signed a trade agreement and protocal on mutual cooperation. Minister of Commerce and Industry Mr Remmy Chisupa who signed for the Government said the gesture was a strong pointer to better links between Prague and Lusaka. Czechoslovak Minister of Foreign Trade Mr Bohumil Urban said the protocal would enhance mutual corporation. [Text] [Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 14 Mar 82 p 1]

CSO: 4700/968 END

JPRS 80487

2 April 1982

Sub-Saharan Africa Report

No. 2600

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 80487

2 April 1982

SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA REPORT

No. 2600

CONTENTS

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

Briefs
Patasse's Expected Departure 1

CHAD

Briefs
French Emissary's Mission 2

ETHIOPIA

Offensive Renewed Against Eritrean Rebels
(Andre Fontaine; LE MONDE, 25 Feb 82) 3

PMAC Promotes Six Military Officers
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 2 Mar 82) 6

Ministry Denounces Unwarranted Foreign Meddling
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 2 Mar 82) 7

Nation Dismisses French Interference as Colonial Mentality
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 4 Mar 82)..... 9

Arab League, French Socialists Rapped For Interference
(Editorial; THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 4 Mar 82) 12

French Socialist Party Lashed On Eritrea
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 5 Mar 82)..... 14

Talks on Strengthening Ethio-Congolese Relations In Progress
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 4 Mar 82)..... 17

Chairman Receives Message From Leader of Congo

(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 7 Mar 82)..... 18

Second Round of Talks On Ethio-Congolese Ties Held
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 7 Mar 82)..... 20

Congolese Official Inspects Development Projects
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 6 Mar 82) 22

Educational Progress in Wollega Outlined
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 2 Mar 82) 23

Seminars on Workers' Control Committees Held
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 2 Mar 82) 25

Masses in Hamassien Undertake Development Activities
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 2 Mar 82) 28

Role of National Productivity Center Highlighted
(Woubetu Taye; THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 5 Mar 82) 29

National Productivity Center Trains Personnel
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 2 Mar 82) 31

Workers Express Determination for Higher Productivity
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 7 Mar 82) 33

General REYA Meeting Underway in Jimma
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 7 Mar 82) 34

Participants Reaffirm Readiness To Implement Proclamation
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 7 Mar 82) 35

Development Activities Stepped Up in Jimma
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 5 Mar 82) 36

Revolution Said To Transform Peasantry
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 2 Mar 82) 38

Peasants in Ambo To Check Sabotage Against Production
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 7 Mar 82) 40

Worker Control Committees, Courts To Uproot Corruption
(Editorial; THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 7 Mar 82) 41

Anti-Corruption Seminar Opens
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 5 Mar 82) 44

Expansion of Postal Services Noted
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 7 Mar 82) 45

Weekly Review of Non-English-Language Press
(Dereje Balcha; THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 7 Mar 82) 46

Ministry To Introduce New Work Directives
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 6 Mar 82) 49

'YEKATIT' Notes Achievements of National Carrier
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 5 Mar 82) 50

Eritrea Shoe Factory To Export Products
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 5 Mar 82) 52

Minister Discloses Establishment of Over 800 Producer's Co-Ops
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 5 Mar 82) 53

Garage, Fuel Depot Inaugurated in Awassa
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 2 Mar 82) 54

Significance of Road in Geleb-Hamerbako Province Stressed
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 5 Mar 82) 55

Livestock Improvement in Arssi Underlined
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 6 Mar 82) 56

Producers Co-Op Builds Modern Grain Store
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 6 Mar 82) 58

RRC Distributes Grain to Drought Affected Areas
(THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD, 4 Mar 82) 59

Briefs
Urban Housing in Eritrea 60
Awassa Town Action Plan 60
Hararghe Youth for Campaign 60
Judges in GDR 60
Returnees Employed in Construction 61

GABON

Briefs
Israeli Relations 62
Bongo on Morena 62

GUINEA

Briefs
Establishment of Algesa 63

MOZAMBIQUE

U.S. Said To Use Poland as Cover for Aid to S. Africa
(Migueis Lopes Junior; NOTICIAS, 2 Mar 82) 64

Interparty Cooperation Agreement With Hungary Signed
(NOTICIAS, 4 Mar 82) 66

Agreement With FAO; Spanish, Swiss Food Donations
(NOTICIAS, 3 Mar 82) 67

Increase of Canadian Cooperant Assistance Planned
(NOTICIAS, 2 Mar 82) 68

Machel Concedes Important Role of Protestant Church
(Manuel Tome; NOTICIAS, 6 Mar 82) 70

People Request Weapons To Fight 'Bandits'
(Carlos Cardoso; NOTICIAS, 27 Feb 82) 72

Correction of Errors in Rural Socialization Advocated
(NOTICIAS, 4 Mar 82) 74

Difficulties Cause Disappointing Sugar Harvest
(Carlos Nobre; NOTICIAS, 27 Feb 82) 76

Briefs
FAO Food, Transportation Assistance 78
Cultural, Scientific Agreement With Portugal 78

NIGER

Sekou Toure's Visit Said To Reinforce Cooperation
(Editorial, Harouna Niandou; LE SAHEL, 13-14 Feb 82) 79

'Society of Development' About To Take Effect
(WEST AFRICA, 1 Mar 82) 81

Minister Presides Over Annual Meeting of Agricultural Cadres
(LE SAHEL, 16 Feb 82) 83

Briefs
EDF Aid 85

SENEGAMBIA

Diop on Senegambia 86
Tax Law Changes 86
Employers' Insurance Contributions 86
Cotton Production 87
Salary Increases 87
Commitment to Democracy 87
Peanut Purchases 87
IMF Loan 87

SOUTH AFRICA

Political Difficulties of Three Southern Africa Moderates Examined
(Piet Muller; BEELD, 25 Feb 82) 88

Predictable Rebellion Seen as Purification of Party
(Editorial; BEELD, 25 Feb 82) 91

TANZANIA

Seminar Urges Youth To Play Part in National Struggle
(Editorial; UHURU, 22 Feb 82) 94

Citizens Told To Stop or Report Poor Use of Public Funds
(Editorial; UHURU, 20 Feb 82) 96

UGANDA

Further Incidents of Violence Reported
(AFRICA AFP, 2, 5 Mar 82) 98

Government to Fight Guerrillas
Cardinal Lashes Government
Reaction to Cardinal's Criticism
Bomb at Coffee Plant

Briefs
Commonwealth Training Team Rejected 102
Cattle From Kenya 102
Banks Reported Losing Millions 102

BRIEFS

PATASSE'S EXPECTED DEPARTURE--Ange Patasse, Central African member of the opposition, who found refuge a week ago in the Embassy of France in Bangui, will reportedly soon leave the Central African Republic for a third country, it was learned Saturday. Seven unnamed states of the African continent have reportedly already been consulted by France to receive the presumed instigator of the coup d'etat attempt, which took place during the night of 3-4 March, but three of them, it is stated, immediately gave a "categorical refusal." [Text] [Paris LE MATIN in French 15 Mar 82 p 15]

CSO: 4719/705

BRIEFS

FRENCH EMISSARY'S MISSION--The former ambassador of France to Togo, Madagascar and the Sudan, Jean-Pierre Campredon is now making a contact mission with the Transitional National Union Government [GUTN] to take stock of the situation in the country and concerning Franco-Chadian cooperation. It was pointed out, on 2 March, in the Chadian capital that the French emissary, who had already made a similar mission in July 1981, had gone Sunday to Ati, in the central part of the country, to meet there the Chadian President Goukouni Oueddei. For his pat, Col Abdelkader Kamougue, vice president of the GUNT, reaffirmed, Tuesday, in Ndjemena that his government had resolved to "settle militarily" the Chadian problem, while deploring the "disorganization" of the governmental troops. Colonel Kamougue, leader of the Chadian Armed Forces [FAT], stated in particular in this connection that this "disorganization" was at the origin of the loss of control of Oum Hadjer last Thursday to the benefit of the Northern Armed Forces [FAN], supporters of Hissein Habre, 4 days after the conquest of the city by the governmental troops. He added: "The euphoria of victory made our men overlook the necessity of a defensive organization." He made it clear that all the Chadian politico-military factions had contributed to the seizure of Oum Hadjer. [Text] [Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Mar 82 p 8]

CSO: 4719/663

OFFENSIVE RENEWED AGAINST ERITREAN REBELS

Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Feb 82 pp 1, 5

[Article by Andre Fontaine: "The 20-Years' War"]

[Text] Since Colonel Mengistu announced the launching of a major campaign against the rebel movements in Asmara on 25 January, violent battles have ensued in Eritrea. Addis Ababa says it is on the verge of eliminating the clandestine forces in rebellion since 1961, whose position appears to be difficult.

The Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF) expressed confidence on Tuesday, 23 February, that its forces had killed or wounded 5,000 Ethiopian soldiers on the four fronts on which the battles are being waged.

On that same day, the association of Eritrean students in London echoed the EPLF charges that the government forces are using toxic gases in the province of Tirukruk, near the Sudanese frontier, "with the support of the Soviets, Cubans and Libyan and South Yemenite forces."

There is much talk of Poland and El Salvador. There is sometimes discussion of Turkey and Afghanistan. It even happens that there is talk of Kampuchea. There is hardly ever any discussion, so to speak, of Eritrea. And yet war has been raging here again since the Ethiopian troops launched a campaign against the separatist rebels last 25 January with a view to breaking them once and for all.

And yet the left wing is in power in France, where the spokesmen for the socialists, communists and trade unionists in the CGT [General Confederation of Labor]-CFDT [French Democratic Confederation of Labor]-FEN [National Education Federation]-SNEP [National Primary Education Union]-Sup., expressed their unequivocal "solidarity with the liberation struggle of the Eritrean people" on the occasion of a "solidarity day" at Jussieu University in Paris in December 1978. The same sentiments were expressed in even clearer terms by Michel Jobert, who is a cabinet minister today.

This struggle has lasted 20 years now. In these 20 years imperial Ethiopia has succeeded, by means of force and corruption, in persuading the majority in the Asmara parliament to accept the conversion of the federal link between Eritrea and Ethiopia established by the United Nations in 1960 into annexation pure and simple. In these 20 years, the fighters on the various liberation fronts have gone forth, with varying success, against troops sent to subjugate them.

Yesterday it was the troops of the Negus, supported by the United States and Israel, and "advised" by their experts. Today it is the troops of Lt Col Mengistu, the "red" Negus, supported by the USSR, Cuba, South Yemen and also--if not to an even greater extent--"advised" by their experts.

In the past the central government forces were accused of using napalm. Today, the EPLF accuses them of using gas.

Twenty years ago, one could dispute whether an Eritrean people truly existed. What did the inhabitants of the plains, widely Christianized, and resembling the inhabitants of the neighboring Tigre like brothers, have in common with those living 2,000 meters lower down in the incubator of the coastal plain Islamized centuries ago by the Arabs and Turks? But Italian colonization contributed to opening up the country to the rest of the world, and to developing education and the infrastructures.

World War II did the rest.

Eritrea was an essential base for the British for the conquest of Ethiopia and the defense of the Near East, and its economy was given substantial impetus as a result. Ethiopia for its part was barely emerging from the Middle Ages. If it was interested in Eritrea, it was not, as one of its governors was to make clear in cynical fashion, because of its people, but solely because it wanted access to the sea, as well as oil, in which the region was believed in the 1960s to be rich.

The result in any case was clear: armed resistance, despite the schisms, spread over the country, and repressive measures were intensified. Its national nature is evidenced by the fact that it survived the change in the regime in Addis Ababa, as well as the withdrawal of the support it received, consecutively or concommitantly, from the USSR, People's China and Colonel Qadhdhafi's Libya. He, furious with the gradual secularization of the movement he had initially thought dedicated to the advance of Islam, did not hesitate last summer, as everyone knows, to conclude a "strategic alliance" with Ethiopia and South Yemen, more secular still, however, since they officially claim affiliation with Marxism-Leninism.

Khartoum too, which had supported the rebels, abandoned them, in exchange for Ethiopia's relinquishing the cause of the Christian rebels in the Sudanese south. Only Somalia never waivered in its support of the Eritreans: this should be no surprise, because it could never accept the annexation of Ogaden, with a mainly Somali population, by Addis Ababa. The majority of the Arab countries leaned toward the Eritreans, but were stopped by the principle of respect for the inviolability of the frontiers established during the colonial period, a principle firmly defended by the Organization of African Unity.

An Essential Strategic Position

The Eritreans derive hardly any benefit from the fact that Ethiopia, at the mouth of the Red Sea, has become an essential strategic position for the USSR, where it has amassed enormous stocks of weapons and sent thousands of military "advisors" from the communist countries. In fact, the United States takes great care not to meddle in this situation. There are seemingly two reasons for this position. On the one hand, there is the attitude of Israel, hardly anxious to see a new Arab state established at the mouth of the Red Sea. On the other hand, there is a conviction that since the Soviet model cannot be assimilated by the Africans, the end of Eritrean resistance will lead the Russians sooner or later to withdraw from Ethiopia, as they have already had to do from Egypt, Sudan and Somalia. The Marxists in the EPLF, whose ideology has been sorely tested by the Kremlin's behavior, seem more or less to share this view. From it they draw the conclusion that the Soviets, while helping Colonel Mengistu to score new points against the guerrillas, will not let him triumph completely, for this would remove any justification for their military presence and their constant interference in Ethiopian life.

This approach helps the EPLF to envision the probable results of the present campaign in a somewhat philosophic way, despite the sorrow and the catastrophe it cannot fail to entail. What they would like, however, is for France, whose voice has often been heard recently in support of the rights of man, not to forget the Eritrean cause altogether, and to contribute, as it has done with to Namibia, the Sahara, Central America and the Near East, to the search for a solution to a conflict which is likely to become one of the bloodiest of this era. Mr Cheysson committed an error from this point of view, by agreeing to meet with President Mengistu in Asmara, in other words, the Eritrean capital. And it is only too obvious that the realignment of the French Communist Party with Moscow has forced it from a position of support to one of silence where Eritrea is concerned. There is no justification, moreover, for thinking that the socialists in power today have for their part forgotten the encouragement theyy gave the Eritreans when they were in the opposition. Now that the storm is raging again over this indomitable people, the time might be right to make this entirely clear to them.

5157
CSO: 4719/651

PMAC PROMOTES SIX MILITARY OFFICERS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] Asmara (ENA)--The Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) yesterday promoted six senior military officers who have contributed greatly to the struggle made by the Revolutionary Army to safeguard the unity and territorial integrity of the Motherland and defend the revolution by providing leadership at various levels.

The six officers promoted by the PMAC are:

--Comrade Brig. Gen. Tesfaye Gebre-Kidan, PMAC Standing Committee member, Minister of National Defence and COPWE Executive Committee member, promoted to the rank of Lt. General.

--Comrade Brig. Gen. Haile-Giorgis Habte-Mariam, Chief of Staff of the Revolutionary Ethiopia Armed Forces and COPWE Central Committee member, promoted to the rank of Major General.

--Comrade Col Guebreyes Wolde-Hanna, Head of the Main-Political Department of the Revolutionary Ethiopia Revolutionary Army and COPWE Central Committee member, promoted to the rank of Brig. General.

--Comrade Col. Abdulahi Oumer, Commander of the "Mekit" Command, promoted to the rank of Brig. General.

--Comrade Col. Getachew Gedamu, Deputy Commander of the Eastern Sector Command, promoted to the rank of Brig. General.

--Comrade Hussein Ahmed, Deputy Commander of the "Wikaw" Command, promoted to the rank of Brig. General.

CSO: 4700/935

MINISTRY DENOUNCES UNWARRANTED FOREIGN MEDDLING

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] Asmarar (ENA)--The Arab League and the French Socialist Party were vigorously condemned here Sunday for meddling in Ethiopia's domestic affairs and deliberately misleading the international public on developments in Eritrea region.

A statement issued by the Red Star Multi-Faceted Campaign in Eritrea region, the Arab League and the French Socialist Party were singled out for particular censure for echoeing the baseless propaganda of the secessionist bandits. The statement noted that the traitorous gangs have distinguished themselves as inveterate liars and that certain Western media have been faithfully echoeing their claims, however, bankrupt.

The statement recalled a recent claim by one of the separatist groups of having bombarded Asmara Airport and pointed to the amazement expressed by a BBC correspondent over this allegation.

The statement noted that advancing preposterous claims has become an ingrained habit of the secessionist bandits and their patrons, but that no amount of propaganda can in any way arrest, much less reverse, the revolutionary tide or thwart the attainment of the objectives of the Red Star Multi-faceted Campaign in Eritrea region.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Socialist Ethiopia has also accused the Arab League yesterday of attempting to undermine the historic unity and territorial integrity of the Ethiopian people and of breaching the cardinal principal of non-interference in the internal affairs of sovereign states.

Commenting on the Arab League's recent communique in which it saw fit to propagate the "outrageous falsehoods and outright lies" of the separatist gangs in Eritrea region, a spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs condemned the League Secretariat of repeated acts of gross interference in the internal affairs of Socialist Ethiopia. The spokesman noted that despite repeated representations and strong protests by the Ethiopian Government calling on the Secretariat of the League to desist from subversive activities, the Arab League in collusion with international imperialism has continued the "periodic clamour and audacious outbursts against Socialist Ethiopia." This, it was noted, is a mockery of Afro-Arab cooperation.

The League, as a tool of some reactionary Arab regimes which, by their subservience to imperialists, have betrayed the legitimate aspirations of their own peoples, is least qualified to give lessons on self-determination, the spokesman pointed out. "Since the League Secretariat remains totally ignorant of elementary history, it must be stated quite categorically, primarily for its benefit, that no part of the Ethiopian polity nor its people have either been nor could ever be Arab," the spokesman said. The spokesman added that since Eritrea region is no exception, it is rather presumptuous of the League Secretariat "to give private advice, let alone condemn, the conduct of an African sovereign state."

The spokesman reiterated that Ethiopia which throughout the ages has successfully defended its unity and territorial integrity, is not under the tutelage of the Arab League and admonished the league secretariat to concern itself exclusively with Arab affairs. Socialist Ethiopia, it was pointed out, is quite capable of conducting its own affairs without any type of meddling, "least of all by an organization which is notorious for its ineptitude, treachery of the Arab cause and divisiveness of its member states."

Ethiopia, it was stressed, has always been at the forefront in supporting genuine national liberation struggles in Africa and cannot therefore be given lessons on self-determination.

The spokesman went on to state that the principle of self-determination should not be a self-serving instrument for expansionist reactionary regimes that indulge in the romantic dream of grandeur or neo-colonialist designs.

Throughout the chequered history of the nation, it was moreover emphasized, Eritrea region with its diverse nationalities, has shared in the struggle and triumphs of the rest of the country and the people there can by no stretch of the imagination be regarded differently from their compatriots elsewhere in the country.

Eritrea has been and remains firmly bound with the rest of the country by geography, history and culture and other attributes, it was emphasized.

The Spokesman stated moreover that it was preposterous to accuse Ethiopia of employing weapons prohibited by international convention and of which it was first victim, adding: "as Ethiopia strictly abides by her international obligations, she never acquired nor used any such weapons."

For the sake of Afro-Arab cooperation and in the interest of avoiding a serious confrontation between the regional organizations of Africa and the Arab world, the Spokesman said, Socialist Ethiopia urges the League Secretariat and its reactionary members to desist forthwith from interfering in this country's internal affairs. "Should the secretariat fail to heed the call," the Spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs concluded, "Socialist Ethiopia will be compelled to review the whole range of its policies towards the League and the Middle East as a whole."

CSO: 4700/935

NATION DISMISSES FRENCH INTERFERENCE AS COLONIAL MENTALITY

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 4 Mar 82 pp 1, 2, 8

[Text] Addis Ababa (ENA)--Ethiopia Tuesday expressed surprise and indignation at the "haughty arrogance and colonial mentality" of the French Socialist Party which, in a recent dispatch, is reported to have "condemned" the so-called large-scale offensive in Eritrea region.

Referring to the recent agency dispatch, a spokesman of the Commission for Organising the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia (COPWE) said that neither the self-designated socialist party nor its leadership has any right whatsoever to concern itself with the internal affairs of Revolutionary Ethiopia.

"Socialist Ethiopia rejects and vehemently condemns this unwarranted and blatant interference in the internal affairs of sovereign state," the COPWE spokesman declared.

The peoples of Ethiopia and France, the spokesman said, have enjoyed long-standing tradition of friendship, based on mutual respect and equality. "In spite of this," the spokesman went on, the French Socialist Party has recently indulged in the audacious act of trying to be judge and jury in respect of the sovereign acts of Socialist Ethiopia relating to the Multi-faceted Development Campaign now in progress in the northern administrative region of Eritrea."

The action of the French Socialist Party, the COPWE spokesman declared, "is bound to have serious repercussions on Franco-Ethiopian relations for which the government of the French Republic will be held entirely responsible."

The spokesman warned that if France does not heed to the voice of reason and desist from grossly interfering in the internal affairs of Revolutionary Ethiopia, the Government of Socialist Ethiopia will have no other option but to review the whole range of its relations with that country.

After noting that Socialist Ethiopia had been one of those countries which welcomed the victory of the French Socialist Party in the last French general election which brought the present government into office, the spokesman said that this positive reaction was based on the conviction that the new French government would follow an independent foreign policy favourable to the developing countries as well as to global peace, progress and development.

"Instead, the French government is methodically following policies designed towards collaboration with the racist regime in Pretoria and detrimental to the interests of countries like Ethiopia which had counted on its understanding, support and assistance."

The COPWE spokesman highly regretted that, rather than contributing to the efforts the Revolutionary Government is making in nation-building, the French government is acting in a manner prejudicial to the unity and territorial integrity of Socialist Ethiopia.

The spokesman went on to assert that the French government, which purports to have upheld the principles of democracy and claims to have hoisted high the banner of socialism, had, in fact, proved to be working against the interest of Africa and socialism, perhaps owing to the inherited strong colonialist mentality.

The spokesman declared in this connection: "France's subtle attempt to maintain good relations with the apartheid regime of Pretoria, the racist oppressors and exploiters of the broad masses of South Africa, are no less a crime when seen in the light of its contributions of the maintenance of that heinous system."

The spokesman described France's connection with the racist regime of South Africa as sufficient evidence of its colonial bent, and stated that its platitudes were no better than window dressings.

Stressing that France ranks high on the list of arms sellers, the spokesman said that the arms market for France had grown so wide not out of its business professionalism but "out of its sinister ability to exacerbate existing conflicts and fomenting new tensions."

The COPWE spokesman emphatically declared: "Its attempt to misrepressors and exploiters of the broad Faceted Revolutionary Campaign in the administrative region of Eritrea is such a case in point."

"Socialist Ethiopia strongly feels," said the spokesman, "that France, having failed in its sinister designs to colonize Ethiopia during the Scramble for Africa, has become oblivious to the march of history and the realities of the 20th century."

After declaring that France also seemed to be conveniently forgetting how many times its colonial ambitions towards Ethiopia had been thwarted by the heroic sons and daughters of Ethiopia, the COPWE spokesman stated "if France was so concerned for the welfare of oppressed peoples, as it so gratuitously pretended, it could first allow the peoples that it continues to hold under its colonial domination to accede to independence." In this connection, the spokesman mentioned Mayotte, which is still detached from the Comoros, the Reunion Island and the islands of Glorieses, Juan De Nova, Europa, and Bassas Da India arbitrarily separated from the Malagasy Republic as being but a few of the many examples.

"It is also ironic that France should be pretending to give a lesson on self-determination to Ethiopia when, as we have just underscored, millions of people are still languishing under its colonial domination for lack of this basic right of which the French Socialist Party has suddenly become the self-designated advocate," the spokesman declared.

"If France does not heed to the voice of reason and desist from grossly interfering in the internal affairs of Revolutionary Ethiopia, the Government of Socialist Ethiopia, will have no other option but to review the whole range of its relations with that country," the spokesman concluded.

CSO: 4700/935

ARAB LEAGUE, FRENCH SOCIALISTS RAPPED FOR INTERFERENCE

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 4 Mar 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Against Interference"]

[Text]

Ethiopia, a country which pursues a policy of peace, good neighbourliness and non-interference in the internal affairs of other countries, strictly adheres to both the OAU and UN charters and all other resolutions governing international relations. Likewise, our country expects reciprocity for its commitment to promote peace and stability in the Horn of Africa and the world at large.

Socialist Ethiopia unflinchingly supports genuine national liberation movements in Africa and elsewhere. Because of this, naturally, it is not unexpected that it vigorously opposes countries and organizations following a policy of expansionism and neo-colonial domination.

The Ethiopian people, throughout the ages, have recorded brilliant chapters of gallantry in their resolute defence of the territorial integrity of the Motherland. Their heroic deeds have been repeated by the present revolutionary generation which has been called upon to undertake socialist transformation. Let it be known, to both friends and adversaries, that we will not flinch an inch from our chosen path of socialism. Retrogressive forces are at the moment engaged in fabricating lies in connection with the multi-faceted Red Star Campaign aimed at liberating the broad masses of Eritrea from the captivity of secessionist bandits and effecting the reconstruction of vital infrastructure demolished by these enemies of the people.

There were no stones unturned by reactionary Arab regimes in their abortive attempt to dismember Ethiopia and muffle the popular revolution. As of late, slanderous propaganda has been emanating from the Arab League headquarters designed to undermine the unity and Revolution of Ethiopia. This definitely is a gross interference in our internal affairs. The Arab League claims, echoing the malicious lies of the secessionists, are without an iota of truth.

The Arab League, a tool of reactionary Arab regimes patronized by imperialism, does not represent the genuine aspirations of the Arab masses. Lacking this credential, its pronouncements have no weight whatsoever. Not only the League but also the French Socialist Party has also recently come up with a statement reverberating the baseless propaganda of secessionist bandits, in misrepresentation of the objectives of the current Red Star multi-faceted Revolutionary Campaign in Eritrea region.

A statement issued Sunday by the Red Star Campaign office vigorously condemned both the Arab League and the French Socialist Party for echoing the baseless propaganda of the traitorous gangs.

The statement by the Campaign office further noted that "no amount of propaganda can in anyway arrest, much less reverse, the revolutionary trend or thwart the attainment of the objectives of the Red Star multi-faceted Campaign in Eritrea Region."

On its part, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Socialist Ethiopia accused the Arab League of attempting to undermine the historic unity and territorial integrity of the Ethiopian people and of breaching the cardinal principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of sovereign states.

Despite repeated representations and strong protests by Socialist Ethiopia calling on the secretariat of the League to desist from subversive activities, the latter, in collusion with international imperialism has continued the "periodic clamour and audacious outburst against Socialist Ethiopia," as the Foreign Ministry statement underlined. Such hostile act no doubt represents a mockery of Afro-Arab cooperation.

Revolutionary Ethiopia cannot tolerate indefinitely acts of meddling in its internal affairs as does the Arab League.

CSO: 4700/935

FRENCH SOCIALIST PARTY LASHED ON ERITREA

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 5 Mar 82 p 2

[Text]

It is all too clear that the class struggle has been the sole propelling force behind the Ethiopian Revolution which, during the past years of struggle, has scored decisive victories in the political, economic and social spheres of endeavour smashing to smithereens, at every stage, all impediments put in its way by counter-revolutionary enemies. This class struggle which has all along been the main feature of our Revolution essentially forms an integral part of the international struggle being waged between two opposing forces — imperialist forces on the one hand, and progressive forces fighting to uphold the causes of democracy and socialism, on the other.

Historical developments have proved that there always exist progressive and reactionary views in all societies engaged in such a class struggle, the degree of opposition between the two sides gaining increasing intensity with the gradual unfolding of revolutionary developments. No other instance other than the Ethiopian Revolution bears a convincing proof to this fact.

A cursory look at past years of our revolutionary struggle instantly brings to mind that the series of ideological onslaughts levelled against our Revolution by internal and external forces of reaction, ever since socialism was set as the chosen path of our struggle, has been varied and complex.

False Propaganda Campaigns

Fresh still are in our minds the massive ideological campaigns conducted by counter-revolutionary forces with the view to hoodwinking mass opinion against the authentic concept of socialism. The anti-people elements waged desperate and ceaseless false propaganda campaigns ranging from attempts to liken socialism as a monstrous ideology to shameless character assassination of socialist revolutionaries. In futile attempts to distort the true picture of our revolution, imperialist propaganda campaigns resorted to all sorts of manoeuvre often citing revolutionary measures taken against reactionary enemies as violations of human rights and trying to present developments of the Ethiopian Revolution as unjustifiable.

During the imperialist-coordinated reactionary encirclement of our revolutionary Motherland, the imperialists boasted, through their propaganda campaigns, of having brought the doom of our revolution only to be humiliated before the eyes of the world public after seeing that the Ethiopian Revolution kept standing.

The motives of the forces of reaction are certainly unmistakable. Realizing that unity is the basis from which oppressed masses draw their revolutionary strength, forces of reaction and imperialism incite differences among peoples with the view to expanding the retrogressive ideologies of narrow nationalism and tribal chauvinism.

While posing as "champions" of the concepts of human rights and dignity, they desperately resort to sinister manoeuvres to disunite struggling masses through the dissemination of baseless rumours and calculated propaganda campaigns.

Unfounded Claims

No wonder, imperialist and reactionary enemies are currently engaged in a massive ideological warfare against our revolution through their mass media and their class allies embedded in the different strata of our society. Reactionary campaigns to advance the causes of individualism and selfishness when we talk of socialism and collective prosperity, their teachings of narrow nationalism when we uphold the cause of proletarian internationalism, and their desperate attempts in support of secessionist ideas when we talk of socialist patriotism are only a few instances of the imperialist-instigated ideological warfare levelled against our Revolution at present. In keeping with their traditional policies based on the dissemination of falsehood and fabrications of mean rumours, enemies of our Revolution are again set in echoing unfounded claims coined by secessionist bandits in Eritrea region. It is indeed astonishing that these imperialist mass media and other reactionary quarters should undertake such mean acts of international treachery at a time when our revolutionary liberation army is cracking down on the separatist bandits in a decisive struggle to totally crush secessionist movements in the region. Only a couple of days ago, an organization calling itself the Arab League issued a statement in which it once again manifested its reactionary characteristics by justifying baseless rumours spread by the bandits that Éthiopia is using poison gas in the struggle against the secessionist movements.

In a related development, the ruling socialist party of France, quite oblivious of the fact that the French government is ill-reputed for encircling developing countries with military bases, issued a statement in which it presented a gross distortion of facts in connection with the decisive struggle waged by our revolutionary liberation army to safeguard the unity, territorial integrity and revolution of Ethiopia.

Unwarranted Interference

In a recent dispatch, the French Socialist Party is reported to have "condemned" the so-called large-scale offensive in Eritrea region. A spokesman of the Commission for Organising the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia (COPWE), said in this connection that neither the self-designated socialist party nor its leadership has any right whatsoever to concern itself with the internal affairs of Revolutionary Ethiopia. The spokesman declared that Socialist Ethiopia rejects and vehemently condemns this unwarranted and blatant interference in the internal affairs of a sovereign state. The spokesman expressed surprise that in spite of the long-standing tradition of friendship, mutual respect and equality that existed between France and Ethiopia, the French Socialist Party should indulge in the audacious act of trying to be judge and jury in respect of the sovereign acts of Socialist Ethiopia relating to the Multi-Faceted Development Campaign now in progress in the northern administrative region of Eritrea.

The action of the French Socialist Party, the COPWE spokesman declared, is bound to have serious repercussions on French-Ethiopian relations for which the Government of the French Republic will be held entirely responsible.

Acts of Treachery

It is indeed saddening to note that Western media and certain governments should try to justify unfounded claims advanced by the secessionist bandits whose reactionary policies have all along been based on lies and fabrications. Among the latest such fabrications was, for instance, a claim by the separatist bandits to have destroyed the Yohannes IV Asmara Airport although these claims were instantly laid bare by a correspondent of the BBC.

That reactionary quarters should indulge in such mean acts of treachery without taking into consideration the weight of opinion of the people of Asmara and its environs singularly attests to the fact that they are completely blind-folded against realities.

Slanting of truths may bring forth temporary benefits but continuous fabrications of lies can by no means hinder the eventual revelation of truths. The revolutionary leadership and people cannot remain indifferent when separatist bandits and their allies are launching a coordinated propaganda campaign against the unity of our revolutionary motherland, peace and the well-being of the entire working people of Ethiopia.

Undaunted by the massive propaganda campaigns of counter-revolutionary forces, the Ethiopian Revolution will march ahead towards the eventual realization of its fundamental objectives to attain unity, equality, prosperity and to construct socialism.

CSO: 4700/935

TALKS ON STRENGTHENING ETHIO-CONGOLESE RELATIONS IN PROGRESS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 4 Mar 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] Addis Ababa (ENA)--Discussion on ways of strengthening relations between Socialist Ethiopia and the People's Republic of Congo are in progress here at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

The Ethiopian side is led by Comrade Dr Feleke Gedle-Giorgis, Minister of Foreign Affairs and COPWE Central Committee member, and the Congolese side by Comrade Bierre Nze, member of the Politbureau of the Central Committee of the Congolese Workers' Party and Head of External Relations Department and Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The talks are aimed at strengthening relations between the peoples of the two countries and create strong ties in their common struggle against imperialism and reactionary forces.

They are follow up to the exchange of views between the leaders of the two countries, held at the Sixth Summit Conference of the Non-aligned countries in Havana towards strengthening bilateral relations.

At the opening of the talks Comrade Dr Feleke pointed out that although geographically Socialist Ethiopia and the People's Republic of Congo are located wide apart they pursue a common stand opposed to imperialism, colonialism, and apartheid. He said the discussions will review the present state of relations between the two countries and chart out future course that would contribute greatly to strengthening these existing relations and common stands.

Comrade Dr Feleke underlined the necessity for strengthening relations and solidarity between the two countries, especially in view of the atrocities being perpetrated by imperialism at present to muffle the revolutions of the two countries in collaboration with reactionary countries in the surrounding areas.

Comrade Nze on his part pointed out that the masses of the Republic of Congo very well know the heroic anti-imperialist stance of the Ethiopian masses and that especially after the upsurge of the Revolution, the victories scored by the Ethiopian people in their struggle against imperialism and forces of reaction has won international admiration.

The two foreign ministers later apprised each other of the objective conditions and foreign policies of the countries.

CHAIRMAN RECEIVES MESSAGE FROM LEADER OF CONGO

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 7 Mar 82 pp 1, 5

[Text] Asmara (ENA)--Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile-Mariam, Chairman of the PMAC and COPWE and Commander-in-Chief of the Revolutionary Arm, yesterday afternoon received a message sent by Comrade Colonel Denis Sasso Nguesso, the President of the People's Republic of the Congo.

The message was presented to the Comrade Chairman by Comrade Pierre Nze, the Foreign Minister of the People's Republic of the Congo, at a ceremony held at the Asmara Palace.

Speaking on the occasion, Comrade Nze expressed confidence that his visit to Socialist Ethiopia would contribute to the efforts being exerted by his country to familiarize the Congolese people with the experiences of the victorious Ethiopian Revolution and that it would also strengthen the existing friendly relations between the People's Republic of the Congo and Socialist Ethiopia.

Comrade Nze lauded the progress made by Socialist Ethiopia in the political, economic and social fields and condemned the false propaganda disseminated by the Western media.

Comrade Nze later assured the Revolutionary leader that he would convey to the people and the government of the Congo on the correct picture that he has gathered about the progress of the Ethiopian Revolution and particularly about northern Ethiopia.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile-Mariam on his part declared that the talks he made with Comrade Nze on international issues, the African continent and other pertinent topics were beneficial to the relations of the two countries and the common policies they pursue.

The unfounded propaganda spread by some western news media against the popular revolution will go bankrupt as the revolution continues to win victories and as truth continues to prevail, Comrade Chairman Mengistu observed.

Present on the occasion were Comrade Dr Feleke Gedle-Giorgis, Minister of Foreign Affairs and COPWE Central Committee member, Comrade Legesse Wolde Mariam, the Ambassador of Socialist Ethiopia to the Republic of Zaire and Comrade Charles S.H. Mollomb, the Ambassador of the People's Republic of the Congo to Socialist Ethiopia.

Comrade Nze was presented to Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile-Mariam by Comrade Mengistu Gemechu, Special Aide to the Chairman and COPWE Central Committee member.

Earlier on his arrival at the Yohannis Fourth Asmara International Airport, Comrade Nze was welcomed by Comrade Dawit Wolde-Giorgis, COPWE Central Committee member and COPWE Representative of Eritrea region, and Comrade Fikru Wolde-Tensae, Chief Administrator of Eritrea region.

CSO: 4700/935

MASSES IN HAMASSIEN UNDERTAKE DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITIES

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 pp 1, 4

[Text] Asmara (ENA)--Members of the Shiket kebele peasants' association in the Dur locality in the southern part of Hamassien, Eritrea region, are pooling efforts towards the construction of a 200,000 cubic metre water dam.

Taking part in the self-help scheme are some 1,300 of the association's members and their families. The chairman of the association, Comrade Woldeyesus Elfa, said the project will be completed within four months.

Comrade Woldeyesus said when completed the project, began some 45 days ago, will irrigate 25 hectares. He also noted that the association plans to build another dam.

The ministry of Agriculture prepared the project which is being executed through the food for work programme. The Ministry provides food grain to those deployed in the work.

The Shiket kebele peasants association has 630 members and there are plans to transform it into a producers' cooperative, according to the chairman. Comrade Woldeyesus said units of the Revolutionary Army in the area are helping the peasants provding free labour and while at the same time stabilizing the situation in that part of the region.

Comrade Woldeyesus recalled how the secessionist bandits used to abduct youth in the area and so hindered development and said the launching of the Red Star Reconstruction and Development Campaign spells the final doom of the traitorous bandits. He pointed out that the peasantry, the major beneficiary of the Red Star Campaign, will undertake any and all sacrifice needed to ensure the success of the programme.

Meanwhile, peasants' associations in the Adi-Gembelo-Salae zone are actively engaged in building terrace dams through the food for work programme and are pooling resources towards communal work.

Since there is noticeable scarcity of water in most parts of Eritrea region, major efforts are underway to dam water during the rainy season for use in the dry season. The effort is undertaken under the guidance and h lp of the area office of the Ministry of Agriculture.

Comrade Tesfu Reda, chairman of the regional peasants' association, visited the dams under construction and said the peasant masses in Eritrea are committed more than ever before to defend the peace and stability brought to this part of the country at tremendous sacrifice.

and reactionary forces which felt perturbed by the tempo and momentum of the popular revolution, the Ethiopian broad masses have emerged victorious. He made particular note of the massive reconstruction and development campaign now underway in Eritrea region where a secessionist movement had been nurtured by powers with vested interest in a weak and dismembered Ethiopia.

Comrade Wolle Chekol, Minister of Foreign Trade, was on hand to explain areas of Ethio-Congolese cooperation in the area of trade and communications.

CSO: 4700/935

CONGOLESE OFFICIAL INSPECTS DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 6 Mar 82 pp 1, 3

[Text] Assela (ENA)--Comrade Pierre Nze, member of the Politbureau of the Central Committee of the Congolese Workers' Party and Head of its External Relations Department and Minister of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Congo, Thursday inspected different development projects in Arssi region accompanied by Comrade Dr Feleke Gedle-Giorgis, Minister of Foreign Affairs and COPWE Central Committee member.

The two officials were accompanied during the tour by Comrade Ambassador Legesse Wolde-Mariam of Socialist Ethiopia to the People's Republic of Congo, members of the delegation of Comrade Pierre Nze and officials of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Comrade Nze and Comrade Dr Feleke were accorded a warm and comradely welcome at a locality 30 kms outside Assela town by Comrade Sileshi Mengesha, COPWE Central Committee member and COPWE representative for Arssi region, Comrade Geleta Gemechu, Chief Administrator of the region, members of the Regional COPWE Executive Committee and representatives of the ministries in the region.

Later the guest and Comrade Dr Felcke were briefed on the overall condition of the peasants' service cooperative of Itteya locality by Comrade Feye Arshe, Chairman of the Cooperative. They then proceeded to the Arssi Rural Development Unit where they also received explanations augmented by charts on the Agency's activities in the agricultural and other developmental endeavours.

In a statement at the end of the tour, Comrade Nze lauded the activities of the broad masses of Ethiopia in the political, economic and social fields and their efforts to defend the gains of the Revolution. He declared that the achievements were a source of encouragement to and set a good example for African brothers.

Comrade Nze and Comrade Dr Feleke returned to Addis Ababa later in the afternoon.

CSO: 4700/935

EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS IN WOLLEGA OUTLINED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 p 5

[Text] Nekempte (ENA)--Educational facilities in Wollega region have doubled since the upsurge of the Popular Revolution in 1974, according to statistical review given by the authorities.

The ENA office here learnt from an interview with officials of the Regional Schools Administration Office that the number of students, teachers and schools rose from 82,201 to 328,911 from 1,602 to 4,657 and from 381 to 1,638 respectively since the upsurge of the Revolution. The number of evening schools students has likewise remarkably increased.

Kindergartens which did not exist in this region prior to 1974, are now being established in rural as well as urban centres and catering to a growing number of children so far, 36 of them have been opened throughout the region with a total enrolment of 3,174.

Students are also encouraged to follow labour education which includes the participation of students in production-oriented activities. This programme in particular has enabled students to contribute labour services valued at over 70,000 Bir.

Vocational training centres have been opened in Arjo, Ghimbi, HoroGudur, Kelem and Nekempte provinces through public-government funds amounting to 137,824 Birr. Construction work on five similar other faciliites is underway in Assossa province while eight centres have already started rendering services. So far, 927 adults have graduated in various vocational skills from those centres.

The polytechnic school in Nejo graduated 24 students in auto-mechanics and carpentry at the end of the last academic year.

The plan for the current academic year includes the construction of 28 elementary schools, of which the work on 17 buildings has been completed.

The teachers' training institute, opened here three years ago at a cost of 2,500,000 Birr, has so far graduated 1,090 teachers and 597 others are due to graduate.

The radio broadcasting centre installed in Ghimbi was also commended for the role it plays in disseminating educational programmes in health, politics, agriculture both in Amharic and Oromigna nine hours every day. The broadcast covers parts of Illubabor, Kaffa, Gojjam and Shoa, it was learnt.

In the Literary Campaign, 339,602 adults followed the last five phases and the cooperation of the people in the Campaign in contributing in cash and kind was noteworthy. A total of 312 public reading rooms were opened throughout the region since the launching of the Literacy Campaign.

The financial donations volunteered by the local populace towards the improvement of educational facilities and the widening opportunities for learning amounts to 3,075,590 Birr. The fund was channeled towards the purchase of school equipment, teaching aids, books and transport expenses.

CSO: 4700/935

SEMINARS ON WORKERS' CONTROL COMMITTEES HELD

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 p 4

[Text] Assab

Addis Ababa (ENA)--Most of the seminars which were underway in several parts of the country to deliberate on the implementation of the proclamation on the working people's control committee have wound up, according to reports reaching here.

The three-day seminar held in Assab to seek ways of speeding up the implementation of the proclamation on control committees closed Sunday.

Explanations were given on the activities of anti-people elements and counter-revolutionaries to disrupt the economic reconstruction programme in the area and the embezzlement of 47,000 Birr in some government and mass organizations in Assab town.

In addition to revenues of upwards to 250,000 Birr which should have been collected by mass organizations, over 3 million Birr remains uncollected from private and government agencies to the disadvantage of the Assab Town Council, it was pointed out.

It was also reported during the seminar that Sunday commodities are being stolen while being imported and exported due to lay customs inspection at the port.

Speaking on the occasion, Comrade Esheta Alemu, alternate member of the Central Committee of COPWE and COPWE representative for Assab province, declared that control committees are a prerequisite for stamping out corruption which is a tool of anti-revolutionary elements. He urged the participants to be fully prepared for the implementation of the proclamation on the establishment of the control committee of the working people and the special peoples court attached to it.

Present on the occasion were Comrade Belai Bitew, the Administrator of Assab province and member of the provincial COPWE Executive Committee, and representatives of government and mass organizations.

Nekempte

Meanwhile, a three-day seminar on the implementation of the same proclamation was closed in Nekempte yesterday by Comrade Nigussie Fanta, COPWE Central Committee member and COPWE representative for Wollega region.

The participants pledged to pay every sacrifice for the successful attainment of the objectives of the anticorruption campaign. They also expressed their readiness to translate into deeds the Asmara Manifesto and collect government taxes in time.

Present on the occasion were Comrade Assazinew Bayissa, the Chief Administrator of Wollega region, regional COPWE Executive Committee members, representatives of government and mass organizations, provincial administrators and members of the Revolutionary Police.

Arba Minch

The two-day seminar which was conducted in Arba Minch, Gamo Goffa region, also wound up Sunday following a pledge by the participants to protect government property in line with the recently issued anti-corruption proclamation.

Gondar

Meanwhile a three-day seminar ended in Condar after firm commitments were made to fight corruption in all its forms and collect government taxes in time and in full. Participants at a regional seminar held in Gondar were given a thorough briefing on the extent of embezzelment and pilfering that has been taking place in the region during post-revolution period.

Closing the seminar, Comrade Melaku Tefera, COPWE Central Committee member and COPWE representative for Gondar region, said no economic breakthrough could be made unless the scourges of corruption and waste are effectively tackled and agricultural research organized.

An exhibition based on industrial and agricultural research organized in connection with the three-day seminar was opened Sunday by Comrade Melaku Tefera.

Speaking on the occasion Comrade Lt Mekuria Wolde-Mariam, Head of the Political Department of the Regional Police and Chairman of the Exhibition's Preparatory Committee, said that the exhibition would give lessons to the public on wild-life and forest conservation, curbing illicit trade and protecting government property.

The exhibition depicts the various faces of embezzlement in the region and reveals that upwards of 327,000 Birr has been embezzled from government institutions. It notes that 176 cases of embezzlement have been brought up at the courts.

The exhibition will stay open for a month and will be seen by representatives of mass and government organizations of the province of the region.

In Nekempte, Comrade Negussie Fanta, COPWE Central Committee member and COPWE representative for Wollega region, told 400 participants of a similar seminar that the national resolve to build a socialist economy could be realized only if every Ethiopian discharges his or her share of responsibility.

Comrade Neguissie declared that anti-people elements have caused enormous damage to the economic development of the region and that some are still engaged in this corrupt practice. He pointed out that the former employee of the Inland Revenue Office in Assossa was arrested recently and is being interrogated on charges of misappropriating 40,000 Birr.

Comrade Negussie reported that a certain merchant in Ghmbi town was accused of trying to evade payment of taxes amounting to 360,000 Birr while twelve workers of the Bereda Agricultural Centre were caught redhanded while trying to defraud the organization of 91,000 Birr.

Comrade Negussie further disclosed that 178,201 Birr was embezzled by former UDA office bearers in the six provinces of the region and said the case is soon to appear in court.

CSO: 4700/935

MASSES IN HAMASSIEN UNDERTAKE DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITIES

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 pp 1, 4

[Text] Asmara (ENA)--Members of the Shiket kebele peasants' association in the Dur locality in the southern part of Hamassien, Eritrea region, are pooling efforts towards the construction of a 200,000 cubic metre water dam.

Taking part in the self-help scheme are some 1,300 of the association's members and their families. The chairman of the association, Comrade Woldeyesus Elfa, said the project will be completed within four months.

Comrade Woldeyesus said when completed the project, began some 45 days ago, will irrigate 25 hectares. He also noted that the association plans to build another dam.

The ministry of Agriculture prepared the project which is being executed through the food for work programme. The Ministry provides food grain to those deployed in the work.

The Shiket kebele peasants association has 630 members and there are plans to transform it into a producers' cooperative, according to the chairman. Comrade Woldeyesus said units of the Revolutionary Army in the area are helping the peasants provding free labour and while at the same time stabilizing the situation in that part of the region.

Comrade Woldeyesus recalled how the secessionist bandits used to abduct youth in the area and so hindered development and said the launching of the Red Star Reconstruction and Development Campaign spells the final doom of the traitorous bandits. He pointed out that the peasantry, the major beneficiary of the Red Star Campaign, will undertake any and all sacrifice needed to ensure the success of the programme.

Meanwhile, peasants' associations in the Adi-Gembelo-Salae zone are actively engaged in building terrace dams through the food for work programme and are pooling resources towards communal work.

Since there is noticeable scarcity of water in most parts of Eritrea region, major efforts are underway to dam water during the rainy season for use in the dry season. The effort is undertaken under the guidance and help of the area office of the Ministry of Agriculture.

Comrade Tesfu Reda, chairman of the regional peasants' association, visited the dams under construction and said the peasant masses in Eritrea are committed more than ever before to defend the peace and stability brought to this part of the country at tremendous sacrifice.

ROLE OF NATIONAL PRODUCTIVITY CENTER HIGHLIGHTED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 5 Mar 82 p 2

[Article by Woubetu Taye]

[Text] The National Productivity Centre (NPC), an establishment under the Ministry of Industry, aims at providing much needed skilled manpower to various enterprises. It also organizes upgrading courses for those who are skilled.

The NPC is being assisted in its venture by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the International Labour Office (ILO). Currently six international experts are working in the centre. The centre also cooperates with other international and bilateral organizations in running regional and national programmes. The International Centre for running Public Enterprises in Developing Countries (ICPE) from Yugoslovia and the Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA) are among those with whom it has cooperated to conduct training programmes and workshops.

In its endeavour to meet its responsibilities, NPC has faced two major problems: The major one is to get experienced Ethiopians to assume trainers' positions. The other shortcoming is the absence of training space, such as conference rooms and halls for the management of training programmes. At present programmes are conducted by renting rooms from hotels. Inconvenience has been created at times because hotel rooms were not available when required. Thus NPC had to reduce the number of programmes it planned, it was disclosed.

Besides training staff from corporations and factories under the Ministry of Industry, trainees also came from the Ministries of State Farm, Agriculture, Domestic Trade and Transport and Communications.

The training programmes last from one week up to four months. The longer course involve practical work assignments in enterprises. The programmes are in the fields of general management, material management, supervisory training, materials management, management accounting, financial management, personnel management, production management, maintenance management, marketing and distribution management.

In-Plant Training

In-plant training programmes in the technical fields are at present conducted in many industrial establishments to upgrade the skills of maintenance workers as well as production workers. The field in which training is given are: training methodology, general mechanics, electricity, textile technology and leather processing.

At its Lideta vocational training workshop, NPC trains workers from different organizations in automechanics, metal technology, general mechanics, electricity, building, woodwork and leather technology.

In addition to the regular programmes, NPC has conducted several emergency training sessions in cooperation with the National Revolutionary Development Campaign and Central Planning Supreme Council (NRDC-CPSC). The programmes were meant to meet the extremely urgent demands to fulfil the development campaign programmes. Consequently, with carefully planned and executed programmes, maintenance technicians, junior accountants and storekeepers were trained during the last two years.

The centre's experts have developed and utilized an effective training methodology known as "Training for Results" in order to make sure that the training received has been used to bring results in the work place. Feedback has proven that the methodology has been successfully applied.

NPC was created in 1975 by a merger of the former Centre for Entrepreneurship and Management (CEM) and the National Industrial Vocational Training Scheme (NIVTS) with the aim of fulfilling the objectives of developing and upgrading managerial and technical skills of workers in public enterprises. It also aims at assisting public enterprises to introduce modern management techniques in their respective establishments and improve their efficiency and achieve a higher level of productivity.

To upgrade the skills of top, middle, and lower level managers and also improving the technical skills of industrial workers NPC organizes training courses, conferences and seminars for personnel from the productive sector of the economy. It also provides advisory and consultancy services to enterprises so that they would increase their efficiency and productivity. Surveys, enquiries and research are also undertaken in its field of embarkment.

Talking about NPC's achievements, from 1975 until June 1981, a total of 7,224 persons have participated in its training programme. In the current year from July 1981 to June 1982, a total of 1,400 are expected to complete training programmes. This will bring the total number of trainees to 8,624. Outside Addis Ababa, programmes are conducted in Bahr Dar, Debre Berhan, Dire Dawa, Wonji and Asmara. Continuous programmes are being conducted in Asmara since the last two years, after factories there started operating.

CSO: 4700/935

NATIONAL PRODUCTIVITY CENTER TRAINS PERSONNEL

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 pp 1, 3

[Text] Addis Ababa (EH)--The National Productivity Centre (NPC) was established in 1975 by a merger of the former Centre for Enterpreneurship and Management (CEM) and the National Industrial Vocational Training Scheme (NIVTS).

The tasks entrusted to NPC are the development and upgrading of managerial and technical skills of workers in public enterprises and assistance to public enterprises introduce modern management techniques in their respective establishments. This would help improve their efficiency and achieve a higher level of productivity.

This was disclosed by Comrade Kebede Ali, general manager of NPC in a recent interview.

After the advent of our socialist revolution, the major manufacturing, distributing and service giving organisations were nationalized. Many of these private enterprises were owned by enterpreneurs who possessed some technical skills. During the feudo-bourgeois regime these enterprises were not keen in training and upgrading the skills of the nationals working with them, according to Comrade Kebede.

After nationalization, many expatriate staff left the country thus causing an acute shortage of skilled manpower. That is why the activities of NPC became of crucial importance at this stage of the national economy development, the general manager stated.

To fulfil its objectives of upgrading the skills of top, middle and lower managers, organizes training courses, conferences and seminars for personnel from the productive sector of the economy. It also provides advisory and consultancy services for their efficiency and productivity. Surveys, enquiries, and research are undertaken in its field of embarkment, Comrade Kebede added.

In-Plant Training

"In-plant training programmes are conducted at present in many industrial establishments mostly in the technical fields. This is mainly to upgrade the skills of maintenance workers as well as production workers," the general manager further stated.

In its vocational training workshop at Lideta, NPC conducts training programmes lasting up to six months in automechanics, metal technology, general mechanics, electricity, building, woodwork and leather technology, it was disclosed.

Moreover, NPC has conducted several emergency training sessions in cooperation with the National Revolutionary Development Campaign and Central Planning Supreme Council (NRDC-CPSC). The idea of the crash programmes was first developed in NPC to meet the extremely urgent demands to fulfil the development campaign programme, according to Comrade Kebede.

Speaking of NPC's achievement, Comrade Kebede Ali said that from 1974 until June, 1981, a total of 7,224 persons took part in training programmes. This year 1,400 persons are expected to complete training thus bringing the total number of those who were trained to 8,624.

Follow-up information on the first graduates two years ago indicates that they are effective in their work. Outside of Addis Ababa, programmes are conducted in Bahr Dar, Debre Berhan, Dire Dawa, Wonji and Asmara.

Continuous programmes are being carried out in Asmara since the last two years after factories there became operational, the general manager revealed.

"Training for Results"

To make sure that the training received has been used to bring results in the work place, an effective training methodology known as "Training for Results" has been developed and utilized by the centre's experts, Comrade Kebede disclosed.

The centre is making a study to increase its activities. Building is under construction to increase the vocational training capacity. A new workshop to teach shoe technology will start shortly for the first time in the country. Other new programmes such as maintenance welding and the reconditioning of spare parts are on the pipe line, Comrade Kebede concluded.

CSO: 4700/935

WORKERS EXPRESS DETERMINATION FOR HIGHER PRODUCTIVITY

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 7 Mar 82 pp 1, 5

[Text] Addis Ababa (ENA)--Workers engaged in the industrial sector of the economy yesterday expressed their determination to pay every sacrifice for the current economic construction endeavour and for the implementation at all levels of the working people's control committee.

The workers expressed their stand in a joint statement issued at the conclusion of a two-day seminar which convened at the National Lottery Hall here in connection with the new work directives conducive to improved management and centralized control being introduced by the Ministry of Industry.

The participants of the seminar reaffirmed that they would translate into deeds the directives and decisions aimed at fulfilling COPWE's objectives and at ensuring the establishment of the people's democratic republic of Ethiopia.

The workers also noted that they would look after the up-keep and maintenance of the production implements in the industrial sector and that they would gear their creative capabilities towards the production campaign.

In addition, the workers expressed their readiness to meet production quotas in accordance with the development campaign and to eliminate unnecessary waste as well as to carry out their responsibilities with utmost diligence.

Further they declared their preparedness to carry out in the industrial sector the aims of the Multi-Faceted Red Star Revolutionary Campaign which is being implemented in accordance with the determined directive of the Revolutionary Leader, Comrade Chairman Mengistu.

The session was highlighted by a presentation of prizes by Comrade Tesfaye Dinka, Minister of Industry and COPWE Central Committee member to four national corporations which registered significant contributions in production, foreign exchange savings and economic self-sufficiency during the three years of the development campaign.

A certificate and a special prize was also presented to Comrade Tadesse Daddi who produced a production implement on the basis of his creative skills.

The corporations which received certificates and prizes are the National Textiles, the National Leather and Shoes and the Ethiopian Sugar Corporations as well as factories in Eritrea region.

CSO: 4700/935

GENERAL REYA MEETING UNDERWAY IN JIMMA

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 7 Mar 82 p 5

[Text]

JIMMA (ENA) — A two-day general meeting of members of Revolutionary Ethiopia Youth Association (REYA) in Jimma town opened here yesterday at the auditorium of Higher One kebele five Urban Dwellers' Association.

Attending the meeting which will review the achievements of youth in the town in the economic, political and social fields are office-bearers of the town's REYA executive, control and discipline committees and REYA representatives of educational institutions.

Opening the meeting, Comrade Shita Belachow, Head of COPWE's Organisational Affairs for Jimma town and its environs, said that proper agitation should be conducted among the youth of the country so that they would fully appreciate the dignity of labour and properly realise the benefits of education. He called on the participants to prepare REYA members for the task of effectively participating in social, economic, cultural and political activities.

Comrade Girma Etafa, Chairman of REYA in Jimma town, submitted a report to the meeting on the association's performance up to now.

A pictoral and book exhibition aimed at motivating the youth to devote their energies for economic construction was inspected by the participants, who also attended a revolutionary drama presented by the young artistic troupe of Higher One kebele seven Urban Dwellers' Association.

CSO: 4700/935

PARTICIPANTS REAFFIRM READINESS TO IMPLEMENT PROCLAMATION

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 7 Mar 82 pp 1, 5

[Text]

ASMARA (ENA) — Representatives of government agencies and mass organizations in Eritrea region reaffirmed their readiness here yesterday to pay every sacrifice to implemnt the Proclamation on Workers' Control Committee and the Special Court attched to it and to the struggle in the fight against corruption and wastefulness.

The representatives of institutions of production and distribution, mass organizations, governmental departments, administrative units and the Revolutionary Army made the pledge in the resolution they adopted at the end of the three-day seminar on the implementation of Eritrea region of the Proclamation on Workers' Control Committee and the Special Court attached to it.

The participants deliberated during the seminar on financial and property management, collection and utilisation of funds, on courts and newly issued penal laws auditing, coordination of the activities of service giving institutions and on the proclamation establishing workers' control committee and the special court.

After the deliberations, the participants also pledged to pay every sacrifice for the implementation of the Asmara Manifesto of the Multi-Faceted Red Star Revolutionary Campaign.

At the closing session of the seminar, Comrade Amahayes Zewdie, COPWE Central Committee member and Head of the Regional COPWE Organisational Affairs, spoke on the proclamations issued in connection with the working people's control committee and the special court.

Extensive discussions were held during the three-day seminar taking certain government departments, service and mass organizations as examples

CSO: 4700/935

DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITIES STEPPED UP IN JIMMA

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 5 Mar 82 p 5

[Text] Jimma (ENA)--the urban dwellers' associations and the municipal office of this town are registering remarkable achievements in development-oriented undertakings.

A recent report from the town reveals that most of the 20 urban dwellers' associations here are rendering valuable services to the inhabitants by building assembly halls, kindergartens, cooperative shops, market places and recreational facilities.

Notable among these is the construction of an assembly hall at a cost of 54,196 Birr by kebele 5 higher 1 which can accommodate 700 people.

The municipal office of the town on its part has built at a cost of 36,010 Birr a number of grain stores and marketing stalls, two public toilets, five fruit shops at a cost of 20,000 Birr, and is catering to the needs of a total of 1,000 destitute children and the aged.

The municipal office has also built a volleyball, handball and basketball fields at a cost of 89,817 Birr, has constructed a number of low-cost houses to alleviate the problem of housing and has undertaken efforts to repair the town's roads, and sewerage facilities.

The office also contributed a total of 30,000 Birr to equip three schools in the town and the Gibe Hall with the necessary materials. It has in addition built a new school with 98,000 Birr and has bought new vehicles for the town's abattoir and ambulance service.

In a related development, peasant association members of Dano district, Jibat Metcha province of Shoa region, recently built a 70 km feeder road. The network will open hitherto inaccessible but potentially very productive areas of the district.

In Tegulet Bulga province, also Shoa region, peasants ploughed 10 hectares of land for an adult training centre in Abichu district.

Members of a basic REYA unit in and around the Metehara Sugar Factory complex in Yerer Kereyu province, Shoa region, collected 900 quintals of sugar during a recent two-day work campaign. The youth also mounted a sanitation drive in the locality.

In Hararghe province, members of a building construction project in Jijjiga provided free labour towards the establishment of a kindergarten. The 80-member volunteer force has moreover pledged to contribute towards any development oriented effort in the area.

In Sinana district, Mendeyo province of Bale region, members of the Shele Peasants' Village recently collected 400 quintals of barley belonging to families of militiamen serving on the fronts.

Varying degrees of self-help are also reported to be locally initiated in other parts of the country.

CSO: 4700/935

REVOLUTION SAID TO TRANSFORM PEASANTRY

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] Over 80 per cent of the people of Ethiopia are engaged in agriculture and over 70 per cent of the Gross National Product (GNP) comes from this sector. Agricultural products are also the main foreign exchange corners. Despite all these facts, Ethiopian agriculture had for long remained backward. The factors attributed to the backwardness of this sector of the economy are the age-old agricultural implements, the fragmented peasant holdings and low productivity. Peasant holdings, for instance, accounted for 98 per cent of the country's food production.

The archaic and backward feudal production relations in pre-revolutionary Ethiopia had impeded the development of the forces of production.

According to studies carried out in eight regions the percentages of tenants in pre-revolutionary Ethiopia were as follows:

Region	% of forced tenants
Arssi	52%
Gamo Goffa	48%
Hararghe	54%
Illubabor	75%
Kaffa	62%
Shoa	67%
Wollega	59%
Wollo (in part)	41%

(taken from a bulletine--Ethiopian Revolution, Fifth Anniversary Sept. 1979).

This indicates that on the average, 53 per cent of the peasant farmers in pre-revolutionary Ethiopia were tenants.

During the feudo-bourgeois past, the peasant was required to give up as much as 75 per cent of his produce to the landlord as annual rent. As a result, the peasants were forced to live in a state of poverty. In addition, peasants were deprived of their political and social rights. They are also deprived of social services including education and health facilities. Illiteracy was rampant in the rural areas and as a result of malnutrition and inadequate medical services the death tolls were alarmingly great.

Merciless Exploitation

In the face of the merciless exploitation and oppression the Ethiopian peasants had been subjected too for long, the broad masses had on various occasions expressed their grievances against the old order. The 1960s were characterized by repeated peasant uprisings in Bale, Sidamo, Gojjam, etc. In the course of the uprisings, quite a good number of peasants were brutally massacreed by the feudal landlords in collaboration with the feudo-bourgeois regime.

The revolutionary slogan "Land to the Tiller" had for long been echoed by the progressive section of the society; progressive students in the country had vigorously supported land reforms in pre-revolutionary Ethiopia. In the process progressive students had been banished, maimed or even executed.

The age-old demand of the rural masses and the progressive section of the society came to be a reality in the course of the February, 1974, popular revolution. The nationalization of rural land on March 4, 1975 is particularly a positive move. After the proclamation, peasants have been liberated from feudal bondage to which they were subjected for centuries. The participation of peasants in political, economic and social activities, has all the more, been intensified with the establishment of peasants' association. The formation of peasants' associations, has strengthened the unity of peasants in the struggle to realize the objectives of the popular revolution.

Ethiopian peasants have since been organized in a nation-wide association. The All Ethiopia Peasants' Association (AEPA) has served as an important forum whereby peasants ameliorates their political awareness. The formation of AEPA has also facilitated the participation of the rural masses in development-oriented activities including construction of roads, housing units, bridges, clinics and schools. In addition the role being played by peasants in the National Literacy Campaign and the afforestation programme is notable.

As part of the effort to lay the groundwork for socialist transformation of agriculture, AEPA is doing its best to encourage peasants to establish agricultural producers' cooperatives. Peasants throughout the country have now realized the benefits of producers' cooperatives and have joined them willingly.

In line with the directives of the Commission for Organizing the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia (COPWE), Ethiopian peasants are ready to make every sacrifice in the struggle to form the party of the working people of Ethiopia. It is with a sense of further commitment and determination that Ethiopian peasants celebrate the seventh anniversary of the nationalization of rural land. Peasants, in cooperation with the rest of the population, will further intensify the class struggle for the ultimate victory.

CSO: 4700/935

PEASANTS IN AMBO TO CHECK SABOTAGE AGAINST PRODUCTION

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 7 Mar 82 p 5

[Text]

AMBO (ENA) — Representatives of peasant service cooperatives in Jibat-Metcha province of Shoa region have pledged to ferret out and humbly deal with elements who indulge in sabotaging production.

The pledge was made following a two-day seminar during which over 100 representatives of peasant service cooperatives were briefed on socialist modes of production.

The seminar was closed by Comrade Habtamu Woldeyes, member of the provincial COPWE Executive Committee and Head of COPWE's Provincial Ideological Affairs, who urged the participants to apply in practice the briefings they were given.

The peasant representatives undertook to put the pressure on elements who in any way attempt to sabotage production. They also pledged to make every sacrifice demanded of them in the defence of the nation's unity and territorial integrity.

Meanwhile, over 161 peasants in Dumne district, Shoa region, recently received certificates on completion of a 10-day course covering soil and water conservation, animal breeding and the organization of co-operatives.

Lectures to the peasants were delivered by experts and field workers of the Ministry of Agriculture in the district.

While presenting the certificates, Comrade Metaferia Tebeje, the District Administrator, reminded the trainees of spreading the knowledge they had acquired to the masses within their communities.

Similarly, 100 people in Digo district, Gojjam region, recently received certificates on completion of a three-month course covering bamboo-making, pottery, weaving and related vocations.

Certificates to the adults were presented to the trainees by Comrade Kebede Abegaz, the Provincial Administrator.

Meanwhile, in Nekempte province, Wollega region, 17 peasants received certificates recently following a 10-day training session dealing with the soil and water conservation. Certificates to the trainees were presented by Comrade Kebede Weeka, Administrator of Diga district.

CSO: 4700/935

WORKER CONTROL COMMITTEES, COURTS TO UPROOT CORRUPTION

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 7 Mar 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Anti-Corruption Drive']

[Text] Corruption, bribery, favouritism, nepotism and wastefulness are some of the bad legacies inherited by the popular revolution from the feudo-bourgeois past. Under the now defunct feudo-bourgeois order, these criminal practices were not only knowingly tolerated but also openly encouraged to perpetrate an exploitative system whose very foundation was based on self-enrichment at any cost, no matter who the victim is.

At the apex of the old order was the centre of all mean practices protecting and promoting corrupt officials stealing government property and money. It was normal for senior and rich government officials weilding authority to prosecute a junior civil servant for the crime he had not committed.

It goes without saying that since the upsurge of the popular revolution, corrupt officials, including their brokers and henchmen, got frightened and preferred a low profile.

One of the priorities of the revolution is the task of ensuring that public property is not damaged by counter-revolutionary elements bent upon arresting the progress of the Revolution. It is a fact of history that in the absence of workers' control committees the destruction caused to property by anti-people groups was enormous.

Protection of public property became the responsibility of each and every individual committed to the revolution as the counter-revolutionaries launched their onslaughts from inside and outside the country with the overt and covert support of international imperialism.

It may be recalled that the anti-corruption campaign which was launched with the issuance of the Proclamation by the PMAC was a follow up of COPWE CC resolution recommending new measures to combat corruption and wastefulness. Within the framework of the Proclamation workers' control committees and special courts have been or are being established throughout the country to wipe out corruption.

It is encouraging that the anti-corruption seminars being held throughout the country are stressing on the necessity to expose corrupt people, including those trading in the name of the popular revolution. The latest in the series was a three-day seminar organized by the Eritrea regional COPWE office to implement the proclamation on the working people's control committee and the special people's court.

It was noted in the Asmara gathering that some greedy individuals disguised as revolutionaries and holding public responsibility are at present undermining the revolution and are becoming a hindrance to the economic reconstruction of the country.

Weeding out exploiters, bringing embezzlers to justice, exposing corrupt individuals, curtailing damages that occur and introducing people's control through continuous education are the burning issues of the day.

It must be stressed that the epicentre of all corrupt practices is the greed to accumulate money through illegal means No matter whether the amount involved is small, big or medium size, embezzlement is a crime irrespective of who commits it. The anti-corruption campaign is intended to eradicate all forms of corruption from Socialist Ethiopia.

The series of seminars being conducted enable the participants to understand that the campaign should be conducted with loyalty to socialism, with ability and without fuss. Every individual genuinely standing for the revolutionary cause should become security conscious by getting equipped with the Marxist-Leninist theory of social property and social management.

The need for curbing corruption, bribery and wastefulness has been repeatedly stressed by our revolutionary leader, Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile-Mariam. This need is based on scientific principles enunciated by Lenin who stressed that accounting and control of the labour performed and of the distribution of products is the essence of socialist transformation.

In the revolutionary transformation taking place in Ethiopia such accounting and control should be vigorously implemented. This is the urgent task facing the workers control committees and the special courts.

CSO: 4700/935

ANTI-CORRUPTION SEMINAR OPENS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 5 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] Asmara (ENA)-A three-day seminar organized to implement the proclamation on the working people's control committee and the special people's court was opened at the regional COPWE office here yesterday.

Comrade Dawit Wolde-Giorgis, COPWE Central Committee member and COPWE Representative of Eritrea region, opened the seminar in which participants drawn from production and distribution agencies, mass organizations, government institutions and administrative branches and the Revolutionary Army are taking part.

Comrade Dawit said that internal and external reactionaries tried to undermine our revolution by sabotaging the economy of the country and thus arrest our endeavour towards socialist reconstruction. They have not halted hatching their plots against the revolution and for this reason the present state of the class struggle requires the unstinted vigilance of progressives and the working people in general, Comrade Dawit pointed out.

Comrade Dawit noted that some greedy individuals disguised as revolutionaries and holding public responsibility are at present undermining the revolution and are becoming a hinderance to the economic reconstruction of the country. He added that a great deal of wastefulness is evidenced due to lack of knowledge. Weeding out exploiters, bringing embezzlers to justice, exposing corrupt individuals and curtailing damages that occur, and introducing socialist people's control through continuous education are the burning issues of the day, Comrade Dawit said.

Comrade Fikru Wolde Tensae, Chief Administrator of the region, speaking on the role of the administration in the anti-corruption campaign said that it is imperative that control must begin from oneself so that mistakes could be corrected in time. He urged all institutions to take good care of their property, train their staff, and strictly handle their accounting and bookkeeping systems. He expressed hope that the participants will apply the knowledge they obtain from the seminar to enhance the socialist reconstruction of the country and do away with defective cultural practices.

Speaking earlier, Comrade Kinate Taa, Head of the Discipline and Control department in the COPWE office of Eritrea region, said that the working people should take care of their property in accordance with the proclamation issued by the Revolutionary Government and should also be vigilant against individualist and covetous attitude.

CSO: 4700/935

EXPANSION OF POSTAL SERVICES NOTED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 7 Mar 82 p 8

[Text] Addis Ababa (EH)--The Ethiopian Postal Service Agency has opened more than 400 post offices throughout the country during the past seven years, according to Comrade Gezahagn Gebrewold, general manager of the Agency.

In an interview with the ETHIOPIAN HERALD, Comrade Gezahagn said the number of post offices, which was 378 in 1974, has now jumped to 800. Postal service in pre-revolution Ethiopia was largely at the disposal of the ruling class, he noted. Nowadays, however, its service is for the broad masses, he explained. Realizing the importance of correspondence, peasants' associations, urban dwellers' associations, students and members of the Revolutionary Army are very much collaborating to extend postal services, Comrade Gezahagn further explained.

18 sub-post offices in 18 Highers are opened in Addis Ababa alone. And as these are giving effective services, the Postal Service Agency is planning to open similar sub-post offices in and around Debrezcit, Agaro, Guma, and Gera district in Wollo region, as well as Diredawa in and Shashemene, it was learnt.

In order to create efficient postal correspondence in schools too, the agency is encouraging the formation of postal clubs, the general manager stated.

In addition, the agency plans to start postal saving service, cash on delivery service, postal order and agency service in the coming year, it was further learnt.

CSO: 4700/935

WEEKLY REVIEW OF NON-ENGLISH-LANGUAGE PRESS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 7 Mar 82 p 3

Article by Dereje Balcha in column: "Views, Comments, Opinions"]

[Text] The Oromo language weekly BARISA wrote in an editorial comment highlighted the radical proclamation nationalizing rural lands enabling the toiling peasant masses to become beneficiaries of the fruit of their labour. The paper indicated that in the forefront among the measures taken by the Revolutionary Government with the view to depriving the oppressor class of economic power is the Rural Lands Proclamation. It noted that the masses have risen in unison and paid immense sacrifices to realize the implementation of the proclamation.

BARISA pointed out that over 90 percent of the Ethiopian population depend on agriculture for their livelihood, and further noted that agriculture is the backbone of the national economy. In this connection, the Oromo language weekly outlined the nature of the archaic feudal landholding system that prevailed in the past and the subsequent hardships the peasant masses had to undergo. BARISA also noted that although the formally oppressed peasant masses were entangled by the widespread network of feudal landlords, at no time did they submit to the oppression and exploitation imposed upon them.

The February 1974 popular upsurge and the subsequent issuance of the radical Rural Lands Proclamation, BARISA stressed, is the culmination of the opposition of the masses of the Ethiopian population to which the hitherto scattered struggle of the rural peasant masses has contributed its part. The proclamation which was a hard blow to the oppressing class enemy liberated the toiling peasant masses who used to suffer for ages under feudal yoke, the paper added.

BARISA further outlined the gains of the peasantry and the sacrifices paid to safeguard the gains of the Revolution as well as the unity and territorial integrity of the Motherland. The paper also pointed out the efforts being exerted to lay the basis of socialist economy in rural Ethiopia, by way of expanding and strengthening peasants producers' cooperatives. BARISA stressed that since the revolution has made the peasant masses the beneficiaries of the fruits of their labour, they should always be on the alert to contribute their part in the on-going national construction drive under the leadership of the Revolutionary Government and COPWE.

In one of its editorial comments, the Amharic daily, ADDIS ZEMEN, also dwelt upon the same subject. The daily noted that among the measures that clearly indicated the radical and popular nature of our revolution right from the beginning is the historic proclamation that nationalized all rural lands. ZEMEN also outlined the exploitation of the peasant masses in prerevolution Ethiopia and the futile antipeople and counterrevolutionary activities of reactionary elements who lost control of the land. The Amharic daily also pointed out the various gains of the peasant masses and the part they are presently playing in safeguarding the gains of the Revolution and in the process of national construction.

In another editorial comment, ADDIS ZEMEN highlighted the acts of interference of the French Socialist Party in Ethiopia's internal affairs. In this connection, the paper noted that as our revolution strengthens and attains new stages of development, there are manifestations of increased anti-people machinations directed against it. The recent acts of the French Socialist Party, ZEMEN continued, is another manifestation of this nature. Thus, the paper added, the act does not surprise the masses; it rather alerts them to keep watcful eyes upon the enemy.

ZEMEN went on to note that the present French leadership is not the first in history to take power under the cover of socialism and thereby use the office to pursue misguided policies. The paper cited examples of fascist Germany during World War Two, and of the Siad Barre regime in Somalia as well as similar others in the Middle East, Asia and Latin America. However, the daily reminded, since they don't stick to the genuine Marxist-Leninist ideology and path of development, they readily expose themsleves. In this regard, ZEMEN revealed that although socialism is built on the basis of the objective conditions of a given country, there are certain characteristic features, of which one and the leading is struggle for world peace, the policy of peaceful coexistence and noninterference in the affairs of other states.

Accordingly, the Amharic daily stated, any measure taken outside of this general directive is nothing but a reflection of pretentious rather than socialistic stand. The paper thus cited such examples as the firm connection of some governments with racist South Africa and yet claiming to be socialist. ZEMEN stressed that Revolutionary Ethiopia does not see such governments as being any different from imperialist ones. The Ethiopian broad masses who have so far encountered a large number of psuedo-progressives both from within and without are well aware of the situation and are ready to frustrate hostile machinations any time, the paper concluded.

SERTO ADER,organ of the Central Committee of COPWE, and the Arabic language weekly, AL-ALEM, both focused their editorials on the long history of anti-imperialist struggle of the Ethiopian broad masses. They made the observations in connection with the celebrations of the 86th Anniversary of Adwa Victory Day. SERTO ADER recalled the struggle of the Ethiopian masses over the past 100 years with feudal oppressors internally and expansionists from outside. In this connection, the COPWE CC organ pointed out the various phenomena that took place in the month of Yekatit--the fascist Italian massacre in Addis Ababa and its surroundings, the victory attained at the Battle of Adwa, the outbreak of the ongoing popular revolution and the nationalization of rural lands.

SERTO ADER further outlined the ceaseless imperialist aggressions against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Ethiopia and the determination of the Ethiopian masses to rebuff all invasions. Success, the organ of the COPWE CC noted, was not due to supremacy in organization and strength, but the long history of unity in the face of any intruder against the unity and territorial integrity of the Motherland.

SERTO ADER asserted that the victories achieved by the broad masses in the course of the on-going revolution are also the result of this quality. However, since the forces of imperialism and reaction have not yet stopped their provocations either directly or indirectly, the Ethiopian working masses will more than ever strengthen their unity of purpose and renew their past history by frustrating reactionary machinations in all spheres, it concluded.

Also on its part, AL-ALEM outlined the significance of the victory of Adwa in line with the anti-imperialist tradition of the Ethiopian broad masses. The Arabic language weekly recalled the humiliating defeat of the Mogadisho regime which was supported by world imperialism and Arab reactionary regimes--traditional enemies of the Ethiopian masses. The paper pointed out that the hostile campaign by the French Socialist Party against the Multi-Faceted Red Star Revolutionary Campaign aimed at the overall development of Eritrea region is also a recent manifestation of the same nature.

The Amharic weekly, YEZAREITU ETHIOPIA devoted its editorial comment to the struggle of Ethiopian women for world peace. The paper outlined the oppression and exploitation of Ethiopian women under the now defunct feudo-bourgeois regime and the role they played in the on-going revolutionary process to do away with the legacies of the archaic system. YEZAREITU also pointed out the gains of Ethiopian women, their organization at national level into REWA, and their contribution in the maintenance of world peace.

CSO: 4700/935

MINISTRY TO INTRODUCE NEW WORK DIRECTIVES

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 6 Mar 82 pp 1, 5

[Text] Addis Ababa (ENA)--The Ministry of Industry is to introduce, beginning April 9, 1981, New Work directives conducive to improved management and centralized control in the industrial sector of the economy.

This was disclosed here yesterday by Comrade Tesfaye Dinka, Minister of Industry and COPWE Central Committee member, when opening a seminar which will deliberate on the New Work directives and assess industrial activities and production during 1980/81 and the first half of 1981/82.

Taking part in the two-day seminar, held at the National Lottery Hall, are general managers of corporations and factories under the ministry of industry, union leaders and political activists.

Comrade Tesfaye said the new work directives cover goods purchasing, production, repair and maintenance, sales, project study and execution, finance, administration, legal procedures and internal control.

The minister said those employees of the ministry who openly engage in embezzlement should soon be made accountable. He also pointed out that the irresponsible handling of property and production material acquired at great cost and the waste caused as a result of indifference are serious problems which have to be effectively tackled.

The minister urged participants who hold positions of leadership and responsibility within industrial establishments to fully realize the significance of the workers' control committees and to contribute meaningfully to the success of the anti-corruption campaign.

Comrade Tesfaye also pointed out that the industrial sector holds a prominent place in the Red Star Multifaceted Development Campaign in Eritrea region and said it was the responsibility of the ministry to ensure that factories under government management there work full time and produce to the maximum of their capacity.

Speaking earlier, Comrade Asrat Bekele, head of the factory workers industrial union, recalled the struggle put up and victories scored by workers during the years of revolutionary challenge.

CSO: 4700/935

'YEKATIT' NOTES ACHIEVEMENTS OF NATIONAL CARRIER

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 5 Mar 82 pp 1, 5

[Text] Addis Ababa (ENA)--Forty-three students from 14 countries including Greece and India are presently attending civil aviation courses at the Ethiopian Airlines Training Institute.

This is contained in an article appearing in the latest issue of the Amharic YEKATIT which gives a special coverage to the national carrier stressing its traditional reputation and reliability.

Under the title Ethiopian Airlines--a proud Example of National Reconstruction--the Amharic magazine focuses on the well-known organization employing 2,958 workers of whom 506 are women that has rocketed Ethiopia's transportation facility "from mules to jets."

The article on the airline's trainig institute centers on the theme that there is a self-evident and convincing correlation between the training institute and the reputation of the national carrier. Based on interviews with Comrade Col Asrat Tessema, the Training Director, Comrade Col. Leul-Seged Abebe, head of the Pilot Training School, and different section heads of the training institute, the article emphasises the role of training for a well-organised and renowned organisation like the Ethiopian Airlines.

An organized airlines has to have trained manpower, states the article, adding that this is all the more so for an organization which gives highest priority to the safety of its passengers and cargoes.

The ever-increasing and expanding aviation service demands that manpower deployed in this field should be fully equipped with the creation of modern technology and with the technological know-how of modern planes, according to the article.

The safety record of the Ethiopian Airlines, the article in YEKATIT asserts, has close relation with its training facilities. The article outlines the variety of training offered at the Airline's institute and notes that the Airline also gives special attention to what is known as "recurrent" education both in the technical and piloting fields.

In the technical field, for example, the high standard of carrier maintenance within the Ethiopian Airlines has enabled it to meet consistently the criteria of civil aviation organizations thereby raising no doubt whatsoever about its capability to win every year what was described as "certificate of approval," according to YEKATIT.

After elaborating on the intracacies of a "simulator" training for which the Airline used to pay millions of Birr before installing the machine (or machines) within its training unit, the article in YEKATIT proudly reveals that even reputed and well-established practising pilots of "Ethiopian" undergo training sessions with such instruments at least twice a year to guarantee utmost capability and reliability.

Thanks to the training facilities of the national carrier, today the daily routine activities of the Airline which demand the highest proficiency to the last detail are wholly handled by Ethiopians, the magazine declares.

The article explains why foreign trainees from a number of African as well as from Middle East countries have chosen to follow their training here. The trainees pay tribute to the ability of their Ethiopian teachers and eulogize the qualities of the training institute.

Reference is made in the article to the fact that the Institute has been chosen as the training centre for pilots and aviation technicians of English-speaking African countries, and, it is emphatically noted in the article, the stage reached is a source of great pride to the nation.

CSO: 4700/935

ERITREA SHOE FACTORY TO EXPORT PRODUCTS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 5 Mar 82 pp 1, 5

[Text] Asmara (ENA)--Preparation is underway here to export leather shoes produced by the Eritrea Shoe Factory.

Disclosing this, Comrade Woldai Tesfaye, General Manager of the Factory, said that 600 sample leather shoe products for adults sent for sale to one of the countries in the Middle East were bought instantly proving the acceptability of the product in that country.

The Manager pointed out that the Factory is awaiting the sales outcome of similar leather shoe products sent recently to the Middle East, Djibouti, Kenya and the Sudan.

The Factory, which has a production capacity of 735 pairs of shoes per day for adults, women and children, uses 50 shoe sewing machines of which five were newly acquired. At present 10 workers from the sewing section are following courses to upgrade their skills. It is planned to send one employee from the chemistry section of the Factory to Kenya to enable him pursue higher education in his area of specialisation.

Comrade Woldai further said that a total of 113,164 pairs of shoes have been produced to date from the total production quota of 190,000 allotted for this production year, an achievement attributed to the healthy work relationship, characterized by proletarian discipline, between the management and the workers as well as to the extra hours the workers have volunteered to wards raising production.

Comrade Tekie Habte, Chairman of the overall discussion forum of the factory, said the workers numbering 270 altogether were exerting every effort to translate into practice the decisions of the Asmara Manifesto issued by the High Level Meeting on the Multifaceted Red Star Revolutionary Campaign in Eritrea Region.

CSO: 4700/935

MINISTER DISCLOSES ESTABLISHMENT OF OVER 800 PRODUCER'S CO-OPS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 5 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] Asmara, (ENA)--Some 837 peasant producers' cooperatives which provide a firm and secure basis for the building of a socialist economy have been established throughout Ethiopia.

This was disclosed here Yesterday by Comrade Dr Geremew Debele, Minister of Agriculture and COPWE Central Committee member, on the occasion of the Seventh Anniversary of the Nationalization of Rural Land.

The Minister said the increase in the number of peasant producers' cooperatives from 544 in March 1981 to 837 at present attests to heightened awareness among the peasantry. He made note of the various incentives provided by the Revolutionary Government to encourage the formation of peasant producers' cooperatives, including the provision of material and technical assistance and the establishment of peasants' villages.

Comrade Dr Geremew said a healthy urban-rural relationship exists and said the flow of agricultural products from the rural areas to the urban centres and that of finished industrial goods from the urban to the rural sectors is proceeding satisfactorily.

The Minister pointed out that 679 peasant service cooperatives with a cumulative capital of 60,364,921 Birr were established up to December 1981. He said the outcome of efforts towards the establishment of multipurpose peasants training centres is encouraging and underlined the role of these facilities in familiarizing the peasant masses with improved farm practices. The Agarfa Multi-Purpose Peasant Training Centre--serving Bale, Arassi, Gamo Gofa and Sidamo regions--is being completion, it was stated.

Comrade Dr Geremew said the afforestation programme underway throughout the country with the cooperation of the Ministry of Agriculture and peasants' associations, is also very encouraging as is the all-round effort to build terrace dams. He said the feeder road building project in the rural areas, also undertaken by the peasantry on self-help basis with the technical assistance of the Ministry, is likewise producing results.

Comrade Dr Geremew concluded by noting that the Revolutionary Government's programme of building a socialist economy in the country, including Eritrea region, is very encouraging.

CSO: 4700/935

GARAGE, FUEL DEPOT INAUGURATED IN AWASSA

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] Awassa, (ENA)--A repair and maintenance garage and petrol dump built by the southern regions branch of the Ethiopian Water Works Authority (EWWCA) in collaboration with the Canadian government were inaugurated here Saturday.

The two facilities were opened by H.E. Mr Milfrid M. Agnes, Ambassador of Canada to Socialist Ethiopia, in the presence of Comrade Kefyalew Achamyeleh, Deputy Commissioner of the National Water Resources Commission, and Comrade Chanyalew Alemayehu, General Manager of the EWWCA.

Also present were Canadian experts who took part in the construction project.

H.E. Ambassador Agnes spoke of his government's financial and technical assistance to Socialist Ethiopia.

Comrade Kefyalew on his part noted that the Canadian government had earlier contributed 9,000,000 Canadian dollars to the water drilling project in the southern regions and also provided expert assistance.

Comrade Alebachew Beyene, head of the Authority's southern regions branch, said the Canadian government donated 51,504 Birr complemented by a 10,929 Birr grant by the Ethiopian government for the building of the garage. The two governments contributed 19,075 and 14,400 Birr respectively for the building of the fuel depot.

CSO: 4700/935

SIGNIFICANCE OF ROAD IN GELEB-HAMERBAKO PROVINCE STRESSED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 5 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] Addis Ababa (EH)--Construction work on Woito-Tourni Kalem-Menogoulti-Fejej rural road in Geleb-Hamerbako province, Gamo Gofa administrative region, has contributed greatly to the improvement of the life of the peasant masses and nomadic tribes in the area.

This was disclosed in a statement made by Comrade Kaleab Hale Georgis, head of the project Kaleab Haile Georgis, head of the project, during a brief talk with a team of newsmen that visited the region recently.

Speaking about the life-saving role played by the rural roads in the province, Comrade Kaleab revealed that during the 1972/73 E.C. drought that hit the province, relief aid has reached the area through these roads. The head of the project said that the weather in that part of the region is harsh, with little rains and hot climate.

Comrade Kaleab also noted that since the roads end at the border with neighbouring countries, they have facilitated the defence of the national boundaries along with their significant contributions in the social and economic spheres. To date, a total of 280 kms. of rural roads have been constructed in the province. Along with the construction work, the project also renders free technical service to government and mass organization vehicles that use the roads, Comrade Kaleab added. The project has 25 permanent and about 200 seasonal and contractual employees.

CSO: 4700/935

LIVESTOCK IMPROVEMENT IN ARSSI UNDERLINED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 6 Mar 82 pp 1, 3

[Text] Assela (ENA)--The animal husbandry section of the Arssi Rural Development Agency (ARDA) has reported making encouraging headway in efforts towards combatting animal disease and cross-breeding.

The national cattle resources currently stand ninth in the world and first in Africa. Although the number of cattle is significantly high, parasitic and contagious disease pose grave problems.

The experiments of ARDA specialized unit are believed to help improve significantly the poor condition and milk delivery capacity of cattle in the country.

Comrade Dr Assefa Adane, head of the animal husbandry section, disclosed that experiments made by his unit during the last 14 years have proved rewarding in controlling animal disease and in the cross-breeding of indigenous cattle with foreign strains. Experts in this field have been conducting vaccinations and familiarizing the peasantry with better cattle breeding methods.

The WORLD ANIMAL REVIEW covered in its last issue the findings of the unit in cattle resource development. There are plans to carry in future issues of the publication the research activities of the unit with the cooperation of ICLA.

Some of the results of the experiments include the increase in milking capacity of "cows." For instance a single "Arssi" cow which yields 167 litres of milk per year was enabled to give 338 litres in the same period when it was provided with proper fodder instead of ordinary grass. Corresponding figures in the case of a cross-bred cow were 1,468 and 1,300 litres respectively.

According to Comrade Dr Assefa, the unit's cattle breeding centre in Kolfe had distributed at fixed prices 1,358 cross bred heifers among individual and organized cattle breeders with the aim of increasing the number of improved stock and thereby boosting cattle product.

The unit has also a simen collection and preservation laboratory which conducts artificial breeding of animals. In the last six years, the laboratory has cross bred and distributed among peasants over 9,000 heifers and bulls. Cattle breeders are at the same time encouraged to pay more attention to the production of better strains than to numerical increase.

The cross breeding experiment has also resulted in the production of heifer with early fertility period and bulls with greater ploughing capacity. The experiment shows that a pair of cross bred bulls can plough for ten hours at a time while a pair of local breed can work only up to four nours. A heifer with foreign strain can reach fertility two years after birth while the local breed takes four-five years.

Preparations are underway to launch better and effective milk distribution services by the Agency by encouraging cattle breeders to sell their product to the centre which in turn will pasteurize and distribute the commodity among consumers.

Experiments on sheep and poultry production have also shown encouraging results. It was found out through experiments that a single cross bred sheep can produce two pairs of lamb in a year while a single hen of similar strain can give over 200 eggs per year.

CSO: 4700/935

PRODUCERS CO-OP BUILDS MODERN GRAIN STORE

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 6 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] Harar (ENA)--The Legamo locality peasants producers' cooperative in Harar Zuria province, Hararghe region, has recently built a modern grain store at a cost of 45,000 Birr.

The store, which has a capacity of 10,000 quintals, was inaugurated Thursday by Comrade Zeleke Beyene, COPWE Central Committee member and COPWE representative for Hararghe region.

The inaugural ceremony was also highlighted by a presentation to the cooperative of a maize-cleaning machine that costs 6,000 Birr in recognition of the cooperative's rapid progress along the socialist line of development.

The 332-strong cooperative, which had won a prize of 7,000 Birr for its exemplary activities in the past, commands a capital of 184,000 Birr.

Established three years ago with peasants that practised subsistence farming, the cooperative today possesses a tractor, 122 oxen, 75 pack animals and 385 basic implements.

The cooperative's sale from vegetables has reached the 145,267 Birr mark. Its farm spreads over 627 hectares, 40 of which is devoted to vegetable production.

CSO: 4700/935

RRC DISTRIBUTES GRAIN TO DROUGHT AFFECTED AREAS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 4 Mar 82 p 10

[Text] Addis Ababa (ENA)--The Relief and Rehabilitation Commission (RRC) disclosed here yesterday that about 60,000 quintals of grain and nutritious food were distributed in the lowlands of Gondar region bordering on Tigrai region where recurrent drought and counter-revolutionary activities have affected sizeable number of people.

The north western provinces of this region, which are along the Tigre and Wollo borders had recurrent rainfall shortage during the last successive years while anti-unity bandits had caused considerable damage to public property, the RRC said.

The Commission had launched a road construction campaign through the "Food for Work" programme during which 210 feeder roads which run to inaccessible areas were constructed by the populace. Food and clothing were also distributed among the people who were affected by natural and man-made calamities around Lake Tana.

The RRC disclosed that at present 4,650 people who have returned from exile are under its care in Gondar region while 968 peasants and 2,524 family heads are settled in three centres run by the Commission in Foggera and Chilga provinces.

The settlements have schools, clinics, flour mills warehouses and other amenities. The occupants of those centres have put under cultivation 540 hectares of land which is expected to produce 8,450 quintals of grain and 700 quintals of cotton during the current crop year.

The RRC has opened in the region a repair and maintenance at a cost of 1.5 million Birr and a number of other government and mass organizations are also served by the facility.

The Commission has a provincial office, two settlement coordinating offices and two rehabilitation centres in Gondar region.

CSO: 4700/935

BRIEFS

URBAN HOUSING IN ERITREA--Asmara (ENA)--Measures to fully implement in Eritrea region the proclamation that nationalized urban land and extra houses are underway in Massawa, Keren and Mendefera towns, according to the Regional Office of the Ministry of Urban Development and Housing. The urban housing task force of the Ministry is conducting the clearance survey in the framework of the Red Star Reconstruction and Development Campaign. Individuals and organizations claiming ownership were advised to make the necessary land and house deeds readily available. [Text] [Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 p 3]

AWASSA TOWN ACTION PLAN--According to the ENA report from Awassa, the Awassa Town Council met Sunday and, after evaluating economic, political and social gains attained since the third round UDA election, charted out the future plan of action. Comrade Fisseha Debele, Deputy Administrator of the town, submitted a report to the Council on the various development activities and the difficulties encountered in the past six months. Following wide-ranging deliberations on diverse problems, the Council members reiterated their resolve to serve the masses wholeheartedly and to implement in deed COPWE's directives. The members of the Council also declared their readiness to contribute their share in the anti-corruption campaign underway and pledged to pay every sacrifice towards the success of the Red Star Revolutionary Campaign and the Asmara Manifesto. [Text] [Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 p 3]

HARARGHE YOUTH FOR CAMPAIGN--Harar (ENA)--The third congress of the Hararghe regional REYA unit declared at the end of its three-day deliberations the readiness of the youth to contribute towards the success of the Red Star Revolutionary Campaign. The major issues discussed by the congress participants during the three-day discussion including the establishment and consolidation of REYA units, the dissemination of ideological education and the campaign to strengthen REYA chapters in the Ogaden. The congress also took a firm stand against retrogressive attitudes and practices and decided to further enhance artistic and sports disciplines among the youth. It was learnt that 185,000 youth are organized under 969 basic and 12 provincial REYA units and 17 school and organizational youth committees. [Text] [Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 p 3]

JUDGES IN GDR--Addis Ababa (ENA)--Five judges from the Supreme Court left for the German Democratic Republic (GDR) to familiarize themselves with court procedures and experiences in socialist countries with the aim of improving court procedures in Ethiopia. The group is led by Comrade Abebe Workie, Department Head of the Legal Administration in the Ministry of Law and Justice. While in the GDR, the group will familiarize itself in the operation and management of courts and related subjects the group will also exchange views with professionals and experts in various field related to legal matters. [Text] [Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 Mar 82 p 3]

RETURNEES EMPLOYED IN CONSTRUCTION--Asmara (ENA)--Returnees who are joining the revolutionary camp after escaping from the secessionist bandits are being gainfully employed here for the economic construction and for the translation into deeds of the Multi-Faceted Red Star Revolutionary Campaign. Many of the returnees who are deployed recently in the Gejeret hospital project in Asmara are rendering invaluable services as carpenters and masons. Asked to give their opinons, some of the workers engaged on the project said that they were happy to have had job opportunities and that they had found the propaganda of the secessionist bandits that their lives would be in danger if they join the revolutionary camp as utterly false and groundless. The returnees praised the revolutionay government for the steps it is taking to employ the returnees in addition to the care which it is giving to them. The returnees further expressed their readiness to implement the Multi-Faceted Red Star Revolutionary Campaign. [Text] [Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 7 Mar 82 pp 1, 8]

CSO: 4700/935

BRIEFS

ISRAELI RELATIONS--Although the results of the secret visit of the Israeli Defence Minister to Libreville last year were "positive," relations between Gabon and the Jewish State remain unchanged, according to the MAARIV newspaper in Tel Aviv. President Bongo is unwilling to take the initiative on reestablishing diplomatic links with Israel without the support of President Mobutu of Zaire, according to MAARIV. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 681]

BONGO ON MORENA--Following calls from an opposition movement, Morena, for a multi-party political system, President Bongo has reminded the country that Gabon's Constitution outlaws the existence of more than one party. He added that the only way Morena would get power was by a coup d'etat. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 681]

CSO: 4700/937

BRIEFS

ESTABLISHMENT OF ALGESA--A National Airline has been established to provide the first regular air link between the island capital of Malbo and both the mainland and other West African countries. The airline, Algesa, said it hoped soon to supplement its one Cessna 410 aircraft, which is already in service between Malabo and Doaula, with a larger plane. Intratex of Dusseldorf, West Germany, is to manage the airline and take a minority share in it. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 p 614]

CSO: 4700/937

U.S. SAID TO USE POLAND AS COVER FOR AID TO S. AFRICA

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Migueis Lopes Junior: "Reagan's 'Holdup'"]

[Text] Without much surprise, the United States administration has just removed the decayed tooth which the timid embargo imposed upon South Africa by Carter has always been for it.

Inoffensive as it was--it only prohibited the purchase of certain products and technology by Pretoria--the embargo, like "the defense of human rights," had to be instituted in a rather round-about way. Carter wanted a foreign policy tailored to a "morality" very much his own: "Humanitarian" imperialism. Reagan and his supporters define their relations with the world in terms of the "wild bunch" in a "saloon." With his finger on the trigger, he tries to cause the least possible disturbance.

Reagan's policy openly expresses the idea of capital: Morality is a value which is directly proportional to a bank account.

Continuing to use the image of the "saloon," it is thus not surprising that "cowboy" Carter on successive occasions had to recompense and inspire the boys in the gang of his lesser ally, that is, Pieter Botha and company. It is not surprising that he should do this, for example, while the OAU at the same time rejects the proposals cooked up between the Contact Group and the RAS [expansion unknown] for the kind of "independence" for Namibia which would be based on the schemes and the customs of "Western-style" democracy. Provided of course there is no further "importing of foreign ideologies, such as Marxism, into Africa."

From a group such as Reagan and his foreign policy advisors one can indeed expect things like that!

Some individuals, citing the attitude of the United States toward Poland and comparing it to the troubles in El Salvador, Guatemala, Turkey, Haiti, or South Africa, say that this is a matter of "double standards." By way of analogy, this would be the same thing as the "standard meters" which the colonial shopkeepers used to measure fabric. There was one for customers which was only 80 centimeters long. There was another one for the auditor and the tax collector and for friends and it was 100 centimeters long. So, the United States imposes a boycott on Poland and the USSR for alleged violations of human rights but then moves ever closer to the "apartheid" regime. Why? This is the question asked by those who are using the term "double standard." There is indeed a discrepancy here. Reagan has just one standard and there is no danger of the auditor finding out what really goes on because he is the auditor himself.

The standard always revolves around economic interests and the same old capitalist aggressiveness which, in this case, ideology emphasizes and presents as a model of virtue instead of attempting to hide or camouflage it.

Firing on Poland--on Poland which does not do Reagan any good (something which many of those who cultivate the "goodconscience of the Left" in Europe are forgetting)--once again was a method used by the gang.

In bank holdups--Hollywood tells us--they often use the tactic of diverting the attention of the police to a distant place, far away from the target to be hit, while the rest of the gang calmly carries out the "holdup."

Creating a big worldwide hullabaloo about Poland therefore was the classical form of avoiding attention while support is being stepped up for military and civilian fascists who still survive in the four corners of the world.

The only thing is that many people are not only spectators watching this movie.

5058
CSO: 4742/238

INTERPARTY COOPERATION AGREEMENT WITH HUNGARY SIGNED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] An agreement between the FRELIMO Party and the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party [MSZMP] was signed in Maputo yesterday as part of the interparty cooperation that exists between the two countries. Laszlo Ballai, head of the MSZMP Central Committee's Political Department, was later received by Marcelino dos Santos, member of the Permanent Political Committee and Central Committee secretary for economic policy of the FRELIMO Party.

The agreement was signed on behalf of FRELIMO by Julio Zamith Carrilho, member of the Central Committee, minister of public works and housing, and head of the Production and Trade Department, while Laszlo Ballai, member of the Central Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party, signed for the MSZMP.

After the interparty agreement was signed, the two parties issued a communique in which they reaffirmed their firm support for and solidarity with the struggle by the Namibian people, led by SWAPO, to gain their independence in keeping with Resolution 435 of the UN Security Council.

They also condemned the South African racist regime's destabilizing action in the region and reiterated their support for the struggle by the South African people, led by the ANC, for their liberation and for elimination of the system of apartheid.

Summing up the situation, Julio Zamith Carrilho stressed that the agreement explicitly "provides a substratum for relations between the parties, peoples, and governments of the two countries. It establishes secure and palpable objectives for the 1981-1983 biennium and represents a political materialization of the strengthened will to cooperate that exists on both sides as a result of the Mozambican people's successful phase of armed struggle for liberation against Portuguese colonialism."

Julio Carrilho added during his speech that the two parties and peoples will strengthen the socialist front with respect to the aggressive and escalating activities of imperialism, which, particularly in this part of the African continent, is trying to sabotage initiatives by the peace-loving forces.

The current agreement is the result of talks held recently between delegations from the People's Republic of Mozambique and the Hungarian People's Republic.

11798
CSO: 4742/234

AGREEMENT WITH FAO; SPANISH, SWISS FOOD DONATIONS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 3 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] An agreement covering assistance to the transportation sector and in the area of agricultural revitalization in our country as part of the UN Food Assistance Campaign for Africa has been signed in Maputo by the People's Republic of Mozambique [RPM] and the FAO.

The agreement was signed by Enny Almeida Matos of the RPM Planning Commission's National Directorate for International Cooperation and by Goncalves de Moya, the FAO's representative in our country.

The project calls for the supplying of a total of 95 trucks and the support and training of Mozambican technicians. It is being financed by the Italian Government at an amount of $3,414,407 (about 129.5 million meticals).

As part of the UN Food Assistance Campaign for Africa, the FAO has granted the Mozambican Government a total of about $50,000 (1.85 million meticals) for the revival of corn grinding, the production of sisal, the extraction of "hegocenin," and a visit by four FAO advisers for research in the cotton sector.

After the agreement was signed, Enny Almeida Matos emphasized that the two projects agreed on by our country and the FAO would improve the RPM's food situation, which has been weakened not only because of historical reasons linked to development but also by weather conditions, which have helped to make the food shortage worse.

These two projects are a confirmation of the good relations between the RPM and the FAO and are the result of closer ties of cooperation between our country and that international organization.

In another connection, a communique issued to the press announces that in response to the RPM's appeal to the international community, the Kingdom of Spain has made a gift of 2,000 tons of wheat that will soon be unloaded at one of our country's ports.

Also in response to the RPM's appeal to the international community, the Swiss Government has decided to donate 1,000 tons of corn from Zimbabwe. The corn will be delivered to our country's representatives through Manica Province.

11798
CSO: 4742/234

INCREASE OF CANADIAN COOPERANT ASSISTANCE PLANNED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Mar 82 p 8

> [Text] The increase in Canadian cooperation through support for the various combined efforts under the economic and social development plan of the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique] was one of the central questions discussed during the annual meeting of cooperants from that country in North America who are active in Mozambique; the meeting was held recently in Maputo, our reporter was told by a meeting spokesman.

According to that same source, all recommendations that emerged from that meeting were forwarded to the representative of the Canadian mission abroad which has its headquarters in Salisbury.

The meeting was attended by all Canadian cooperants who are on duty in Mozambique in various activity sectors.

At this time, more than 30 Canadian technicians from various specialties are working in the RPM; they include doctors, journalists, agronomists, civil construction engineers, and other specialists, including lecturers who are serving at the Eduardo Mondlane University.

The agenda for the annual meeting of Canadian cooperants in Mozambique also included a discussion of forms of support for the civilian construction industry. especially construction cooperatives, establishment of small food stores, transportation, and others.

The dispatch of more Canadian technicians to work in Mozambique was another one of the questions discussed during the meeting that was held last week in Maputo.

In line with the statements made by the meeting spokesman, it is expected that the number of Canadian cooperants in the RPM will go up to 50.

Questioned as to his impressions of cooperation work in Mozambique, the same spokesman said that he is very happy with it and that everyone was very much interested in participating in the various efforts designed to provide vocational training for Mozambicans.

The question of training Mozambican cadres in the various specialties represented by each Canadian was another one of the questions discussed at length during the annual review meeting.

As for the recommendations sent to the representative of the Canadian mission abroad, with headquarters in Zimbabwe, the spokesman said that everybody was sure that these proposals would be accepted and supported by the Canadian government.

The meeting, which was held on the premises of Campismo Park in Maputo, was attended by representatives from the various government and party agencies so as to enable them to hear the various proposals under discussion; at the same time they were able to provide some opinions regarding the requirements in each of the sectors.

5058
CSO: 4742/23

MACHEL CONCEDES IMPORTANT ROLE OF PROTESTANT CHURCH

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 6 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Manuel Tome: "Dignifying National Independence"]

> [Excerpt] A big popular rally in Xai-Xai, attended by between 25,000 and 30,000 persons, marked the end of the working visit which President Samora Machel has just paid to the Province of Gaza. The chief of state returned to Maputo late yesterday afternoon after having been received by Joaquim Chissano, minister of foreign affairs, and by other high party and government leaders. At the Xai-Xai gathering, President Samora Machel said that it is important to dignify national independence and to upgrade the Mozambican individual. "The socialist fatherland is for everybody," he said at one point.

Talking frankly and openly to the people and with those dynamic and contagious phrases which are so characteristic of him, President Samora Machel began by telling the popular gathering about the reason for his visit to the Province of Gaza: To work with the people and to find out how the province is engaged in the construction of a new society on the free soil of Mozambique; to see how the party and government agencies function, how they organize and direct the popular masses, and what degree of confidence they enjoy among them; and to pay homage to the heroes of the country's resistance.

"Through the example of resistance to the invader, through the strong feeling of independence, we are rendering homage to Emperor Gungunhana, to Maguiguane,and to many other fighters, warriors of the resistance, whose example inspires the generations yet to come," said Samora Machel in this respect.

"The great degree of readiness of the masses in responding to the call of the party to put an end to underdevelopment is not always met with a correct response from the local government agencies," said Samora Machel; he then added his various findings: Carelessness, lack of interest, and a spirit of "letting things drift," while cities and town in the province have dirty streets where the weeds grow.

The chief of state explained that the causes of these problems are to be found in the absence of authority and in the corruption which springs from the compromising and collusion among some officials.

Value of Nation's Independence

"Today we live a free life, our heads held high, with pride in our history," said President Samora Machel in talking about the fact that the people themselves liberated the nation and chose their own way to put an end to underdevelopment.

Samora Machel added: "FRELIMO brought with it national unity, civilization based on respect for the individual, on love of liberty and respect for man, for honor personality, for the dignity of the Mozambican individual, for equality among men. FRELIMO gave the people back its culture."

On that occasion, President Samora Machel said that we must not permit camouflaged prostitution nor can we permit the country's women to be violated in this manner because "this is dishonor."

Child pregnancies, premature marriages springing from certain circumstances, and the birth of children without a father, plus adultery--these were other phenomena that earned condemnation.

Looking at these aspects, at these values of the settler's culture, the country's top leader urged the people: "Let us cultivate our moral integrity which means breaking with the morality of the ruler and assuming the socialist ethic."

"We must establish correct relations between men and women, relations which will lead to mutual respect, to love, and to affection. Beating your wife, coming home drunk after drawing your pay is something for animals without conscience and without reason," added President Samora Machel.

Socialist Fatherland Is for Everybody

President Samora Machel during his speech recognized the contribution made by the Protestant churches to the development of the spirit of resistance and struggle against the invader.

At this point, Samora Machel recalled that the country's policy is clear: "We respect the religion of each and every one. It is a constitutional right because we consider every religious person above all to be a Mozambican, a patriot."

Since for religious persons everything is a gift of God, party militants believe in the strength of man, in his creative capacity to change the world.

This conviction is the proof of the country's own experience in the armed struggle. It was the men who bore arms who liberated the fatherland, it was not God who did that.

Marshal Samora Machel then again talked about the armed bandits who create trouble and confusion in some districts and he recalled that the people in those places expressed a desire and determination to take up arms to wipe out the armed bands, made up of drifters, idlers, and parasites who want to live off the hard work of others.

5058
CSO: 4742/238

PEOPLE REQUEST WEAPONS TO FIGHT 'BANDITS'

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 27 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Carlos Cardoso]

[Text] (AIM)--The Mozambican Government is going to arm the inhabitants of towns and villages in central and northern Inhambane Province who have been grievously affected by the criminal action of armed gangs.

That decision was announced on Thursday by President Samora Machel during his visit to Nova Mambone and Vilanculos, located on the coast 700 kilometers north of Maputo.

At a rally in Vilanculos, Samora Machel spoke at length concerning that problem, and when he asked "What must we do?" about 5,000 voices answered in unison: "Give us weapons!"

About an hour before arriving in Vilanculos, the Mozambican chief of state had received the same request from the inhabitants of Nova Mambone.

The Mozambican chief of state said in Vilanculos that the armed gangs must not be viewed as the enemy. "They are gangs of criminals; they are bandits who rob, kill, and rape women. The enemy is something different," said Samora Machel.

In the city of Inhambane on Wednesday, President Samora Machel had said during a meeting with the provincial government that an enemy's mission involves a social exigency--a specific methodology. The president said: "Ian Smith's racist and minority regime was an enemy, but not these gangs. They are bandits."

There was quite lively participation by the inhabitants throughout the 90-minute rally in Vilanculos, especially when President Samora mentioned that point. "What do they do?" asked the president. An old man answered in front of the crowd: "They attack us and destroy our cars when we are going to Beira." A woman added: "They cut off ears and lips and steal our money." Another woman spoke up to say: "Now they are also cutting off women's breasts."

At my side, two Italian nuns who have worked in the Vilanculos District for a number of years nodded their heads in agreement when the woman mentioned that new method of sowing panic among the inhabitants. One of them said she knew of some cases where women's breasts had been cut off. Samora Machel asked: "And who are they?" A young man shouted: "They are infiltrators from South Africa." "Yes," the president continued, "but are they South Africans or Mozambicans?" "Mozambicans," the crowd answered. The president said: "Then they are our sons and fathers, our uncles and brothers--they are like domestic animals that have been lost in the forest and are now returning as wild animals." And he added: "They are bandits, not soldiers. A soldier does not go around killing children and raping women. They are like the 'mabandidos' in Lourenco Marques in colonial times or the 'tsotsi' in Johannesburg. Do you remember the 'mabandidos'?" ("Yes.") "And do you know about the 'tsotsi'?" ("Yes.") "They are like them. They are bandits. They are criminals."

Samora Machel then recalled the election process of 1977 and the process of restructuring the party in 1978. Investigations carried out locally by the armed forces and government officials and information from the Ministry of Security show that many of those recruited by the bandits are men whose candidacies for the People's Assembly and the party were rejected by the inhabitants in 1977 and 1978. Throughout the country, the people rejected candidates who had been part of colonialism's repressive structures and those whose common behavior aroused popular distrust.

At the conclusion of the rally, President Samora Machel asked: "Who wants weapons with which to struggle against the bandits?" Children, old men and women--everyone--raised their hands.

The president continued: "The people in Morrumbene have already requested weapons, and they want to go as far as Mabote."

Mabote is a small settlement that depends almost entirely on a sawmill located there. It is situated in the northwestern part of Inhambane Province on the road to the triangle formed by the Gaza and Manica provincial boundaries. It is there that action by the armed gangs has been felt most severely. A plausible explanation is that they are trying to set up a base following their severe setbacks in the Mossurize District of Manica Province.

That is also the starting point for attacks farther south by groups that live like outlaws. To obtain food, they attack scattered settlements or cars traveling between Inhambane and Beira.

The fact that the attitude of the inhabitants of Vilanculos toward the armed gangs is more combative than terrified is due to the quite active role they played in supporting Zimbabwean guerrilla refugees during the 4 years of war against the Rhodesian Army.

Today in Vilanculos and its vicinity, one can still see the militiamen who were trained and armed at that time.

11798
CSO: 4742/234

CORRECTION OF ERRORS IN RURAL SOCIALIZATION ADVOCATED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpts] In the process of popularizing and implementing the Prospective Indicative Plan, there is an imperative need to recognize the errors committed in rural socialization, according to a recommendation approved during the Second Special Session of the Nampula Provincial Assembly.

It was also suggested at that 2-day meeting, which ended last 27 February, that the correction of those errors must result from joint efforts by the peasants.

In studying the problems involved in rural socialization, the participants in the Second Special Session of the Nampula Provincial Assembly concluded, among other things, that mobilization of the inhabitants has included paternalistic features and that this has inhibited creative initiative among the members of cooperatives, creating in them a spirit of dependence on machinery and external support.

According to information from Radio Mozambique in that province, several actions will be undertaken, including the involvement of deputies to the Provincial Assembly in the mobilization and supervision of inhabitants in the communal villages and in collective production--with a view to putting to an end to the previous situation.

The meeting was held under the leadership of Governor Feliciano Gundana and was attended by a brigade from the Permanent Committee of the People's Assembly headed by Minister of Health Pascoal Mucumbi. At the conclusion of the meeting, the participants contributed a total of 9,000 meticals to help defray the cost of holding the fourth congress.

Maputo Provincial Assembly Concludes its Work

The Provincial Assembly of Maputo Province, which ended its work yesterday under the leadership of Minister of Foreign Trade Salomao Munguambe, analyzed the problems affecting the province at various levels, noting that corrective measures should be introduced into all sectors of activity so as to take more efficient advantage of the existing potentialities.

Along with other matters, the state agrarian sector and the program for rural development and socialization were subjected to extensive treatment and discussion.

It was noted that in Maputo Province, there is a vast people's movement in the process of establishing cooperatives. It happens, however, that there is no structure directly responsible for strengthening that initiative.

The weak support that the agricultural cooperatives receive from the state agrarian sector was also one of the main issues discussed, and the assembly recommended that there be compulsory implementation by the state enterprises of the guidelines on the coordination of production plans.

11798
CSO: 4742/234

DIFFICULTIES CAUSE DISAPPOINTING SUGAR HARVEST

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 27 Feb 82 p 3

[Article by Carlos Nobre]

[Text] "Problems of various kinds that affected the 1981 sugar season are the reason why the sugar production plan was underfulfilled by about 20 percent. The drop in production of this strategic product affects not only exports but also supplies for the home market." That is what our reporters were told by Carmen Ramos, director of the National Sugar Institute (INA). It explains why the sugar quota in the city of Maputo is down to 1 kilogram per person for March.

According to Ramos, a large number of problems and unforeseen circumstances that could not be overcome immediately contributed to results in which only one of the six sugar companies--the one in Buzi--managed to meet the goals established in the PEC [Central State Plan].

The main problems concern the premilling stage--that is, planting, irrigation, cutting, transportation, and supplies to the sugarmills.

Carmen Ramos said that nonfulfillment of the soil fertilization plan--due to delayed deliveries of fertilizer--and shortcomings in the irrigation system resulted in low yields in some cases, thus reducing the quantity of cane suitable for processing.

In other cases, unexpected rains flooded the canefields, and that coincided with a shortage of charcoal for the machine boilers, making it impossible to drain those fields.

Manpower and Machinery

Most of the companies suffered from a severe shortage of manpower during the cane-cutting season because in that period they depend basically on seasonal workers, who did not feel motivated by the recruitment campaigns. This disturbing social phenomenon is the subject of a study by the INA aimed at coming up with new ways of recruiting. To this must be added the problem of absenteeism in the enterprises.

The most serious problem for all the companies, however, is the poor quality of repairs on the existing equipment. Owing basically to the shortage of spare parts, the shortage of qualified technicians, and matters related to the organization and control of repairs, large numbers of trucks, carts, locomotives, combine sugarcane harvesters, sugarcane conveyor belts, tractors and other kinds of mill equipment were damaged and totally or partially out of operation for long periods.

In some cases, the situation was made worse by the inactivity and lack of sensitivity of several structures connected with supplies and imports, as well as deficient procurement and purchasing of national production materials.

As a general result of all those problems, harvesting was delayed until the rainy season, with many tens of thousands of tons of cane remaining in the fields. In the case of Maragra, for example, 50,000 tons of cane were left in the fields. That quantity would have provided 5,000 tons of sugar--worth 53 million meticals--or enough to supply the city of Maputo for approximately 5 months.

The INA's director said: "To that must be added various factors of disorganization in the enterprises, a shortage of politically and technically trained management cadres, and shortcomings in planning and control, both in the enterprises and in the INA."

Outlook

Concerning the effort being made to overcome those situations, the official said that "it was not until just recently that we managed to sign a contract with British firms" (most of our equipment is British) "and to obtain the necessary credits for equipment salvaging and maintenance and for supplies of spare parts for the sugar-mills. It is expected that the arrival of that material will not benefit even the 1982 season, now underway, so the current situation will probably not change much."

As far as planning and control are concerned, more thorough studies of the production plans are being carried out with a view to making them more realistic, and more detailed analyses of the realities specific to each enterprise are also being made.

A radio and telex network will also be set up between the INA and the companies so as to maintain a daily check on the season's work. A start has also been made on a program of more regular meetings between the INA, the companies, and other structures and enterprises connected in some way with the sugar problems.

11798
CSO: 4742/234

BRIEFS

FAO FOOD, TRANSPORTATION ASSISTANCE--The FAO, an agency of the UN, has been mobilized to provide food aid to Mozambique with a view to coping with the food shortage caused by the prolonged drought along the northern shore. According to information supplied by the representative of that agency in Mozambique, FAO headquarters in Rome is waiting for contact with the Mozambican government to find out what amounts of food should be sent. In the meantime, in addition to food aid consisting of 3,500 tons of corn and other cereals--whose arrival is expected shortly--the FAO at this time is turning over to the Mozambican government a shipment of 80 7-ton trucks to carry food to the areas hit by that natural calamity. According to the FAO representative in Mozambique, 66 tons of seeds are currently being unloaded in the port of Maputo; they are to be handed over shortly to the Mozambican government as part of assistance to victims of natural calamities over these past 3 years. Concerning vehicles, the FAO general manager also approved the delivery to Mozambique of another shipment of 15 trucks with a capacity of 14 tons. It is expected that these trucks will arrive in Mozambique in the middle of March. The drought also hit Zimbabwe, Namibia, Botswana and South Africa. The food shortage in those countries has caused the death not only of cattle but also of human beings. Concerning Zimbabwe, 70 trucks have already arrived through the port of Beira for delivery to that country. Rail shipment of these vehicles to Zimbabwe has already begun. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 1 Mar 82 p 10] 5058

CULTURAL, SCIENTIFIC AGREEMENT WITH PORTUGAL--Technical, scientific, and cultural cooperation agreements were worked out this week in Portugal between Eduardo Mondlane University and the Portuguese universities of Porto, Minho, Coimbra, and Evora. Eduardo Mondlane University President Fernando Ganhao signed the agreements for Mozambique. Fernando Ganhao has been in Portugal for several days and has been talking to Portuguese agencies connected with higher education.[Text] [Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 27 Feb 82 p 1] 5058

CSO: 4742/238

SEKOU TOURE'S VISIT SAID TO REINFORCE COOPERATION

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 13-14 Feb 82 pp 1, 3

[Editorial by Harouna Niandou]

[Excerpt] Ahmed Sekou Toure. It is this man, this hero of his country's independence, this great historic African figure that all Niger with its new vigor receives officially for the first time.

As they receive the secretary general of the Guinean Party-State, president of the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea, servant of the people and Supreme Leader of the Revolution Col Seyni Kountche, the Supreme Military Council and the government and people of Niger know that they welcome a worthy son of Africa, he who sounded the knell of colonialism in his country and issued an historic challenge.

Ahmed Sekou Toure is a man of national destiny. He wanted independence for Guinea, the independence which he described as the open door to the world. His venture succeeded brilliantly, and he committed himself urgently to the task of raising Guinea to the level of the economically important and socially advanced countries, while creating a genuine national awareness. He is also a man of action, and the high respect which Guinea enjoys is the result of his intelligent nationalism, his daring courage, his boldness, his unquenchable thirst for revolution and progress, and, above all, his inextinguishable desire to struggle for the dignity of man and his unshakeable faith in his country's destiny.

His commendable desire to retain the confidence of his people, that confidence which is worth more than billions or palaces, impelled Sekou Toure to undertake, at risk of his life, the various and heroic struggles which made Guinea what it is today: a democratic country with a stable regime, despite the criminal intrusions of imperialism of all varieties. And it is this gift of himself to the nation, his solid reputation as a man of action, his nationalism which stands the test of all life's challenges, this constant availability to his people, along with a sincere belief in African unity that has created the affinity between President Ahmed Sekou Toure and President Seyni Kountche. Col Seyni Kountche, on receiving the credentials of Guinea's first ambassador to Niger, on 4 July 1974, stated emphatically: "Major changes have occurred in the life of our nation, changes which your government and the PDG Central Committee have praised. Our commitment is to do everything in our power to insure that these changes will benefit our country and people."

Guinea's homage to Niger beginning in 1974 was the result of the identity of objectives of the two men of state and their governments: that is, to overcome the temporary isolation of the two countries, restore to the people both surface and underground resources, implement an intensive national development policy using regional and subregional bodies, and maintain good-neighbor relations and expand the circle of friendship with all countries committed to peace and justice.

Niger and Guinea are both involved in pursuit of agricultural self-sufficiency. Thus, while Sekou Toure's Guinea bathes in the beneficial revolution, Seyni Kountche's Niger embarks on an original path for social advancement, the Development Society. Like the Guinean revolution which relies on the party and its two pillars, the youth and women, our Development Society is sustained by the Samariya, the dynamic organization of Nigerian youth, and the cooperatives, motive force of the rural area. The policy of hydro-agricultural development in both countries derives from their common desire to become immune to the hazards of climate and able to depend on their own resources.

"To be strong," President Koutche told the Ginean ambassador, "we must first and always remain united. The OAU currently gives us a good framework, but it is above all within more restricted and economically viable regional groupings that we should actively work to establish our solidarity and strengthen our independence."

The strength of the weak lies in their unity and solidarity, and it is no accident that we find both Guinea and Niger in the OAU, ECOWAS, and the Niger River Authority, established on Guinean territory to promote our economies and bring our peoples closer together; the river already constitutes a natural and effective link between them. Nor is it be coincidence that both countries support body and soul the just struggle of our African brothers under foreign domination and exploitation. Who can appreciate better than Sekou Toure and Seyni Kountche the value of a people's freedom, since it was they who were virtually ready to offer themselves as sacrifices so that their countries and peoples could live in freedom, happiness and prosperity?

The meeting between Sekou Toure and Seyni Kountche is one of those occasions that gives a new image to bilateral cooperation among nations. Welcome, therefore, to our distinguished guests; may they know that here they are in their second homeland.

0920
CSO: 4719/610

'SOCIETY OF DEVELOPMENT' ABOUT TO TAKE EFFECT

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 p 614

[Text] The social reorganisation dubbed "Society of Development" by Niger's President Seyni Kountche when he took power almost eight years ago is on the point of taking effect, AFP writes.

Its institutions, evolved in two years of thought and debate by a special National Commission, were explained last month to the officials of each of the country's seven administrative districts and to the press by commission chairman and Minister of Public Health and Social Affairs, Moumouni Djermakoye Adamou.

For Colonel Kountche's ruling Supreme Military Council the Society of Development cannot be compared with theoretical models or existing economic systems: it is an original type of society, peculiar to Niger in its values, bases and approach.

The general aim of the new institutions on a basis of "effective and voluntary participation of all social strata" is to assure a "policy of accelerated, coherent and harmonious development" of the nation.

This month, nationwide "development councils", linking all components of society through their respective associations, start operating. At the base of the administrative pyramid, they will appoint members of a national council.

The council will have the task of suggesting to the government "the fundamental options of the development policy" and can also be consulted by the government on "any other question of national interest". The basic "development cell" is the village, whose inhabitants, 90 per cent of whom raise crops or livestock, are urged to take part in the national economy by outlining their needs, suggestive ways of fulfilling them and carrying out collective decisions.

The two "motors" of the society of development, from village right through to national level, are the Samariya youth movements and the co-operatives. According to government officials the Samariya are now present in all of the country's 9,000 villages, with the key function of providing organisation, communal help and solidarity. For the past few months Samariya members — 60 per cent of the population of about 5m. is aged under 30 — have been seen mobilising and training villagers and residents of various urban districts in public works projects, including sewerage, the building of dispensaries and water storage facilities, and tree-planting, or cultural and sporting activities.

The Samariya have also been instructed to be "vigilant" and co-operate in maintaining security in its widest sense with the administrative and police authorities.

The co-operatives, which have so far been set up in 60 per cent of villages and should be in every one within three months, organise the productive side of the rural communities. Their key status with the Samariya is shown by the fact that they hold half the seats in the local development councils, ensuring that they can never be outvoted by other bodies.

These other bodies include Islamic associations — Niger is 95 per cent Moslem — along with the Federation of Trade Unions (the country's only labour federation) and societies representing different social groups, like traders.

By consensus the base councils nominate their delegates to the village or tribal councils, and so on up through the district and regional councils to the national body.

The national council includes a member of the national bureau of every representative body. Women, for instance, through the Association of Women of Niger, are called upon to "participate fully" in national development, despite obstacles arising from traditional or religious customs. The various development councils are chaired either by traditional leaders, such as village or tribal chiefs, or state-appointed officials, such as mayors or departmental prefects. They have authority to undertake all activities of economic, social or cultural development.

As Major Moumouni Djermakoye Adamou sees it, the "voluntary and effective participation" of the population in development constitutes a proper "apprenticeship for democracy" for a population which is "not yet mature enough to be involved in politics".

The military leadership questions how Niger's inhabitants, almost all of them rural, coming from different tribes scattered over a vast country of 1,227,000 square kilometres (490,000 square miles) barely literate and with a low standard of living, can "think politically". Thus the regime intends to give them responsibility and "wake them up" by allowing them to take charge, progressively and at their own level, of their development, thanks to a decentralised structure for "concertation, consultation and participation".

There is no question, at the moment, of establishing a political system similar to that in developed countries. The government, which is still officially "provisional" and appointed by the Supreme Military Council, will continue to rule without a constitution or general elections.

Political parties, labelled "clans of interests or ideologies", remain strictly banned as being factors in national division.

But Colonel Kountche has recently hinted that there may be one more step towards democracy. In several speeches he has uttered the same phrase: "The National Armed Forces intend in the near future to suggest bases for a new development which will meet the ideals of an adult and mature people."

CSO: 4700/937

MINISTER PRESIDES OVER ANNUAL MEETING OF AGRICULTURAL CADRES

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 16 Feb 82 p 8

[Excerpt] Minister of Rural Development Dr Ari Toubo Ibrahim presided yesterday morning at the opening of the annual meeting of agricultural cadres at the Chamber of Commerce. Mamane Oumarou, minister of youth, sports and culture, was present. Dr Ari Toubo Ibrahim explained the importance of the meeting.

"Your meeting opens on the eve of evaluation of the implementation of our 1979-1983 5-year economic and social development plan, which established as top priority the effor toward food self-sufficiency.

"Although an improvement in the food situation was planned for the initial years of the period, the 1981-1982 agricultural season reminded us of the sad reality of climatic quirks and the determining role of rain forecasting in our agricultural production.

"To insure adequate food for the people, we will have had to import more than 100,000 tons of grain over and above our own state supplies, with the help of the international community.

"This is the result of the combination of only an average agricultural season, the present marketing system and the determination of the Supreme Military Council [SMC] and the government to insure that all Nigerians receive a proper supply of basic necessities, particularly food. This is in accord with the historic pledge by the president of the SMC, and head of state, Col Seyni Kountche: 'Let no Nigerian die of hunger.'"

After affirming that the efforts to achieve food self-sufficiency will certainly succeed, the minister added, paraphrasing the head of state: "The government will intensify its policy of hydro-agricultural development as well as measures to significantly increase soil productivity."

"The implementation of this commitment is definitely underway:

"With the launching of the Diffa Project, and soon also the Air Project, all our regions will be covered under the Productivity Project.

"By the end of 1981, more than 1,000 hectares were under development in the river valleys of the Maggia, Goulbi and Komadougou, thus surpassing the projections in the 5-year plan.

"In addition, more than 600 million CFA francs in subsidies were granted for agricultural purposes in the 1982 season."

9920
CSO: 4719/610

BRIEFS

EDF AID--It was learned at the European Development Fund [EDF] delegation in Niamey that the EDF has just granted 2 billion CFA francs in nonreimbursable aid to finance four hydro-agricultural projects in the Niger River Valley. They are the development of an irrigated area at Namarde-Goungou (260 hectares), the restoration of the projects of Kama and Karaigorou (300 hectares) and the total restoration of the terrace of Tillaikaina (70 hectares). These projects are to provide employment for a population (farmers and their families) of some 18,000 persons, and the area will have a total production of 12,000 tons of paddy rice and 1,500 tons of fruits and vegetables, the EDF representative in Niger, Gabrielle Von Brochowski, pointed out. She stressed that these projects are part of the Nigerian Government's policy on the one hand of promoting the "integrated development," of the population which is asked to "manage itself," and on the other hand of aiming at food self-sufficiency by diversifying crops and by combining stockraising and agriculture. [Text] [Dakar LE SOILEIL in French 4 Mar 82 p 19]

CSO: 4719/663

BRIEFS

DIOP ON SENEGAMBIA--At the first officially publicised meeting of the Rassemblement Nationale Democratique (RND), its Secretary General, Cheikh Anta Diop, spoke for over an hour on the history of the party and its policies. On the Senegambian confederation, Cheikh Anta said that although the RND supports any move towards African unity he objected to the way in which force had been used in this particular case. The people should have been consulted by referendum on the issue, he added. He appealed to the Government of Senegal to stop the death sentences passed on some of the rebels. Thousands of people attended the meeting, at Tally Boumack, Pikine, and all of the members of the political bureau of the RND were present. Cheikh Anta concluded his speech by asking all those present to register on the electoral list. The RND would be asking the Supreme Court, which is charged with organising the elections, for an extension of the registration period, he added. The RND is one of the older opposition movements in Senegal (it was created in 1976), though it was only last year given its recepisse of legality. It was one of the few, and the most important, of the opposition parties that did not join the --equally outlawed at the time--Coordination de l'opposition Senegalaise (Cosu), an umbrella opposition movement which since the political ouverture has lost much of its influence. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 680]

TAX LAW CHANGES--Prices in cinemas and hotels will increase as a result of modifications to tax laws passed recently at the National Assembly. Value Added Tax (TVA) is now applicable to all petroleum products. Previously, petroleum products were subject to more than one form of taxation. It is not expected that this will immediately affect prices at the pumps, but it will give the government more flexibility to alter prices in the future. TVA on hotel rooms and meals is to be increased by 5.5 per cent to 17 per cent. This measure is expected to boost government revenue by 900m. CFA Francs. Cinemas and other places of entertainment will be even harder hit by the new measures; TVA is to be increased in this area by 10 per cent to 17 per cent. This, it is expected, will produce an extra 150 m. CFA Francs in revenue. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 680]

EMPLOYERS' INSURANCE CONTRIBUTIONS--Employers' contributions to national insurance schemes are to be increased for both categories by 1 per cent, which will produce 800m. CFA Francs in extra revenue. Contributions to the Caisse Autonome d'Amortissement will now be 3 per cent of salary for indigenous employees and 5 per cent for expatriate employees. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 680]

COTTON PRODUCTION--The cotton crop for the 1981/1982 season was 33,000 tonnes, according to the State buying agency, the Societe de Developpement des fibres Textiles (Sodefitex). Average productivity per hectare was 1.2 tonnes. The highest recorded since 1961, when cotton was introduced to the country by the Compagnie francaise des Textiles (CFDT). 1,200 kilos is also higher than the productivity hoped for by 1984 by Sodefitex. Production of cotton last season was 23,000 tonnes. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3370, 8 Mar 82 p 680]

SALARY INCREASES--Workers in the private and quasi governmental institutions are to benefit from salary and wage increases. According to a release from the Labour Department, the Combined Joint Industrial Councils have adopted these increases with effect from January 1, 1982. Daily wage workers will have 15 per cent on their daily earnings. Non-pensionable, monthly paid workers earning D517 per month, will also be given an increase of 15 per cent. Workers recei D518 per month and above are to have an addition of 10 per cent. Increase of monthly paid workers not covered by the council will later be discussed by officials of the Labour Department and the Chamber of Commerce. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 p 614]

COMMITMENT TO DEMOCRACY--The Gambia's commitment to parliamentary democracy and all its related aspects which guarantee the rights of freedom and dignity of the individual, has been reiterated by the Speaker of the Gambian Parliament, Alhaji Sir Alieu Jack. Speaking to the standing committee of Commonwealth Speakers and Presiding Officers who met in Banjul recently, he said that the establishment of the Senegambia Confederation would in no way affect the Gambia's ties with the Commonwealth. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 p 614]

PEANUT PURCHASES--The Gambia Produce Marketing Board bought 71,161 tonnes of groundnuts during the week ending January 22. Deliveries of the produce, however, stood at 30,344 tonnes. The biggest buyer was the Gambia Co-operative Union with 52,861 tonnes and delivery of 18,706 tonnes to the Board. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 p 614]

IMF LOAN- The International Monetary Fund announced last week that it had agreed to provide The Gambia with a $19m. loan to help with balance of payments problems. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3369, 1 Mar 82 p 614]

CSO: 4700/937

POLITICAL DIFFICULTIES OF THREE SOUTHERN AFRICA MODERATES EXAMINED

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 20

[Article by Piet Muller: "Three Black Leaders Dilemmas"]

[Text] It is surprising how similar are the political problems haunting the three black newsmakers of the past 3 weeks.

Newsmaker number one is Zimbabwe's Joshua Nkomo. A man once known as the father of black nationalism in his country, but when black nationalism finally attained its victory he was not allowed to pluck any of the fruits of his struggle.

Nkomo's great political sin is that he does not represent the strongest ethnic group in Zimbabwe. Since Robert Mugabe's surprising election victory Nkomo went into the background and saw his political role as that of mediator and great reconciler of extremes.

He even collaborated wholeheartedly in the creation of a national armed force which consists of elements of all the old militant parties. Time and again he warned his impatient followers not to be hasty and impatient.

Distance

But when, just overnight, Mugabe announced the formation of a fifth brigade consisting only of Shona tribesmen trained by North Koreans, the writing was on the wall. Mugabe was irrevocably on the road to a one-party state which would be dominated by a Shona majority.

Suddenly Nkomo's part in the struggle for freedom was forgotten; his Matabele tribesmen were showed to the sideline and it became clear that they fought 2 years too long for insuring their rights through a civil war. Today Mugabe has the means of blasting to pieces any opposition.

Black newsmaker number two is the South-West's Peter Kalangula, the Ovambo leader who has just broken away from the DTA [Democratic Turnhalle Alliance]. Aside from personal ambitions his action must be judged in light of the untenable situation in which the DTA finds itself.

Ever since its establishment the DTA wanted to reconcile everything and everybody. It has wanted to be the medium through which democrats of all colors could form a united front against SWAPO. As a result of this today, these democrats are being taken amiss by young blacks for the obstinacy with which certain whites are refusing to have anything to do with a democratic reform of society in the South-West. For whites of the rightist faction Dirk Mudge, the main personage of the DTA, is the "betrayer" of white interests. Moderates cannot win against extremists; therefore, Kalangula has evidently decided to put as much distance as possible between him and the ruling group before an election.

But in democratic circles it is still expected that he will take the side of the DTA during an election. Yet there are rumors that an election agreement with SWAPO is not so far fetched. The power basis for both lies in Ovambo.

When he stepped out of the DTA meeting hall, for good, somebody is believed to have said: "There goes Robert Mugabe."

Take in Tow

The third black leader is Kwazulu's Gatsha Buthelezi who for a long time has desperately been trying to maintain his credibility in South Africa's turbulent black politics.

Chief Buthelezi is an outspoken exponent of dialogue and collaboration and thus far has refused to be taken in tow by radicals. In this respect he has, on several occasions, been at loggerheads with the ANC which has tried to present him as a "government stooge."

His defense against such propaganda is holding fast to his assertion that he will not accept independence for Kwazulu, because is is not going to give up the birthrights of his followers, namely South African citizenship, for a "semblance of independence."

In all probability his political ambition goes much further than Kwazulu's frontiers and many people suspect him of wanting to be a respected political figure at a national level. Still he represents the strongest black ethnic group in the country.

His power basis is Inkhtha with its 360,000 registered members. Even at its highest point of popularity the ANC was never able to claim that many members and this is something which has made it even more distrusted with respect to the role ahead that it can play in black politics.

As the stream of black people coming to the cities becomes larger, their power basis also shifts from the rural districts to the urba.. Reportedly Inkatha has already established 18 branches in Soweto. Therefore if Buthelezi wants to stay in the picture he must, from now on, take part in urban politics. However, if he does so, he will be finding himself in sharper clashes with the ANC and with black leaders such as Dr Motlana and Bishop Tutu who see themselves as the true representatives of the urban blacks.

It is therefore important for Chief Buthelezi to maintain his credibility as a moderate who can still influence the mainstream of South African politics. This is probably the consideration which has led to the appointment of the "Buthelezi Commission" which must give thought to the future of Natal and Kwazulu.

The report will be issued in about 2 weeks and the reaction to it will have an important effect on Chief Buthelezi's career. A strongly negative reaction can deal a terrible blow to his prestige and perhaps force him to seek a closer approach to radical groups.

In light of Chief Buthelezi's dilemma it will perhaps be wise for the government not to make any public comments on the recommendations of the report.

7964
CSO: 4701/38

PREDICTABLE REBELLION SEEN AS PURIFICATION OF PARTY

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 25 Feb 82 p 20

[Editorial: "The Rebellion"]

[Text] Yesterday's rebellion on the part of 22 members of Parliament out of a total of 142 members, during the parliamentary caucus of the Nationalist Party, is the single most important event in South African politics since the election of the Nationalist Party as the ruling party in 1948. The disruption of unity resulting from the break-away of four members of parliament in 1969, for the purpose of forming the Reconstituted Nationalist Party, presaged yesterday's dramatic rebellion.

However, there was no need for a political observer to predict that the rebellion would take place. It was a matter of figuring out when this would occur and the cause around which the rebellion would crystallize.

Now it has happened and in a certain sense yesterday's handling of it was a relief. The Nationalist Party can now proceed with its reform plan from a position of strength, although with stronger opposition from the far right. But yesterday's rebellion should clear up the troubled waters which have weakened many of the party's actions in recent years. Mr Botha has an excellent chance of restoring to health Nationalist Party ranks through strong leadership and to make the Nationalist Party the party of initiative once again.

Unity

But Mr Botha's first action, after yesterday's break, was that of a leader who believes in unity rather than divisiveness. By granting a week's time to the rebels for reconsidering their actions he is following the road of forbearance and he is trying to avert a split. In this we are in complete agreement with the chief executive.

In the entire dispute, which is revolving around the Nationalist Party's approach to the two colored minority groups which do not have a separate homeland, Mr Botha has held to already accepted views: accepted by Nationalist Party caucuses, by Nationalist Party congresses, by the electorate through ballots and repeatedly in cabinet meetings.

Dr Andries Treurnicht has chosen the coloreds question to raise objections to an article in the Nationalist Party's mouthpiece NAT 80's. In so doing he is persisting with a characteristic hit and run policy.

But when the question of confidence in Mr Botha's leadership was brought up at the caucus yesterday the die was cast and everybody had to say where one stood.

After yesterday's episode a shift in our political parameters has become unavoidable. Nationalists must draw strength from the knowledge that the defection of a small minority can have a salutory effect on the mutual confidence and disposition in the greater party. For instance, this must inspire Nationalists to come out with dedication and zeal in support of their party in next Wednesday's municipal elections.

Triumphs

The hand of friendship is still outstretched to the rebels, but if they grasp it now it will be on conditions set by the greater elements of the Nationalist Party which patiently endured this tormenting experience, but which is not going to be forced from its course.

This is a sorrowful day for the Nationalist Party. Its history goes far back and behind it there are great triumphs and monumental achievements.

Howevever, the future lies ahead and the future does not wait for those who look back, Dr Treurnicht and his followers must consider this very carefully in the next few days. The door through which they walked out on their own accord remains open.

If the split is not healed the Nationalist Party will be faced with some awfully difficult trials of strength against the party to the left, the Progressives, and to the far right, the whole alliance of the Reconstituted Nationalist Party, the Moulder followers, other vermin, and now this other split to boot. This will be putting tremendous demands on the Nationalist Party to put itself in order organization-wise, spiritually and in other respects to resist the attacks. Things could get tough in the Transvaal rural districts, in parts of Pretoria and elsewhere.

This is the hour for standing firmly together and regrouping and this could be even easier than it seems if people would throw their support wholeheartedly behind the leadership of P. W. Botha and his team. They are following a plan of action for getting a hold on South Africa's difficult future.

Proven Party

This future embraces the following concepts: The Nationalist Party is the party of collectivity; it takes in the fundamentals of self-determination for its own and also people of the same opinion, but having other languages and religions; it promotes a broad white South Afrikanderism moulded on the inspired slogan of "South Africa First." This motto embraces increasing collaboration on the basis of co-responsibility of the coloreds who do not have a national state of their own.

A solid and broad band of South-Afrikanderism must be formed for facing an enemy who wants to capitalize on our plural society for the purpose of replacing the freedom we now have with a tyranny.

A proven Nationalist Party offers the hope that it can carry through this great task on the basis of a friendly nationalism. In a prevailing sense yesterday's revolt can be the beginning of the Nationalist Party's liberation.

7964
CSO: 4701/39

SEMINAR URGES YOUTH TO PLAY PART IN NATIONAL STRUGGLE

Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 22 Feb 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Text] One of the important matters which was explained and made clear by the seminar which was prepared by the Youth League and held last week in Dar es Salaam is the importance of the power of youth in carrying out the tasks of the state. This fact was brought out in the speeches of some speakers and in the discussions that followed.

The chairman of the Revolutionary Party [CCM], Mwalimu Nyerere, who was the first speaker when he opened this seminar, called to mind that economic independence in Africa depends on the youth. But Mwalimu added, so that the youth may be able to fulfill their responsibility for bringing about economic independence, they must avoid a desire for money and a life in easy circumstances.

And the deputy chairman of the CCM, Aboud Jumbe, asked the youth to develop the revolution and stressed that the youths have the responsibility for carrying out those matters which are being decided on now and for preparing the people to develop the revolution later.

The important question here is: Which youth of Tanzania will be able to carry out the responsibility before them in bringing about economic independence and developing the revolution of Tanzania and Africa? This is the question which now demands a correct answer.

For, the opinion that the youth are a force to be relied on in developing the revolution has already been expressed many times and no one opposed that opinion. But, there have been no actions corresponding to this opinion. One must ask oneself: Why is this so?

We think that the lack of genuine actions results from the lack of an adequate national policy concerning the development of youth in our country.

We have the Youth League with its regulations. Also, this league has several departments which are concerned with various youth in the country. Certainly, the structure of the Youth League provides a good opportunity for bringing together various youths in the country.

But there is no policy which shows these youth already brought together what to do in order to do their duty of developing the fight to achieve economic independence.

The time has come now for the nation to have a policy like this. It would not be bad if the Youth League took the first step to prepare policy proposals like this and bring them to the party for approval.

It is true that the youths are an important force in the revolution. But, their importance is seen there only when this force is prepared and used well. When good plans are lacking to prepare and use properly the youth of the nation, there is a danger that their strength may be used for destruction rather than for developing social revolution.

Tanzania must take steps quickly to avoid this danger by preparing the youth in theory and practice to obtain the cadres to occupy the front line of our revolution.

9216
CSO: 4749/26

CITIZENS TOLD TO STOP OR REPORT POOR USE OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 20 Feb 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Text] On page 7 of this newspaper we have published a letter from one of our readers with the headline "Use of Money--Insurance."

The writer of this letter talks about the giving of advances, or money given a worker when he leaves his position to help him in carrying out his work. He would like to say early on that giving advances to workers is fundamental. These funds enable a worker to go where he is sent to carry out his duties without problems relating to housing, food, travel, and other necessary expenses pertaining to his work.

So, giving advances is no extraordinary thing, nor is it anything to be alarmed about. It is a normal thing in the ministries of the government and in the parastatal organizations. But according to this letter there are more than 6 million shillings in the hands of the workers of the Insurance Agency including advances which, either have not been reported on as to how they were used, or their explanation does not tally with the fact that the workers are being asked to pay this money back by deductions from their wages.

Moreover, this letter says that even those with large debt for advances are able to obtain loans. This letter gives the example that an official can have a debt in advances of 40,000 shillings. According to this letter, the official, who owes this amount, should pay 200 shillings per month. By using these figures, this official will be able to pay off the debt in 16 years.

There may be some people who are saying this period is nothing to be very shocked about. But advances are not loans. These are funds whose use must be accounted for, and those which are not used, must be returned immediately. The continued storing up of public funds in the hands of a few officials is one of the uses of public funds.

Thus, this letter must be taken with the seriousness it deserves. And there is no doubt that the upper level management of the Insurance Agency will look carefully into this matter and take the appropriate steps.

Truly, by whatever standard, the writer of this letter has challenged some countrymen who see things going backwards but choose to remain silent, whether through fear, or by being profiteers and things of this kind.

We must remember that we all are engaged in, or must be, in an effort to carry out the National Plan for Economic Survival. At this time any step that enables the nation to collect every cent for overall development is important. To make this clear, each one of us must be alert to stop it or speak out when he sees usage of public funds. This is how every citizen with a patriotic spirit must act.

9216
CSO: 4749/26

FURTHER INCIDENTS OF VIOLENCE REPORTED

Government to Fight Guerrillas

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2876, 2 Mar 82 p 21

[Text] Kampala, March 1--The Ugandan Government's patience with opponents is running out and the Army will continue to fight anti-Government guerrillas, Vice-President and Defence Minister Paulo Muwanga said today.

"The Army has been harassed enough and this must stop," Mr Muwanga told journalists here in the wake of heavy shooting in and around Kampala last week.

"Our patience with these characters must not be taken for granted," he said, referring to both guerrillas and the opposition Democratic Party.

At least four people were killed in gunfire and explosions south of Kampala on Saturday, police sources here said today.

Government troops were fighting "bandits" in the area, also the scene of heavy gunfire on Tuesday, the sources said.

It was Uganda's worst violence of the year.

Mr Muwanga warned that any Government soldier caught looting or harassing civilians would be tried and severely punished. Soldiers found firing shots indiscriminately would be locked up, he said.

But no roadblocks would be set up around the capital, he said.

Mr Muwanga's criticism of the Democratic Party follows the party's demand on Friday that Parliament immediately be reconvened to debate the recent violence.

The party also urged that a security committee grouping all political parties and religious organisations be set to find ways of ending the security problems.

The idea was first proposed last year. But the Government rejected the proposal when the Democratic Party insisted that the committee be given legal powers. (A.F.P.)

Cardinal Lashes Government

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2876, 2 Mar 82 p 20

[Text] Kampala, March 1--The leader of the Roman Catholic Church in Uganda, Emmanuel Cardinal Nsubuga, today made a strong protest to the Government over the interruption of last Wednesday's service at Kampala Cathedral and the search of his residence, chancery and the cathedral by Government troops.

A three-page statement by the Cardinal condemned "the inhuman behaviour" of the security forces engaged in the search operations, which he said had resulted in loss of life, injuries to civilians and damage to property.

The Cardinal denied allegations by some soldiers last week that he was personally involved in the attack on the Rubiri military barracks in Kampala last week, and that he was involved in guerrilla training on his farm at Kyankwanzi, west of Kampala.

Cardinal Nsubuga demanded an apology from the Government over last week's incidents, and threatened to boycott all future public functions he might be invited to attend by the Government if the apology was not made.

He condemned the rounding up of about 60 people who were taken from the precincts of the cathedral by soldiers last Tuesday, the day of the attack on the barracks by mortars fired from outside the cathedral.

"This is not the first time that these Government sources have used the Church as a scape-goat in an attempt to hide activities that they were unable to explain honestly to the people of Uganda," the Cardinal said in his statement, which he read out at a press conference attended by journalists and foreign diplomats.

Cardinal Nsubuga said the Uganda Government was being "completely unfair" to implicate the Church just because of the positioning of the mortars. "We are being blamed for not coming out of our rooms to spot who was shooting, while the soldiers themselves could not come out to spot and face those who were shooting," he said.

Cardinal Nsubuga also accused the Government of open violation of the universal declaration of human rights last Tuesday by removing ten wounded people from the Catholc mission hospitals of Rubaga and Nsabya and transferring them to the Mbuya military hospital.

He said there had been shooting and murders every night in Rubaga suburb for the last two weeks and police had failed to intervene. (A.F.P.)

Reaction to Cardinal's Criticism

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2877, 5 Mar 82 p 16

[Text] Kampala, March 5--Renewed violence has been reported in the Gayaza area near Kampala following Government troop deployments in the area this week against anti-Government guerrillas.

Troops were sent to the Gayaza, Kabubbu and Namulonge districts, about 10 miles north of Kampala, following reports of guerrillas in the villages, the Kampala vernacular daily MUNNO reported today.

Distant explosions, possibly from mortars, could be heard in Kampala last night from the north.

The explosions, which were dull and muffled by distance, started at approximately 9.0 p.m. and lasted for about half an hour.

Meanwhile, in a reaction to Roman Catholic Archbishop Emmanuel Nsubuga's criticism of the security forces, the authorities have insisted that security men have a duty to pursue "criminals" wherever they hide, "whether in a cathedral or not."

Cardinal Nsubuga strongly criticised Uganda Army soldiers for halting an Ash Wednesday service at the Rubaga Cathedral in Kampala, to search it and his nearby residence for arms.

The Cardinal demanded an apology from the Uganda Government and threatened to boycott future state functions if it was not forthcoming.

Some lives...

But the official UGANDA TIMES reported today that he had attended no state functions since the 1980 general elections which returned President Milton Obote to power.

The Ugandan Army searched the cathedral last week after anti-government guerrillas positioned mortars in front of the building to lobby shells into Lubiri Barracks in Kampala.

The UGANDA TIMES admitted today for the first time that "some lives of innocent people were lost" in subsequent sweeps by the Ugandan Army. (A.F.P.)

Bomb at Coffee Plant

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2877, 5 Mar 82 p 15

[Text] Kampala, March 3--A bomb exploded at the Uganda Coffee Marketing Board central processing plant and stores in Kampala Tuesday, damaging part of the plant and several vehicles parked in the yard outside.

Uganda radio said the explosion caused only slight damage to the coffee processing plant at Bugolobi, three kilometres (two miles) outside Kampala.

The radio, quoting a statement by Internal Affairs Minister John Luwuliza Kirunda, said a number of people had been arrested in connection with the incident.

The statement said the plant was now working as normal.

All Uganda's coffee exports are collected at the Bugolobi plant for loading into freight trains and trucks to be hauled to Kenya's Indian Ocean port Mombasa for shipping.

Coffee accounts for approximately 97 percent of Uganda's total export revenues. (A.F.P.)

CSO: 4700/911

BRIEFS

COMMONWEALTH TRAINING TEAM REJECTED--Kampala, February 27--The Government has turned down an offer by the Commonwealth to help train its soldiers because it could not accede to a request that the advisers be granted diplomatic immunity, the official UGANDA TIMES daily reported. The military training team drawn from different Commonwealth countries was due to arrive in Uganda on Wednesday, the daily reported, quoting Vice-President and Defence Minister Paulo Muwanga. Mr Muwanga told local journalists yesterday that the team of Commonwealth instructors had demanded diplomatic immunity while in Uganda, but this precondition was not acceptable to Uganda: "We have so many expatriates in Uganda who do not enjoy diplomatic immunity. Why should the Commonwealth military training team?". (A.F.P.) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2876, 2 Mar 82 p 21]

CATTLE FROM KENYA--Kampala, March 5--Uganda has ordered about 17,000 head of cattle from neighbouring Kenya under a 13 million-dollar loan from the Abidjan-based African Development Bank (ADB). Only private ranchers will benefit from the ADB loan, which will be managed by the Government-owned Uganda Development Bank. Under the loan, 16,000 heiffers and 560 bulls will be imported from Kenya along with cattle vaccines, drugs and ranch equipment, according to an official of the Uganda Development Bank. (A.F.P.) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2877, 5 Mar 82 p 16]

BANKS REPORTED LOSING MILLIONS--Kampala, March 4--Commercial banks in Uganda are reported to be loosing millions of shillings annually in bank frauds and forgeries. The banks have been trying to recover from the enormous losses sustained almost three years ago during the Uganda-Tanzania war in which bank property, offices, records and projects were destroyed. Millions of shillings were also lost by the banking system as the henchmen of former dictator Idi Amin fled the country after the war, abandoning debit balances in the banks and making off with securities against which banks had advanced them money. Cash, bank records and papers were also looted from up-country branches during and after the 1979 war which toppled Idi Amin. It is the bank records and papers, like cheque books and bank draft forms looted almost three years ago, which are now being used in the bank frauds and forgeries. According to Henry Kaijura, Chairman and Managing Director of the Uganda Commercial Bank, bank forgeries in Uganda have reached alarming proportions, "to the extent that banking has become an extremely hazardous business." "Unfortunately, the crooks seem to catch up with whatever measures we introduce in a matter of weeks," Mr Kaijuka said. "And the culprits who are apprehended get released almost immediately by police without followup. The situation is very grave." (A.F.P.) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2877, 5 Mar 82 p 15]

CSO: 4700/911

END

JPRS 80497

5 April 1982

Sub-Saharan Africa Report

No. 2601

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 80497

5 April 1982

SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA REPORT

No. 2601

CONTENTS

INTER-AFRICAN AFFAIRS

Communique on 24 March Entente Council Meeting
(Abidjan Domestic Service, 24 Mar 82)..... 1

ANGOLA

Party Coordinators Meet, Decide Policies
(ANGOP, 21 Mar 82)..... 2

Briefs
Preparations for Meeting With Portugal 4
People's Assembly Committee Meeting 4

BENIN

Briefs
Message From Doe 5

CAPE VERDE

Envoy to Angola on Guinea-Bissau, SDAR
(ANGOP, 24 Mar 82)..... 6

Briefs
Improved Ties With Guinea-Bissau 7

CHAD

Cameroonian Army Closes Kousseri Refugee Camp
(Jean-Eudes Barbier; AFP, 22 Mar 82)..... 8

CONGO

Briefs
French, Security Forces Incident 10

DJIBOUTI

Chamber of Commerce President Examines Role in Development
(Said Coubeche Interview; LA NATION, 25 Feb 82)..... 11

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Briefs
President Receives Spanish Delegation 14

ETHIOPIA

Eritrean Leader on Conditions For Negotiation
(QNA, 19 Mar 82)..... 15

Eritrean Liberation Front Representative Denounces Ethiopia, USSR
(HORSEED, 5 Mar 82)..... 17

Briefs
Libyan Arms, Funds Supply 18

GABON

Briefs
Prospecting Agreement With France 19
Oil Minister to Paris, Vienna 19

GAMBIA

Briefs
Jawara Postpones Conakry Visit 20

GHANA

Paper Calls Nationalization of Land 'Unnecessary'
(Accra Domestic Service, 23 Mar 82) 21

Two Roads to Economic Development Analyzed
(David Anarglatey; Accra International Service, 18 Mar 82).. 22

Briefs
No More Currency Printing 26
'Producing Units'For Bakers 26
BSL Ships' Sales Studied 26
Ouster of Apartheid-Linked Transnationals 27
Remittances From Ghanaians Abroad 27
Release of Land For Farming 27
Warning Against Harassment of Civlians 28
Asylum Sought 28

GUINEA-BISSAU

Briefs
Food Aid To Be Sought 29

IVORY COAST

Briefs
Agreement on Space Signed 30

KENYA

Briefs
Moi Receives Envoys 31

MAURITIUS

Compensation Agreed on For Diego Garcia Families
(AFP, 24 Mar 82) 32

Briefs
Saudi Loan 33

MOZAMBIQUE

Briefs
Portuguese Bank Agreement 34

NAMIBIA

SWAPO Talks With S. Africa 35

SENEGAMBIA

New Underwater Pipeline Goes Into Service
(Mamadou Oumar Ndiaye; LE SOLEIL 23 Feb 82) 36

Record Cotton Yield, Good Corn Production Noted
(Sidy Gaye; LE SOLEIL, 23 Feb 82) 37

Briefs
New PDS Resignations 39

SOMALIA

Briefs
Delegation to Baghdad 40
Ambassador to Benin 40

SOUTH AFRICA

Severe Criticism of Nationalism for Afrikaners Only
(Dreis van Heerden; DIE VEDERLAND, 23 Feb 82) 41

Reasons for Hesitance in Signing Nuclear Treaty
(DIE VADERLAND, 22 Feb 82) 44

South Africa Pressured, by Dries van Heerden
South Africa's Diplomacy Trump

TOGO

Eyadema Receives FRG, Libyan, SDAR Delegations
(Lome Domestic Service, 19 Mar 82) 47

Briefs
New DPRK Ambassador 48

ZAIRE

SWAPO Delegation Attends Youth Meeting
(ELIMA, 17 Feb 82) 49

Burundi, Zaire, Rwanda Sign Cultural Agreement
(ELIMA, 20 Feb 82) 51

False Security Agents Said To Prey on People
(Editorial; ELIMA, 19 Feb 82) 53

Commissioner Says Country Able To Handle Food Shortages
(ELIMA, 19 Feb 82) 54

Briefs
New Food-Growing Areas 56
Agricultural Bank in Kinshasa 56

COMMUNIQUE ON 24 MARCH ENTENTE COUNCIL MEETING

AB242045 Abidjan Domestic Service in French 1930 GMT 24 Mar 82

[Communique issued at the end of the meeting of Entente Council heads of state in Yamoussoukro on 24 Mar--recorded]

[Text] The heads of state of the Entente Council met in Yamoussoukro, Ivory Coast, for an extraordinary session under the chairmanship of His Excellency Col Mathieu Kerekou, president of the People's Republic of Benin and current chairman of the Entente Council. Their excellencies Felix Houphouet-Boigny, president of the Republic of Ivory Coast; Col Saye Zerbo, president of the military committee of redress for national progress and head of state of Upper Volta; Col Seyni Kountche, chairman of the Supreme Military Council and head of state of Niger; and Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema, president of the Togolese Republic attended the meeting.

After making a critical analysis of events that occurred in Africa and in the world since their last meeting, the heads of state drew up a balance-sheet of their cooperation in the economic field. They remarked that the capital of the guarantee fund has increased to 10 billion CFA. The encourage private investors and the public sector of member states to call on this institution for the implementation of their economic ventures. In order to rapidly increase the fund's capital, the heads of state decided that every year a portion of the fund's turnover will be transferred to its capital, while the remainder will go to interest.

The discussions were held in an atmosphere of friendship and frank cooperation which has always characterized the meetings of the Entente Council. The heads of state of Benin, Upper Volta, Niger and Togo thank His Excellency Mr Felix Houphouet-Boigny, president of the Republic of Ivory Coast, the Ivorian Government and people for the fraternal, warm and authenticially African welcome which was accorded them during their stay in Ivory Coast. Signed in Yamoussokro on 24 March 1982.

CSO: 4719/733

PARTY COORDINATORS MEET, DECIDE POLICIES

AB221340 Luanda ANGOP in Portuguese 1057 GMT 21 Mar 82

[Text] Luanda, 21 Mar (ANGOP)--The fourth national assembly of the coordinators of the party's organs took place in Lobito, in the Province of Benguela, from 19 to 21 February 1982. The main objective of the meeting was to strike a balance in the implementation of projects drawn up by the third national assembly for the party's basic organs; to examine the directives for drawing up the work plan for the organs in 1982; to study the methods to achieve party growth and to present the results of the elections of the basic party organs of municipal and provincial party conferences.

The opening session, which was presided over by Kundy Paihama, candidate member of the Politburo, coordinator of the party's provincial committee and provincial commissioner of Benguela, took place in the presence of Col Joao Luis (Xietu), member of the Politburo, deputy minister of defense and chief of defense staff of the People's Armed Forces for the Liberation of Angola (FAPLA).

The working sessions were directed by Lucio Lara, secretary of the Central Committee for organization, and also participating were Antonio Jacinto and Joao Garcia (Cabelo Branco), members of the party's Central Committee; directors of the departments of organization and support to mass and social organizations; representatives of the department of the Central Committee; the secretary of the national committee of the youth wing of the MPLA Party, and representatives of the political headquarters, the defense and security organizations, the party's provincial committee as well as the party's basic organs in all provinces in the country.

Ample participation of all delegates was recorded throughout the sessions and the meeting reached the following conclusions:

1. That until the end of April, the party's organs should examine the draft regulations on the functioning of the party's basic organs and make suggestions for their enrichment to guide the organizing departments of the party's provincial committees.

2. That the party's provincial committees should make the necessary effort to ensure that the comrades involved in the party's development follow the party's initial plan.

3. That within a period of 8 days, the departments of the Central Committee should give the final form of the proposed guidelines for drawing up a work plan for the party's basic organs paying attention to the suggestions presented at the assembly.

4. That the competent departments of the party should give its members access to the principal laws of the People's Republic of Angola, particularly concerning the state's organs for people's power.

5. That the department of information and propaganda of the Central Committee should ensure the retransmission of the radio programs "Combatant Angola" on all the national networks and try to meet with the organization and the competent bodies with the aim of making adequate distribution of batteries periodically to rural areas and military units.

6. That the political, economic and social department of the Central Committee and the administrative and economic headquarters should disseminate ample information on the role of the party's basic organs in the political control of the various activities, especially on the relations between the party and state.

7. That the political, economic and social department of the Central Committee should propose directives aimed at establishing forms of political control on the part of the party's basic organs in the activities of mixed and private enterprises.

8. The assembly showed its concern with the irregularities and the consequent deviation in the implementation of the directives of the extraordinary congress on sports policy, which is intended for the party's department to draw up directives which aim at correcting this situation.

9. The participants expressed their unconditional support for the speech made by President Jose Eduardo dos Santos in Lubango during the 4 February celebrations.

The assembly expressed its gratitude to the party's provincial committee for the harmonic conditions which permitted the hodling of the meeting.

The closing session was presided over by Lucio Lara, member of the Politburo and the secretariat of the MPLA-Labor Party.

CSO: 4742/253

BRIEFS

PREPARATIONS FOR MEETING WITH PORTUGAL--Luanda, 23 Mar (ANGOP)--The preparatory meeting of the second session of the joint intergovernment committee between the People's Republic of Angola and the Republic of Portugal began yesterday (Monday) morning in Luanda with a meeting of experts from the two countries. The opening session, which took place at the Costa do Sol Hotel, was jointly presided over on the Angolan side by the vice-governor of the National Bank of Angola, Joao Abel, and on the Portuguese side by the ambassador accredited to Luanda, Fernando da Silva Marques. The aim of the meeting is to prepare documents that will be submitted to the session which is scheduled for 24 to 26 March. The preparatory meeting further decided to establish three subcommittees: technical and economic, sociocultural scientific, and technological and commercial which will meet separately beginning Monday afternoon. The cochairman of the joint committee are the Angolan minister of finance, Ismael Martins, and the Portuguese minister of state for finance and planning, Joao Salgueiro, who is expected in Luanda on Tuesday. [Text] [AB231517 Luanda ANGOP in Portuguese 1130 GMT 23 Mar 82]

PEOPLE'S ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE MEETING--Luanda, 18 Mar (ANGOP)--The permanent committee of the People's Assembly met Thursday morning at Futungo de Belas under the chairmanship of President Jose Eduardo dos Santos, a communication issued by that body yesterday in Luanda reports. According to the agenda, the same source indicates, this session will discuss and approve the draft report of the ninth session, the draft resolution on the granting of commune status to big city areas, the proposal relating to the code for deputies and the resolution on the distribution of People's Assembly deputies according to constituencies. The approval of the list of members of the commission of defense and national security and the work programs of the commissions will also feature prominently in the discussions. It should be recalled that the permanent committee of the People's Assembly, which meets every 2 years, is the organ that represents it and assumes all its functions between sessions. [Text] [AB181535 Luanda ANGOP in French 1220 GMT 18 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/743

BRIEFS

MESSAGE FROM DOE--Comrade Roger Villon Guezo, first deputy speaker of the Revolutionary National Assembly Permanent Committee, acting on behalf of the head of state today received in audience Liberian Minister of Foreign Affairs Fahnbulleh. Mr Fahnbulleh told newsmen that he had brought a message of solidarity from Liberian President Samuel Doe to President Kerekou with a view to strengthening the ties between our two countries. Pointing out that his visit was taking place in a period when Africa is facing challenges such as the issues of the Western Sahara, Chad and Namibia, the Liberian foreign minister expressed the hope that his visit would contribute to building a bridge between Benin and Liberia with a view to securing harmonized views between the two countries. [Text] [AB242029 Cotonou Domestic Service in French 1930 GMT 24 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/735

ENVOY TO ANGOLA ON GUINEA-BISSAU, SDAR

AB241920 Luanda ANGOP in French 1245 GMT 24 Mar 82

[Text] Luanda, 24 Mar (ANGOP)--Joaquim Pedro da Silva, the first ambassador from the Republic of Cape Verde to Angola said Tuesday in Luanda that between his country and Guinea-Bissau "there is no question of severing relations."

The Cape Verdian diplomat, who was addressing the journalists in Luanda during a press conference, said [words indistinct] Aristides Pereira and Bernardo Vieira "Nino," will enable them to analyze the level of bilateral relations in order to improve the current climate between the two countries.

Joaquim Pedro da Silva further revealed the holding soon of a meeting of heads of state of the five Lucophone African countries (Angola, Mozambique, Sao Tome and Principe, Cape Verde and Guinea Bissau), at which a joint strategy will be adopted on burning world issues and in particular on those of Southern Africa.

In this context, he vehemently condemned the terrorist acts of "the number 1 enemy of the African people, racist South Africa," against the sovereign and independent countries of the region.

Regarding the stand taken by some African countries on the question of the admission of the SDAR to the OAU, Joaquim Pedro da Silva said that the issue now is not whether or not the SDAR is a member of the OAU or whether or not there are provisions in the charter to justify the secretariat's admission of this country since it has the support of the required majority, but rather the pressure exerted by Morocco and its allies on certain African countries, he continued.

The Cape Verdian diplomat further said that the expulsion of the SDAR from the OAU meeting of information ministers which was being held in Dakar, the attempts to organize an extraordinary conference of heads of state to reconsider the admission of the SDAR to the OAU as well as the failure to respect the principle of neutrality that a host country should observe, constitute illegal acts and a violation of the principles contained in the OAU charter adopted 19 years ago by all its members.

Joaquim Pedro da Silva condemned, in this connection, the maneuvers to divide the OAU, saying that the African countries are capable of solving their problems on a basis of mutual understanding and without foreign intervention.
CSO: 4719/743

BRIEFS

IMPROVED TIES WITH GUINEA-BISSAU--Lisbon, 23 Mar (AFP)--Relations between Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde could improve in the near future, Maj Silvino da Luz, Cape Verde's minister of foreign affairs, said on Tuesday morning in Lisbon. "It is normal for two countries to take steps to normalize their relations. Only if there is detente can the five former Portuguese African colonies resume their summit meeting," he added. The Cape Verdian foreign minister, who was making a brief stopover in Lisbon, left the Portuguese capital for Tunis where he is expected on an official visit. [Text] [AB231451 Paris AFP in French 1350 GMT 23 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/743

CAMEROONIAN ARMY CLOSES KOUSSERI REFUGEE CAMP

AB221157 Paris AFP in French 0943 GMT 22 Mar 82

[By Jean-Eudes Barbier]

[Text] Yaounde, 22 Mar (AFP)--The Cameroonian Army recently intervened to ensure the final closure of the Chadian refugee camp at Kousseri in the extreme north of Cameroon, a closure which the refugees have been opposing for many weeks now, it is learned on Monday at the office of the High Commission for Refugees (HCR) in Yaounde. The same source stressed that this intervention was "forcible but correct."

The almost 20,000 Chadian refugees who lived in the camp had been given the choice between returning to Ndjamena and being transferred to the Poli region at about 500 kilometers inside Cameroonian territory. About 5,000 refugees agreed to be repatriated while others left for Poli. Some other refugees succeeded in crossing over to Nigeria where a camp was set up some months ago west of Kousseri not far from the border.

Hundreds of Chadians who want to leave for Nigeria have, however, been stranded in Cameroon for 1 week now because Lagos has finally refused to allow them to enter the country. Moreover, part of the Chadian community in Kousseri has "merged" with the population of this small border town situated on the southern bank of the Chari River opposite Ndjamena. The police controls are being increased in order to unmask the recalcitrants and force them to leave the camp.

The decision to close the Kousseri camp was made several months ago by the Cameroonian authorities. Official sources in Yaounde are of the opinion that because of its proximity to Chad, the Center could "be transformed into a dangerous hotbed of tension at any moment." It is argued that some thousands of its occupants are firm supporters of the leader of the FAN, Hissein Habre, who is in rebellion against Mr Goukouni Oueddei's government.

It is also said in Yaounde that the maintenance of a Chadian refugee camp a few hundred meters from Ndjamena constitutes a "violation" of the OAU regulation on refugees which stipulates that the latter should be established at a "reasonable" distance from their country of origin. The fact remains that most of the refugees at Kousseri have always refused to be transferred to the Poli region chosen by Yaounde to enable them to stay in Cameroon for a long time. The slightly populated Poli region can receive about 15,000 persons depending on the availability of arable land.

The reasons for the refusal of the refugees have never been clearly established, the HCR bureau indicated. It is certain, however, that many Chadians do not want to be far away from their country with which they continue to maintain close ties, the same sources said.

For several weeks now, long discussions have been going on between the Cameroonian authorities, the HCR officials and representatives of the refugees to agree on the details of evacuation of the camp. Finally, about 50 Cameroonian military men had to intervene to force the Chadian community to leave.

The Kousseri camp was opened at the height of the battle of Ndjamena in 1980. About 100,000 inhabitants of the Chadian capital fleeing from the fighting had crossed the Chari River in canoes and taken refuge there. Since the reestablishment of peace in Ndjamena, about 80,000 of the refugees have returned to the capital but nearly 20,000 of them obstinately refuse to do so.

CSO: 4719/732

BRIEFS

FRENCH, SECURITY FORCES INCIDENT--Abidjan, 22 Mar (AFP)--An incident which occurred on the night of Friday, 19 March, in Brazzaville brought a clash between a large group of French expatriates--men and women--and Congolese security forces, according to accounts by travelers who arrived Sunday from the Congolese capital. According to these accounts, three French adolescents--two girls and one boy--who were making a lot of noise in front of the French Cultural Center where their parents were attending a conference, were summoned and beaten up by several armed men from the Congolese security service. Immediately, the expatriates present--about 200--tried unsuccessfully to protect the children. Two European ambassadors and the French consul also tried to intercede but they were rejected. [Words indistinct] and were kept in custody overnight. The French consul, who refused to leave without the children, was also (?present) and it was only on Saturday morning that they were released. This incident has created great anxiety among expatriates and diplomatic circles in Brazzaville, according to the account. [Text] [AB221030 Paris AFP in French 0742 GMT 22 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/732

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE PRESIDENT EXAMINES ROLE IN DEVELOPMENT

Djibouti LA NATION in French 25 Feb 82 p 6

[Interview with Chamber of Commerce President Said Coubeche; date and place not given]

[Text] [Question] Mr Coubeche, you have just been overwhelmingly reelected as president of the Chamber of Commerce. For us, this is an opportunity to take a look at that institution, which is perhaps not well known, an institution that you have symbolized for years and over whose destiny you will continue to preside.

If one goes by the construction site of the future Chamber of Commerce building, the institution has reached a turning point in its history and is preparing to resume its activity on new foundations.

In order to have a clearer view, we shall base our interview on three main points: the past, the present and the future.

The past: Can you tell us briefly what the original role of the Chamber of Commerce of Djibouti was? What has it become with independence?

[Answer] The Chamber of Commerce is an old institution in the country. Its creation goes back to the beginning of the century in 1906. For a long time, it was the only professional organization having a code set at the time by a decree of the Ministry of the Colonies, which was modified during the last war, when the Chamber was turned into an advisory assembly for commerce. In 1947, the Chamber of Commerce was restored to its role, elections were set and its powers were recognized. The latter were even strengthened following the establishment of the status of internal autonomy of what was called the territory.

Our country's accession to independence caused the government to adapt the bylaws of the Chamber of Commerce, while substantially modifying its makeup and giving national representation a greater place.

The role assigned to the Chamber of Commerce has, from the very beginning, been to defend and represent merchants, companies and enterprises, study any project that might contribute to the country's development and serve as a link between the government and the private sector.

[Question] The present: What does the Chamber of Commerce of Djibouti now represent? What is its "economic importance" and what role does it play in the country's development?

[Answer] The Chamber of Commerce remains the only elected organization that is representative of all the country's commercial and economic activities. It is the emanation of the role and importance of all those it represents and is the most qualified interlocutor between the political and administrative government and the private sector. Many people are unaware of the real role of the private sector in the active life of every day.

What role does the Chamber of Commerce play in the country's development?

Given the current state of affairs, its role is limited for many reasons that are not always its own doing. For many years, following the latest split, the Chamber of Commerce was forced to leave its building and to take up residency in very small quarters.

For 4 years, we have tried to find the means we needed to rebuild our headquarters. It would take a long time to tell you here of all the difficulties and all the problems our assembly has encountered. We must resolutely think to the future.

[Question] The future: Everyone knows that the future of the Republic of Djibouti is above all in commerce and services. Trade is mainly independent. Does it not need to be better organized, structured and coordinated, not to say "professionalized"? The services are directly linked to commercial activity. The port is in the midst of full development (along with the railroad), but we have the impression that the banking sector is stagnating and that Djibouti is slow in seizing a definite chance to become a strong commercial place. What is the Chamber of Commerce doing or going to do in order to structure and develop trade and services, in order to raise them to an international level worthy of national ambitions?

[Answer] A new Chamber of Commerce was elected in January and its board has just been set up.

Thanks to strict financial management over the past 4 years, the Chamber of Commerce was then able to begin rebuilding its future headquarters in October 1981. This project has come about because the Chamber of Commerce has been able to take some 50 percent of the rebuilding cost from its own reserves. We hope that the new building will be operational by June 1983. When I say "operational," I mean that the Chamber will then have qualified personnel and adequate equipment enabling it to play its full role.

As you quite accurately say -- and unfortunately, this is not the case for many persons -- the future of our republic is above all in commerce and services.

The content of your question is in itself almost a program of actions for a consular assembly. Many of us firmly believe in the economic needs that you mention and we know how closely the problems are linked together.

We cannot speak about development, structures or services without speaking of the means that must create a certain harmony between themselves. These means are multiple and include stability, cohesion, inceitives and the limitation of bureaucratic red tape. Beyond that, we need the application of a policy that is liberal, not so much in what it says, but rather, in its spirit.

Through these few principles, you can easily understand why the Chamber of Commerce cannot do everything. It can only be credible in the eyes of those it must address only if the government helps it and brings it into its economic policy, in a word, if it backs it in its actions.

In order to illustrate my remarks and reply to your question about "Djibouti being slow in seizing a definite chance to become a strong commercial place," I would cite, by way of example, the creation in 1949 -- in which I personally participated -- of the privileged monetary status and the free port, which unfortunately has not responded to all expectations because of the reticence and resistance of the administration at the time to allow the private sector to play the trump cards which that status was supposed to hand over to it.

This is an example which we must meditate upon if we want to achieve all the objectives of our monetary, fiscal and port policy, which is a major asset.

Let there be no mistake about its role and power: The Chamber of Commerce is an organization of consultation, reflection and proposal. In order for it to fully play its role, it must have the human and material means and we think we shall have them by next year and that it will have from the government the support and understanding that are essential to achieve the objectives expected of it. I am among those who firmly believe that our ambition is that of the chief of state, President Hassan Gouled Aptidon, and his government to make our young republic a model of stability and economic influence in the region.

11,464
CSO: 4719/624

BRIEFS

PRESIDENT RECEIVES SPANISH DELEGATION--Yesterday, His Excellency Obiang Nguema Mbazogo, chairman of the Supreme Military Council, received at the government palace the Spanish delegation attending the Equatorial Guinean-Spanish Joint Commission, headed by the under secretary for foreign affairs, Igracio [name indistinct]. Also in the delegation were the director of the Equatorial Guinean-Spanish Cooperation Bureau, Mr (Pujante), and the Spanish ambassador to our country, Vicente Fernandez Trelles. Present at the audience were State Commissioner for Foreign Affairs Marcos Mba Ondo, the permanent secretary of the Ministry of Finance, the director for Europe and America in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the ambassador of Equatorial Guinea to Madrid. [Text] [AB231402 Malabo Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 23 Mar 82]

CSO: 4748/21

ERITREAN LEADER ON CONDITIONS FOR NEGOTIATION

GF191455 Doha QNA in Arabic 1007 GMT 19 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Doha, 19 Mar (QNA)--An Eritrean official has praised the state of Qatar and its fixed and supportive stand on the Eritrean question and on the struggle for independence and for the liberation of their lands.

Osman Saleh Sabbe, leader of the Eritrean Liberation Front Popular Liberation Forces, who arrived in Doha from Kuwait today together with Mohamed Osman (Abu Bakr), the front's representative in the Gulf region, said that his visit to Qatar is aimed at briefing Qatari officials on the developments of the Eritrean question and the horrible massacres carried out by Ethiopia against the Eritrean people with the goal of suppressing their revolution, eliminating them and resolving the Eritrean question militarily.

He indicated that this visit is within the framework of his current tour of the GCC states in order to obtain internatioanl political efforts to denounce the current stand of the Ethiopian regime, stop the Ethiopian aggression and resolve the Eritrean question justly and peacefully. He added that a number of Eritrean delegations have recently visited a number of Asian Islamic states and a number of European and African states for the same purpose.

Mr Sabbe said that the sixth military campaign, which began early this year, was declared by the Ethiopian president to a congregation that included 1,205 senior officials in Asmera and in which 100,000 Ethiopian soldiers took part, in addition to 10,000 Cuban and other foreign soldiers who were supported with tanks, planes and heavy artillery with the aim of crushing the Ethiopian revolution militarily, has not achieved a single one of its goals due to the steadfastness of the revolutionaries and the Eritrean people and the protection of the mountains. He added that thousands of Ethiopian soldiers have been killed or wounded during the past 2 months.

Sabbe indicated that the Ethiopian president is now in Asmera after spending a long period in the hospital. The reasons for his hospitalization are not clear, he added, though some have said that he was wounded in (Af'abat) region during an artillery shelling by revolutionaries while he was on a reconnaissance tour. The Eritrean leader added that others say the Ethiopian president was wounded in an internal conflict, and (Ad-Dawthah) [not further identified] claims he was ill.

The leader of the Eritrean Liberation Front Popular Liberation Forces said that the Ethiopian policy relies on maneuvering, prevarication and double-dealing because at the same time that the Ethiopian Government announced its readiness to negotiate and requested Sudan to mediate, it was preparing for launching huge military campaigns against Eritrea and its people.

He added that the Ethiopian revolution does not refuse to negotiate with Ethiopia but, at the same time, it sees that these negotiations should take place openly and clearly and not behind a veil which could be used to hide the launching of Ethiopian military campaigns to wipe out the Eritrean people and impose military solutions. He said that these negotiations must take place without prior conditions and in the presence of international observers from the United Nations, the OAU and the Arab League and in the presence of a United Eritrean delegation representing all various groups of the Eritrean revolution.

In his statement to QNA, Mr Sabbe stressed that the principal Eritrean demand that will be relinquished is full national independence for Eritrea. However, he said that they could be sufficiently flexible concerning the sea ports that Ethiopia has been claiming in order to secure marine outlets for it on the Red Sea. He explained that the details of these matters could be worked out during the negotiations. He added that they wish to live in peace with their neighbor Ethiopia if Ethiopia desires in order to stop the loss of wealth and men in continuing warfare.

CSO: 4704/13

ERITREAN LIBERATION FRONT REPRESENTATIVE DENOUNCES ETHIOPIA, USSR

Mogadishu HORSEED in Italian 5 Mar 82 p 2

[Text] Hamud Mohamed Adam, representing the Eritrean Liberation Front-People's Liberation Forces [ELF-PLF] in Somalia, called on the United Nations, the OAU, other international organizations and the peace-loving nations of the world to intervene and halt the genocide being perpetrated against the Eritrean people by the government of Ethiopia and its allies.

Speaking at a meeting for solidarity with the Eritrean people, held at the office of the Arab League in Mogadishu, the ELF-PLF representative asserted that in order to carry out its program to exterminate the Eritrean people, the government of Ethiopia has acquired Libyan military materiel and troops, Soviet generals in active command, South Yemeni pilots plus Cuban and other troops and foreign advisers. He added that the Eritrean liberation fronts are valiantly struggling against this new military offensive and that the personal presence of Mengistu to direct the operations is proof of the Ethiopian Government's failure to achieve its objectives.

The ELF-PLF representative stated that it is an irony of history that the fascist government of Addis Ababa is committing genocide behind the camouflage of building socialism in Ethiopia. He said that just goes to show the hypocrisy of the Soviet Union and its disdain for the principles and norms of international law and for people's right to self-determination. He reminded the audience of the conference held at the start of the current year in Asmara under the chairmanship of Mengistu, that focused on execution of the military program to exterminate the people of Eritrea. It was held as a follow-up to the tripartite summit that had taken place earlier in Aden and was attended by the heads of state of the unholy alliance: Ethiopia, Libya and South Yemen.

Attending the meeting were representatives from the Western Somali Liberation Front and the Abo Liberation Front.

CSO: 4728/4

BRIEFS

LIBYAN ARMS, FUNDS SUPPLY--(Nafi' Hasan Kurdi), the Eritrean Liberation Front representative in France, has told AL-MADINAH that Colonel al-Qadhdhafi gave Ethiopia large quantities of arms and ammunition, particularly Hercules aircraft, on 30 December 1981, as well as $80 million to support the communist imperialist Ethiopian regime. He also told AL-MADINAH that the Eritrean Liberation Front inflicted on the Ethiopian forces enormous losses in men and material. These losses included 11,000 killed or wounded or captured, 8 Mig-21 and MiG-23 aircraft, 7 of which were destroyed in the Asmara military airport while the eighth was shot down by the Eritreans' antiaircraft fire, and 3 MI-24 helicopters. [Sa'd Mabruk dispatch from Paris] [Text] [GF221720 Jidda AL-MADINAH in Arabic 20 Mar 82 p 1]

CSO: 4704/13

BRIEFS

PROSPECTING AGREEMENT WITH FRANCE--Libreville, 19 Mar (AFP)--Etienne Guy Mouvagha-Tchioba, Gabon's vice prime minister in charge of mines and petroleum, and Robert Camtoni, France's ambassador to Libreville, signed an agreement last week on mineral prospection along the trans-Gabonese railroad. The agreement, which involves a sum of 110 million CFA, is part of a vast program of air mapping, geophysical reconnaissance by air and ground prospecting over a 10-year period, totalling 10 billion CFA. The European Development Fund will also contribute to the program. [AG201028 Paris AFP in French 0724 GMT 19 Mar 82]

OIL MINISTER TO PARIS, VIENNA--Etienne Guy Mouvagha-Tchioba left Libreville yesterday for Paris and Vienna. In the French capital, he will participate in the deliberations of the board of directors of the Mekambo Iron Mines Company. In the Austrian capital, the second deputy prime minister and minister of mines and petroleum will represent Gabon at the OPEC ministerial conference scheduled to begin tomorrow. [Text] [AB181950 Libreville Domestic Service in French 1830 GMT 18 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/732

BRIEFS

JAWARA POSTPONES CONAKRY VISIT--Banul, 21 Mar (AFP)--Gambian President Sir Dawda Jawara's visit to Guinea, which was scheduled for Saturday, has been postponed to a later date, Radio Gambia announced on Saturday evening. No statement was issued on the reasons for the postponement. According to a publication on Saturday morning, President Jawara was to pay a 24-hour "working visit" to Conakry. He paid a visit to Guinea last January following the creation of the Senegambian Confederation. [Text] [AB210930 Paris AFP in French 0855 GMT 21 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/732

PAPER CALLS NATIONALIZATION OF LAND 'UNNECESSARY'

AB231233 Accra Domestic Service in English 0700 GMT 23 Mar 82

[Press review]

[Excerpt] The GHANAIAN TIMES again takes up the issue of land reform in the country. It notes that the issue has been a major priority and radical step in most revolutions because land use was the most repressive factor of the social injustice which revolutions set out to correct. Land reform is, therefore, not a doctrinaire concept of revolution which our Ghanaian advocates of such reform seem to (?retain). The TIMES cites the example of Ethiopia and says the nationalization of land there was the most essential decision taken after the revolution of February 1974. This is because Ethiopia was a thorough feudal state in which 90 percent of the farmers were mere serfs and (?held) by the land owners. The paper says the Ethiopian landowners were the main oppressive class.

The emperor could give any size of land in the country to his family members or to his ministers and, in certain events, all the farmers originally owning the land could be driven out without protest. This, according to the TIMES, was why after the revolution, the land was nationalized and redistributed to the peasants to end the oppression. The reform also made it possible for the leaders to organize agriculture on the basis of large cooperatives. Thus, the TIMES makes it clear that in Ghana, the basic land system is communal ownership. Land is vested in the clan or family and is held in trust for the free use of all by the clan or family head. It is therefore clear that land has never been a main factor of social injustice in Ghana. The TIMES describes as meaningless in most areas in the country the constant appeal to chiefs to release land for agriculture. This is because chiefs don't own the land. The largely communal land ownership system offers the opportunity for cooperative farming. The realistic process is to encourage the establishment of communal farms which the Provisional National Defense Council has been calling for. The TIMES therefore considers the call for the nationalization of land as unnecessary. Such a step will rather bring confusion and misunderstanding among the rural community.

The paper points out that the law allows the government to acquire land for any project and this can be applied to launch either what it calls "a national cooperative farm movement" or to expand the state sector in agriculture.
CSO: 4700/1008

TWO ROADS TO ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ANALYZED

AB181855 Accra International Service in English 1615 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Talk by David Anarglatey]

[Text] In offices and university lecture rooms, a great debate has been going on as to what path Third World countries must take to achieve economic breakthrough and prosperity. Should it be through the path of opening the particular country's doors wide for foreign investments or should it be by closing the doors as much as possible to the outside world and pursuing a course of self-reliance?

The open door approach is the path advocated by Western economists and their supporters in the developing countries. It almost inevitably means in effect the influx of Western European capital through the establishment of subsidiaries of multinational companies like Lonrho, Valco, UAC, General Motors, Mobil Oil, Barclays Bank, to name just a few. These companies are encouraged to invest in the target country through blanket liberal policies such as making a free repatriation of profits and capital, easy importation of raw materials and equipment, low pay to local labor and low taxes. One main feature of this system is that the countries where the parent of the multinationals are placed are more disposed toward giving aid in terms of outright grants and loans to the countries with this open door policy.

Third World countries pursuing this path to development are legion. They include the Ivory Coast, Kenya, South Africa, Zaire, Upper Volta, Niger and Senegal in Africa; in Asia, Japan, Singapore, South Korea, India and Pakistan. All the countries in Latin America, except Cuba, Nicaragua, Mexico and of late Grenada, pursue the liberal economic policy with regard to foreign investment. On the contrary, the closed door or self-reliant approach insists on charting specific areas for the operation of foreign investors, areas which the economic planners believe will be of maximum benefit to the economy as a whole. There is usually foreign exchange control whereby the ability of foreign investors to repatriate their profits is controlled. Taxes tend to be high so that the host country can generate capital for further development. There are other examples of economic nationalism such as a stiff control over the number of personnel brought in by the foreign companies to man their operations. In other words, the host country tends to insist that foreign companies must recruit as much of their staff as possible locally so that the companies would be seen to be helping to solve the unemployment problem for the country as well as raising the living standards of the local population through improved incomes. Countries following this path of development include Tanzania, Angola, Mozambique, Guinea, Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, North Korea, Cuba, Nicaragua and Grenada.

It is significant to note here that Ghana, under Dr Nkrumah, pursued the second path, that is, the path of self-reliant economic growth. This was reversed by the National Liberation Council in 1966. In 1972, the former policy was restored by the National Redemption Council. Under ex-President Limann and the People's National Party [PNP], the open door policy was being reintroduced. The investment code passed by the PNP-controlled Parliament in 1981 was aimed at effectively putting Ghana among those countries that give room for unfettered foreign investment.

A critical look at the situation in the countries which have the open door policy as well as a look at their geographical position leads to the conclusion that the apparent prosperity of these countries is a clever artificial device by Western capitalism to create cases of wealth in a desert of poverty. I say it is deliberate because if it were not so, if their so-called prosperity is just because they opened their doors wide to foreign capital, then why is it that neighboring countries with the same policy do not attract the same level of investment to make them progress? The point being made is that the prosperity of those countries is due to the fact that they are used as conduit pipes to exploit the market labor and other resources of the whole region where most of these countries are situated.

The Ivory Coast, for example, may look prosperous but the prosperity is due to the cheap abundant labor from neighboring countries like Guinea and Upper Volta which make foreign countries reap high profits. Much of this profit is repatriated but, naturally, a little of this remains in the country to give Ivory Coast the appearance of prosperity. The net flow of capital from the Ivory Coast may even be in favor of that country but this is because much of the outflow is at the expense of neighboring countries. In any case, as the saying goes, the grass grows greenest at the banks of the river. So some of the profits being made by the multinationals is bound to stay where it is being made, whether accidentally or by design.

It is admitted that in the case of the countries that are specially chosen by international capitalism and serve as channels for exploiting the wealth of whole regions, the appearance of prosperity is not by accident. But it is consciously fostered to bolster the myth that the free enterprise economy rather than the planned one works better. The imperialists want people to believe that the country only has to open its doors to the West and prosperity will follow. But this is false because, in the same geographical region surrounding the specially chosen target country, one can find many other countries in a similar situation and which have also opened their doors wide for the Western investor. But the investors do not go there for it is not in their interest to create two Ivory Coasts in West Africa or two Kenyas in East Africa; two Zaires in Central Africa or two South Africas in Southern Africa. One is enough to serve their purpose in each zone. They are not in Africa or Asia or Latin America, for that matter, to make areas prosperous; they are there to make profits, which is the only goal of capitalism anyway. They choose one country and one country only in every zone as the center from which they will exploit the market labor and raw materials of the zone and then repatriate the huge profits.

At the same time, the imperialists succeed in making many people believe that the comparative economic growth of the host country is a result of their presence there. But then if the one country simply has to open its doors wide to foreign capital and automatically become prosperous, then why is it that Western capital does not repeat its wonderful performance in the neighboring countries too. After all, Upper Volta, Niger, Senegal, Mali and even Ghana at one time had the open door policy. Why are they still poor? The only answer is that it is not in the interest of capitalism to repeat the Ivory Coast phenomenon in another country in the region for, if they do, they will be forced to allow some of the profits to stay in the host country and their net outflow of profits from the zone will be reduced.

For the same reason, Tanzania, Uganda and Malawi must be kept poor so that Kenya can be used to exploit East Africa for imperialism. President Nyerere of Tanzania saw through this imperialist trick. He saw that his country was just a market for dumping goods made by multinationals in Kenya. So he took Tanzania out of the East African Economic Commission which linked it with Kenya and Uganda. The commission has since broken up because it is a creature of imperialism fostering an unequal relationship. The ECOWAS would suffer the same fate if the imperialists try to use their pet country in the region to exploit the other member countries.

In Latin America, Brazil is one of the countries chosen to foster the myth of the superiority of free enterprise over a planned economy. But just as most Africans and Asians are now awakening to the falsity of this claim, the peoples of Latin America have also realized that their development can never come while they continue to be tied to the apron strings of the West. That subcontinent has one of the biggest external debts and the highest inflation rate in the world in spite of massive infusions of Western investments and loans--hence, what has come to be known as the Caribbean crisis, by which is meant a recognition that the continent is sinking under more and more debts while it is kept on its present path of free enterprise. But Cuba and Nicaragua have freed themselves from this burden by changing course through revolution despite U.S. economic blockade. The result of their struggle to achieve economic independence, aided by the socialist countries and the result of similar efforts in North Korea for example, in Angola, Mozambique, and Tanzania should help break the false myth of the superiority of Western capitalism as a path to development.

But although the path that Ghana will take has not been spelled out, it is expected that the only logical course that a people's government such as [words indistinct] it can take, is one of self-reliance. Dr Nkrumah was said to have taken a bet with President Houphouet-Boigny of Ivory Coast as to whether Ghana's self-reliance policy or the Ivory Coast's liassez-faire economy will lead to faster development. Ghana's recent economic troubles have made people say that the path chosen by Ivory Coast is better. But the race is not yet over. Ghana after 31 December now has another chance to prove that the path chosen by Nkrumah in the 1960's was correct after all.

CSO: 4700/1008

BRIEFS

NO MORE CURRENCY PRINTING--The Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC] will not print any more currency. Announcing this at a workers' rally in Jasikan today, the secretary for the Volta region, Dr Yao Fiagbe, noted that out of the 8 billion cedis in the country only 2 billion cedis is [word indistinct] to the banks. The remaining 6 billion cedis is to the public. Dr Fiagbe said the aim of the government now is to increase production in all sectors of the economy and the people should be prepared to sacrifice. He assured cocoa and coffee farmers that every effort is being made to pay them for their produce. The secretary, however, asked them to be patient with the government. [Excerpt] [AB222045 Accra Domestic Service in English 2000 GMT 22 Mar 82]

'PRODUCING UNITS' FOR BAKERS--With effect from the 15th of next month no individual baker will be allowed to bake bread. The bakers will be grouped into bread producing units. Addressing a cooperative society meeting in the Amansie District of Bekwai, the Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC] secretary for cooperatives and rural development, Mr Ankomah, said the grouping will end malpractices in the flour trade and make bread cheaper and readily available to the ordinary Ghanaian. He said members of the units will engage in various aspects of breadbaking and selling and share the overall profit. Mr Ankomah told the members of the movement that the PNDC intends to develop a cooperative movement which will generate enough profit to enable members educate their children. [Excerpt] [AB232100 Accra Domestic Service in English 2000 GMT 23 Mar 82]

BSL SHIPS' SALES STUDIED--The government has decided to set up a committee to advise it on the sale of Black Star Line vessels. Four organizations are expected to nominate representatives to serve on the committee. They are the Economic Review Committee, the Ghana Merchant Navy Officer's Association, the National Union of Seamen and the People's Defense Committee of the Black Star Line. Two other persons, Mr Wilmot, a marine consultant, and Mr Takyi-Berko, a former member of parliament, have also been invited to serve on the committee. A statement by the Ministry of Transport and Communications asked the nominees to report to the principal secretary of the ministry not later than 1000 on Thursday for briefing. [Text] [AB232057 Accra Domestic Service in English 2000 GMT 23 Mar 82]

OUSTER OF APARTHEID-LINKED TRANSNATIONALS--The Ghana United Nations Students and Youth Association [GUNSA] has demanded an immediate withdrawal of South African troops from Angola in the wake of recent South African aggression against nonexistent SWAPO bases in Angola. A statement issued in Accra said these acts of aggression led by international imperialism are meant to undermine the progressive and radical transformation taking place in Angola and thus prevent Angola's all-round support for the struggle of the Namibian people led by SWAPO. The statement therefore condemned the hypocritical tricks of the five-nation Western contact group in its attempt to distort UN Resolution 435 on the Namibian independence issue. Hence GUNSA appeals to the Provisional National Defense Council to investigate allegations that aluminum from the Volta Aluminum Company has found its way to South Africa's nuclear industry. The PNDC should also terminate without delay all the activities of transnational corporations in the country which have links with apartheid South Africa and Namibia. The statement also called on all progressive OPEC countries to impose oil sanctions on South Africa and her allies. [Text] [AB250755 Accra Domestic Service in English 0700 GMT 25 Mar 82]

REMITTANCES FROM GHANAIANS ABROAD--The Chief of Defense Staff [CDS] and member of the Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC], Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah, has said that expressing mere solidarity without any action is not enough. Addressing the UK and Ireland branch of the National Union of Ghana Students, Brig Nunoo-Mensah, who is leading an official delegation to Britain, said Ghanaians abroad should consider seriously what practical contributions they can make toward the current efforts at building a prosperous Ghana. He said if they send remittances in the form of foreign exchange to their relations at home [words indistinct] the government will have the necessary funds to provide more drugs and other basic needs for the people. The CDS criticized those Ghanaian students who have been sponsored by the taxpayers, but have refused to return home after completing their courses. Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah informed the branch members that Ghanaians at home are making tremendous sacrifices and said those abroad should ask themselves what they can do as their contribution. He explained that the revolution is the result of the conditions created by the maladministration of the deposed People's National Party, and the military had to intervene to prevent what could have been more explosive, that is, the revolution of the masses. The CDS had earlier met the British foreign secretary, Lord Carrington. No details of the talks have been released. [Text] [AB241025 Accra Domestic Service in English 0700 GMT 24 Mar 82]

RELEASE OF LAND FOR FARMING--In line with its determination to eliminate hunger from the society, the Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC] wants every inch of land to be cultivated during the current major farming season. In this respect, all lands, both private and public, must be released for the production of staple foods like maize, rice, cassava and vegetables. The PNDC liaison officer at the castle made this known at various meetings he had with chiefs, farmers and the people during a 3-day tour of the western and central regions. He explained the philosophy of the government's agricultural program to them, and said the directive to release land does not amount to a confiscation of land; rather it is aimed at using all available space to grow more food to feed the nation. The liaison officer said land released will be plowed and harrowed for all persons interested in farming, adding that such persons will be supplied with the necessary inputs. The officer, who is also the commander of the national agricultural task force, said to achieve maximum success, all regional secretaries must assume command of the regional agricultural task forces and explain the program to the people. He urged the chiefs and people to form agricultural task forces to ensure effective coordination of the program. [Text] [AB210820 Accra Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 21 Mar 82]

WARNING AGAINST HARASSMENT OF CIVILIANS--The secretary for the interior, Mr Johnny Hansen, says that Provisional National Defense Council is doing all things possible to stop the harassment of civilians by soldiers. The secretary, who is continuing his familiarization tour of establishments under his ministry, was addressing officers and men of the people's police service at the Tema regional police headquarters yesterday. He reminded military personnel that by molesting civilians, they are making more enemies for the revolution. He therefore advised them to hand over to the appropriate authorities civilians arrested and not subject them to any form of brutality. Mr Hansen said a revolution does not mean chaos and anarchy but a change for the better. The revolution therefore seeks to create a just society devoid of corruption and inefficiency. He advised the police to cultivate good relations with the public, adding that the country needs a police force that is genuinely responsive to the needs of the people. [Text] [AB230750 Accra Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 23 Mar 82]

ASYLUM SOUGHT--Alhaki Youssif Patty, Ghanaian high commissioner in Nigeria, appointed to that post by the former Limann government, has sought political asylum in Lagos because of the evolving situation in his country since the coup d'etat led by Flight Lieutenant Jerry Rawlings, a communique handed to the press by the ambassador announced on Monday 22 March. "More than 2,700 civilians and military have been killed since Rawlings took power. Moreover, there are more than 800 persons wounded in the course of skirmishes. I cannot continue to serve a country whose regime is made up of individuals who have no respect whatsoever for human rights and who believe that every prosperous person is a criminal," the ambassador noted in his communique. [Text] [Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Mar 82 p 3]

CSO: 4719/750

BRIEFS

FOOD AID TO BE SOUGHT--Bissau, 24 Mar (AFP)--Guinea-Bissau is going to ask the international community for food aid, namely 47,000 tons of cereal, 3,000 tons of cooking oil, 1,000 tons of milk and 2,000 tons of sugar, the country's food security office has indicated. Although agricultural production has been normal this year with a cereal production estimated at 120,000 tons, there was a 40 percent shortage, the office says. Last year, it will be recalled, the international community granted Guinea-Bissau 27,000 tons of rice and 10,000 tons of other cereals and essential products. [Text] [AB241237 Paris AFP in French 1147 GMT 24 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/743

BRIEFS

AGREEMENT ON SPACE SIGNED--At a ministerial council meeting presided over by the head of state, President Houphouet-Boigny, the council authorized the signing of an agreement between the Government of the Ivory Coast and the European Space Agency for the installation and use in the Ivory Coast of the facilities for the control of the satellite launcher "Ariane." [Excerpt] [AB181953 Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 18 Mar 82 p 32]

CSO: 4719/733

BRIEFS

MOI RECEIVES ENVOYS--On 23 March President Moi received the credentials of the new high commissioner of Malawi, Mr M.W. Machinjili, the new high commissioner of Australia, Mr Alexander White and the new ambassador of Yugoslavia, Mr Zoran Zagar. [LD250506 Nairobi Domestic Service in English 1000 GMT 23 Mar 82]

CSO: 4700/995

COMPENSATION AGREED ON FOR DIEGO GARCIA FAMILIES

AB242124 Paris AFP in English 1527 GMT 24 Mar 82

[Text] Port Louis, Mauritius, 24 Mar (AFP)--The governments of Britain and Mauritius have agreed terms for the compensation of 900 families displaced to make way for the Anglo-U.S. (?military) base of Diego Garcia.

The islanders of the Chagos Archipelago, in the Indian Ocean were obliged to go to Mauritius, and their demands for compensation have been a long-running bone of contention between London and Port Louis.

Under the agreement reached here yesterday, the islanders are to benefit from a total 100 million rupees (about nine million U.S. dollars).

Britain is to pay out 80 million rupees to the islanders, while the Mauritian Government is to make land worth 20 million rupees available to them.

The multi-partied Mauritian side to the negotiations here with British Under-secretary of State Sir Leonard Allison said it was "fully satisfied" with the agreement. It had initially asked for 160 million rupees.

Sources here stressed that the agreement does not signify any abandonment by the islanders of their right eventually to return to the archipelago.

The compensation is to be paid out in June and [words indistinct] special committee of the Mauritian parliament following legislative elections due on the island on June 11.

Diego Garcia, a British territory, is leased to the U.S. Government.

CSO: 4700/993

BRIEFS

SAUDI LOAN--Port Louis, 23 Mar (AFP)--The minister of finance of Mauritius and the director general of the Saudi Development Fund on Tuesday signed a loan convention under which the fund will grant Mauritius a loan totaling 50 million rupees (about 32.5 million FR). The money will be used for road projects in the urban centers. [AB231454 Paris AFP in French 1403 GMT 23 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/733

BRIEFS

PORTUGUESE BANK AGREEMENT--The Bank of Mozambique [BM] and the Portuguese National Overseas Bank signed a protocol in Maputo yesterday at the end of talks between the two banking institutions. The protocol was signed by BM administrator, Abel David, and a member of the Portuguese bank managing council, Santaio Cabral. During the talks problems aimed at the formation of bases of and a starting point for projects by the two institutions were discussed. According to the BM administrator, the talks were cordial and frank and the two sides expressed the hope of achieving good results in the future. The protocol signing ceremony was attended by the minister-governor of BM, Prakash Ratilal. [Text] [EA170400 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 1030 GMT 16 Mar 82]

CSO: 4742/253

BRIEFS

SWAPO TALKS WITH S.AFRICA--Luanda, 19 Mar (AFP)--The Southwest Africa People's Organisation (SWAPO), the Namibian nationalist movement, today called for immediate talks with South Africa on outstanding problems concerning independence for the territory. In a statement published here SWAPO said such a conference might help to speed up the application of resolution 435 of the United Nations under which Namibia would be freed of South African domination. The statement again rejected the two-tier system of elections for a Namibian constitutional assembly as proposed by the five-nation Western contact group on Namibia. SWAPO said this was a response to proposals put to it and the Southern African frontline states on March 12, which other reports had said were a suggested new compromise. SWAPO said it would accept either a proportional representation system covering the whole of Namibia or an election by constituencies. The contact group originally proposed a combination of the two, which SWAPO rejected as too confusing. [Text] [AB191653 Paris AFP in English 1649 GMT 19 Mar 82]

CSO: 4700/996

NEW UNDERWATER PIPELINE GOES INTO SERVICE

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 23 Feb 82 p 4

[Article by Mamadou Oumar Ndiaye: "New Underwater Pipeline at Mbao Refinery"]

[Text] A new "sealine" (underwater pipeline used to carry crude oil unloaded offshore) went into service yesterday morning off the coast of the SAR (African Refining Company) at Mbao.

The sealine, which is 1,400 kilometers long, joins another that has been in operation for some 20 years already and which is 4,200 meters long. Construction of the new pipeline was made necessary by the fact that the old one could not accommodate tankers carrying over 50,000 cubic meters of crude. The sealine will make it possible to unload tankers with a capacity of up to 80,000 cubic meters. Since hauling is less expensive on the big tankers, the pipeline means a savings on the order of 1 billion of our francs this year for the company, as Administrative Director Siby and financial director Mambaye Diallo, who attended the ceremony, explained. It was an impressive sight: the huge (60 centimeters in diameter), long steel serpent, ballasted with concrete, sinking slowly, but inexorably, into the waves from a pontoon anchored offshore.

It was the culmination of a long-range project undertaken in September and requiring an investment of some 2 billion CFA francs.

Operation of the sealine marks the conclusion of the first phase of a program of expansion undertaken by the SAR. The first phase that just came to a close concerns expansion of the pipe system, while the second phase, already underway, will involve expansion of the manufacturing units. It will mainly be a question of the construction of two new tanks with a capacity of 50,000 cubic meters each, joining five already in existence, but containing less than 25,000 cubic meters each. The objective was to increase SAR's production capacity from 90,000 tons of crude, which it currently is, to 1.2 million tons by the end of construction.

11,464
CSO: 4719/643

RECORD COTTON YIELD, GOOD CORN PRODUCTION NOTED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 23 Feb 82 p 3

[Article by Sidy Gaye]

[Excerpts] Were the goals of the Textile Fiber Development Company (SODEFITEX), which since July 1981 have linked that company to the government, set too low?

Or, on the contrary, has that southern company demonstrated an unprecedented vigor, exceeding in a single agricultural season the greater share of the objectives assigned to it between now and 1984, the date of expiration of the contract-plan?

In the final analysis, the good rainfall during the past season had a positive effect on the results of agricultural production, thereby contributing, among other things, to a revival of cotton, which had been quickly buried because of the operating deficits recorded by SODEFITEX since the 1977-1978 season, deficits amounting to over 1.5 billion in 1979-1980.

Judging by the figures provided by Bator Diop, general manager of SODEFITEX, the company has reportedly achieved totally unexpected results this year in the case of its cotton, corn and rice yields. Cotton yields were the best recorded since the introduction of the crop by the French Textile Company (CFDT) in 1961.

Farmers in the south obtained 1,200 kilograms per hectare planted in cotton this year. This yield of 1.1 tons per hectare is not only higher than that of last year and the estimates of the contract-plan for this year, but it also surpasses the objective initially set for SODEFITEX for the three seasons to come! That objective was 1,100 kilograms, to be achieved by 1984, the year when the contract-plan expires. It was attained and even surpassed the first year it went into effect.

Cotton production, estimated this year at 33,000 tons by DGPA [presumably General Agricultural Planning Directorate] officials, could even go as high as 40,000 tons, in the opinion of Diop, which would represent a good record for his company: having attained the year's objective with the area planted being smaller than planned. A logical consequence of good yields obtained this year, the results are even more noteworthy when one realizes that over 48,000 hectares were planted in cotton during the 1978 season, when production scarcely reached the current level, produced on only 32,000 hectares.

These good results are not only limited to cotton. The same is true of corn, whose yields have surpassed contract-plan objectives set for 3 years during the very first year. Corn yields this year nearly totaled 2 tons 700 kilograms per hectare, although the goal was only about 1 ton 900 kilograms for 1984. This production would point to corn production of nearly 23,000 tons, or 225 percent of the objectives set for the year. Only a little over 10,000 tons of corn had been predicted for the close of this first season, with the beginning of the contract-plan. According to Diop, production of the ZONEDEFITEX [sic] zone would represent over half of the national total, estimated this year at some 50,000 tons.

Finally, concerning rice, per-hectare yields also surpass 1984 predictions. They were 2 tons 300 kilograms, when the prediction was only 2 tons 1 kilograms by the expiration of the contract-plan -- that is, at the close of the two coming seasons. Nevertheless, rice production this year was fairly stagnant compared with the preceding year, which is explained by the fact that the areas planted were smaller than planned. Less than half of the projections were achieved this year and the level of areas planted in rice (all crops combined) during the past season is even down compared with last year. This trend should undoubtedly be the target of SODEFITEX efforts because the southern zone has potential whose maximum use could be a great contribution in the policy of food self-sufficiency.

11,464
CSO: 4719/643

BRIEFS

NEW PDS RESIGNATIONS--In a letter addressed to the president on 11 January, Kaba Toure, secretary general of the chauffeurs unions in the Sine-Saloum region and a long-time member of the Senegalese Democratic Party, has expressed his decision to resign from the party and join the Socialist Party. Kaba Toure, who is also deputy secretary general of the UTLS [expansion unknown] explained his decision by virtue of the fact that the country's situation has changed since President Abdou Diouf came to power and particularly the fact that "God has protected us from the scourge of famine that nearly ravaged the Senegalese people." Toure therefore asks all citizens to unite behind President Abdou Diouf, who has brought prosperity to Saloum, as witnessed by construction of the Ker Madiabel water tower and the arrival in the region of the many ambulances promised. Toure attaches to his letter the list of the 56 persons who, like him, have resigned from the Senegalese Democratic Party. [Text] Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 23 Feb 82 p 3] 11,464

LOAN AGREEMENT--The Central Fund for Economic Cooperation has given a loan of 5 billion CFA francs to Senegal to enable the country to finance some public investments for 1981-192. [AB232232 Dakar Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 23 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/732

BRIEFS

DELEGATION TO BAGHDAD--Abdullahi Mohamed Mire, chairman of the Somali general federation of trade unions is heading up a delegation that departed from Mogadishu en route to Baghdad to take part in the conference of the Arab Labor Organization (ALO). During its stay in Baghdad the delegation will hold talks with the leadership of the Iraqi trade unions. [Text] [Mogadishu HORSEED in Italian 5 Mar 82 p 2]

AMBASSADOR TO BENIN--The president of Benin, His Excellency Matieu Kerekou, recently received letters of credence from the new Somali ambassador to Benin, Husayn Hasan Farah, who is based in Lagos, Nigeria. [Text] [EA180448 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 2045 GMT 16 Mar 82]

CSO: 4797/12

SEVERE CRITICISM OF NATIONALISM FOR AFRIKANERS ONLY

Johannesburg DIE VEDERLAND in Afrikaans 23 Feb 82 p 12

[Article by Dreis van Heerden: "Has the Nationalist Party Forgotten What Nationalism Is?"]

[Text] Is the trouble with the Nationalist Party not the fact that it has forgotten the essence of nationalism? This is the question posed by an old time nationalist the other day.

Put differently: The Nationalist Party no longer believes in its own policy and propaganda.

Or: Why does the Nationalist Party refuse to believe that the same nationalism which served as its source of strength throughout the years is also valid for the other peoples in South Africa?

These are hard considerations, especially because they have to do with a party whose policy actually professes to grant freedom to other nationalisms in southern Africa. But there is more than just a touch of truth in the accusation.

Since 1976, when the Transkei became independent, we have been complaining about the outside world's failure to grant recognition to it.

The government has been writing long letters about this to the UN quoting one statistic after the other intended to show that the former national states have just as much right to independence as any other African country.

But, what are we ourselves doing? How does South Africa "recognize" the independence of its own neighbor states?

Citizens of Ciskei, Bophutathswana, Venda and Transkei are living along those of Kwazulu, Lebowa and Gazangulu in the black cities of Soweto, Nyanga and Tambisa.

But how does the government itself act with respect to the citizens of states which according to Nationalist Party policy are just as independent as France, the United States and Germany? The answer is: No differently than with respect to the citizens of the non-independent states.

They must still show a pass book if asked to do so. The government still determines where they live, work and play. They must still ride in third class train compartments to and from their place of work.

The Nationalist Party's policy states "different peoples" and "different nationalisms." But in practice the differentiation is simply between white and black.

How can we ever hope that the Zulus of Soweto, who live along an "independent" Tswana, will be so taken up with the "advantages" of independence that they will urge their leaders to ask for independence for them as well?

If South Africa itself does not treat these states and their citizens as being independent it cannot expect the outside world to do so.

However, it is in the handling of the South-West problem that this inability to gauge the power of nationalism is displayed most vividly.

The Afrikaner, with his particular history, should at least know that:

--No more than the Afrikaner wanted to vote for Jan Smuts and his friends of the British Empire in 1948...

--No more than the Zimbabweans wanted to vote for Bishop Abel Muzorewa (with his South African sponsored Datsun pick-up trucks, his headquarters in a five-star hotel and his friendship with Ian Smith) in 1980...

--The Ovambos will no more be voting for the DTA, with its lollypops and T-shirts, in 1982, 1983 or 1984.

No. The force of nationalism inspired the Africaner to vote for his own people, the Nationalist Party, in 1948, because that represented his aspirations.

No. The puppet government of Bishop Muzorewa was emphatically rejected in Zimbabwe. It was Mugabe who was able to team-up the forces of nationalism and to employ them in attaining a runaway victory.

No. In the South-West Ovambos will be voting for Ovambos...and just remember SWAPO is Ovambo and Ovambos are SWAPO...50 percent of the population.

But, how are we reacting to what is happening in the South-West? Politicians here have developed a reflex-response...the SWAPO's are a bunch of communists and that is all!

True, in SWAPO's leadership there are several people who can be regarded as "pawns of the communist party." But, what are we going to say if 60 percent or more of the population will be voting for SWAPO? Are two-thirds of the people of the South-West communists? That simply cannot be so.

Is it not better to recognize SWAPO for what it is, a nationalist organization among the people, and then consider another strategy with respect to it?

In the end the question remains: What have we in South Africa learned from the events in the South-West and from our own history?

Will we never learn that nationalism cannot be suffocated even though a people's leaders are stuffed in jail, even if they themselves are killed, or even if their organizations are banned.

All this was true in the Second Freedom War; this was true in the rebellion of 1914; this was true in 1948; this is true in the South-West, so why will this not also be true in South Africa?

Will it be said one day that black people understood our history better than ourselves?

7964
CSO: 4701/39

REASONS FOR HESITANCE IN SIGNING NUCLEAR TREATY

South Africa Pressured

Johannesburg DIE VADERLAND in Afrikaans 22 Feb 82 p 11

[Article by Dries van Heerden: "Pressure on South Africa To Sign Nuclear Treaty"]

[Text] This week Foreign Minister Pik Botha said that the possibility that South Africa will sign the International Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty is being studied.

Lately the voices of several experts have been rasied urging the government to sign the treaty. The republic is one of just a few countries in the world which have not yet done so.

Among the countries which, like South Africa, have not yet subscribed to the treaty are: France and China, both of them nuclear powers, as well as Argentina, Brazil, Cuba, India, Portugal, Spain, Tanzania and Zambia.

Much thought is being given with regard to the advantages or disadvantages of South Africa's signing of the treaty. Up until last week the government's official point of view was still not in favor of signing this treaty.

Those in favor of the treaty are pointing to the fact that signing it would improve South Africa's image abroad. This would put an end to the growing international suspicion that the republic possesses nuclear weapons.

Opponents are saying that we must be careful, because the treaty stipulations, to the effect that the International Nuclear Energy Agency can conduct inspections, could be harmful to South Africa.

The reasoning is that there is the danger that the republic's unique uranium enrichment process, which now is still secret, will be compromised through such actions.

Moreover, history has shown that the treaty has not really succeeded in its purpose, namely that of preventing the spread of nuclear technology which can be employed in the production of nuclear weapons.

Since the drafting of the treaty it is presumed that at least six countries have started to produce nuclear weapons. Of these, five have not signed the treaty (Algeria, Brazil, Israel and Pakistan) while one of these countries (Australia) did sign it.

In its present form the Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty was approved by the United Nations General Assembly on 12 June 1968. South Africa was one of the 95 countries which voted in favor of the treaty.

The preamble of the treaty refers to the "devastation which would be caused throughout the world by a nuclear war and to the consequent necessity of averting such a war and of taking measures for guaranteeing the security of all peoples."

The most important stipulations of the treaty are:

--The existing nuclear powers promise not to provide nuclear weapons, either directly or indirectly to any non-nuclear powers or to pass on to them any technology which would enable these countries to manufacture nuclear weapons.

--Non-nuclear powers using nuclear energy for peaceful purposes promise to open their nuclear installation for inspection by the International Nuclear Energy Agency.

--The treaty is not intended to put any stumbling blocks in the way of peaceful application of nuclear energy. Signatories of the treaty have the right to exchange such technology.

--Nations promise to negotiate among themselves regarding measures for putting an end to the nuclear arms race and to reduce the nuclear arsenal of nations until a complete nuclear disarmament has been achieved.

Although South Africa has not signed the treaty it is yet a full member of the International Nuclear Energy Agency and up to and including 1977 the republic also acted as one of the directors of the agency.

During past years strong pressure has been applied on South Africa to sign the treaty. The pressure became even greater as consideration was given to the fact that the entire continent of Africa was declared as a "nuclear weapons free area" by the United Nations.

As a result of the UN resolution of 1966 no nuclear weapon or ballistic missile may be fired or tested on the continent and the storage or transportation of such weapons is also forbidden.

In 1963 this resolution was subscribed to by the Organization of Africa Unity which also undertook to resolve that no country on the continent shall manufacture a nuclear weapon.

South Africa's Diplomacy Trump

Johannesburg DIE VADERLAND in Afrikaans 22 Feb 82 p 10

[Editorial: "South Africa's Nuclear Trump"]

[Text] It is no secret that the outside world (and very likely the more sympathetic U.S. administration) is continuously applying pressure on South Africa to sign the International Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty.

Indeed Foreign Minister Pik Botha admitted in Parliament that "from time to time" inquiries are being made by Western governments.

The fact that such pressure is also being exercised at home is attested by the very question about this matter directed at Mr Botha in Parliament.

But also the fact that the minister will not allow himself to be cornered by this question and that it is sufficient for him to say that the matter is "being considered" is understandable. Yet this reply is more positive than last year's stark refusal to the same question.

South Africa's signing or not signing of the 1968 treaty is a matter deserving very sober and very thorough consideration. Most assuredly we should also take into account the fact that the United States will not always have a sympathetic Reagan Administration.

But there are also other reasons why South Africa should be careful.

First of all there is as yet no effective international inspection agency which can monitor the nuclear installations of the signatory countries. The nuclear powers themselves reject such monitoring.

Even if there were an effective agency, South Africa could not be very pleased with the possibility that its secret uranium enrichment process could be ferreted out.

We must also take into account the Russian threat and the fact that neighboring countries such as Zambia, Tanzania and probably Zimbabwe do not want to sign the agreement.

Once we sign the treaty our hands will be tied no matter what happens in the future.

South Africa sticks to its stand that it is developing nuclear power for peaceful objectives. Besides, if we were to join the nuclear [weapons] league, we would be having a weapon which we could hardly employ even for the reason that the world would know that we have it. That too would be binding our hands.

However, by keeping our options, we will continue to have an important diplomatic trump in our hands. It will force those who would like to push us too far to be cautious.

7964
CSO: 4701/39

EYADEMA RECEIVES FRG, LIBYAN, SDAR DELEGATIONS

AB191013 Lome Domestic Service in French 0615 GMT 19 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Three foreign delegations were received yesterday morning at the presidential palace by Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema, founding chairman of the Togolese People's Rally [RPT] and president of the Togolese Republic.

First was the West German parliamentary delegation which has been in our country since Wednesday. After the audience (Notar Adze), the leader of the delegation, stated that his colleagues and himself were impressed by the high quality of political foresight displayed by the head of state when he briefed them on African issues, as well as on the general political situation of the world. He emphasized the delegation's appreciation for the good use made of the Western German aid to our country. He also said that by this visit, the German delegation has once more strengthened the traditional bonds of friendship existing between our two countries.

(Notar Adze) then recalled that in Germany and before the German people, Togo always has a mystical attraction, and that this fact was reiterated by the recent visit paid to Germany by the Togolese head of state.

Concluding, Mr (Adze) stated that he thought everything would be better in the world if relations between all countries were as good as those between Togo and Germany, and between the RPT founding chairman and the German political leaders.

After leaving the presidency, the West German parliamentary delegation visited the Togograin [State Grains Company] storage center at the international trade fair center.

The second delegation to be received by the RPT founding chairman was a two-man Libyan delegation headed by (Matrode Sheni), secretary of the people's committee.

The last to be received by head of state Eyadema was also two-man delegations this time from the SDAR. It was headed by Information Minister Ould Salek.

CSO: 4719/736

BRIEFS

NEW DPRK AMBASSADOR--President Gnassingbe Eyadema this morning received the credentials of the new DPRK ambassador to Togo, His Excellency (Kim Yan-song). [AB251418 Lome Domestic Service in French 1230 GMT 25 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/734

SWAPO DELEGATION ATTENDS YOUTH MEETING

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 17 Feb 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] The SWAPO delegation, headed by Tuli Hiveluah, member of the Central Committee and first secretary of the SWAPO Youth League, the Angolan delegation, headed by Bartolomu Domingos, member of the Central Committee of the MPLA and first secretary of the JMPLA [Youth Movement of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola] and the delegation of the Pan African Youth Movement (PAYM), led by Romain Akombi, deputy secretary general, arrived in Kinshasa on Monday to take part in the tripartite JMPLA-UJSC [Union of Congolese Socialist Youth]-JMPR [Youth of the Popular Movement of the Revolution] summit conference to be held in the Zairian capital from 17 to 20 February.

Met by the press upon his arrival at Ngobila Beach, Tuli Hiveluah, first secretary of the SWAPO Youth League, said that his movement expects from the Kinshasa meeting total support for consolidation of the struggle being waged against the South African racists.

The SWAPO, which is participating in such a meeting for the first time, is very happy with the invitation issued to it, he continued, before going on to express the satisfaction of young Namibians over the recent holding by Zairian young people of a meeting of solidarity with liberation movement youth groups in southern Africa.

As for the head of the Angolan delegation, Domingos said that the meeting will permit better coordination of the views of members of the tripartite conference and will lead to a common program.

He expressed the desire to see the meeting lead to positive results and said he was happy that a decision had been made to expand the meeting to include youth groups.

Romain Okombi, deputy secretary general of the Pan African Youth Movement, emphasized the importance which his movement attaches to the Kinshasa meeting, whose participating movements work effectively to strengthen relations existing between different youth groups in Central Africa.

The meeting, which is not an impromptu affair, is in keeping with the main lines of the PAYM, which can only encourage such moves, Okombi said.

The deputy secretary general of the PAYM will take advantage of his stay in Kinshasa to join with the country's authorities in discussion matters relating to plans for the Second Youth Festival, whose date and place will be set following the meeting of the Executive Committee of the PAYM, to take place in Conakry in April.

The first group of the Congolese delegation, headed by Marcel Touanga, secretary of the UJSC in charge of foreign relations, preceded the head of the delegation, Oba Apounou, first secretary of the Central Committee of the UJSC and minister of youth, who was to arrive on Tuesday.

The delegates were welcomed upon their arrival by Nzanda Bwana, secretary general of the JMPR, who was accompanied by national leaders and a large number of JMPR members.

11,464
CSO: 4719/635

BURUNDI, ZAIRE, RWANDA SIGN CULTURAL AGREEMENT

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 20 Feb 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] The ministers of foreign affairs of Burundi and Rwanda and the state commissioner for foreign affairs and international cooperation signed a cultural agreement in Giseny (Rwanda) last month, at the time of the fifth regular session of the conference of chiefs of state of the CEPGL (Economic Community of the Countries of the Great Lakes).

According to the terms of the agreement, the three countries have pledged to maintain and develop cultural, scientific and technical cooperation in order to contribute to better knowledge and greater dissemination of their respective cultures and intellectual activities.

They also promise to gradually coordinate at all levels of education the programs of basic disciplines. In order to do so, they will proceed to exchange useful information on these programs and their future modifications.

Periodic consultations between education officials from the three countries are recommended in order to seek out the most favorable conditions to achievement of this objective.

Everything will be done to determine the equivalence of certificates, diplomas or other academic degrees awarded in Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire.

The parties to the agreement have also pledged, within the limits of their means and in order to promote the community interest, to promote exchanges of professors, research workers and other specialists and to encourage the exchange of students through the granting of scholarships or subsidies.

They will, if need be, set up and develop common institutions and organizations for scientific education and research, facilitate access to educational establishments for nationals from the other two countries, ensure their well-being under the same conditions as their own, and promote the cooperation of publishing and audio-visual aid companies in the three countries.

Each nation is to promote the organization, within its own territory, of all cultural events aimed at achieving better knowledge of the culture of its partners.

Each country will also grant facilities, in keeping with its own legislation, for the dissemination within its territory of films, musical events, programs and radio and televion broadcasts, as well as the diffusion of any publication relating to the cultures of the other two nations.

The parties to the agreement also pledge to do everything possible to coordinate their policies regarding the protection of their cultural patrimony.

Finally, it was decided to set up special subcommittees bringing together ministers and state commissioners of education and research, culture and the arts, information, youth and sports. These subcommittees will be in charge of studying technical questions.

11,464
CSO: 4719/634

FALSE SECURITY AGENTS SAID TO PREY ON PEOPLE

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 19 Feb 82 pp 1, 8

[Editorial: "Phoney BSRS Agents"]

[Text] An unhealthy atmosphere now reigns within the National Gendarmerie in Kinshasa. The extortion practiced on the population by the agents of law and order has taken on the scope of a plague. For a small article purchased at a corner store, one has to undergo questioning by a whole host of officers (plain-clothes men), all claiming to be members of the BSRS (Special Investigation and Surveillance Brigade).

The question that immediately comes to mind is: On whose orders are these agents operating? What is their precise mission? If one goes strictly by the acronym BSRS, the role of these agents should consist of ensuring the safety of the population, rooting out wrongdoers and all other delinquents.

However, when every possible pretext is used for the simple purpose of looting peaceful citizens, the abuses perpetrated by these officers make one think of an organized ring. That seems all the more likely because a few days ago, gendarmes from the "central station," a brigade located at one of the corners of Mama Yemo Hospital, carried out raids on small venders at the Central Market. The last of the three raids ended with the holding of these young people for 5 hours. The reason for the arrest, according to one of the humorless gendarmes, is that these venders do not pay them off as some of their friends downtown are paid off.

At this rate, we may soon have no aid from any service of order. One cannot use the argument that there are good and bad policemen. We must find the solutions needed in order to reform the services of order, as recommended by the presidential pseech of 4 February 1980. We must, when necessary, punish the false, bad officers who undermine the reputation of the National Gendarmerie.

The entire country's honor is at stake when even our good old gendarmes are quicker to blow the whistle on infractions than to handle traffic during traffic jams.

11,464
CSO: 4719/634

COMMISSIONER SAYS COUNTRY ABLE TO HANDLE FOOD SHORTAGES

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 19 Feb 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] Citizen Kamitatu Massamba has stated that he is happy to note that the World Bank has decided, using a special procedure, to grant Zaire an advance on funds aimed at providing technical assistance to the Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development.

The state commissioner spoke Tuesday at a luncheon given in honor of Andre Gue, general manager in charge of Central and East Africa for the World Bank, and announced the imminent signing of an assistance agreement between the World Bank and the office he heads.

The commissioner for agriculture and rural development also said that Zaire is determined and able to overcome the many problems facing it and to ensure the consistent development of its agriculture in order to meet food shortages.

In conclusion, the speaker expressed satisfaction with aid received from the World Bank for the purpose. These relations will be strengthened in the months ahead, Kamitatu added.

Speaking at the same meeting, which took place at the Zoo Restaurant, Gue first of all thanked the Executive Council for the warm welcome extended to him. He then recalled the World Bank's desire to see Zairian agriculture play its full role -- a heavy one -- in the rehabilitation of the country's economy.

Like other partners, the World Bank hopes to help Zaire to define and carry out a new agricultural policy, Gue said, emphasizing the Executive Council's need to define a coherent policy for the field.

After the coming meeting in Paris of the advisory group on Zaire, aid will be given to Zaire in terms of an agricultural policy, he concluded.

The luncheon was attended by officials from the State Commission, board chairmen from the Cotton Stabilization Fund (CSSCO) and ONDE [National Livestock Development Office] and the resident representative of the World Bank. It was preceded by a working meeting during which Kamitatu described cooperation between the World Bank and Zaire.

A succinct report was also given on the conclusions of the working group of the Economic and Social Development Studies Company (SEDES). Once passed by the Executive Council, the report will constitute the agricultural plan of the Republic of Zaire for 1982-1984.

This preliminary plan has four parts: a review of projects underway, limitations on relaunching agricultural production, a program of action for the future in order to achieve food self-sufficiency and the financing needed to achieve these objectives.

11,464
CSO: 4719/634

BRIEFS

NEW FOOD-GROWING AREAS--Mont Ngafula, N'Sele and Maluku are to become food-growing areas so that Kinshasa will not always have to depend on other regions. This decision was announced Monday by the regional president of the MPR and governor of the city of Kinshasa, Citizen Sakombi Ekope, who also asked large companies such as Bralima, Unibra, Nogueira, Marsavco and ONATRA [National Transportation Office] to ask for perimeters in these areas. The enterprises are to engage in market garden farming in order to supply Kinshasa with basic commodities such as corn, manioc and peanuts. In asking these firms to cultivate the land, the idea of the head of the urban administration is not only to supply the city of Kinshasa, but also to enable these areas to have their own financing through receipts they can obtain through taxes. The occupation of lots by the firms mentioned will also be a source of jobs for the Kinshasa people who are far from the center of the city. Yesterday, the regional president of the MPR and governor of the city of Kinshasa visited the areas of Ngaba and Limete. Today he will be the guest of the men and women in Kisenso and N'Djili. [By Kongo Luzayamo Nzundu] [Text] [Kinshasa ELIMA in French 17 Feb 82 p 7] 11,464

AGRICULTURAL BANK IN KINSHASA--An agricultural loan bank will be set up in March in order to finance agricultural projects in Zaire, according to an announcement made by Kamiatu Massamba, state commissioner for agriculture and rural development, at a seminar on an analysis of the agricultural revival plan for 1982-1984, recently held at party headquarters in N'Sele. The bank's initial capital (20 million zaires) will be covered by the Economic Recovery Fund of the Bank of Zaire and its startup expenditures (5 million zaires) by the Counterpart Fund. The bank will begin its activities in Kinshasa before opening up branches in the interior, first of all in Mbanza-Ngungu, in Lower Zaire. The Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development is now working out the bylaws for the new financial institution and defining terms for the granting of loans. Regarding structures, two alternatives are before the Executive Council: the appointment of a general director with expanded powers or the establishment of a board of directors, in keeping with the outline law of 6 January 1978 concerning general provisions applicable to public enterprises. The Agricultural Loan Bank should, in the opinion of those attending the seminar, manage all funds for the agricultural sector, to wit, the Agricultural Revival Fund (handled jointly by the ministries of Economy and Industry, Finance and Budget) and the Counterpart Fund (from foreign aid, heretofore under the Office of the State Commissioner for Planning). [Text] [Kinshasa ELIMA in French 17 Feb 82 p 7] 11,464

CSO: 4719/635

END

JPRS 80505

6 April 1982

Sub-Saharan Africa Report

No. 2602

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 80505

6 April 1982

SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA REPORT

No. 2602

CONTENTS

CABON

Makaya on Fuel Price Increase
(Makaya; L'UNION, 11 Feb 82) 1

Makaya on Bottled Gas Price Increase
(Makaya; L'UNION, 22 Feb 82) 2

Briefs
New Oil Discovery 3
Details of Fuel Price Increases 3

GHANA

Nunoo-Mensah Denies Executions, Speaks of True Democracy
(Edward Ameyibor; DAILY GRAPHIC, 10 Mar 82) 4

Tongue-in-Cheek Interview With 'Miss Ghana': 'Leave Me Alone'
(Kofi Akumanyi; DAILY GRAPHIC, 6 Mar 82) 5

Reverend Damuah Denies Attacking Religious Institutions
(DAILY GRAPHIC, 6 Mar 82) 7

Student Conference Criticizes Agreements With Transnationals
(DAILY GRAPHIC, 18 Mar 82) 8

Students Achieve Removal of Headmaster
(Elvis D. Aryeh; DAILY GRAPHIC, 8 Mar 82) 9

Tsatsu Tsikata Advocates Progressive Educational System
(Jubilant Atuwo; GHANAIAN TIMES, 16 Mar 82) 10

SSNIT Top Management Dismissed by Workers
(Francis Kokutse; GHANAIAN TIMES, 16 Mar 82) 11

Briefs
Japanese Educational Grant 12
City, District Councils Dissolved 12

Chiefs To Remain 13
Private Business Blamed 13
Removal of 'Colonial' Art Work 13
Lubricants Shortage 13
PNDC Condemns Killings 14
'African' Culture in Movies Advocated 14

LIBERIA

UN Inter-Agency Mission To Meet With Government Leaders
(NEW LIBERIAN, 11 Mar 82) 15

PRC Member's Reinstatement
(NEW LIBERIAN, 5 Mar 82) 17

Constitutional Commission Completes First Stage of Task
(Madison Meahyen; DAILY OBSERVER, 9 Mar 82) 18

Podier Warns Journalists To Stop Writing Erroneous Stories
(NEW LIBERIAN, 19 Mar 82) 20

Former Minister Protests Paper's Story on His Alleged Embezzlement
(DAILY OBSERVER, 17 Mar 82) 21

Former UL Registrar Sentenced to Prison for Three Years
(NEW LIBERIAN, 9 Mar 82) 23

NBL Begins Paying BOL Depositors, Schedule Set Forth
(J. N. Elliott; NEW LIBERIAN, 12 Mar 82) 25

LLHC Holding Annual Meeting of Board of Directors, Shareholders
(Rufus M. Darpoh; DAILY OBSERVER, 3 Mar 82) 27

Kaduna Chamber of Commerce Delegation To Promote Trade
(Various sources, various dates) 28

Schedule of Delegation
Delegation Chief's Remarks

Government Establishes Interpretation, Translation Bureau
(DAILY OBSERVER, 3 Mar 82) 30

Journalist Calls for Indigenous Languages in Schools
(Westmore Dahn; DAILY OBSERVER, 8 Mar 82) 31

TAAG Mission To Make Fact-Finding Tour of Liberia, Mano River Union
(NEW LIBERIAN, 8 Mar 82) 33

Minister Appeals to Japan for Communications, Transport, Equipment
(Klon Hinneh; NEW LIBERIAN, 4 Mar 82) 35

Fahnbulleh to Egypt, Algeria
(NEW LIBERIAN, 9 Mar 82) 37

Islamic Solidarity Organization Constructing School Building
(DAILY OBSERVER, 11 Mar 82) 38

Lebanese Industrialists Set Up Monrovia Water Purification Plant
(DAILY OBSERVER, 19 Mar 82) 39

LIBEXIM Representative To Discuss Cement Plant With Government
(NEW LIBERIAN, 19 Mar 82) 41

MADAGASCAR

President Visits Cyclone-Hit Area
(MADAGASCAR-MATIN, 11 Feb 82) 43

NAMIBIA

Kaura Hits Out at City Fathers
(THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 19 Mar 82) 45

Becker Pulls HNP Out of National Assembly
(THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 19 Mar 82) 47

Military Board of Inquiry Looks at Alleged Atrocities
(THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 19 Mar 82) 48

Police Dog Action Called 'Brutal and Irresponsible'
(THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 19 Mar 82) 49

Political Muddle in Country Assessed
(Leon Kok; THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 19 Mar 82) 50

Junius Criticizes Second-Tier Spending
(THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 19 Mar 82) 53

Departing Windhoek City Engineer Interviewed
(Arthur Clayton Interview; THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER,
19 Mar 82) 54

Bush Could Be Used To Produce Methanol
(David Pieters; THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER, 19 Mar 82) 56

REUNION

Impact of World Economic Problems Felt
(Editorial; TEMOIGNAGES, 10 Feb 82) 59

SENEGAMBIA

Slow Rate of Registration on Voting Lists Noted
(Momar Seyni Ndiaye; LE SOLEIL, 25 Feb 82) 61

TANZANIA

Seminar Held To Discuss NESP, CCM Electoral Procedures, Guidelines
(Isaac Mruma; DAILY NEWS, 10 Mar 82) 63

Rates for Voluntary Contributions by CCM Members Being Printed
(Boniface Byarugaba; DAILY NEWS, 9 Mar 82) 64

Tawata Formed, Issues Draft Constitution
(Kassim Mpenda; DAILY NEWS, 10 Mar 82) 65

TSN Asked To Reduce English-Language Papers' Circulation Further
(DAILY NEWS, 9 Mar 82) 66

CWF To Finance Swahili Translation of English Language Guide Books
(DAILY NEWS, 9 Mar 82) 67

Government Reviewing Industrial Safety Laws
(DAILY NEWS, 6 Mar 82) 68

Generators Imported in 1978 Lie Idle in Pemba
(DAILY NEWS, 6 Mar 82) 70

Finnish Feasibility Studies on Ruvu Valley Resources Completed
(DAILY NEWS, 6 Mar 82) 71

Mbeya Meat Plant Contractors Demand Additional Funds
(DAILY NEWS, 6 Mar 82) 72

Local Exporters Given Rebate Payment for Meeting Export Targets
(Isaac Mruma; DAILY NEWS, 9 Mar 82) 73

Seminar for Shipping Managers, Representatives Held in Zanzibar
(DAILY NEWS, various dates) 74

Mapunda's Paper, by Abdullah Yakuti
Reduction in Shipping Costs Required, Editorial
Fourteen Papers To Be Presented

TSA Forms Two Subsidiary Companies To Diversify Activities
(DAILY NEWS, 8 Mar 82) 77

Alleged Favoritism, Corruption in SIDO Allocations
(SUNDAY NEWS, 7 Mar 82) 78

Seminar Held for Community Development Regional Desk Offices
(DAILY NEWS, various dates) 79

Kanyasi's Address, by Daniel Mshana
Mkesso's Address

NPC, Kibo Paper Industries Made Profits in 1981
(Seth Kamuhanda; DAILY NEWS, 10 Mar 82) 81

Briefs
Census of Aged 82
Swahili Literature Book 82

ZIMBABWE

Zvobgo Outlines Steps Toward Parliamentary, Constitutional Change
(Peta Thornycroft; THE HERALD, 19 Mar 82) 83

State Purchasing of Land Curtailed
(THE HERALD, 19 Mar 82) 85

Economic Overhaul Urgent, Says Mugabe
(THE HERALD, 18 Mar 82) 86

Increased Demand Delays Issuance of Passports
(THE HERALD, 18 Mar 82) 87

ZAPU 'Devastated' by Desertions
(THE HERALD, 19 Mar 82) 88

Details on Resettlement Program Given
(THE HERALD, 19 Mar 82) 89

Natural Resources Minister To Fight Flooding of Mana Pools
(THE HERALD, 18 Mar 82) 91

Tobacco Industry Set for Big Expansion
(THE HERALD, 18 Mar 82) 92

Transport Minister Slams National Railways
(THE HERALD, 17 Mar 82) 93

Lome Convention Helps Sugar Exports
(Angus Macmillan; BUSINESS HERALD, 18 Mar 82) 94

Sweden Gives $1 Million to Zimsci
(THE HERALD, 17 Mar 82) 95

Partial Resumption of Bus Service Reported
(THE HERALD, 17 Mar 82) 96

MAKAYA ON FUEL PRICE INCREASE

Libreville L'UNION in French 11 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Makaya: "From Where I Stand...."]

[Text] The bad news always awaited at the end of every 6 months came last night. Once again, the price of fuel rose 5° to 195 CFA francs. While new readjustments in wages gave rise to hope, this increase in the price of gas complicated everything.

Speaking for myself personally, I have never understood anything about these annaul increases in the price of hydrocarbons. I know that for the past 7 years, or thereabouts, we have been members of OPEC and as such, have always met our commitments. It so happens that this year, OPEC broke its prices because the markets are flooded with the black gold. I therefore thought that just like the increases, the drop would carry over to our pumps at the different local stations. And yet, it is our own oil that we refine ourselves and that is not carried very far. What does the dollar have to do with all this on the domestic market? Why not have domestic prices within our own reach and other prices for export? Like oil, these are crude questions, after all.

11,464
CSO: 4719/647

MAKAYA ON BOTTLED GAS PRICE INCREASE

Libreville L'UNION in French 22 Feb 82 p 1

[Article by Makaya: "From Where I Stand...."]

[Text] No one has announced it, but everyone is going to learn the bad news when going to have the empty bottled gas tank refilled. Actually, since last week and without any warning, the famous bottled gas seen in every kitchen and sometimes found only with great difficulty after long waits at gas stations, has gone up in price, about 10 percent. The increase has been discreet, without a sound, like gas escaping!

This time, it was not deemed fitting to make any official announcement or issue any bulletin. Nor was any subterfuge found, as in the case of the famous "8" painted on all bottles at a given time to explain the change. They simply increased the price and that was the end of it!

This is a quite common practice in trade, to such a point that people talk about the "label walse." But for products as important and basic as gas, bread, automobile gasoline or a few others, they usually at least take the trouble to warn the people...and to find a few bizarre, far-fetched reasons to explain the "inevitable" increase.

That at least helps save face.

The merchants are obviously not done eating away at our purchasing power...for their own profit.

11,464
CSO: 4719/647

BRIEFS

NEW OIL DISCOVERY--The Ministry of Mines and Petroleum announced a new oil discovery yesterday at a well located on the Ndoubi Marin prospecting permit, which is 100-percent owned by the ELF-Gabon [Gasoline and Lubricants Company of France] company. The announcement by the Ministry of Mines and Petroleum concerns the Muruba Marine 2 exploratory well located 300 kilometers southeast of Port-Gentil, at a water depth of 65 meters. The well, some 3,000 meters deep, crosses two sandstone reservoirs containing oil, in the so-called dentalium formation. During tests, flows of 91 cubic meters a day and 196 cubic meters a day were obtained from the two. The General Hydrocarbons Directorate states that additional work will be necessary in order to evaluate the commercial interest of the discovery. [Text] [Libreville L'UNION in French 16 Feb 82 p 1] 11,464

DETAILS OF FUEL PRICE INCREASES--By an order dated 26 January and effective today, the retail prices of super, regular gas and diesel fuel have been changed. These changes represent an increase of about 5 percent. The price of kerosene remains unchanged. These modifications are in keeping with the concern for adapting the price structures of these products to the specific situation of the raw material, which is crude oil, whose price is rising substantially because of the increased value of the American dollar (currency used in billing). However, despite the increases registered by these new measures, the government remains very sensitive to the problems of consumers. Furthermore, in order to protect the lower-income groups, it was decided to keep kerosene at the same price. Prices for the different areas will be published in a coming edition. [Text] [Libreville L'UNION in French 10 Feb 82 p 1] 11,464

CSO: 4719/647

NUNOO-MENSAH DENIES EXECUTIONS, SPEAKS OF TRUE DEMOCRACY

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 10 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Edward Ameyibor]

[Text] No secret executions had taken place in Ghana since the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) came to power, Brigadier J. Nunoo-Mensah, Chief of Defence Staff and member of the PNDC, assured in Lagos last Monday.

Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah told journalists that there was no truth in the allegation.

He noted that a lot of rumours had been flowing between the two countries and said those were deliberate attempts by certain people to sow seeds of discord between Nigeria and Ghana.

According to Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah the PNDC believes in fair trial, the rule of law and human rights.

He said ousted President Hilla Limann was being looked after and was being kept in Akosomba, "a nice resort over-looking the Volta Dam."

He said by his visit the two countries "are now better informed about each other."

Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah said Ghana's needs were enormous and no one country could satisfy her "hence our desire to be friends with everybody who wants to be our friend."

Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah said there was a lot of misconception about Ghana-Libya relations and explained that the PNDC did not think it was right for Ghana to break relations with Libya like the Limann Government did.

He said Ghana was evolving a system of government which would involve people at every level.

"Our situation is unique. Our government is not military. The cabinet is all civilian. It is a government of the people and a true democracy."

Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah told the journalists that he was speaking as a spokesman for the people of Ghana--G.N.A.

CSO: 4700/984

TONGUE-IN-CHEEK INTERVIEW WITH 'MISS GHANA': 'LEAVE ME ALONE'

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 6 Mar 82 p 5

[Article by Kofi Akumanyi]

[Text] Last year, in the middle of hot debates in Parliament, Beer and Palm Wine bars around the country on whether the Silver Jubilee Celebration should be held in grand style befitting the first country south of the Sahara to attain the status of self-government, I had an exclusive interview with "Miss Ghana" to find out her problems.

In spite of the stout defence advanced by the Limann government that Miss Ghana's 25 birthday cannot be played down even though the economy is in a horrible condition, everybody agreed that it was very necessary to scale down the expenditure if the young lady would remain on her feet and continue to live a decent life after the guests had gone home.

It may be recalled that at the time of the interview, the once stunningly beautiful young lady whose suitors in Africa and from other parts of the world used to compete for her attention appeared sickly and very tired. Her radiant beauty, vital statistics and vibrant dynamism which never failed to sweep Africans off their feet wherever she went had been considerably snuffed out. She was, quite obviously, a lady who had gone through much tribulations and was on the verge of her sixth nervous breakdown.

Early this week, I had another exclusive interview with her and I am happy to report that she appeared remarkable relaxed and not tensed up anymore. [as published] She looked like someone who had come to terms with her life situation and is prepared to accept any new arrangement which would improve things for her.

Reminded that she had been in tantrums last year over the issue of her birthday, she replied that she was upset simply because her father of blessed memory would have moved heaven and earth to celebrate this occasion with much pomp and ceremony. The question of unavailability of money would not have come in because advance planning would have taken care of everything.

I do not know about that but what I am sure of is that Miss Ghana had not yet received any gifts at the time of the interview which is a little puzzling considering the fact that she still has many who profess to be her friends all over the world and a 25th anniversary is not an occasion which can easily be forgotten, especially since many of them attended her impressive naming and outdooring ceremony on March 6, 1957 and other subsequent meetings in Accra. After all, 25 years of a woman's life should cause some excitement among men.

The lack of activities, notwithstanding she was quite composed.

"You know something? The greatest birthday gift that the people have given me is the Revolution?" she said.

"That may be true except that the revolution itself may not deal with your basic plight directly".

"At least, it is taking care of all the rapists, plunderers and opportunists who had dealt a near-fatal blow to the economy over the past twenty years or so", she said, becoming teary-eyed.

Looking at the extent of damage done to you physically and psychologically, would you agree with those who are advocating a change of name to coincide with this anniversary as the solution to the worsening economic crises?

"I don't believe for one moment that this would help in any way as the saying goes, a rose by any name smells the same", she pointed out.

"Now, what's your greatest wish for the coming years?"

"To be left alone by those foreign companies who have relentlessly been pushing items like skin lightening creams instead of goods to help us develop our resources on to our markets. We know that these tactics are clearly aimed at perpetuating the old order. By the way, what do you mean when you referred to "my basic plight?" she asked rather suddenly.

"Well...You see, a woman of 25 must start thing of a ..."

"A husband?" She interrupted, "Well, I can tell you that I am going to get married very soon."

"You mean you already have a boy friend?"

"Sure, I'm engaged; betrothed to a young man. He is a man, my father the greatest Pan-Africanist that ever walked this earth would have been proud of. In fact, I believed my father showed me the way". She said obviously feeling the way any young woman would at such a time.

"How soon may I ask, can I meet this, eh, lucky young chap?"

"It's one secret I'm not telling anyone until the [word illegible] day".

CSO: 4700/984

REVEREND DAMUAH DENIES ATTACKING RELIGIOUS INSTITUTIONS

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 6 Mar 82 p 7

[Text]

IN an article in the Daily Graphic with the title "Soldiers to be recalled to Barracks" published on Wednesday March 3, Father Damuah is reported to have said that "the most disgraceful religious institution in the country is the church seminary because the teaching priests are full of selfishness when marking examination papers." The above statement is not true.

The fact is, in response to some remarks made by Rev. Ansah, Secretary of the Christian Council concerning the wrong use of weapons and other matters during a familiarization meeting with clergy men, Father Damuah replied that the Revolution aims at creating a new Ghanaian, who is committed to Ghana's interests, and that it is certainly against the molestation of civilians by soldiers. He said, that a small minority of soldiers had done a great deal of harm to the Revolution by failing to exercise patience, mature sense of judgement and discretion.

The PNDC member said that we should pray for these soldiers, call them to our rectories and have a chat with them, advise them etc. Father Damuah told the clergymen that even though he agrees with some of the criticisms against the administration, he said that human nature being what it is, we should not expect the two years of military training to change a soldier's character and personal idiosyncrasies, and that even in seminaries where we train students for the priesthood there are irregularities and a few bad eggs and odd balls. He said religious newspapers, including the Catholic Standard should be bold enough to criticise church leaders.

CSO: 4700/984

STUDENT CONFERENCE CRITICIZES AGREEMENTS WITH TRANSNATIONALS

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 18 Mar 82 pp 1, 5

[Text]

DELEGATES to the First National Conference of the Students and Youth Task Force in Kumasi, have resolved that the task force be made a necessary part of student life.

In a communique issued at the end of the five-day conference, the delegates said sixth formers should be made to join the task force after their examinations.

They should also do their national service with the force before entering university.

The delegates said that to make the extension programme possible, the government should provide the necessary logistical support and inputs such as matchets, hoes, axes, chainsaws, bicycles, communication equipment and stationery.

They also suggested the setting up of workcamps at work sites of the task force and listed education, agriculture, defence, evacuation, construction and health as priority areas of work for the task force.

The delegates further called for the imposition of sanctions on students who do not participate in the task force.

They suggested that the Interim National Co-ordinating Committee of the PDCs, be involved in mapping out areas of the force's operations.

The delegates emphasised the need to restructure the academic system to provide a comprehensive and functional programme suitable to the needs of the Ghanaian society.

This restructuring, they said, should start right from the nursery level.

In this regard, the delegates called for a critical study of the Okonjo and Dzobo proposals on the new educational structure.

They said the learning of Ghanaian languages be encouraged and taught in schools to ensure proper indigenisation.

The delegates further criticised agreements with transnational giants such as VALCO, AGRIPETCO, STARKIST, UAC, etc. and said this foreign domination of the economy was what the present struggle sought to overthrow.

To ensure success, the delegates called on the PNDC which is the leading organ of the revolutionary process to rid itself of opportunists and fight relentlessly to remain an organ of the people's power.

CSO: 4700/1013

STUDENTS ACHIEVE REMOVAL OF HEADMASTER

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 8 Mar 82 pp 1, 5

[Article by Elvis D. Aryeh]

[Text] Students of the Abuakwa State College at Kyebi have demanded an immediate and unconditional removal of the headmaster and bursar of the college for alleged "irresponsibility, corruption, maladministration and wanton dissipation of school funds."

The students also called for investigations into the administration and activities of the headmaster, Mr D. K. Asiedu and the bursar Mr G. S. Bediako.

This is contained in their grievances submitted to the Eastern Regional Secretary, Mr Yaw Akrasi-Sarpong, through the PNDC representative in the Region when the latter visited the school at the weekend in an effort to bring under control a prevailing tense atmosphere.

The students stated, among other things, that undue delays in serving their meals had become a permanent feature in the school apart from the continuous lack of basic social amenities.

The horrible situation, they observed is a "calculated attempt designed to compel students to embark on a strike action or acts of hooliganism so as to provide the authorities a basis to close down the school."

The PNDC representative who made several attempts toward a peaceful settlement failed in his effort because the students would not back down on their demand.

He therefore finally heeded to the demand and requested both the headmaster and the bursar to keep their hands off the administration of the school.

He however, directed that the headmaster should continue to stay at his residence outside the campus and be available to sign any cheque until the situation was streamlined.

Meanwhile, the assistant headmaster, Mr P. W. K. Asem is to act as Headmaster while Mr Oben Ayarkwa, assistant bursar takes over from Mr Bediako.

CSO: 4700/984

TSATSU TSIKATA ADVOCATES PROGRESSIVE EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 16 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Jubilant Atuwo]

[Text]

A LECTURER at the University of Ghana has called for a new educational system which would ensure that the educated Ghanaian becomes sensitive to the needs of his compatriots and is prepared to work faultlessly towards the improvement of their social conditions.

The lecturer, Mr Tsatsu Tsikata, who made the call at the week-end during the inauguration of the Hohoe branch of the New Democratic Movement, noted that beneficiaries of the present educaional system concerned themselves only with their needs, and ignored the plight of their fellow citizens.

He said the New Democratic Movement, like any other progressive organization, would support the Revolution to change any educational structure inimical to the interest of the ordinary Ghanaian and would fight relentlessly to reverse all the old orders that impeded the progress of the nation and kept it in economic bondage.

Mr Tsikata explained that the December 31 Revolution essentially sought to drive the awareness home to Ghanaians tha it was not enough to pursue and attain academic laurels in education but the most important and satisfying example was to work with the people.

He regretted that the colonial educational system had, rather unfortunately made its beneficiaries to confine themselves to the campuses, thereby erecting an iron curtain between those who had the benefit of formal schooling and those unfortunate not to have it

The educational system also sought to destroy the indegenous culture of the people by influencing their beneficiaries to consider their own languages as inferior.

Touching on hunger, Mr Tsikata regretted that even though the political leaders of the past were alive to this national threat, they only contended themselves by aportioning huge remuneration to themselves and the technocrats who connived with them and colluded with the imperialists to exploit the nation in collosal sums of money.

CSO: 4700/1014

SSNIT TOP MANAGERMENT DISMISSED BY WORKERS

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 16 Mar 82 p 8

[Article by Francis Kokutse]

[Text]

Workers of the Social Security and National Insurance Trust (SSNIT) yesterday asked Mr Alexander Awuku, chief administrator, and Mr C.M. Anang, acting financial controller to proceed on leave immediately pending the outcome of investigations into the affairs of the Trust.

In their place, a nine-member interim workers council has been formed to run SSNIT affairs.

A spokesman for SSNIT told the 'Times' in Accra that the two had earlier been asked to stay on to assist a committee set up to probe the affairs of the Trust.

"Once the committee had completed its work, it was only fair that the two officers join their other colleagues of the top management now on leave" he said.

It would be recalled that last October, SSINT workers demanded the dismissal of the top management for mismanaging the affairs of the Trust.

Following this demand, all the top management staff, except the two officers, were asked to proceed on leave.

The workers have also called on the PNDC to appoint experts to revalue all projects being undertaken by the Trust throughout the country so as to bring to book those who had helped to mismanage funds of the Trust.

Payments for all housing projects have been suspended in order to streamline the procedure.

The spokesman said the workers had now decided to take over the running of the Trust because for a long time only a few people had been left to run the affairs of the Trust as their personal property and all attempts by the workers to get successive governments come to the aid of the Trust had failed.

He assured workers throughout the country that what they were doing now was in the interest of the working masses.

CSO: 4700/1014

BRIEFS

JAPANESE EDUCATIONAL GRANT--The Japanese Government has granted Ghana 30 million Japanese Yen (¢375,000) for the supply of science equipment to the country's three universities. Under an agreement signed between Ghana and Japan in Accra, yesterday, C. Itoh and Company Limited, a Japanese trading firm will supply the National Council for Higher Education with ¢375,000 worth of science equipment. Ms Ama Ata Aidoo, Secretary for Education signed on behalf of Ghana whilst Mr Yoshio Kudo, manager of West African branch of the firm signed for his government. The Education Secretary thanked the Japanese for the grant and expressed the hope that the friendly relations already existing between the two countries would be further strengthened. Last year, a similar grant was made by the Japanese Government to second cycle institutions in the country. [Text] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 11 Mar 82 p 5]

CITY, DISTRICT COUNCILS DISSOLVED--All city and district councils in the country have been dissolved, a statement from the Ministry of Local Government, said in Accra yesterday. The statement said the dissolution had been approved by the Provisional National Defence Council and steps were being taken to appoint management committees to manage the councils pending the promulgation of a new local government law. In another development the Provisional National Defence Council announced yesterday that it had with immediate effect formally abolished the Special Services Division of the Office of the former President.--G.N.A. [Text] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 11 Mar 82 p 8]

CHIEFS TO REMAIN--Brigadier Joseph Nunoo-Mensah, Chief of Defence Staff has declared here that the PNDC has no intention of destooling any chief or interfering in their affairs. Speaking during a courtesy call on Otumfuo Opoku Ware II, Asantehene at Manhyia yesterday, Brig Nunoo-Mensah stressed that they did not come to disrupt the smooth running of chieftaincy in the country. "We still recognize chiefs and the role they play in the society" he stressed, but regretted that chiefs had not seriously involved themselves in the revolution as expected. He said the revolution was for every Ghanaian and not for the soldiers alone and urged the chiefs to impress upon the youth to take up agriculture seriously as the only way that could pull the nation from the doldrums. Otumfuo Opoku Ware assured the PNDC that the chiefs were prepared to offer any assistance within their capabilities to make the revolution succeed. He pointed out that traditional rulers fully supported the revolution but the only thing was that they had not been shouting it in public. He added that they always showed their support in concrete terms by encouraging their people to engage in communal labour. [Excerpt] [Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 13 Mar 82 p 1]

PRIVATE BUSINESS BLAMED--The PNDC Secretary for Ashanti Region, Mr Kwame Dwemo Kessie today blamed the private business sector for being one of the major contributory factors to the country's present economic mess. Mr Kessie who was inaugurating the Ghana Timber Millers Organisation in Kumasi referred to revelations from the Citizens Vetting Committee as evidence of the way many of the private businessmen and organisations had wantonly and deliberately cheated the state in the payment of taxes and customs duties. He therefore asked private business organisations to take a new look at the country's problems and be sincere to themselves and the nation. [Excerpt] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 19 Mar 82 p 8]

REMOVAL OF 'COLONIAL' ART WORK--All paintings and artworks on official buildings which portray colonial domination must be replaced with Ghanian ones. Objects which can be removed must be sent to the National Museums and Monuments Board by September. Mr E. Asiedu-Yirenkyi, Cultural and Tourism Secretary issued the directive at a re-orientation seminar in Accra yesterday. He said however, that monuments, hall and street names in the memory of some foreigners who contributed to the development of specific areas should not be replaced. Mr Yirenkyi said he did not see why all this time of the country's history pictures of Queen Elizabeth, Duke of Edinburgh and the Buckingham Palace remained in official buildings and wondered if portraits of our distinguished chiefs could not replace the foreign ones. The Secretary advised State Hotels to consider making about 70 percent of their dishes local and said after all, visiting foreigners would like to see something different. In addition he said the hotels should decorate the frontage and surroundings with beautiful local arts. [Text] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 16 Mar 82 p 8]

LUBRICANTS SHORTAGE--The government has released an unspecified amount for the urgent importation of lubricants which are now in short supply. Some of these lubricants have already started coming in from the Ivory Coast to normalise the situation. This was disclosed yesterday by Mr William S. Parker, Managing Director of Shell (Ghana) Limited when the Greater Accra Regional Secretary, Mr Atukwei Okai, met representatives of the various oil companies. Mr Parker said the present shortage had come about because since July last year no import licence had been issued to the oil companies. Following the shortage of lubricants a number of vehicles owners have parked their vehicles resulting in transportation difficulties.--GNA [Text] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 17 Mar 82 p 8]

PNDC CONDEMNS KILLINGS--Mr Joachim Amartey Kwei, a member of the PNDC has condemned the killings of a number of civilians by the military at Tarkwa in the Western Region last month. Speaking at a public rally at Tarkwa at the weekend, he observed that such wanton acts only discredited the image of the military and the December 31 revolution, reports the GNA. Mr Kwei did not disclose the number of persons killed but advised that the military should always see themselves as "defenders of the people." According to the PNDC member, soldiers should not be armed when on patrol duties in towns and villages and blamed the public for placing their neighbours in the hands of the military through false information. He commended the Support Services of the Second Battalion of Infantry based in Takoradi for the matured manner in which they had handled the public. Mr Kwei urged the Police to conduct a housecleaning exercise to expose the corrupt elements among them to restore public confidence in the service. [Text] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 15 Mar 82 p 1]

'AFRICAN' CULTURE IN MOVIES ADVOCATED--The screening of pornographic films has been banned and any cinema house caught screening such films will be closed down, Mr Asiedu Yirenkyi, Secretary for Culture and Tourism has announced. Directors of the Arts Council are to ensure that this directive is carried out. Speaking at a seminar in Accra yesterday on "The role of proprietors of cinema houses in the revolution, Mr Yirenkyi said the time had come for us to project the African culture. We have allowed things to find their own levels for far too long and this should not be allowed any more" he remarked. Mr Yirenkyi appealed to proprietors to donate part of their profits to support cultural programmes. Mr Nii Kwate Owoo of the Medical Research Unit, Legon, pointed out that the European domination over non-European peoples throughout the centuries implied a total domination of the lifestyles and thinking of the colonial people to the extent that the colonized mind was shaped to serve the purposes and the intentions of the capitalist mode of production. [Text] [Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 18 Mar 82 p 1]

CSO: 4700/1013

UN INTER-AGENCY MISSION TO MEET WITH GOVERNMENT LEADERS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 11 Mar 82 pp 1, 6, 8

[Text]

The UN Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Coordinator for Special Economic Assistant Programs, Mr. Abdulrahim A. Farah, arrives in Liberia tonight.

Mr. Farah is coming to Liberia at the head of the special United Nations Inter-Agency Mission to Liberia. Members of his delegation arrived in here over the weekend.

On arrival here, the UN Under-Secretary-General will be met by a high powered delegation composed of Acting Foreign Minister Captain Christopher Minikon, Planning Minister Dr. Byron Tarr, Information Minister Col. Gray D. Allison and Mr. Krishna Gowandan, UNDP Resident Representative here.

On Friday, at 2:00 p.m. a plenary meeting with heads of representatives of government ministries and agencies will take place at the National Investment Commission here.

Early Friday, the Under-Secretary-General will call on the Minister of Foreign Affairs, hold meeting with the Minister of Planning before making a courtesy call on Head of State Samuel K. Doe at the Executive Mansion.

Other members of the special U.N. Mission to Liberia include representatives from the United Nations Development Program, United Nations Industrial Development Organization, United Nations Children's Fund, and the World Health Organization and Habitat.

Others are the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Bank and International Fund for Agricultural Development.

Mr. George Anderson, program management officer at the United Nations, was seconded to work with the special U.N. Mission here.

Mr. Anderson, a Liberian, was seconded because of his background of having worked with similar projects for the least developed countries at the U.N.

The visit of the U.N. Mission follows the United Nations General Assembly's resolution 36/207, adopted in December last year in response to Liberia's request to be included in the list of least developed countries (LDC) in the world.

The appeal to the United Nations was made by Liberia's Permanent Representative to the U.N., Ambassador Abeodu Jones, on behalf of government, while the resolution was co-sponsored by the United States of America.

The resolution of Liberia affirmed the urgent need for international action to assist the Liberian Government, and accordingly appealed to all member states, specialized agencies and other organizations of the U.N. system international development and financial institutions to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels to help reconstruction rehabilitate and develop Liberia.

According to a United Nations questionaire, a Least Developed Country (LDC) is one which "faces economic difficulties so basic and so severe that the country is unable, if unaided, to benefit fully and automatically from general measures adopted in favour of the developing country as a group."

According to the definition, a least developed country requires extraordinary additional measures from the international community to assist it eliminate handicaps, derive significant advantages from general development measures and break the vicious circle of deprivation and poverty.

The document further said that a combination of a number of economic, political and social factors on the domestic and international levels led the Government of Liberia to request an LDC status for the country.

Among those factors are the substantial decline in commodity prices, world inflation, food shortages, chronic balance-of-payments deficits, high interest rates for loans, increased prices for energy and imported goods, inheritance of large public debts, the deteriorating conditions of the economy and the political, social and economic changes of April 1980.

Based on preliminary decisions, it is stated in the document that it would appear that Liberia's chance of being accepted as a least developed country is good. The document added that the manufacturing share of Liberia's gross domestic product is less than ten per cent, while the literacy rate is less than 20 per cent.

CSO: 4700/1012

PRC MEMBER'S REINSTATEMENT

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 5 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpt]

Lt./Col. Albert Toe has been reinstated as a member of the People's Redemption Council by the Co-Chairman Major General J.Nicholas Podier with the approval of the Head of State and Chairman of the Council, Samuel K. Doe.

Lt./Col. Toe was suspended last December by the Council for "leaving his post without obtaining excuse from the Council".

Announcing the reinstatement Thursday at his Capitol Building office, Vice Head of State Podier told Col. Toe that the Council's decision to lift the suspension was based on its "desire to create unity and harmony among its members."

He however cautioned Lt. Col. Toe not to repeat the act which led to his suspension and urged him to remain dedicated and committed for the promotion of the revolution.

Lt./Col. Toe thanked the Co-Chairman for the Council's decision and asked him to extend his profound gratitude to the Chairman and members of the Council for their "timely consideration".

He then pledged his continuous support to the Council, adding, "I am back with you to join hands to work in the interest of the Liberian people".

CSO: 4700/1012

CONSTITUTIONAL COMMISSION COMPLETES FIRST STAGE OF TASK

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 9 Mar 82 pp 1, 10

[Article by Madison Meahyen]

[Excerpt]

The National Constitution Commission has successfully completed the first stage of its task of holding nationwide public hearings with target groups and individuals, and is moving to the next stage which is to prepare the draft of what Liberia's new constitution would look like.

According to Dr. Amos Sawyer, chairman of the 25-member commission appointed by Head of State C-I-C Doe in his Christmas Message of 1980, the draft, when completed, will be presented to a Constitutional Advisory Assembly yet to be set up by the commission, for review.

It is this assembly that will advise the People's Redemption Council on the draft constitution, he said at a news conference at OAU Village yesterday.

The outcome of the Constitutional Advisory Assembly's exchanges with the PRC, Dr. Sawyer said, will lead to the writing of a final document and the holding of a national referendum on the document.

Dr. Sawyer who is also Political Science professor at the University of Liberia, said the exercise is expected to lead eventually to a return to civilian rule after the nationwide opinion poll or referendum on the document is conducted and the document is approved finally by the People's Redemption Council.

He said the holding of a referendum will not be the end of his commission's work.

He explained that such elections commission, political parties and so forth would need to be firmly established before there can be any thought on a return to civilian rule

UL, CUC

The most difficult work as yet for the commission has been the holding of public hearings throughout the country. The Chairman said the hearings were designed to enable the members of the Commission "to meet and talk with our people throughout the country, to grasp their participation in the writing of the new constitution".

The hearings began in late November when two special hearings were held at the University of Liberia and Cuttington University College. He explained that these were special cases because the two institutions of higher learning in the country were about to close at that time, and they reflect, in one way or another, the general spectrum of the national population.

Regular public hearings Dr. Sawyer said, were kicked off in December in Grand Bassa County when a number of public meetings were held with the people in LIBANC, Rivercess and Buchanan.

From there, similar hearings were carried out in serious population concentration areas as Nimba and Lofa.

In Nimba, views were taken in Sanniquellie, Tappita, Yekepa and Camp No.4 or Unification Camp, while in Lofa, meetings were conducted in Voinjama, Kolahun, Zorzor, Gbama and Bopolu.

In Montserrado, another populous county, hearings were held in Brewerville and Johnsonville among others, besides Monrovia which was treated as a special case because of the many pressure groups present here.

In Monrovia, five hearings were held at the Monrovia City Hall where 17 target groups were considered. Moreover, Dr. Sawyer said views taken in Monrovia were not limited to the hearings at the City Hall, as there were views taken from New Krutown and Lorma Community, two groups regarded as important to the writing of a new constitution.

Democracy

During the hearings, the Chairman said a total of 47 position papers or written documents were presented by professional groups, students and other pressure groups. In addition, he said, hundreds of letters and comments were received from other sectors of the public on issues that may constitute constitutional matters.

The Chairman said inputs gathered from the public, although controversial at times, were relevant. He added that the hearings further helped to minimize fears of producing a document which would exclusively reflect the views of a given elite or group, noting that the hearings were particlarly necessary for stimulating participatory democracy as "an integral part of the nation's future political process".

Dr. Sawyer said, however, that the receiving of views does not necessarily mean that the views will be included in the new constitution. He said the Commission will have to first define "a constitutional issue", an issue which is fundamental to the majority of the population and could therefore be included in the organic laws of the Republic.

Otherwise, he said, other matters not considered by the Commission for inclusion in the constitution could be cosidered by the law-making body in the future republic.

Dr. Sawyer expressed appreciation to all members of the public and to the press for the cooperation accorded members of the Commission during the first stage of their work. He asked further that such cooperation continue as the Commission's members continue their undertaking to prepare Liberia for a return to constitutional rule.

CSO: 4700/1012

PODIER WARNS JOURNALISTS TO STOP WRITING ERRONEOUS STORIES

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 19 Mar 82 pp 1, 6

[Text]

The Vice Head of State, Major General J. Nicholas Podier, has warned local journalists to stop writing erroneous and sensational news stories that could embarrass government.

He gave the warning Thursday when he strongly reacted to an article published by the independent Daily Observer newspaper captioned, "Lebanese Donate $50,000 for Redemption Day and Welfare Project."

General Podier, who is also General Chairman of the National Redemption Day Commission, described the article as "sensational, misleading and one suggesting foul play," according to a release from the Capitol Building issued Thursday.

He said the Observer misled the public when in fact the local radio stations have earlier reported the correct amount of $40,000 presented to him by the World Lebanese Cultural Union of Liberia as their contribution towards the ensuing Redemption Day anniversary. The NWE LIBERIAN newspaper also published the correct story of the presentation made by the President of the Lebanese Community.

According to the release, Vice Head of State Podier fined the Writer of the article, Mr. T. Max Teah, $100 and ordered him to pay the money into government coffers immediately.

The release quoted General Podier as saying that the fine would serve as a warning to local journalists to put stop ,to writing erroneous and sensational news stories that could embarrass government.

CSO: 4700/1012

FORMER MINISTER PROTESTS PAPER'S STORY ON HIS ALLEGED EMBEZZLEMENT

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 17 Mar 82 pp 1, 10

[Text]

Some employees of the "Daily Observer" were utterly surprised yesterday morning when the former Minister of Labor and Manpower Development, Moses Duopu, charged into the paper's Broad Street office and started causing noise over a March 17 story headlined, "DUOPU, 2 OTHERS CHARGED WITH EMBEZZLING $11,875".

When the story in question appeared in the "Observer", the Managing Director, Mr. Kenneth Best, was summoned by a Justice Ministry official who told him in the presence of Duopu and two "accomplices" that the headline did not tally with the story, part of which reads as follows:

"The former Minister of Labor, now advisor to the PRC, Major Moses Duopu, appeared at the Justice Ministry along with two of his accomplices to defend themselves against charges of complicity in an alleged $11,875 Agrimeco embezzlement case. The charges were levied by Mr Michael James, a former Agrimeco employee."

Duopu himself contended that he had not been charged with any crime by the Ministry of Justice and told Mr Best to see to it that a correction in the form of an "apology" was made in the following day's issue of the paper.

Since it was not mentioned nowhere in the story that it was the Justice Ministry which charged Duopu and his accomplices, the "Observer" in its March 18 issue refused to publish an "apology" but said instead at the end of the story, "$11,875 CASE--COL. ALBERT TOE TO TESTIFY TODAY":

"Meanwhile, Advisor Duopu and the two officials from Labour have rejected the statement in yesterday's Daily Observer report that they were charged with embezzlement and were defending themselves against complicity in the alleged Agrimeco case."

Apparently Duopu did not read the story before coming to the "Observer" to unleash his spleen on the Managing Director who left the country Wednesday night for Europe.

Yelling at the top of his lungs, he threatend to "beat the hell out of Kenneth Best before suing him."

The former minister was accompanied on his mission by a brief-case-toting man in military uniform.

Mr Rufus M. Darpoh, the editor-in-chief of the paper, was out of the office when Major Duopu came there.

Recently Mr Duopu displayed similar antics in the editorial offices of the NEW LIBERIAN.

CSO: 4700/1012

FORMER UL REGISTRAR SENTENCED TO PRISON FOR THREE YEARS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 9 Mar 82 p 8

[Text]

The People's Redemption Council has decided to impose a three-year jail sentence on Mr. James Cooper, former Registrar of the University of Liberia, in connection with his confession of guilt in the slandering of the Government of Liberia and members of the People's Redemption Council.

Announcing this decision Monday, Head of State Doe said, Mr. Cooper will be sent to Camp Belle-Yalla to serve his term.

The Commander-In-Chief said this action is necessary to weed out divisive elements in our society.

He said the Council considers it a crime any Liberian to preach sectionalism at the time when we are striving to unite all our people for the development and progress of our country.

The PRC Chairman said the action of Mr. Cooper is typical of those Liberians of the old order who have developed systematic jeolousies against the PRC Government for its positive record of peace and stability in our country.

He said the Council is convinced that the expressions made by Mr. Cooper represented his actual feeling, which is typical of many others in our society who are not happy with the progress we have achieved in restoring the country to normalcy.

The Liberian leader said Mr. Cooper was neither drunk nor mentally ill, "This is just the way he thinks," C-I-C Doe said.

The Head of State further indicated that the decision of the Council to impose this punishment, is to alert all Liberians who are bent on spreading rumours. Once they are caught they will be dealth with accordingly.

The Liberian leader noted that since April 12 last year, he has been personally endeavouring to unite all of the people of the country and has taken a number of measures to restore peace, harmony and goodwill among our people.

He noted, however, that many Liberians,indigeneous, and those referred to as Americo-Liberians, had adopted the practice of trying to discredit our efforts and create confusion in the country.

Chairman Doe emphasized that the Council cannot tolerate this,and hopes that the example of Mr.Cooper will serve as a lesson to others who believe as he does.

CSO: 4700/1012

NBL BEGINS PAYING BOL DEPOSITORS, SCHEDULE SET FORTH

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 12 Mar 82 pp 1, 6

[Article by J.N. Elliott]

[Text]

The National Bank of Liberia (NBL), Liquidator of the defunct Bank of Liberia (BOL) Thursday began paying some $4.5 million to customers that had saving accounts with the BOL. The paying process is being carried out at BOL building on Warren Street, Monrovia.

The money, paid in the form of cheques, represents the net balance of saving account of depositor's accounts.

The cheques received by some of the depositors are payable to local commercial banks in Monrovia. The cheques, according to a NBL release, are cashable on March 13 and 20.

The release said that saving account depositors who are to benefit from the approximately $4.5 million "paying process" will receive their cheques, drawn on the NBL (Liquidator, BOL), only upon proper identification and presentation of their individual pass books and signed receipts.

About $103,285 of the total amount will go towards off-setting loans owed the BOL by several depositors.

The release added that depositors with accounts under $5,000, are to be paid in cash by a local designated commercial bank, while those having accounts from $5,000 and above, will be required to open accounts at designated banks.

The paying process which started Thursday, is expected to run through March 20. March 13 and 14 (cheques cashing) are however excluded from the paying dates.

CHECKING ACCOUNTS

NBL, the release said, will pay a total of $4,183,938.32 to those with with checking accounts holders at a later date, the date was however not disclosed. $774,542.04 of this amount is to be used to offset loans and overdrafts owed by several of these holders.

SHAREHOLDERS

Shareholders and Time depositors, another category of BOL depositors, maybe a recipient of another $5.6 million. Of the amount, $4 million belongs to shareholders. They are scheduled to be paid last in accordance with PRC Decree No. 44, which states that shareholders should be among the last depositors to be considered for payment.

The assets of Bank of Liberia, it may be recalled, was liquidated in March 1981. At that time, BOL reportedly owed the NBL over drafts totalling more than $19 million.

Meanwhile, as depositors in Monrovia are currently receiving their cheques, those in Buchanan, Grand Bassa County, have been informed to report to the newly opened branch of the International Trust Company there to receive their cheques, while depositors in Bong Mines are to report for their cheques to the newly opened branch of the Chase Manhattan Bank in Bong Mines beginning April 1, to April 15, except Sundays.

CSO: 4700/1012

LLHC HOLDING ANNUAL MEETING OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS, SHAREHOLDERS

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 3 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Rufus M. Darpoh]

[Excerpt]

A seven-man top-level delegation headed by Finance Minister G. Alvin Jones leaves Liberia tonight for Libya to attend the annual joint meeting of the board of directors and shareholders of the Liberian/Libyan Holding Company (LLHC).

The LLHC is a commercial venture with 50/50 participation by the Liberian and Libyan Governments. The complex to house the offices of the venture is nearing completion on Tubman Boulevard, opposite the Monrovia City Hall.

The Liberian/Libyan Holding Company is engaged in various development projects in Liberia inspite of some differences between the Liberian and Libyan Governments in connection with the closing down of the Libyan People's Bureau in Liberia last year.

Finance Minister Jones said in an interview last night that among important issues the Liberian delegation will be discussing in Libya will include the completion of commercial and residential complex on Tubman Boulevard in Monrovia, export of coffee to Libya, participation by LLHC in the proposed Indo-Liberian Glass Project, and the exploration of other areas of participation that would be mutually beneficial to the two countries.

CSO: 4700/1012

KADUNA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE DELEGATION TO PROMOTE TRADE

Schedule of Delegation

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 11 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt] An 11-man delegation from the Kaduna Chamber of Commerce in Kaduna, Nigeria, is presently visiting Liberia as guests of the Liberia Chamber of Commerce. This is their first visit here.

Led by Alhaji M.B.G. Dogon-Yoro, president of Kaduna Chamber is in the country to promote trade between members of the Kaduna and Liberia chambers through direct and personal contacts with business community in Liberia.

Liberia is the first leg of the delegation's three-country tour. From here the delegation will go on to Sierra Leone and Senegal to explore similar trade links before returning to Nigeria.

The Liberia Chamber of Commerce is today hosting a luncheon for the visitors to create a forum to meet businessmen with similar interests.

Their interests include tourism promotion, joint ventures in small-scale industries, banking, farming, and Nigerian export promotion of textiles, electrical equipment, hospital equipment and materials as well as general provisions.

In addition to meeting private businessmen, the delegates will meet with officials from the Ministry of Commerce, Industry and Transportation and the National Investment Commission.

They will also visit Liberia's Industrial Zone and the National Cultural Center in Kendeja.

The delegation will leave here tomorrow for Freetown.

Delegation Chief's Remarks

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 12 Mar 82 pp 1, 2, 6

[Excerpt]

The leader of a Nigerian trade delegation ending a three-day visit here Thursday, has spoken of the need for the development of the tourist industry in Liberia in order to help generate funds for the nation's economy.

Alhaji M.B.G. Degon-Yaro, President of the Kaduna Chamber of Commerce and Industry, speaking at a luncheon tendered for his delegation by the Liberia Chamber of Commerce yesterday at the Ducor Hotel, said the tourist industry here is grossly under utilized.

Mr. Degon-Yaro said from his impression during his short stay in Liberia, the country possesses one of the greatest tourist potentials he had seen in West Africa.

He said government could generate much needed funds for development and other purposes provided timely consideration is given the development of tourism here.

INCOME

Mr. Degon-Yaro said the tourist industry in West Africa is an enterprising venture that when fully utilized, can help to generate additional income for the given country.

The Nigerian business executive called on Liberian businessmen to begin considering venturing into the tourist industry.

He thanked the members of the Liberia Chamber of Commerce for the luncheon and spoke of the need for closer trade links between Liberia and Nigeria.

INVESTMENT

The delegation had come to Liberia to identify areas in which possible investments could be made by Kaduna businessmen, under the umbrella of the Economic Community of West African State (ECOWAS).

Mr. Degon-Yaro said as members of ECOWAS, it is the responsibility of both Liberia and Nigeria to ensure that the treaty of the economic community is implemented for the benefit of the peoples of the region.

He admitted that before his visit here, he had had wrong impressions about Liberia.

U.S. ORIENTED

Mr. Degon-Yaro said he has always been of the opinion, because of the scarce information that the country was too U.S. oriented and that everything in Liberia was modeled on that of the United States.

"I thought everybody in Liberia spoke nothing but English. I was surprised to discover that there are local indigenous languages in Liberia, he said.

Mr. Degon-Yaro said his visit here has afforded him and his delegation the privilege of understanding the realities and aspirations of the Liberian people.

CSO: 4700/1012

GOVERNMENT ESTABLISHES INTERPRETATION, TRANSLATION BUREAU

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 3 Mar 82 p 9

[Excerpt]

Recently the government of Liberia established a Bureau of Interpretation and Translation. The bureau places emphasis on the three international languages of both United Nations and the O.A.U., namely Arabic, English and French.

The bureau is being headed by one of Liberia's most efficient female bi-linguist, Gbessie E. Cole, who holds a Bachelor of Arts degree in French (with emphasis in translation) from the National University of Ivory Coast.

Gbessie tells Women's World from her Broad Street office, about this new bureau, it functions and contributions to the Liberian society.

The purpose of establishing such a bureau, Gbessie stated, is to centralise and provide a pool of translators and interpreters of international standard. The bureau also serves as a controlling organ for any contract or assignment dealing with translation and/or interpretation within the Republic of Liberia.

"Basically," she explained, "the whole idea of establishing the bureau came into being, when we (the qualified and trained Liberian poly-linguals) saw the need of this profession within the Liberian society. We first of all considered the fact that the need of communicating with our neighbouring Franco-phones countries was very essential."

She cited as example the hosting of the OAU Summit here, when Liberia had to import foreign translators and interpreters. This cost the government a whole lot of money, the Chairlady noted. "However, with Liberia having her own professional interpretation and translators, there will be a great cut in the government funds in importing foreigners", she said.

Another reason the bi-linguist emphasized, is that the Liberian market has business people who want to transact businesses with the government. "Now if there is a business man who is French and speaks a little bit of English, and also has documents in his language for the National Investment Commission (NIC), how will he be able to communicate for any such business?" she asked.

Other countries have designated "translation agencies" that help in the translating of important documents and other things.

"Liberia too needs an Agency of such nature. The bureau is new and is trying first of all to educate the people of its importance. This is the time for Liberians to utilize such a bureau in order to solve the enhancement problem of communications within the country," Gbessie asserted.

Miss Cole explained that quite recently the Mano River Union held its 12th Adversary Board meeting which "our bureau played an instrumental part in the interpretation of French, being that Guinea who is now a member is also a Franco-phone country.

CSO: 4700/1012

JOURNALIST CALLS FOR INDIGENOUS LANGUAGES IN SCHOOLS

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 8 Mar 82 pp 1, 10

[Article by Westmore Dahn]

[Text]

A local journalist has called for the introduction of indigenous languages in Liberian schools.

The Editor-in-Chief of the Gbarnga Pilot Rural Newspaper, Henrie Thompson said at the weekend that the introduction of vernacular would create the readership base that would allow the Rural Press to achieve its objectives of reaching its target audience in the rural areas through their own local language for easy understanding.

Receiving the keys of his offices from Information Minister Colonel Allison at an inaugural ceremony in Gbarnga, Mr Thompson said if his proposal was considered, he believes that within three years a vernacular readership base would be developed to enable future rural newspapers to be printed in vernacular.

"Liberia is the only country in Africa that does not teach vernacular in her schools and publishes a rural newspaper in English," Thompson observed.

He maintained that it was essential to teach local languages in schools because "it is an important part of our culture and heritage". Thompson said "it is sad to note that most of our children nowadays cannot even speak the dialect of their parents", which he noted may seem irrelevant on the surface, but serious, technically.

Thompson emphasized that "if our culture has lost out to foreign cultures, in other areas of our national life, loosing out on our national languages too would amount to loosing our identity as a nation and people."

About the paper itself, Thompson disclosed that it shall be known as "Bong Crier" and for now, it would be an eight-page, four-columned newspaper that would be published twice a month. But the editor said that with the arrival of additional materials and supplies, they hope to increase the pages to 12 and publish once a week.

Among other things, Thompson pointed that Bong Crier would strive to fill the information gap between the urban and rural areas by printing the kind of information that would be a special interest to a rural community and which may not find its way to the national papers, radio and television.

He asserted that the paper would struggle to help in the promotion of literacy by being a teacher to the illiterate and help the newly literate remain literate.

The newspaper, Thompson further explained, "would serve as a means through which the people of the country could make their wishes and aspirations known to government while government in turn will know what the people are thinking".

CSO: 4700/1012

TAAG MISSION TO MAKE FACT-FINDING TOUR OF LIBERIA, MANO RIVER UNION

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 8 Mar 82 p 6

[Text]

A British Tropical Africa Advisory Group Mission will visit Liberia from 10-14 March, as part of a fact-finding tour of the Mano River Union States of Liberia, Sierra Leone and Guinea.

The leader is Mr. P.E. McGowan, Director of Mackay and Schnellmann, who specialises in economic geology and mining matters. The mission also includes Mr. H. Frame, a marketing executive of Plessey Radar, Mr. F. Davison, Managing Director of Tate and Lyle Technical Services and Mr. B, Steiner and Miss Sarah-Anne Jackson of the Department of Trade.

The Tropical Africa Advisory Group (known as TAAG) is one of 16 such Area Advisory Groups established by the British Overseas Trade Board (BOTB), covering between them the whole world. The area for which TAAG is responsible is the whole of rica south of the Sahara, cluding the Republic of South Africa, and comprises 49 separate independent countries.

The advisory function works in 2 ways: first, to the BOTB and Government Departments on policies and measures to maintain and improve Great Britain's export performance, and second to British commerce and industry, bringing overseas trade and investment opportunities to their notice and encouraging them to take full advantage of these opportunities.

The membership, as with the other Advisory Groups, consists largely of private sector representatives involved in the area and including the Confederation of British Industry, together with representatives of the Department of Trade, the Export Credits Guarantee Department, and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; the Secretariat is provided by the Department of Trade.

The Group's activities include all manner of trade promotion events, such as organising seminars and receiving and entertaining inward missions and important visitors.

Although TAAG members visit many countries in the area individually in the course of their ordinary business, because of the large number of countries involved, it arranges from time to time outward missions charged with identifying opportunities for British business in the countries concerned, and this visit to the Mano River Union States is just such a mission.

CSO: 4700/1012

MINISTER APPEALS TO JAPAN FOR COMMUNICATIONS, TRANSPORT, EQUIPMENT

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 4 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Klon Hinneh]

[Text]

Internal Affairs Minister Col. Edward Sackor, meeting the Japanese Ambassador accredited here Wednesday at his office has appealed to the government of Japan for communication, transport and farming equipment for the political sub-divisions of the country.

Minister Sackor told Ambassador Kunihiko Murono that there is urgent need for 10 single side band (SSB) communication sets to be distributed within the counties.

He also expressed the need for 54 hand radio sets with very high frequency, to be distributed at the rate of six each with the nine counties.

Minister Sackor further appealed for six single SSB sets and 18-and sets with very high frequency for the territories.

Additionally, according to the Minister, six single side band (SSB) sets and 12 hand sets with very high frequency are also needed for the districts.

On farming equipment, Internal Affairs Minister appealed to the Japanese Government for some agricultural tools including cutlasses, hoes, shovels garden rakes, plastic buckets, power saws, rice mill, (complete milling system), dryer, polisher, and srone separator.

Minister Sackor expressed the need for transport equipment, naming 18 dump trucks, 27 steel body trucks, 27 pick-ups and 54 motor cycles as urgent equipment for the counties and territories.

BASIC SUPPORT

Col. Sackor informed Ambassador Murono that it is necessary for the various political sub-divisions to be provided with basic support for the smooth and efficient performance of Internal Affairs officials in those parts of the country.

He said over the years, the Internal Affairs Ministry has suffered many setbacks in implementing development projects due to certain physical constraints such as logistics support and qualified personnel.

Minister Sackor suggested that it would be "nice" if the Japanese Government could give these equipment to Liberia in the form of a grant.

He told the Ambassador that the PRC Government has been deeply concerned about the welfare and well-being of the people, principally with the view of improving their living conditions.

CSO: 4700/1012

FAHNBULLEH TO EGYPT, ALGERIA

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 9 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpt]

Foreign Minister Major H. Boima Fahnbulleh left here Sunday, for an official visit to the Arab Republic of Egypt upon the invitation of Dr. Boutros Boutros Ghali, The Egyptian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs.

The Minister was accompanied by Mr. Solomon Maneh Sawyerr, Coordinator for African Affairs in the Bureau of Afro/Asian Affairs at the Ministry and Mr. Charles Wilson, Secretary to the Minister.

While in Egypt, Minister Fahnbulleh will pursue talks with top officials of the Egyptian Government on matters concerning the bilateral and multilateral relations of the two nations.

Following the visit to Egypt, Minister Fahnbulleh and his party will proceed to Algeria for important talks with Algerian Officials on bilateral matters.

The last leg of the Minister's trip will take him to several West African States where he is expected to deliver special message to their leaders from Head of State Samuel Kanyon Doe.

CSO: 4700/1012

ISLAMIC SOLIDARITY ORGANIZATION CONSTRUCTING SCHOOL BUILDING

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 11 Mar 82 p 9

[Text]

A $12,500 school ediface containing six classrooms which is being constructed by the Organization of Islamic Solidarity is expected to be completed shortly in Gbarnga, Bong County.

Mr. Samuka Kanneh, secretary of the organization, said in an interview in Gbarnga City recently that eventhough the building was about 80 per cent finished, its doors were now opened for the 1982 academic year.

He said the construction of the building commenced in May last year and would be fully completed in July this year.

Mr. Kanneh said that the Islamic Organization, founded in 1971 by two Muslim leaders, Amadu Kanneh and Abbas Kanneh, has built schools in Zownta, Palala, and there are plans to build another one in Weanzu, all in Bong County.

He said the organization has also given a number of scholarships to students to study in foreign countries, and added that it provides books to students in all of the schools built by the organization.

Mr. Kanneh further stated that the Organization of Islamic Solidarity was organized to assist Muslims in the construction of schools and Mosques.

The principal of the school, Alphonso Sheriff, said there were nine instructors in the school, who were teaching all courses in the elementary division and translate said subjects into Arabic.

He revealed that there were 170 students already enrolled at the school for the morning and evening sections, reports Westmore Dahn.

CSO: 4700/1012

LEBANESE INDUSTRIALISTS SET UP MONROVIA WATER PURIFICATION PLANT

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 19 Mar 82 pp 1, 10

[Excerpt] While waves of salty sea water were wrecking a storm in Monrovia's water supply system during the past few weeks, a group of Lebanese industrialists here were frantically putting together a package that has been aptly referred to as "[word indistinct] innovation."

The result of their efforts is a giant $85,000.00 water purification plant capable of turning out up to 100,000 gallons of "absolutely pure colorless, tasteless, odorless drinking water."

The plant which is located on U.N. Drive near the Ambassador Hotel in Mamba Point is also designed to produce for the first time in Liberia special distilled water for use in automobile batteries.

The plant's publicity-shy General Manager Ali Hassoun said in an interview here last Thursday it is his company's conviction that the operation of the plant will help to save a substantial amount of foreign reserves which are presently used on importing purified and distilled water from other countries.

He noted that the contamination of the Monrovia water supply by sea water need no longer poses a problem, since consumers can now obtain abundant supplies of purified water from the plant at very low cost.

Mr Hassoun further said that the availability of inexpensive distilled water from the plant will also enable motorists to greatly increase the life-span of their automobile batteries most of which being adversely affected by the use of improvised salty tap water.

He disclosed that his company also plans to set up a drip making plant that will be able to produce a sufficient quantity of drips for use in the various hospitals.

Since its quiet launching into operation early this month the plant appears to be gathering substantial public commendation and patronage in spite of poor publicity.

"We didn't have to do any extensive publicity," says Sales Manager, Mr Hassoun, noting that at a time when a lot of people are hesitating to drink the regular water supply because of the unusually high salt content, news of pure water production would obviously spread "like wild forest fire."

The introduction of the new plant which is capable of completely removing salt and other impurities from the water system is therefore seen as being complementary to LWSC's plants which are now being overworked in an attempt to deal with the present plague of sea water incursion.

CSO: 4700/1012

LIBEXIM REPRESENTATIVE TO DISCUSS CEMENT PLANT WITH GOVERNMENT

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 19 Mar 82 p 3

[Text]

A representative of LIBEXIM, a subsidary of Heracles International based in Athens, Greece, is in Monrovia to follow-up discussions which executives of that company held recently with government on plans to establish a cement distribution terminal in the country.

He is Mr. Nami A. Mansour, Director of Legal and promotion affairs.

A Commerce Ministry release Thursday said Mr. Mansour, accompanied by Liberia's Ambassador to Great Britain, H.E. Harry F. Moniba, called on Commerce Minister E. Sumo Jones Thursday to acquaint him with developments relating to the proposed plan.

While in the country, he is also expected to conduct an indepth study of the market situation with the view to facilitate the preparation of a comprehensive feasibility study for submission to government.

Mr. Mansour said that as soon as an agreement is reached, his firm would commence operation within a period of 3 months, producing 30 tons of cement daily and utilizing a workforce of not less than 170 Liberians including foreign technicians.

He stressed that the cost of cement to the consumer would be much cheaper than the existing selling price on the market.

Commerce Minister responding stressed the importance government attaches to this proposed plan, assuring that his Ministry will offer fullest cooperation in the realization of this program.

He reiterated government's policy of non-Nationalization of industries, adding that every degree of protection and possible incentives would be provided investors desirous of engaging in business undertakings in the country.

Minister Jones further assured Mr. Mansour of government's determination and total commitment to remove all bottlenecks that would stand in the way of investment intended to come into the country.

It can be recalled that in a letter addressed to the Minister by the Head of State and Chairman of the People's Redemption Council, Samuel K. Doe, calling for the opening of the market for the importation of cement and other consumer items which heretofore were produced locally under a restricted scheme, Liberian Embassies abroad were contacted to encourage foreign firms develop interest in providing cement for the Liberian market.

Liberia's Ambassador to Great Britain, Dr. Moniba, immediately express concern for development programs in the country, contacted Heracles International, a firm based in London which has had several years of exeperience in the production of cement, among other commodities.

The visit of three Greek business executives in early March is a result of Ambassador Moniba's contact.

CSO: 4700/1012

PRESIDENT VISITS CYCLONE-HIT AREA

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 11 Feb 82 pp 1-3

[Text] President Didier Ratsiraka was in Ambatondrazaka (Lake Alaotra) yesterday. Ambatondrazaka is Madagascar's "rice basket" and one of the regions most hard hit by the recent cyclones and floods.

In fatigue dress, a uniform now familiar to the rural producers who like to meet with the president "in the field," the chief of state and his wife, accompanied by two members of the CSR [Supreme Revolutionary Council] (Mora Etienne and Ramanantsalama), the minister of interior (Ampy Portos, chairman of the National Relief Committee) and a number of high officials from the Office of the President and various ministries, expressed their sympathy and assurances of help to disaster victims.

Closing early, as is its wont, the "TARATRA" NATIONAL INFORMATION AGENCY was not able last evening to give us a report on the president's visit, a report we hope to obtain for our next edition. Radio and television detailed numerous gifts to victims in the region last night, gifts including two inflatable boats (from France), 200 tons of cement, several tons of rice, basic commodities, and so on.

Interview on FR-3 Reunion

The major event yesterday was President Ratsiraka's interview with two French journalists on FR-3 Reunion now accompanying the European Parliament delegation (including Paul Verges, leader of the Reunionese Communist Party), which delegation also visited the Alaotra region yesterday. It was an "on-the-spot" chat between the chief of state and our European visitors.

The text of the interview is expected to be made available today through the NATIONAL AGENCY "leather cushion," but we already have some excerpts from the president's statements:

"Madagascar is not totally alone in its difficulties because various countries and international organizations are helping us. Nevertheless, we are somewhat bitter about the way the international organizations often react with respect to disasters that hit the Third World countries, whether they be natural disasters or man-made.

"Man-made disasters: A coup d'etat occurs in Gambia in the absence of President Jawara, who is in London for Prince Charles' wedding. A mission is immediately sent to Banjul by the international organizations in order to evaluate damages and needs of Gambians. In our country in 1975, the president, Colonel Ratsimandrava, was assassinated. Martial law was instituted for several months, during which imports and exports were halted. No aid came from abroad, whence a certain amount of bitterness.

"Natural disasters: Madagascar is hit by cyclones every year. In 1982, the island has been very hard hit because the entire national economy is affected. Schools are not operating because they are housing the victims and the homeless. Roads and railroads have been cut; 25,000 hectares of our crops have been lost for the year, and so on. In short, it is a national catastrophe. In order to prevent natural disasters, the United Nations should have an emergency relief fund that could be used immediately and effectively because to receive aid in 1982 for a cyclone that struck in 1978 is pitiful. The people need cement, gifts, medicine and rice immediately. An emergency relief fund could be used for such needs immediately. Nothing of the sort is now available.

"All of this shows that Madagascar is considered as the poor cousin of the Third World, the Indian Ocean or the nonaligned countries."

The FR-3 Reunion correspondent then asked whether President Ratsiraka were not being made to pay very dearly for his political choices and the chief of state, who was applauded by villagers present, said that he regretted none of his choices. "If I had it to do all over again, I would make the same choices. Malagasy socialism and the independence of Madagascar is never too dear."

11,464
CSO: 4719/646

KAURA HITS OUT AT CITY FATHERS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 19 Mar 82 pp 1, 7

[Text]

TWO BLACK DTA leaders Katuutire Kaura and Gregoir Tibinyane, provided some fireworks in the National Assembly this morning when they spoke in the Budget debate.

They were giving vent to the mounting Black nationalist mood that has raised its head within moderate ranks lately.

'Rising star' of the DTA and outspoken Herero representative for the Alliance Mr Katuutire Kaura delivered another one of his earbashings — this time to the White city fathers of Windhoek and the Municipal Association of SWA.

He addressed himself to the announcement this week that the Ministers' Council was taking over the third-tier of government in the Territory as from April 1, criticising the Municipal Association's reaction that it was not consulted in the matter.

Mr Kaura thanked the Ministers' Council for taking the country's municipalities under direct control.

"We have been Arnold commissioned for so long now that it is time we were Ministers counselled for a change", he said.

Mr Kaura said he was surprised to read in the newspapers this week that the Municipal Association was "raising dust" over the Ministers' Council announcement, saying that it was not consulted about the takeover.

NEVER BOTHERED

"Yet it was front page news that Windhoek has a new mayor, and not only for Windhoek, but for Katutura and Khomasdal as well. These people who are complaining about the Ministers' Council announcement never bothered to consult Khomasdal and Katutura in the election of a new mayor", accused Mr Kaura.

"There are quite a few Black and Brown people in this country who would like to run for mayor of Windhoek", he added.

Mr Kaura went on to point out that the Municipal Association claimed on the grounds of their "consciences" that they should have been consulted but never consulted others in the past.

DOUBLE STANDARDS

It amazed him that intelligent people who have been running the affairs of Windhoek for so long thought they could maintain double standards forever.

Mr Kaura urged the Ministers' Council not be deflected from its new task by "selfish, impudent, conceited, supercilious, sadistic and arrogant snobs who want to maintain their super privileges at all costs".

Mr Kaura said he had bought himself swimming trunks and would go swimming in the Windhoek Municipal pool on April Fool's Day when the takeover become effective.

Turning to the racially segregated Municipal libraries, he said: "I have literally become illiterate for the last three years from being forced to read the Jack and Jill books in the Katutura library."

TOO HOT

Referring to yesterday's walkout from the National Assembly by HNP leader Mr Sarel Becker and the non-participation of the Aktur delegation, Mr Kaura said the "political kitchen" (National Assembly) had "become too hot for them".

Mr Becker wanted to take Namibia back to the days when "kaffirs must not be trusted, and they should get their hiding with their wages and be treated like children", according to Mr Kaura.

Almost the entire National Assembly was now composed of people "shaped in the DTA mould" because they had all come from the DTA crucible", Mr Kaura said.

He was referring to the various opposition groups who had broken away from the DTA, such as Nudo Progressive and the National Democratic Party.

"Since only the DTA is left in this House, let's now get down to the business of governing the country", he concluded.

Mr Gregoir Tibinyane, representative of the Tswanas, said this morning he supported Mr Kalangula's idea of turning the DTA into one party. What he could not support, however, was the way in which Mr Kalangula had gone about matters.

"It can't be achieved in two to three months. If he had shown patience, he would have succeeded," Mr Tibinyane said.

"I can't accept that without talking to the leaders he could tell them to form one party. this is a thing that must come from conviction."

Mr Tibinyane also said he could not agree with Mr Kalangula's idea of dividing the country into provinces. He said the idea would remind Black people of the homelands system.

"We have suffered much under the homelands system, and this idea wil create suspicion, particularly if you see Mr Kalangula come with this idea of just after the National Party under Mr Pretorius came with the idea of provinces."

When the National Assembly broke for tea this morning, Mr Tibinyane moved on to talk about the opponents of the DTA.

"Here in SWA there are organisations and people whose only aim is to break the DTA", he was saying when the Assembly adjourned.

Mr Tibinyane also referred to yesterday's allegations by Mr Piet Junius that there was misuse of funds by Representative Authorities.

"The reason is that the Representative Authorites are not worried about SWA as a whole, but are worried about their population group. I would like to warn the representative authorities that no population group in this contry can win this struggle alone".

CSO: 4700/986

BECKER PULLS HNP OUT OF NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 19 Mar 82 pp 3, 7

[Text]

MR SAREL BECKER, leader of the HNP of SWA left the National Assembly in Windhoek for the last time yesterday, withdrawing his party from the National Assembly.

He did so after tabling a motion calling inter alia for the disbanding of the National Assembly.

After motivating his motion amongst considerable interjections from the ruling DTA side of the House, no seconder came foreward and the motion lapsed.

Mr Becker's motion also called for a return to the system of government in the Territory as it was 10 years ago, with a Commissioner General for the Non White national minorities, representation for the Whites in the Cape Town Parliament, a cessation of all independence negotiations for SWA under Black majority rule, and separate independences for each of the Territory's population groups in their 'own' geographical regions.

Mr Becker reaffirmed the HNP's option for a 'statebond' instead of a federal or unitary state in an independent Namibia.

A UN-envisaged independence for the Territory did not involve true democracy, because 85 percent of the population were ignorant and open to manipulation.

Democracy was a system developed for the informed and the educated Mr Becker said.

A democratic system of government in a unitary state would spell chaos in an independent SWA, he added.

The HNP was not in favour of the National Assembly even if it was ethnically composed, because it involved power sharing amongst the various national minorities.

TOTAL SEPARATION

Mr Becker proposed the total separation of groups as the only way to a complete removal of discrimination, and suggested that the Whites should become constitutionally integrated with SA.

Referring to a motion that was passed previously in the National Assembly that internal political parties should not obtain outside funds, Mr Becker said the DTA had voted in favour of the motion only to get "a prickly matter off its shoulders".

The motion had been unanimously accepted at the time and was aimed at eliminating outside influences being brought to bear on the Territory through financial aid to political parties.

"The DTA is now paying for this because other parties are now being funded from outside against the DTA", Mr Becker said. He did not elaborate.

The DTA majority's hands were itching to institute far-reaching changes on the local government level in the Territory now that the Ministers' Council has taken over the third-tier, said, Mr Becker. He warned that Municipal government was the one level especially suited for local rule by each group over its own affairs and if the DTA tampered with this system, chaos would result.

ITCHING

"The DTA's hands are itching to make those changes", he said.

Mr Becker said he would resign from the National Assembly when he left yesterday, but was not withdrawing from politics in SWA.

"I am leaving here because I will use my time more fruitfully elsewhere concluded Mr Becker.

He thanked the Chairman and the other members of the National Assembly for their benevolence towards him.

The motion lapsed when no seconder came foreward and Mr Becker shortly afterward left the Assembly.

The National Party election front Aktur also announced this week that it would not participate actively in the proceedings, as a form of protest against the composition of the National Assembly.

CSO: 4700/986

MILITARY BOARD OF INQUIRY LOOKS AT ALLEGED ATROCITIES

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 19 Mar 82 p 2

[Text]

A MILITARY judicial board of inquiry has begun hearing evidence in Windhoek on allegations that Security Forces had shot and killed two civilians and had maltreated others in Kavango in northern SWA last month.

A spokesman for the SWA Territory Force headquarters in Windhoek told Sapa the board had been appointed by the chief of the Defence Force, General Constand Viljoen, following "allegations of atrocities (wandade) that appeared in reports published by certain newspapers."

The SWATF had ordered a preliminary internal investigation immediately after the news reports had been published.

"The preliminary investigation is now being followed up by a judicial board of inquiry convened by the Chief of the Defence Force," the spokesman said.

The board, headed by Brigadier Ben de Wet Roos of SA Defence Force headquarters in Pretoria, was currently hearing evidence in Windhoek and would leave for Kavango as soon as its work in the city had been completed.

The South African Minister of Defence, General Magnus Malan, said in reply to a question in the House of Assembly last week the Defence Force would investigate allegations by a Kavango Chief, a shopkeeper and a schoolmaster that two innocent civilians had been shot by Security Forces.

It had been further alleged that the Kavango Chief had been intimidated by mortar fire directed at his kraal and by threats with a firearm to make women abailable for immoral purposes, and that detainees were assaulted and maltreated.

General Malan said the use of violence against civilians was in conflict with the policy of the SADF, but at the same time propaganda was being used to discredit the Security Force. — Sapa.

CSO: 4700/986

POLICE DOG ACTION CALLED 'BRUTAL AND IRRESPONSIBLE'

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 19 Mar 82 p 5

[Text]

MR Solomon Mifima, Chairman of the Namibian Trade Union Council, has described the recent use of Police dogs in rounding up vagrants as "brutal and unresponsible".

Mr Mifima was referring to an incident which occurred last week when three people were arrested after Police dogs had been set on a group of young men sitting on the grass at the Ausspannplatz. The Police claimed the men were vagrants, and that the incident took place as part of normal Police procedure to prevent crime.

At a press conference this week Mr Mifima called upon the AG "to investigate the case in question as soon as possible." He said an independent commission should be set up to investigate the case "and if any criminal action from the Police was to be found, legal action should be instituted against those responsible.

"These people were workers who were looking for employment. There were no signboards to indicate that people are not allowed to sit there. There was no sign of disorder", Mr Mifima said.

Mr Mifima told reporters that some of the people involved in the incident had been to see the Trade Union Council about the matter.

He also called on the Government to look into the matter of the eight Black people who died in a veld fire in the Auas mountains in 1978. The Minister of Defence recently settled out of court with the widow of Mr Helmut Voigts, who also died in the fire.

"It was not stated whether he would pay compensation to the families of the black men who died in the fire. Mr Helmut Voigts did not die alone", he said. The Trade Union Council was ""working on whether to take legal action against the Government for the people who died in the fire."

The Advedrtiser was unable to get comment from the police because all senior police officers were in the South helping in the manhunt for Klaas Pieters.

CSO: 4700/986

POLITICAL MUDDLE IN COUNTRY ASSESSED

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 19 Mar 82 pp 15-16

[Article by Leon Kok in column "From the Editor's Desk": "Democracy in SWA Too Precious To Denigrate"]

[Text]

I AM glad that Mr Peter Kalangula's National Democratic Party took up the Owambo Government's two nominated seats in the National Assembly this week.

This followed a considerable amount of soul-searching, primarily because of the gauntlet thrown by DTA Chairman Mr Dirk Mudge. Mr Mudge has argued on numerous accasions that it is hypocritical for the NDP to retain power in the Owambo Administration while it rejects ethnicity.

The Owambo Executive in turn feared that the same allegation would be thrown at it if it took up the two nominated seats in the National Assembley.

Frankly, that would have been total nonsense.

To start with, the NDP recognises the legitimacy of the present interim constitution (even if grudgingly so) while parties such as Swapo, Swapo D and Swanu do not.

As such, there would certainly be hyprocricy if Swapo D or Swanu for example participated in the existing order, because thy would be making use of a system that they reject.

Not so for the NDP. The NDP recognises the existing order, is legally accepted within the existing order, and thus has every right to participate in and make use of the system to its own advantage.

The precedents?

The Labour Party in the UK does not like the House of Lords anymore than the NDP likes the AG 8 interim constitution, but the Labour Party does have representation in the House of Lords and it does participate fully in the proceedings of the House of Lords.

By the same token, the PFP in SA does not like apartheid, but does have representation in the all-White SA House of Assembly and does participate in its proceedings.

HYPOCRISY

Right, it might be argued that the PFP has refused to participate in the President's Council because it includes Whites, Coloureds and Asiatics but excludes Blacks. Regretably, that is hypocrisy.

Commissions of inquiry are another good example. A minority party, if invited to participate in an investigation, may not agree with the terms of reference or the possible majority recommendations, but that does no necessarily prevent it from participating in the investigation and submitting a minority report.

Turning to the second-tier governments, the same principle applies. Mr Mudge may well claim that Messrs Kalangula and Justus Garoeb (of the Damararaad) have no business retaining power in those authorities. He is wrong.

The parties of Messrs Kalangula and Garoeb respectively have accepted the legitimacy of the existing order, they participated in democratic elections and they were elected to power. Moreover, they have every right to remain in power.

A precedent again?

The PFP in SA rejects apartheid (as Messrs Kalangula and Garoeb reject ethnicity) but the PFP participated in the all-White provincial elections and now exercise that amount of influence in the provincial system that the system allows it.

By the same token, the non-ethnic orientated NDP has every right to participate in an ethnic constitution which is not of its choice.

Let's put the boot on the other foot.

If the NDP were to have a provincial-type constitution implemented, would the DTA refuse to participate in the provincial elections if it recognised the legitimacy of the constitution and there was a chance of it winning the elections? Obviously it would.

UNFAIR

So why point an unfair and accusing finger at the Kalangulas and Garoëbs?

Lets take the argument further. The DTA now apparently rejects aspects of the interim constitution AG 8. Applying then the argument Mr Mudge has used against the NDP, surely it follows that the DTA should resign from the Ministers Council, the National Assembly, the White Legislative Assembly and every other constitutional body in the country.

Ridiculous, isn't it!

Perhaps one should view the entire matter academically too.

Clearly, nobody would dispute the need for strong government, and least of all the DTA. And to have strong government, the system must rest on mass consent. Mr Mudge, however, instead of encouraging mass consent, is discouraging it by the stand he has adopted against the NDP.

Ironically, it would seem that it goes right against Mr Mudge's own nature; it was none other than Mr Mudge who a mere 12 months ago called for government in SWA to have "a broader base" and he initiated discussions and various constitutional changes to achieve that end. One of Mr Mudge's recommendations apparently was the addition of ethnic-nominated members to the National Assembly, the very issue that the NDP fears that it is on thin ground.

OK, so the DTA might not like effective opposition in the National Assembly. In fact we hope that is not the case, because then it would be obvious that the DTA doesn't understand the meaning of a parliamentary system and a loyal opposition.

"Goverments must govern, but strong governments need strong opposition", wrote Bernard Crick in his excellent book The Reform of Parliament. Another first rate commentator on British Government, Walter Bagehot, wrote that "one of the prime functions of Parliament is to express the mind of all the English people on all matters which come before it".

Alexis de Tocqueville, the astute American political analyst, wrote more than 100 years ago that "it is not always feasible to consult the whole people, either directly or indirectly, in the functions of the law; but it cannot be denied that, when this is possible, the authority of the law is much augmented."

This surely applies to Owambo in the cases of the Security Forces carrying out their duties and the controversial new Terrorism Bill which was introduced in the National Assembly recently and opposed by the Owambos.

CLEAN SWEEP

In the case of the Terrorism Bill, the DTA might have had a relatively clean sweep in passing the legislation were it not for the NDP. But then problems would have arisen too: the legislation is only really applicable to Owambo; the Owambos don't like it; the DTA would reflect a totally fallacious scenario of the legislation being accepted; and there would probably be a sharp backlash from the Owambos when the legislation is implemented.

This perhaps suggests that almost any system of representation, however ramshackle, incomplete, and at times corrupt, is better than none; and is better than one that will represent only an alleged single interest of the governed.

The greatest example of the recognition of this point lies perhaps with the English Reform Bills of 1832 and 1867. The the old Whig gentlemen in Westminster did not suddenly become convinced, out of some movement in abstract ideas, that their opposition to the preceding situation was morally right; on the contrary, they made their 'radical' moves because it became increasingly clear to them that enterprising government could not be carried on in an industrialised society unless the power and existence of both the entrepreneur and the skilled manual worker was recognised and represented.

For my own part, arguing in the context of press freedom in this column last week, I said that a healthy society undoubtedly requires a certain amount of internal tension while it also requires a competition of interests and ideas. In the realm of the mind too, in philosophy , religion and other facets of life, the progress of our society demands the vigorous pitting of ideas against each other. In fact, only in that way can the best results be achieved.

This point, of course, is not only fundamental to press freedom, it is fundamental to democracy per se, and as such includes parliamentary representation.

REASON FOR CONCERN

It may be fair to assume that Mr Mudge believes as of now that the concept of total unity and overriding control of the National Assembly is more important than the concept of healthy conflicting interests and a loyal opposition. That being the case, there would be reason for concern, because the former concept smacks too much of totalitarian democratic or one party tendencies. And if it is the case, it would explain to some degree Mr Mudge's great discomfort about the NDP breakaway from the DTA.

One factor however that would negate that assumption is that Mr Mudge saw it as quite healthy to break away from the White National Party and move into loyal opposition in the White Legislative Assembly. Or was it mere political opportunism?

Whatever, the truth will emerge in the forseeable future.

OBLIGATIONS

Moving on in the academic arguments, the NDP has gained certain rights to govern the Owambos and be represented in the National Assembly, and if democracy is to mean anything in this country, then with those rights go certain obligations.

The great American constitutionalist, James Madison, put it this way: "It is the obligation of each and every political party in a democratic system to guard against the oppression of its rulers and to guard one part of society against the injustice of the other part."

De Tocqueville remarked: "Democratic laws and practices promote the welfare of the greatest possible number; for they emanate from the majority of the citizens, who are subject to error, but who cannot have an interest opposed to their won advantage. Which makes it imperative for all to participate".

Finally, these questions arise: Can the DTA afford to play games with democracy at the price of increased instability in the country? And can the NDP afford to let the country drift into nowhere by waiving its obligations?

Hopefully, the answers to these two questions make the point that I am trying to get through.

Inceed, true democracy throughout the world has become limited, precious and delicate and should not be denigrated lightly.

Aktur having pulled out of the National Assembly this week also raises a question or two.

Frankly, my view on the subject is much the same as that alongside: Aktur should remain in the National Assembly and exercise its rights and obligations.

The same applies to Mr Hans Diergaardt's Liberation Front and Mr Sarel Becker's HNP. Perhaps even more so than Aktur.

True, Aktur has questioned the legitimacy of the National Assembly and the Ministers' Council on a number of occasions in the past, but then it has also endorsed it by its participation in the National Assembly.

To now turn its back on that endorsement reflects just a little too much inconsistency for comfort.

On the other hand, one has to recognise that the legitimacy issue has developed into an intricate one in recent months and cannot be ignored for what it is.

Mr Mudge said on Tuesday that the National Assembly and Ministers' Council will remain for the time being, irrespective of outside views.

That's fine for reasons mentioned alongside, but if the legitimacy issue is going to precipitate considerable dissension where it should not otherwise be, then the DTA needs to rethink the issue.

The alternatives of course are to retain the status quo, dissolve the institutions completely and let the AG rule or change the institutions radically.

I suppose that decisions on this score would in turn depend on whether we are heading towards a UN-supervised election in the near future, or not.

And utimately, being a constitutional issue, this decision is really AG Mr Danie Hough's.

One wonders how he feels about matters!

CSO: 4700/986

JUNIUS CRITICIZES SECOND-TIER SPENDING

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 19 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] MR PIET JUNIUS, member of the National Assembly for the DTA, yesterday launched a scathing attack on certain Representative Authorities whose spending spree on "palaces" for their Chairmen "bordered on recklessness."

Mr Junius, who is one of the DTA's Baster representatives, was contributing to the Budget debate.

"I ask with tears in my eyes, is it really necessary that hundreds of thousands of rands be spent to build palaces for every MEC and Chairman in the country", said Mr Junius to a resounding chorus of "hear hear".

Mr Junius said the behaviour of some second-tier authorities "bordered on recklessness" and was "a nightmare to many".

He went on to accuse certain Representative Authorities of corruption in their handling of drought relief funds which left people "dumbfounded", and pleaded for tighter controls on the spending of such aid.

Many of these leaders seemed to be quite unaware of the economic depression in the country at present.

Mr Junius urged those who were guilty of overspending public funds on illustrious homes for their leaders, to "please cut your cloth smaller".

"The difficult times for this country are still coming and when they do, we could spend that money much more effectively", he warned.

It seemed to have become fashionable for certain second-tier authorities to compete with each other to see who could buy the expensive houses and cars.

"This was started by Kaptein Diergaardt", Mr Junius alleged, referring to the Chairman of the Rehoboth Baster Council who is in opposition to the DTA.

"If these men are real leaders, the people will respect them even if they should live in single quarters", reprimanded Mr Junius.

He reminded the Assembly that "Jesus was born in a stable".

HIGHEST PRIORITY

Referring to the purchase by the Coloured Administration of six buses this week for 'cultural promotion' Mr Junius demanded of the Coloured second-tier leaders: "Are they convinced and are their people convinced that that is the highest priority for the Coloureds?".

If an outsider were to look at this state of affairs in the Territory, he would be forced to conclude that no serious lack exists and that there is a plentiful supply of money, neither of which is in fact the case, he continued.

Not all second-tier administrations were guilty of this malpractice, Mr Junius pointed out, but he asked those who are to show some restraint.

In similar vein a DTA Owambo representative Mr I Nghihulifua, lashed out at prestige spending by some second-tier leaders.

Some of these Executive Committees had a house and three cars bought for each MEC, totalling R420 000 for each administration, according to Mr Nghihulifua.

"R420 000 for only eight people in the country is really too much", he said.

These people also travelled in their three cars without paying for petrol out of their own pockets, Mr Nghihulifua added, and asked that these matters be investigated.

CSO: 4700/986

DEPARTING WINDHOEK CITY ENGINEER INTERVIEWED

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 19 Mar 82 p 6

[Interview with Arthur Clayton by Franz Krueger, place and time not specified]

[Text]

MR ARTHUR CLAYTON has been Windhoek's City Engineer for the past 15 years, and has seen — and initiated — some great changes in the city.

This month, he leaves the city to take up the post of City Engineer in Port Elizabeth.

The Advertiser went to speak to Mr Clayton to find out a little more about the man and his career.

Arthur James Clayton is a born Windhoeker, and has spent most of his life here. He attended the Windhoek High School, where he matriculated in 1953. For the next four years he studied Civil Engineering at the University of Cape Town, and graduated there in 1957.

"To put in a nutshell, between '57 and '63 I worked for an oil company for two years, I spent about three years with consulting engineers and one year with civil engineering contractors in Rhodesia. I was deliberate, I wanted to get experience. An old, experienced engineer said to me during those years: You know, an engineer's not an engineer until he's had five jobs in five years."

After getting married in 1961, Mr Clayton came back to this country in 1963.

"I didn't come to the Municipality, I joined the SWA Roads Department. I was with them for two years, and joined the Municipality on April Fool's day 1965.

"By the time I leave it will be within a week of 17 years that I have been with the Municipality."

Of those 17 years, Mr Clayton has filled the position of City Engineer for 15 years.

Asked about the highlights of his career, he said: "Well, all I can say is I've enjoyed my entire career. Engineering is a facinating subject, its constructive, you can see your accomplishments."

Q: Mr Clayton, why are you leaving the Municipality after so many years?

A: Well, for that very fact. I've been in the same job now for 15 years. It must be about three years ago that I began to think about my future. I had to decide whether I was going to be satisfied to remain in this present position for the remainder of my career. That's what it amounts to, there is no further opportunity for advancement in the Municipal engineering field in SWA. Or was I going to try for something else? When this opportunity for Port Elizabeth turned up I knew this was the type of thing I was looking for. The Port Elizabeth job offers me a further challenge.

Q: In a sense, you are joining the great SWA braindrain. How do you see the problem of skilled personnel? Are there ways of overcoming it?

A: One would probably have to adopt a two-pronged attack as the Muncipality is doing. Persist in efforts to get people academically trained; the Municipality has a very good bursary scheme for, I think, five or six different fields of study. On the other hand, our field for recruitment is still SA, they'll have to pay competitive salaries and actively recruit, both in SA and, if neccessary, overseas.

Q: What have been the biggest gaps in skilled personel in the Municipality?

A: For a time, there was terrific difficulty in getting qualified engineers, but with the fall off in the availability of capital, so our need for engineers has decreased. Its not far out of balace at the moment.

The shortage at the moment in the Municipality as a whole is in the skilled artisans trades. Instrument technicians, for instance, are unobtainable. All efforts to date to recruit instrument technicians have failed, and we are now thinking of getting them from overseas.

Funnily enough we had people come to see us who maintained that with the recession overseas and the salaries we pay here, there is a strong possibility of recruiting people.

Q: Mr Clayton, what is a City Engineer?

A: Well, a City Engineer is responsible for all the masterplanning and extensions and most of the services bar one, electricity: water supplies, sewage reticulation, and purification, parks and gardens, fire brigade, the building inspectorate, road maintenace and construction. It is a management job.

No large project, whether it be Municipal, Government or private, proceeds without my being involved in some way.

Q: How does Windhoek feature compared to other cities of its size?

A: Windhoek compares very well with other cities of its size, and larger, and I would go so far as to say it can set an example to many cities, in the facilities we have available and the efficiency with which the whole system operates.

Q: What are the unique and typical problems facing a City Engineer here?

A: One of the problems of a place like Windhoek is that it is in an arid region, and you have to take that into account in planning and designing facilities. We have this terrific variation in water demand, for example. Your peak day is nearly three times the minimum day in water demand.

Being an arid region, you get these flash floods, you get terrific variation in rainfall. High intesity rainfall that occurs in arid regions leads to infiltration into the sewers, you get damage to tar roads.

Q: Will Windhoek be able to handle such an inflow?

A: If the funds are forthcoming, yes.

Q: And if there isn't this inflow, what will Windhoek look like?

A: Well, it will still continue to develop, because there will be a continued tendency for the governmental functions to centre in Windhoek and these always attrack all sorts of other things, like extensions to educational systems, additional business

Q: What have been the highlights of your career?

A: With the Municipality there have been various highlights. We commissioned our water reclamation scheme, the first of its kind in the world, to purify sewage effluent to drinking water standards. It is a plant which is, in fact, still operating.

From about 1967 to 1973, Windhoek witnessed I think the greatest rate of development the city has ever had. In that short space of time, we developed the entire Pionierspark township, we increased the size of Katutura by about 35 to 40 percent, and we had significant developments in Khomasdal as well. Over this period we surfaced virtually all the dirt roads in what you would call Greater Windhoek and have made significant advances on tarred roads in Katutura and Khomasdal.

We also had our town planning scheme promulgated during this period. At the beginning we embarked on our transportation study and established a masterplan for the transportation links in the city and several of these have been implemented.

The one component one would very much have liked to see implemented is the East-West throughroad which due to the shortage of capital has had to be shelved.

Q: Was there a lot of resistance to the introduction of the water reclamation scheme?

A: We introduced the scheme at a time when this community was not yet as aware of public events. Everywhere in the world there is now much greater public awareness of schemes. Today, public awareness or public resistance in fact has thwarted or wrecked or postponed many very excellent schemes. Plus, I think the Southwester is generally far more aware of water, the value of it and therefore far more readily accepts something which may not be acceptable to their overseas counterparts.

Q: There has been a lot of controversy about the East-West highway. Is it really necessary in a situation where housing and basic facilities are a problem?

A: We have conclusively proved the need for the East-West highway from the traffic studies that have been conducted. The intention never was to build highways and not do anything else at all. We have divided the highway into 2–3 sections, and with the phased implementation you would have the provision of housing, you would have infrastructural development in the township itself, you would have had extensions to the water supply system.

Q: In a situation where there are limited funds, how does one decide that such a highway is more of a priority than other things?

A: Well, usually, things like an extension to the water supply scheme or sewage plant system dictate their own priority. Housing dictates itself as becoming a top priority, unless you start getting extreme congestion, which we don't have as yet.

When you build a road, it looks lavish, because it must at least still be valid for the period you are repaying the loan. Obviously its underutilised and the utilisation builds up until it is fully utilised in 20 years time. You're not now going to build a house you need in 20 years time. Housing can be augmented as the need arises, while a road has to be built in its final form.

Q: You would say then that in Windhoek's case, there is enough housing so that one can afford to build a road, in spite of the fact that "housing dictates its own priority", as you said?

A: We can afford to rapay the loan. The financing of housing is a little different from the financing of a road. We build houses for people and they then undertake the responsibility to repay the loan, because that individual is in the first instance responsible for the roof over his head.

Whereas the Government realises the need for an efficient transportation system in the cities so they give us 1 percent loans redeemable over 40 years, in other words there is a heavy subsidy element.

If you had very limited funds, you would obviously give priority to housing, but a city's a balanced thing, you also cannot just continue building houses and houses and houses. You obviously reach a stage where housing could be acute but there is a terrific shortage of clinics or some other service. Its coming up in Khomasdal now. If we continue extending Khomasdal and you've got no access to it, it becomes ridiculous: you can't have a huge township and you've got to use footpaths in the veld and walk to town.

CSO: 4700/986

BUSH COULD BE USED TO PRODUCE METHANOL

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 19 Mar 82 pp 12, 13, 16

[Article by David Pieters]

[Text]

IF NECESSITY is the mother of invention, Outjo's Town Clerk Mr I G Lemmer should be credited as one of the country's most ingenious 'inventors' of ideas on local economic development.

According to Mr Lemmer, the stretch of land between Outjo in the west and Grootfontein in the east measuring 100 by 50 kms, could "easily supply one quarter of the country's total population with its accommodation, employment and food requirements, in a couple of years. How?

By transforming a common pestilence to the public and a scourge to farmers into one of Namibia's potentially valuable economic assets — the conversion of millions of tons of bush into methanol and other by-products!

The thought at first does not seem to be so striking at all, but reading through Mr Lemmer's seven-page memorandum one realises that considerable homework has gone into the idea.

The idea was submitted by Mr Lemmer to the Etosha Regional Development Advisory Committee of the White Administration last year in February where it received the necessary attention.

Findings of the CSIR and other bodies including one in the US that ethanol and methanol can be economically produced from wood have so far supported the idea, but further research is necessary to determine, inter alia, the degree to which the Territory's bushes and trees lend themselves to the process.

Exactly where the project is at this stage in its shuttle through the corridor, is not known, but eventually, the State carries the responsibility for seeing that the project's potential is either fully materialised or debunked.

Mr Lemmer estimates that R40m in capital outlay would be the minimum to erect one factory plant in the near north of the country.

The initial groundwork in an underdeveloped country such as ours only the State can carry, but eventually, it is up to some individual or consortium of investors who are going to have to put their money down.

Let's take a look at the idea, presented by Mr Lemmer.

Virtually the whole north of the country is plagued by bush encroachment, about which much has been reported in the local media.

Bush encroachment is an early stage of desertification and consists in the extensive replacement of former healthy grazing pasture into bushy terrain, with a 50 percent loss of grazing capacity on the land surface. This is the degree to which it has developed in the near north.

The causes of bush encroachment include overgrazing due to the holding of excessive stock on farms with a given carrying capacity, which leads to the destruction of the soil cover, and with the passing of successive droughts, the emergence of a cover of bushes which are better adapted to survive in these particular ecological conditions of desertification.

It is therefore a self-destructive erosion of valuable natural resources needed to support an agricultural economy, now in steady decline for some years.

Some 50 years ago when most of the country was divided up into farms, the land was mainly covered by large open grassy plains with scattered trees and shrubs. Today, some 250 000 square kms are covered by trees and bushes, mainly thorny shrubs, constituting roughly a 50 percent reduction in grazing capacity which took place over the past 30 years.

The most effective method against bush encroachment used so far is spraying from the air which averages R20 per hectare, or totalling R100 000 for a 5 000 ha farmland.

ASTRONOMICAL

Even if half of the farming area in the districts of Otavi, Outjo, Otjiwarongo, Grootfontein and Tsumeb comprising about 3 000 farms should be sprayed, it would amount to an astronomical R1b.

Neither the Government nor the farming community can afford such an astronomical amount. Even if they are subsidised by 50 percent on the costs of spraying their farms, neither party could afford it.

Even if such a project is undertaken, the entire process will repeat itself within the next 30 years under present conditions.

On the other hand if small areas only are debushed, the gained ground will be promptly lost at the next drought.

This brings one to the conclusion that bush encroachment should be regarded as a permanent condition into which agriculture has landed and is to be accommodated only by changed agricultural methods and patterns.

With shrinking margins of return on expenditure the order of the day, the way out for agriculture is also not to be found in replacing herds with superior breeds, for the latter will not compensate for the farmer on the long run.

This leads one to the conclusion that the bush and shrub should be transformed into an asset, instead of atempting constantly to eradicate it at great expense.

Trees, bushes and shrubs can be viewed as natural factories converting solar energy into products potentially useful to man and beast. Furthermore, they are a constant asset because they regenerate naturally. As a source of energy, natural vegetation cannot be depleted as in the case of natural coal or oil deposits.

Excellent results from tests on processing methanol from waste wood at pine plantations in SA have been achieved. An advantage of such processing plants is that they require far less capital outlay than in the case of enormous plants such as at Sasol..

This means, that several smaller less expensive plants can be erected over a large geographical area, which is perfect for the situation in the Territory.

In addition this means that smaller plants on an experimental scale can already be erected at an early stage in the overall project.

Even if the wood quality in Namibia is not as suitable for fuel extraction as in the case of other types outside the Territory, Mr Lemmer goes on to point out all the added advantages of such a project – advantages which in social and economic terms far outweigh the technical drawbacks stemming from wood quality.

The project will provide employment to hundreds of unskilled workers in a short period of time. These will be used for example to chop out bushes and trees by hand and to transport the loads to the collecting points. As the project grows over the years and spin-off industries develope, employment for thousands more unskilled workers will be created and for many skilled workers too.

The advantages of such a project still hold, in the face of possible State subsidy, should the project be shown to operate at a loss, since the social costs of unemployment of thousands of people still have to be borne by the State in the end.

This approach beats the eradication of millions of tons of bush at great cost and without lasting results.

Of course, the process would clear huge areas of grazing at present lost to stock farming. The savings from not spraying the bushes represents in itself a capital amount sufficient to finance the erection of processing factories for the manufacture of fuel.

STRONGER REGROWTH

Another spin off to the farmer is that the chopped bushes and shrubs cleared at a slower rate, will promote the stronger regrowth of grass as it establishes itself in the place of eradicated vegetation. The quality of new pasture will therefore be improved.

Also, the roots of remaining vegetation not completely removed gives off shoots during rainy season which is specially liked by animals and presents additional nutriment, with resultant increases in meat yields.

There are many more advantages to the farmer. By being able to supplement their income from the sale of eradicated vegetation, they are also less dependent on income from meat production which means that the stocking load on the land can be relaxed with subsequent ecological advantages.

A larger agricultural labour force at the same time constitutes an expanded home market for farmers own products such as meat, milk and vegetables.

At the same time the eradication of worthless shrub will release more land and precipitation for the growth of useful wood species for the local manufacture of furniture. The overall productivity of the farming sector will rise, enabling more people to occupy the countryside on an economic basis. In turn this will lead to expanded capital formation as the value of land rises.

INDEPENDECE

There is also the advantage of a greater degree of independence of Namibia in terms of its fuel requirements, with consequent savings in foreign exchange.

The bushes and shrubs are precisely tuned in to the low rainfall and other climatic conditions and will regenerate as they are removed, in that way forming an inexhaustible asset. Large areas of the north of the Territory are suitable for cropping in certain grains and other products, in terms of precipitation and earth types, Mr Lemmer argues. The only reasons why crops such as sunflower seed and certain grains have not been developed to their full potential are:

- A lack of expertise amongst traditional stock farmers;
- High costs of clearing ground of bushes and shrubs;
- High costs of machinery, fuel and spares;
- A lack in technical expertise as well as specialised agricultural information on various crop species;
- A lack of trained tractor operators who can minimise maintenance costs, as well as a shortage of a servicing infrastucture for agricultural machinery.

The entire bush removal project for fuel conversion meshes with the development parameters of a cropping sector in the near north of the Territory.

The removal of bushes, the mobilisation of additional agricultural labour in the region, the provision of vehicles and other machinery used in the bush-to-fuel project – all these factors could become a sort of 'bonus' for the development of cropping on a larger scale in the region-reducing the massive capital outlays that would normally be required of farmers wanting to diversify their production.

The problem will in a way be 'automatically' solved with the provision technical input in the form of transport, tools and service maintenance facilities needed for bush removal, be rendered available for new agricultural processes.

Especially the use of tractors for transporting bushes and the improved performance of drivers, will then spin off into new directions.

HEALTHY

Mr Lemmer argues convicingly that such a strategy for infrastructural development in the near north's agricultural sector is a 'healthy' one in that it is not artificially induced.

Normally the State tries to stimulate economic growth by implanting an infrastructural network into an undeveloped region, at great cost, which has to be carried during the initial unproductive period while new economic activities get off the ground.

In this case the development of an infrastructure goes apace with the emergence of a new industry, namely productive land-clearing coupled to fuel conversion. The costs of the infrastructural network in the region are therefore borne from the start, partly out of revenue generated.

The agricultural diversification of the near north also means the emergence of a decentralised economic sector, with its added advantages to the countryside in terms of social services in the form of schools, commercial activity, hospitals and housing.

The project will bring work to the rurally underemployed labour force rather than driving the unemployed into the towns as at present.

But, we are far from the end of the self-driven development project that Mr Lemmer has in mind.

ADDITIONAL ADVANTAGES

Since not all wood cleared from the veld is suitable for fuel extraction, other products can also be maufactured, with additional advantages to the whole enterprise.

The manufacture of charcoal is cheap and potentially very useful, not only as a commodity for sale to final consumers but as an energy source for the fuel conversion and agricultural cropping schemes as well.

Since transport is an important element in the process of extracting fuel from wood, charcoal could be used to combust small steam-driven trains transporting the raw material to the fuel extracting plants. The same charcoal could also be used to burn the boilers in the processing plants themselves, with added savings on imported fuel.

Charcoal is itself light, therefore easily transportable, and burns slowly with a high heat.

The spraying of large areas of land with poison to eradicate bush, would also destroy many potentially useful trees whose wood could be used in the manufacture of furniture and other products such as packing crates.

Mr Lemmer concludes his memorandum with a suggestion as to the most suitable location of the scheme.

He suggests that at least three fuel conversion plants can eventually be erected at Grootfontein, Otavi and Outjo.

The area affected with bush encroachment lies in the belt of land 100 kms wide and 300 kms long between Outjo and Grootfontein, straddling the dolomite belt running through the area.

Due to local climatic conditions, the largest variety of bush and wood types is also found here, with a faster growth rate of the bushes presently strangling pasture for livestock.

CENTRAL

The area is centrally situated between Owambo, Hereroland, Kaokoveld and Damaraland, where the largest concentrations of surplus underemployed labour is to be found.

The dolomite range is well endowed with underground water and additional supplies can eventually be drawn from the Kunene and adjacent river courses such as the Ugab.

The electric power line from Ruacana to Windhoek runs through this area, with the possibility of being tapped at several points.

The area is further also reasonably well-endowed with roads and communications systems.

The development of the entire area would also pave the way for opening mineral reserves in the area, such as coal and possibly tin.

The project potential has been presented by Mr Lemmer and has reached the Planning Department of the White Administration from where it has to go to the Central Government.

CSO: 4700/986

IMPACT OF WORLD ECONOMIC PROBLEMS FELT

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 10 Feb 82 p 1

[Editorial: "The Continuing Crisis"]

[Text] President Reagan's announcement of the United States' budget for fiscal year 1983 (which begins in October) rudely reminded international opinion that chances of seeing the international crisis of capitalism diminish are practically nil.

Actually, the American budget is based on an overwhelming increase in military spending (up 20 percent). In other words, hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars will be spent on an unproductive sector.

The American budget also shows a record deficit of several tens of millions of dollars and the elimination of several social programs.

This antisocial policy will cause discontent in the United States itself.

In order to carry it out, the United States will need capital and everything would seem to indicate that American interest rates (the highest in the world) will go even higher in order to attract money to the United States. At the same time, the dollar is expected to go up.

This prospect has already brought about the reaction of countries in the European Economic Community and Japan because by attracting capital, the American policy risks endangering recovery in Europe and Japan. Imports from those countries in dollars (particularly oil) could go even higher and the inflationary movement will accelerate.

Furthermore, Japan, like the EEC countries, are also experiencing a crisis whose outcome cannot be foreseen. The latest figures from the OECD show that unemployment is growing steadily worse. For the time being, those countries are trying to find a common response to the American economic policy and the general crisis affecting them.

These are the constant factors in the situation of the capitalist countries.

What will the effects on Reunion be?

These (serious) effects are obvious when one realizes that our country imports practically everything it consumes from the highly industrialized countries, from cars to home appliances, industrial products, oil and more and more food products.

This means that we will suffer the harmful effects of the international economic and monetary crisis directly, by importing inflation.

At a time when there is talk of relations between our country and Europe (and of their necessary redefinition), we must not forget this factor in the crisis.

That is why those who neglect Reunionese production, its protection first and its development later, bear heavy responsibility for the future of the country.

We must not be afraid of thinking now about developing our production and about its protection.

That development must have Reunion's self-sufficiency in food as its top priority.

11,464
CSO: 4719/646

SLOW RATE OF REGISTRATION ON VOTING LISTS NOTED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 25 Feb 82 p 4

[Article by Momar Seyni Ndiaye: "Low Rate of Participation"]

[Excerpt] Will the date of 31 March initially chosen as the closing of election registration be postponed? This question generates great concern because of the low rate of registration and because of the motivations behind this poor participation. And yet, the stakes are great and there is a whole host of political groups engaged in the battle to gain power. Nothing can justify the date of 5 February when only some 54,000 Senegalese have registered throughout all the regions of the country. Nevertheless, on an exceptional basis and considering the broadening of the national political arena, the legal period for registration has been extended from 45 to 105 days.

On 10 February, the minister of interior called together all regional governors and the departments of his ministry to examine the situation of the special revision of the election lists. His observation is categorical: "The delay mainly results from the failure of the political parties, whose members are inadequately informed by their leaders and consequently do not pay proper heed to the revision." The political groupings, particularly of the opposition, which mainly have their sights on revision of the election code, regret and deplore the little publicity given to this event of exceptional importance from every standpoint.

Actually, the reasons for the delay are many. The task of informing the public not only belongs to the government, but to a great extent, to the political parties. The government guarantees a correct and consistent registration and conduct of the voting itself. The interest which political parties should find in an election depends on their political ambitions. If, as in the developed countries, the government must take a whole arsenal of measures for publicity purposes and hold round tables in all languages in order to emphasize the obligation to vote, the parties, for their part, should create the conditions for such awareness through meetings and their liaison organs.

One must also admit that in the field, the administrative committees have encountered many difficulties in carrying out the registration. These difficulties are all the more perceptible in the traveling committees that must visit all the rural communities. They do not have all the material and financial conditions needed to function normally. The 40 million which the government must make available to all the governorships to cover operating expenses arrived at their destination only last week, probably because of the slowness of the procedure. A few committees did nevertheless work thanks to the budget of local prefectures while awaiting the government subsidies. Others were not able to do so, lacking financial means.

The absenteeism of committee members -- in principle, committees contain representatives of all groups -- and the obstacles (failure to deliver permits) greatly affected the operation of the committees. In addition, there were rivalries stemming from partisan circumstances, which also reflect on the registration work. It therefore appears to be necessary for the groups to adopt a kind of modus vivendi based on mutual trust and a spirit of tolerance. During this period of election fever, these qualities do not come out of nowhere, but they are necessary, if not indispensable, in order to carry out the task in keeping with the proper standards. Other obstacles, these technical, may also explain the delays. They are essentially linked to the legal papers of the potential voters. Many voters do not have the proper documents required by law in order to register. Others are totally uninformed and know nothing at all about the steps to follow or the legal conditions required.

Nor is the elimination of deceased persons from the old lists without problems. It is done so slowly that it gives rise to concern and suspicion. For example, for the period from 15 November to 5 February, only 265 names were taken off in Cape Verde and 223 other modifications made for the same region. This seems to be totally inadmissible. This can be seen better when one realizes that the total eliminations and other modifications are less than 15,000, 14,777, to be precise. The delay is obvious. It is to be hoped that the funds made available to the administrative committees will help speed up the work. The Ministry of Interior has taken all proper measures.

All things considered, it is easy to see that this participation is appallingly low. According to certain indications from the Ministry of Interior, registrations total 792 a day, on a national average. In order to reach a total voting public of some 2 million, compared with 1,556,250 for 1978, this rate of participation should be 3,000 a day. We are very far from that. Even if we cannot make a comparison with registrations during the same period in 1978, one can say that participation is at least disappointing, essentially because of what is at stake and because of the extension of the legal time period. That judgment must undoubtedly be tempered, alleging the poor publicity given to the event as the main cause of the relative lethargy.

During this exceptional period of election revisions, expectations (in the majority and the opposition both) are mainly concentrated on modifications in the election code. That is not a bad thing; on the contrary. But modification of the code must not -- and this seems to be the case -- get in the way of registration. We must not ignore that the type of voting in the future code affects political groups in more than one way. The vast majority of the opposition is demanding proportional voting. This system has the advantage of preserving the election chances of all groups and of reflecting a "certain election justice." In principle, the Supreme Court must begin its study of legislation on modifications in the new code by the end of this week.

11,464
CSO: 4719/642

SEMINAR HELD TO DISCUSS NESP, CCM ELECTORAL PROCEDURES, GUIDELINES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text] POOR agricultural production in some villagers along the coastal belt has been attributed to apathy towards farmwork, by "lords" (mamwinyi) and their families.

A delegate to the Kinondoni District Party Executive Committee said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that village chairmen and other leaders were virtually powerless against the "mamwinyi" who wielded tremendous influence.

He was addressing members of the Committee during their two-day seminar which opened at the Urafiki Hall in Dar es Salaam yesterday to discuss the National Economic Survival Programme (NESP), the Party Constitution amendments, CCM electoral procedures and the 1981 Party Guidelines.

Speaking at the same seminar, the Minister for Planning and Economic Affairs, Professor Kighoma Malima, and the Dar es Salaam Regional Party Secretary, Ndugu Ibrahim Kajembo, told the village leaders not to cower before the 'mamwinyi' and never to let them frustrate village farm work.

Village leaders should be harsh to individuals who posed as bottlenecks to the implementation of agreed plans, Ndugu Kajembo said.

Ndugu Malima said that experience of peasants with practical knowledge of irrigation methods should be utilised throughout the country in order to raise the production of both food and cash crops.

Food and cash crops were vital for the country's economic survival and, in view of faulty rains over the years, irrigation agriculture was the solution towards producing more, he explained.

There was a tendency by some government leaders to ignore peasants who had experience in traditional irrigation methods merely because they (the peasants) did not possess paper qualification, the Minister noted.

The peasants' experience should be sought, he added.

Ndugu Malima, who was speaking on the NESP, said Tanzania should produce more crops through irrigation farming while growing more drought-resistant crops.

He said Tanzania had imported food worth thousands shillings over the years because of a shortfall in domestic production.

Ndugu Malima explained that Tanzania's current economic difficulties were caused by some factors beyond the country's control, but other factors, he said, were within the country's ability.

Among problems within the country's ability is the fall in production of primary commodities which are the country's major foreign exchange earner.

Cashewnuts production had fallen from 145,000 tonnes in 1973 to 60,000 tonnes today; and sisal from 180,000 tonnes to between 90,000 and 100,000 tonnes now.

The country launched the NESP in order to realise more foreign exchange through the export of crops and other manufactured goods, the Minister explained.

During discussions on Ndugu Malima's speech, a delegate felt that NESP would only be successful if the targets set for each institution were followed up.

Ndugu Kajembo said villages in Kinondoni District had not met their targets set for agricultural work and leaders should urge them to work harder.

CSO: 4700/991

RATES FOR VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS BY CCM MEMBERS BEING PRINTED

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 9 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Boniface Byarugaba]

[Text] SCHEDULE of rates to govern voluntary contributions to be made by CCM members in order to meet the rising costs of running the Party are being printed in readiness for distribution to the regions.

The Party Chief Executive Secretary, Ndugu Daudi Mwakawago, said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the headquarters completed formulation of the rates last month and that printing was underway. The schedule will appear in a booklet form to be found in all Party branch offices.

Ndugu Mwakawago said only CCM members employed by the Party and mass organisations start paying their contributions effective this month. Workers and peasants were not covered at the moment, he said, adding that the effective dates would be announced after the schedules had been distributed throughout the country.

He said the contribution was a voluntary one and stressed that it was not "some kind of a tax on a member". However, the contribution was an obligation of "every true Party member" as required by paragraph 166 of the CCM Guidelines.

The contributions, too, had nothing to do with one's employment. The onus of declaring the income rests on the member.

The contributions were voluntary in that members joined the Party voluntarily, he added.

The National Executive Committee (NEC), Ndugu Mwakawago said, made a final ruling on the issue and fixed the rates. "What we are now after is smooth implementation of this ruling binding every CCM member".

He said non-members were not expected to pay such contributions and appealed to all Party leaders from branch to regional level to explain the issue very clearly to the people.

The Party, he said, expected that people would not be coerced over the issue. "The Party does not look forward to tales of harassment or coercion but of political work", he said.

Category "A" embraces people required to pay 0.5 per cent for those earning between 10/- a month (or 120/- a year) to 1,000/- a month (12,000/- a year).

For example a person earning 10/- a month will pay 60 cents a year while that one getting 250/- a month will pay 15/-. A member earning 500/- a month will pay 30/- a year and that one of 670/- will pay 40/20, with that earning 1,000/- a month paying 60/- a year.

category "B" embraces those earning between 1,010/- and 2,500/- a month in this case the former will pay 121/20 annually and the latter 300/-. They are required to pay one per cent of their income.

Category "C" covers those earning betwene 2,510/- and 3,600/- monthly who will pay 2 per cent of their income.

Category "D" covers members earning 3,610/- and 4,500/- a month, in which case the former will pay 1,083/- a year and the latter will pay 1,350/-, which is 2.5 per cent of their income.

A member getting above 4,510/- a month will pay three per cent of his income.

Ndugu Mwakawago said Party members only have to tell the Party branch secretaries how much they earn and the secretaries will then use the tables to know how much one was required to contribute.

CSO: 4700/991

TAWATA FORMED, ISSUES DRAFT CONSTITUTION

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Kassim Mpenda]

[Text] A Tanzania Association of World Affairs (TAWA) has been established to act as a forum for public discussion of international issues relevant to Tanzania, Africa and the Third World.

The Association was formed in Dar es Salaam yesterday in response to a recommendation of a seminar on "Tanzania in International Relations 1961-1981" held in Arusha in May last year.

The seminar was sponsored by the Tanzania-Mozambique Centre for Foreign Relations which was assigned the task of co-ordinating the establishment of the Association.

According to its draft constitution, the Association will:

- Reflect public opinion, analyse and comment on world affairs independent of Party or Government decision;
- Encourage research in international issues of relevance to Tanzania, Africa and the Third World;
- Publish a world affairs journal with a view to fostering public discussion of world affairs and their relevance to Tanzania; and
- Make contacts and exchange views with similar international associations and institutions throughout the world.

The 30-plus founder members, most of whom attended last year's Arusha seminar, include Members of Parliament, lecturers from the Centre for Foreign Relations, the University of Dar es Salaam, and the Tanzania School of Journalism, and officials from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Tanzania News Agency (SHIHATA), and the government-owned newspapers, Daily News and Sunday News.

Yesterday's meeting, hosted by the Centre for Foreign Relations, elected the MP for Hai, Ndugu I. Elinewinga, provisional chairman, and the Centre's Director, Ndugu O.H. Tesha, Secretary of the Association.

The Association's Draft Constitution says that only Tanzanians will qualify for full membership of the Association.

CSO: 4700/991

TSN ASKED TO REDUCE ENGLISH-LANGUAGE PAPERS' CIRCULATION FURTHER

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 9 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

ON ACCOUNT of shortages of newsprint, Printpak (Tanzania) Limited — printers of the Daily News and Sunday News — have asked the Tanganyika Standard Newspapers (TSN) Limited to further cut down on the circulation of the national English papers.

Effective March 3, 1982 the publishers have been distributing only 20,000 copies of the Daily News, an amount well below the normal requirement for Dar es Salaam which stand at about 22,000 copies.

Last year, the Daily News and Sunday News were slashed down to 35,000 copies each as against a run of 50,000 and 60,000 for the two papers respectively.

According to Printpak, the problem stems from the acute shortage of foreign exchange which has made the printers fail to import newsprint and other vital materials.

The Minister for Industries, Ndugu Basil Mramba last week assured the Daily News that everything was being done to get emergency supplies of newsprint.

Ndugu Mramba, whose ministry is responsible for the printing industry, said newsprint inquiries made in such countries as Kenya, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe have yielded no positive results.

However, it is understood that newsprint supplies are being ordered from Sweden and the earliest consignment is expected in the country by mid-April.

CSO: 4700/991

CWF TO FINANCE SWAHILI TRANSLATION OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE GUIDE BOOKS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 9 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] THE Canadian Wildlife Confederation (CWF) has launched a fund-raising campaign in Canada to finance translation into Kiswahili of Tanzanian national parks guide books and literature written in English.

The leader of an eight-member group from a Canadian Association of Friends of National Museum of Natural Sciencies, Dr. Louis Lemieux, said in Dar es Salaam over the weekend that some 170,000/- (25,000 Canadian dollars) had been collected under the campaign.

Speaking at a reception organised by the Canadian High Commissioner to Tanzania, Ndugu Karl Johansen, Dr. Lemieux, who is also CWF Vice-President, said they expected to raise about 680,000/- (100,000 Canadian dollars).

Ndugu Johansen said the translation work, to be done in the country, had started with the guide to Arusha National Park. Other books earmarked for the project are on Serengeti, Mikumi, Manyara, Ruaha, Tarangire, national parks and the Ngorongoro Crater.

Ndugu Johansen said his government would meet the printing costs for two books on Tanzania's wildlife. One of these would be in Kiswahili by the Chairman of the Wildlife Board of Trustees, Chief Adam Sapi Mkwawa, he said.

Chief Sapi commended Canadian assistance in the wildlife sector which he said started soon after independence. It covers technical, equipment and research facilities.

In a statement read on his behalf by the Director of Wildlife, Ndugu Fred Lwezaula, Chief Sapi also hailed Ndugu Johansen who, he explained, initiated the assistance — including the translation of wildlife literature.

The Canadian group presented Chief Sapi with an honorary membership of the CWF and a reproduction of a painted picture of an elephant by Canadian artist Robert Mateman.

The group which also visited Zanzibar left yesterday for Arusha, Tarangire, Serengeti and Ngorongoro national parks.

CSO: 4700/991

GOVERNMENT REVIEWING INDUSTRIAL SAFETY LAWS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 6 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] The Government is reviewing the industrial laws related to safety of industrial workers to include provisions governing maintenance of healthy working conditions not provided under the current regulations.

A statement issued by the Ministry of Labour and social Welfare in Dar es Salaam yesterday observed that environmental pollution by some physical, chemical and biological means were not covered by existing laws.

It cited the use of X-Rays and ionising radiations as being harmful to workers but added that their application at industrial sites was not controlled by law.

The statement said deaths caused by industrial accidents decreased from 98 in 1979 to 85 the following year. It showed, however, that 1,644 workers were incapacitated in 1980 compared to 1,547 the previous year.

Some 2,250 people were variably wounded in 3,904 accidents in 1979 with the figures falling to 1,664 and 3,383, respectively, the next year, the statement explained.

It said a total of 6.48 million/- was paid out in compensation to families of the deceased and the other accident victims in 1979. Some 8.64 million/- was compensated the following year.

The statement said industrial workers should demand safety measures at all work places through the Union of Tanzania Workers (JUWATA) or CCM branches where the former had not been established.

"If both institutions do not exist at a place of work, the workers should petition to the Chief Inspector of Industries or regional industrial inspectors," it urged.

It explained that 60 per cent of the industrial accidents were caused by the fall of persons or objects, stepping over or striking against objects and miscellaneous reasons.

Other factors were means of transport--18 per cent; use of hand tools--15 per cent; and machinery--seven per cent.

The statement said the Ministry should increase the number of trained industrial inspectors and provide them with improved working facilities as further measures to check the increase of industrial accidents.

CSO: 4700/991

GENERATORS IMPORTED IN 1978 LIE IDLE IN PEMBA

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 6 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpt]

GENERATORS imported in 1978 for an electric power plant at Wesha, near Chake Chake in Pemba, have been lying idle because the contractors allegedly failed to complete civil works in time, the Zanzibar Ministerf for Water, Energy and Minerals, Ndugu Soud Yusuf Mgeni, said this week.

As a result, work on the project which would end the chronic power problems on Pemba Island, had been delayed considerably, the Minister told President Nyerere who laid the foundation stone of the project on Thursday morning.

Ndugu Mgeni said that all works at the project were originally expected to be completed by March last year but the installation of the first generator set would start in May this year.

The agreement for construction of the generator building was signed on September 14, 1979 with MS Goerge Boorer of Dar es Salaam.

Ndugu Mgeni said that delays by the contractor, lack of building materials and transport problems affected work on the project which is expected to cost a total of 75,021,634/-.

Some 31,021,634/- of the sum was foreign exchange spent on the three generators for the plant and the balance was for civil works. Civil works include the generator house, workshop, offices and 10 staff houses.

The three generators will have capacity for 1,500 kilowatts each, thus masking an aggregate capacity of 4,500 kilowatts for the plant.

He said the generator house had enough room for the installation of three more generators as demand arose.

The Wesha project is the result of co-operation between the Tanzania electric Supply Company (TANESCO) and the Zanzibar State Fuel and Power Corporation (ZSFPC).

CSO: 4700/991

FINNISH FEASIBILITY STUDIES ON RUVU VALLEY RESOURCES COMPLETED

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 6 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] FEASILITIBY studies on the potentiality of forests and fisheries resources along the Lower Ruvu River Valley conducted by a Finish firm Jaakko Poyry Consulting Engineers and Atkins Land and Water Management Consultants of Britain respectively, have been completed, it has been learnt.

The two foreign consulting firms were commissioned by the Rufiji Basin Development Authority (RUBADA) two years ago to explore the impact of the construction of the multi-purpose Stiegler's Gorge Dam on various natural resources around it.

Briefing Shihata on the reports by the two firms, a senior ecologist with RUBADA, Ndugu Raphael Mwalyosi, said before the construction of the dam, the Authority wanted to know whether the dam could, on completion, affect the well-being of other natural resources around it.

He said apart from dwelling on problems which could be brought about by the construction of the dam, the reports which are presently being studied by the Authority also explored the best economic methods of exploiting the surrounding natural resources.

Ndugu Mwalyosi noted that feasibility studies conducted by the Finish firm on forest resources have indicated that two major areas around Chalinze and Utete had "very high tree density which was blended by various tree species of high commercial importance." He cited the species as "Mtondo, Miyombo, Mninga and Mkongo.

He said the Utete area was capable of producing between 4,000 and 8,000 cubic metres of timber per annum while that around Chalinze could produce between 3,000 and 4,000 cubic metres of timber annually.

He explained that if two saw mills were installed in the two areas, the country would be able to earn 16-million/- annually from timber business.

He pointed out that according to the studies on forests, the resources are completely independent of the dam in that "they (forests) can not in any way be affected by the dam."

On fisheries resources, he said the potential, especially after the construction of the dam, was very high. He explained that the annual catch would range between 2,500 and 5,500 tonnes per annum.

"However, after one or two years after the construction of the dam, the peak catch would hit the 19,000 tonnes, mark," he said.

He said the area abounds with various delicisous species which he cited as citharinus (Pele), sarotherodon urolepis (Perege) and labeo. He observed that the best methods of exploiting fisheries resources in the area, which had been recommended by Atkins, was known as "regulated fishery with improved artisanal fishing."

Ndugu Mwalyosi said the Authority had endorsed the fishing method because, apart from involving local fishermen on co-operative basis, it had 156.4 rate of return which was capable of fetching 1,798,008/- per annum.

He said the method, however, entailed the improvement of the fishermen's fishing gears and methods which he said left much to be desired.

Ndugu Mwalyosi noted that feasibility studies on the potentiality of agriculture in the area which is being conducted by a Federal Republic of Germany consultancy firm, Agrar Und Hydrotechnic GMBH (AHT), was yet to be completed.

CSO: 4700/991

MBEYA MEAT PLANT CONTRACTORS DEMAND ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 6 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

HEM Singh Contractors, builders of the proposed Mbeya meat packing plant, are demanding an extra 23 million/- before they can go ahead with the work.

The contractors demand the extra amount so that they can meet the latest salary increases for their workers and the rising cost of building materials.

However, the Executive Chairman of the Livestock Development Authority (LIDA) Ndugu Alphonce Rulegura, stressed that the Authority would not pay any extra cent to Hem Singh as claimed. "We will only pay them the remaining 10 million/-," he said.

Ndugu Rulegura said in Shinyanga Thursday that so far, LIDA had paid the company 32,560,000/- out of the required 42 million/-.

He was briefing the visiting Parliamentary Finance and Economic Committee on the progress of construction of meat plants at Mbeya, Dar es Salaam and Shinyanga.

He said the Mbeya plant's machinery, whose construction is four years behind schedule, cost 16 million/-, Shihata reported.

He said the case had now been forwarded to the Government and the Tanzania Legal Corporation for solution.

Hem Singh are also constructors of the Kawe meat plant in Dar es Salaam and the one at Shinyanga.

The company has completed about 98 per cent of the work at Kawe, and 82 and 90 per cent for those at Shinyanga and Mbeya respectively.

The Executive Chairman, however, conceded that the delay in constructing the meat plants had, somehow, been caused by LIDA who unilaterally decided to handle the transportation of the plants' machinery themselves against the contract.

In the process some of the machines got broken and other components were lost, which now leaves for the parts to be ordered from abroad.

Ndugu Rulegura said that LIDA was also not making close supervision on the projects and that it had effected payment without knowing the progress of work done.

CSO: 4700/991

LOCAL EXPORTERS GIVEN REBATE PAYMENT FOR MEETING EXPORT TARGETS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 9 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text] SIXTEEN local exporters were yesterday awarded a total rebate payment of 5.56 million shillings in cheques for realising their export targets for the July-September 1981 period.

The award was made by the Minister for Trade, Ndugu Ali Mchumo, at a ceremony held at the headquarters of the Board of External Trade along Umoja wa Wanawake Street.

The firms that received the rebates are Amboni Plastics, ALUCO Division of Aluminium Africa, Friendship Textile Mills, General Tyre (East Africa) Limited, Kioo Limited, Morogoro Tanneries, Matsushita Electric and Mwanza Tanneries.

Others are PIPECO Division of Aluminium Africa, STEELCO Division of Aluminium Africa, Tanganyika Industrial Corporation, Tanganyika Instant Coffee Limited, Tanganyika Pyrethrum Board, Tanzania Cigarette Company, Tanzania Cordage Limited and the Usambara Spinning Company.

The 16 firms had exported manufactured and horticultural goods with a total value of 68m/- between July and September last year.

Under the rebate scheme which is part of a comprehensive national export promotion launched in July last year, exporters are given cash compensation to customs duty on raw materials imported to manufacture export goods after the goods have been sold and the money has reached the country.

Ndugu Mchumo said BET was processing rebate claims covering October to December last year, adding that about 60 exporters had submitted their eligibility applications for consideration under the scheme.

He said final touches were being put to the other components of the export promotion programme so that they could be implemented too. These are export guarantee credit, trade facilitation by simplifying current export formalities and priority in allocation of foreign exchange to exporters and awarding of certificates to best exporters.

Ndugu Mchumo said he was glad some of the exporters awarded the rebate had realised more than fifty per cent of their export targets.

The minister hoped that the implementation of the 1982 National Economic Survival Programme (NESP), which has an overall target of 8.131 billion/-, would witness a bigger realisation of the export targets of the various sectors and individual industries.

During discussions after the presentation, some of the exporters asked the Government to do something about pilfering at the Dar es Salaam and Kigoma ports.

They also urged efforts to end the present shortage of vehicle tyres in the country.

The General Manager of General Tyre (East Africa) Limited, Mr. A. Cran, told the Minister that the Arusha-based factory was producing enough to meet the demand in the country but that the tyres were not readily found apparently due to smuggling and hoarding.

CSO: 4700/991

SEMINAR FOR SHIPPING MANAGERS, REPRESENTATIVES HELD IN ZANZIBAR

Mapunda's Paper

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Abdullah Yakuti]

[Text] A PAPER on socialist management leadership in Tanzania presented at the on-going shipping managers' seminar here yesterday sparked off a lively debate, with some participants blaming low productivity in the public sector to "too much interference" of workers in the management of public enterprises.

Some participants charged that the concept of workers' participation had "given too much authority" to workers rather than the trained and competent managers in making decisions affecting productivity and economic well-being of most parastatals in the country.

They further claimed that this had made things difficult for managers, more so in matters pertaining to close supervision and work discipline, the result being low productivity and gross mismanagement of working tools and stores.

"Workers' participation and employment laws have butressed the security of workers to the extent that they can indulge in mischief with impunity", a participant observed.

The managers also pointed at the acute shortage of raw materials, spare parts and the necessary infrastructure as bottlenecks hampering production.

But some participants observed that workers' participation as practised in Tanzania was inadequate and had in fact made a mockery of the concept itself.

They argued that rather than workers in Tanzania having a final say in the setting and supervision of production targets, it was the managements which made all decisions because they formed more than half of the workers' councils.

They said absenteeism, laziness and theft in work places was due to poor supervision and monitoring and that these had nothing to do with workers' participation.

The paper presented by Ndugu Gisler Mapunda said that nearly 50 per cent of the parastatals in Tanzania work under capacity, and some of them had accumulated record losses.

He, however, said that lack of basic production requirements has partly worsened the problem: but pointed out that poor management was the main cause of low productivity.

He called on business enterprises in the country to abandon capitalist management styles and adopt socialist management leadership which he said helps to tap resourcefulness of ideas and initiative from the workers and generate commitment from the work-force.

The eleven-day seminar was opened on Monday by a member of the Party Central Committee, Ndugu Thabit Kombo. It is being attended by representatives from the Zanzibar Shipping Company, the National Shipping Agencies Company (NASACO), The Tanzania Harbours Authority, National Institute of Productivity, SCOPO, Ministry of Communications and Transport and representatives from the Overseas Container Limited.

Reduction in Shipping Costs Required

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Mar 82 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] SHIPPING has very close links with Tanzania's economic development. The bulk of the country's exports, mainly primary commodities, reach the markets by cargo ships. The same ships bring in most of the required imports.

Tanzanian seaports are also important for the economies of the neighbouring landlocked countries such as Zambia, Rwanda, Burundi and eastern Zaire. These countries channel sizeable quantities of their exports and imports through Tanzanian seaports.

Shipping costs over the years have been escalating at an increasingly alarming rate. This at a time when prices of primary commodities are plummeting while those of oil and imported manufactured goods have been rising.

The impact of soaring freight and insurance costs can be easily illustrated. For example, Zanzibar has had to give up exporting coir fibre because the shipping costs would have outstripped export earnings fetched by the commodity.

Since Tanzania must trade with the outside world and since it must continue to offer transit facilities to the neighbouring countries, the country cannot do without the shipping industry.

But it is within our power, to a very considerable extent, to make the shipping industry associated with Tanzania more efficient and responsive to our own needs.

Efforts have already been made to build a nucleus of a national shipping fleet, using Tanzania's own resources and through pooling these resources with other countries.

The aim here is to progressively reduce Tanzania's expensive dependence on foreign shipping lines. For the country has been, and is still paying millions of shillings in hard currency annually for freight and insurance services.

However, it will take many years before the country is able to build up an adequate shipping capacity, able to meet all our export and import needs.

Therefore, side by side with this long-term objective of building a national merchant fleet, there must be immediate steps taken to reduce those aspects of the shipping costs that are reduceable.

Efficient and safe handling of export and import cargo and speedy transportation of the same will go a long way towards bringing down the prohibitive shipping costs. Then, there will be no question of delays and congestion, both of which add to the shipping bill.

As long as our ports are efficient in terms of documentation and cargo handling, there will be less justification for the shipping lines to ever raise their charges. The same efficiency and honesty will win the country, the custom and esteem of the neighbouring landlocked countries.

It is thus our hope that the eleven-day seminar for local shipping managers and shipping representatives, now being held in Zanzibar, will deal with the nitty-gritty of the country's shipping industry and come up with practical measures to help the country cut down on shipping costs and maximise its export earnings.

Fourteen Papers To Be Presented

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 9 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] A member of the Party Central Committee, Ndugu Thabit Kombo, has underlined the need to strengthen the national shipping capacity in order to save millions of shillings now being spent by the country on ferrying exports and imports.

He said such a move would also help Tanzania expand its export potential for agricultural and manufactured goods.

Opening an eleven-day seminar for local shipping managers and shipping representatives organised by the National Shipping Agency (NASACO) in Zanzibar yesterday, Ndugu Kombo explained that through high freight charges, foreign shipping companies were reaping huge profits for transporting agricultural produce from developing countries.

He charged that the rise in shipping charges was already a stumbling block to efforts of developing countries to increase their agricultural exports.

Ndugu Kombo cited fibre coil (one of the Isles' export products) and said the Zanzibar Government recently realized that to ship one tonne of the product cost more than what Zanzibar would earn from its sale abroad.

To expand the national shipping capacity, Ndugu Kombo recommended the improvement of managerial and technical skills for the local shipping personnel and cargo handling facilities at the ports.

He, however, cautioned that without competent and faithful workers, it would be difficult for national shipping companies to cultivate confidence to those who would be using their services.

Earlier, the General Manager of NASACO and Chairman of the seminar, Ndugu C. B. Simfukwe, told Ndugu Kombo that the seminar is intended to improve managerial skills and facilitate closer working relationships between NASACO and other shipping companies in the country.

He said the seminar would also discuss NASACO's managerial setbacks and explore ways of overcoming them.

More than 14 papers on shipping technology, economics, law and management would be presented by experts at the seminar for discussion.

The seminar is attended by representatives from Zanzibar Shipping Company, Tanzania Harbours Authority, National Institute of Productivity, SCOPO, officials from the Ministry of Transport and Communications, and representatives of Overseas Container Limited.

CSO: 4700/991

TSA FORMS TWO SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES TO DIVERSIFY ACTIVITIES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 8 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

THE Tanzania Sisal Authority (TSA) has formed two subsidiary companies which will engage in tea growing and livestock farming in a move to diversify its economic activities.

The Authority's General Manager, Ndugu Ndekirwa Nyari, said in Tanga over the weekend that the newly-formed Mkonge Livestock Company (MLC) will take over all dairy farms and ranches of the Authority which now have a total of 26,000 heads of cattle.

The farms to be taken over by the new company are Mgwisha, Kange and Azimio. The ranches are at Kivumoni — Muheza District — with 6,500 cattle; Kikongo in Coast Region; Madoto and Kilosa in Morogoro Region.

The new company, Ndugu Nyari, said, will also take over the heifer breeding station at Mruazi in Korogwe District. This was started in 1977 with an initial capital of 3 million/- from the Government of the Netherlands.

The Mkonge Tea Company will have its headquarters at Kwamkono in Muheza District where the Authority owns a 650 hectare tea plantation with an annual production of a million kilogrammes of processed tea.

Early last year, the Government formed five autonomous sisal companies under the TSA to undertake the production of the crop in the country, leaving TSA with only three functions: to formulate policies governing sisal production; advise the companies on sisal production matters; and to market all sisal and sisal products within and outside the country.

Meanwhile, two economists from the Netherlands are currently in the country making an appraisal of livestock projects of the Mkonge Livestock Company, the Company's General Manager, Dr. Stanslaus Minja, has said.

Most of the livestock projects owned by the company are being financed by the Netherlands Government through a technical and development grant given under the Tanzania/Netherlands Co-operation Agreement.

Dr. Minja explained that the two economists would be in the country for two months during which they are expected to prepare a detailed report on the project to be presented at the joint Tanzania/Netherlands meeting to be held in the country next month.

Ndugu Minja further said the report will also contain details on how to consolidate the existing projects with a view to making them more productive.

On future plans of the company, the General Manager said there were short term plans aimed at increasing the total herd from 26,000 to 30,000 cattle by the end of this year. A new dairy farm was also being planned, but did not say where it would be established.

CSO: 4700/991

ALLEGED FAVORITISM, CORRUPTION IN SIDO ALLOCATIONS

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 7 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] AT least three projects at the Tanga Small Industries Development Organisation (SIDO) industrial estate, including the disputed pencil and shoe laces units were allocated outside the regional committee, it has been learnt.

Sources within SIDO have said that the projects were allocated to entrepreneurs by a special sitting at SIDO headquarters in Dar es Salaam allegedly because there were no prospective candidates for the enterprises in Tanga.

The sources said under known procedures, all projects must be awarded by the respective regional allocation committee, adding that the enterprises were rarely given out through the headquarters.

They could not say if there was any provision allowing the SIDO head office to play this role. "In the case of Tanga it was a problem of getting prospective entrepreneurs . . . The projects had to be allocated anyway, and we had no other way out," the sources pleaded.

They argued, however, that the minutes of the head office meeting which allocated the projects were copied to the SIDO regional office in Tanga and the Regional Commissioner's office.

A Tanga resident has questioned the allocation of projects at the Tanga industrial estate in 1978 charging that the pencil and shoe laces units were grabbed by some SIDO officials who operate them under cover of relatives or close friends.

He pointed out that the pencil unit registered under Kwamishuza Enterprises in Lushoto was owned by two SIDO technical officers and a director-general of a reputed parastatal organisation in Dar es Salaam.

The SIDO officials apparently used their fathers' names to cover up their involvement in the project managed by the officials' young brothers, the good citizens further claimed.

He said the shoe laces unit whose business address is Kasa Manufacturers Limited, P.O. Box 1515, Tanga, is owned by two senior officials at the SIDO headquarters and that it was run on their behalf by a Tanga businessman related to one of the officials.

According to the Mwananchi, a grey sheeting project registered under Tangamano Textile Company Limited of P.O. Box 1322, Dar es Salaam is also owned by the director-general earlier referred to, and one of the SIDO technical officers with shares in the pencil enterprise.

The grey project was operated on their behalf of the DG's younger brother and other individuals recruited by a SIDO senior official.

The SIDO sources confirmed that the registered owners of the pencil unit were related to some SIDO officials but claimed that this was realised long after their applications had been approved.

"The allegations (by the Tanga resident) could have some truth but not straight truth . . . that some enterpreneurs are related to SIDO officials was quite coincidental . . .," the sources argued.

SIDO Director-General Epaineto Teroka said late last month that they were investigating the claims of favouritism and corruption in allocating SIDO projects.

He said he was not aware of the irregularities and that as far as he knew all projects were allocated by regional committees chaired by regional commissioners.

The committees were "broad-based," he pointed out, adding that they included regional development directors, National Bank of Commerce regional managers and SIDO representatives.

Officials at the Tanga industrial estate explained that the allocation of projects was a policy matter and that they were not involved in the process.

Names of successful entrepreneurs were sent to them through the SIDO headquarters in Dar es Salaam, they added.

CSO: 4700/991

SEMINAR HELD FOR COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT REGIONAL DESK OFFICES

Kanyasi's Address

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Daniel Mshana]

[Text] WORKERS of the newly-created Community Development Department have been asked to co-operate with project officers in the Labour Intensive Public Works Unit under the Prime Minister's Office in their bid to mobilise people in villages. The unit is sponsored by the International Labour Organization (ILO).

The call was made yesterday in Dar es Salaam by an official from the PM's Office, Ndugu Julius Kanyasi when addressing Community Development Regional Desk officers attending a seminar at Msimbazi Centre.

Ndugu Kanyasi briefed the seminar participants on the technical assistance ILO has provided to Tanzania since 1977 when an agreement was signed between the two parties.

He said that ILO sought and attracted donor countries and finance institutions in the world but their chief responsibility was to help recipient governments utilise appropriately funds given to them on development projects.

Ndugu Kanyasi said ILO also sought to create employment opportunities in the rural areas by establishing labour intensive projects.

He told the participants that as of November last year, ILO had given the PM's Office a total of 14,248,216/20 to finance rural employment programme and another 16,496,663/90 for the purchasing of motor vehicles and other equipment for the programme.

Ndugu Kanyasi further explained that ILO funded capital intensive projects.

He said this July, ILO will provide nearly a million shillings for water irrigation projects in Hanang District.

Regional projects which have so far shared more than 89 million/- provided by the ILO are Mto-wa-Mbu Irrigation Project in Arusha water supply and road construction projects in Rukwa, road construction and tree-planting projects in Ruvuma as well as modern house building and water supply projects in Ruvuma Region.

Ndugu Kanyasi said under the public works programme prepared by the PM's Office, it has been estimated that 295 million/- will be needed to finance 25 capital intensive pilot projects in selected Arusha, Dodoma, Rukwa and Ruvuma regions.

He appealed to project planners to ensure they surveyed, analysed, and laid down accurate statistical figures to guide those who will supervise the projects in the region.

Mkesso's Address

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 9 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] FOUR divisions have been set up to accelerate the rural development effort through the newly created Community Development Department in the Prime Minister's Office.

The Department's Acting Director, Ndugu S. H. Mkesso, said in Dar es Salaam yesterday the four divisions were those dealing with research, plannign and village development projects; technical training for rural construction; training cadre development; and women and child welfare.

Ndugu Mkesso was addressing community development regional desk officers now attending a seminar at the Maimbazi Centre in the city.

In a paper presented to the seminar participants, Ndugu Mkesso said that the department had been set up to strengthen procedures in implementing plans for community development in the rural areas.

He stressed that communities usually needed help on how to handle their problems as much as individuals needed guidance to cope with individual problems.

Ndugu Mkesso pointed out that community development sought to increase the participation of the people in community affairs, revitalization of existing forms of local government and transition towards effective administration where it is not yet functioning.

He said the identification, encouragement and training of local leaders should be a basic objective in any community development programme.

Ndugu Mkesso pointed out that the implementation of development programmes and self-help projects on a national scale required not only intensive and extensive assistance from government and non-government agencies but also consistent policies, specific administrative arrangements, trained personnel and mobilisation of national resources.

He said that the department would now run the institute for rural development project in Iringa funded jointly by Tanzania and the United States; the ILO labour-intensive public works programme and the population and family life education project.

CSO: 4700/991

NPC, KIBO PAPER INDUSTRIES MADE PROFITS IN 1981

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Seth Kamuhanda]

[Text]

THE National Printing Company (NPC) and Kibo Paper Industries last year made profits totalling 44m/-, the General Manager of the Tanzania Karatasi Association Industries, Ndugu David Mollel disclosed in Tanga yesterday.

Speaking at the end of a two-day board meeting to review the performance of the two companies, Ndugu Mollel attributed the profits to the application of cost control measures, better material usage and partly to change in products' mix, particularly at Kibo Paper Industries.

He said in 1981, the National Printing Company made a profit of 17.3m/-, above the planned profit of 12.4m/- by 4.9m/-. Likewise, the company made a sales turn-over of 56.6m/-, surpassing the planned sales of 49m/-. This year the company expects to earn 77.7m/- from sales, he said.

Ndugu Mollel explained that the security printing project for the manufacturing of money orders and cheques currently being undertaken at the company would be ready later this year.

The company is also undertaking an expansion programme at its envelope making unit at a cost of 3.5m/-. The programme will be ready by the end of this year, he said.

The general manager added that a computer stationery manufacturing unit will soon be introduced at NPC. The stationery will be sold to the Tanzania Electric Supplies Company (TANESCO) and the water department of the Ministry of Water and Energy.

On the Kibo Paper Industries, Ndugu Mollel said the company last year made a profit of 26.7m/- compared to a 17m/- profit made in 1980.

CSO: 4700/991

BRIEFS

CENSUS OF AGED--A country-wide survey will be carried out this year to determine the population of the aged in a move to devise appropriate programmes to ensure their economic and social security. This was announced in Dar es Salaam yesterday by the Social Welfare, Ndugu Alfred Tandau, on his return from a five-day meeting of a regional intergovernmental meeting on the aged held in Addis Ababa from March 1 to 5. He said the exercise will be in line with the recommendation of the Addis Ababa meeting which also adopted the continental plan of action for the aged. Ndugu Tandau said a national committee had been formed to co-ordinate the activities of the "Year of the Aged." [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Mar 82 p 1]

SWAHILI LITERATURE BOOK--The University of Dar es Salaam-based Institute of Kiswahili Research has published a Swahili literature book titled, /Aggressive Prose/ [in italics] which portrays the status of Swahili literature in the 1970s. The book was officially launched by the University of Dar es Salaam Vice-Chancellor, Ndugu Nicholaus Kuhanga, during a short ceremony at the Silversands Hotel in the city over the weekend. According to the Head of the Publications Section of the Institute of Kiswahili Research Ndugu D. A. W. Masoko, /Aggressive Prose/, written by Professor Raymund Ohly who works with the Institute, would be of considerable help to students studying African Literature, particularly those taking up the East African Literature. /Aggressive Prose/ clearly describes how society tries to solve prevailing communal problems and how writers contribute toward efforts to better standards of living. The book also samples out novel themes and short stories which in a way have contributed to such efforts. Ndugu Masoko said /Aggressive Prose/ was the first book of its kind and is chiefly intended to encourage positive criticism in Swahili literature and thus open up a debate for the benefit of Swahili literature students and enthusiasts. A total of 5,000 copies of the first edition are in circulation now, at 35/- a copy in retail bookshops. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 8 Mar 82 p 3]

CSO: 4700/991

ZVOBGO OUTLINES STEPS TOWARD PARLIAMENTARY, CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Mar 82 p 11

[Article by Peta Thornycroft]

[Text]

THE Government's plans to transform the Constitution, announced by the Minister of Legal and Parliamentary Affairs, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, this week are only part of an in-depth review of the country's entire legal system.

In an interview with the Herald, Dr Zvobgo released details of how his ministry would ensure, that the massive transformation task he has been charged with is to be carried out.

He stressed that the whole fabric of the present laws, the legislature and the Constitution are to be evaluated in this key ministry.

He would be recruiting about 150 senior people, lawyers historians, sociologists, legal draftsmen and political scientists, he said.

Dr Zvobgo said the Prime Minister had asked for "a speedy transformation".

The challenge was enormous, said Dr Zvobgo, but: "I am fascinated by the law, and I hope to have much of the most important work completed by July this year."

The ministry is divided into two — the legal section and the parliamentary section.

Dr Zvobgo has divided the legal section into nine departments, each headed by a director.

The first is the Legal Affairs Division.

"Here we will look into repealing or amending any outmoded laws which are still on the books and which run counter to our other policies," he said.

"For example, the Tribal Trust Lands Act is still there, although we have already handed over power to the district councils. The Act states that the power is still in the hands of the chiefs. This needs to be repealed. There are no TTLs any more.

"There are other Acts which must also go that are perhaps not immediately obvious, which have been around since 1890.

"We must ask ourselves whether we need many of these laws."

Dr Zvobgo referred to the state of emergency and said it was a law inherited from the Smith regime.

Calling it the "panacea for all tyrants" he added: "We don't want that. We need to provide ordinary laws processed through Parliament."

The second section is the African Law Division.

This will for the first time delve into customary law with a view to including it in the common law.

"African women are shackled by traditional culture, and the Prime Minister is anxious — and it is an important function of the ministry — to translate talk about the status of women into something meaningful.

The third section is the Division of Constitutional Law, Research and Development.

SPEEDY

"The Government feels there is a need for a speedy transformation of our Constitution. At Lancaster House we discussed and agreed with the British Government the broad principles for the Zimbabwe independence Constitution.

"The actual document was drafted and processed through the British Parliament in our absence.

This has resulted in a constitution which we never discussed, let alone agreed to.

"For example, we never agreed to a legislature with two houses. If you look at the Lancaster House document there are only two pages on the broad principles. If we look at the Constitution on the section of Parliament it fills pages 32 to 57.

"We did not discuss there anything about the internal law of Parliament, the workings of Parliament. They simply took the English Parliament and imposed it on Zimbabwe.

"Now, I am not saying all of it is necessarily undesirable; I am saying we didn't discuss it and we need to take a fresh look at it," Dr Zvobgo said.

The fourth section is the Drafting Division.

All legislative drafting for every Government department will be done here, as well as the preparation of all Bills.

"Legal drafting is an art and without good staff we will not be able to carry out our legislative revolution. We hope to attract people from private practice and will advertise widely both here, in other parts of Africa and overseas for legal draftsmen, and have asked the University of Zimbabwe to provide a crash course for draftsmen."

The Legal Advice Department is the fifth division. It is one which already exists although it has come under the umbrella of the Ministry of Justice.

"This department will advise the Government on complex legal issues, across the board, from criminal to civil law and so on."

The Law Promotion Department is an innovative section. "We believe that justice should not only be available to the few who can afford it, but for all.

"We will undertake to provide free advice to the public, just as health and education are free, so must justice be."

He emphasised there would still be a place for the private legal practitioner.

STUDYING

The International Law Division will devote its time to studying what treaties, conventions or agreements Zimbabwe has inherited.

"Britain entered into many treaties on behalf of Southern Rhodesia. This division would have to regularise this position," Dr Zvobgo said.

The Common Law Division will investigate, for example, whatever "commonalities exist between Roman Dutch and English law and, if necessary, achieve reform by legislation".

"Roman Dutch Law is a very harmonised legal system, it was evolved for an agrarian society.

"However, 15 to 20 years ago English-trained practitioners started including English principles. We want to ensure that only where it is absolutely necessary do we borrow these principles."

Zimbabwe would be watching rulings in South Africa which practices Roman Dutch law. "Although there is a built-in-resistance to anything South African, we share a common law."

He said that in South Africa the judiciary was in the habit of executing brutal legislation and had itself become brutalised.

The second part of the ministry will deal with every aspect of Parliament.

"Parliament must transform along with every other sector in the country," Dr Zvobgo said.

"We live in Zimbabwe, in Africa, but we have a British parliament on our soil. It's ridiculous."

The wigs that were worn by the presiding officers were "ridiculous — they don't mean a damn thing". The maces had crowns. "Crowns! And we are an independent republic!

"We will look into the whole question of why we can't use Shona and Sindebele in the House," he said.

Ziana quotes Dr Zvobgo as saying that the Government wanted to buy the full verbatim set of minutes of the three month-long Lancaster House talks.

The Government needed these minutes, he said, for it to undertake its massive review of the Constitution.

The matter had been raised with the British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington — who chaired the talks — when he visited Salisbury last month, Dr Zvobgo said.

CSO: 4700/989

STATE PURCHASING OF LAND CURTAILED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

BULAWAYO

THE Government did not intend to buy farms for resettlement in all parts of the country, the Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Mr Moven Mahachi, said yesterday.

Speaking during a tour of the Plumtree district, the minister said certain farming areas would not be interfered with at all.

Farmers who had sold their land to the Government and bought new farms away from settlement areas would not be asked to sell again as long as their farms were for the benefit of the whole country.

"If the land is properly used for the benefit of the nation as a whole, commercial farmers have nothing to fear from the Government," Mr Mahachi said.

He said the problem of leasing grazing land to communal land farmers by commercial farmers was the Ministry of Agriculture's province.

If the rural councils had told the Ministry of Lands about leased grazing the ministry would have tried to negotiate reasonable charges with the commercial farmers involved.

Mr Mahachi said the Government could have leased or bought the land for grazing and allowed communal farmers to graze their stock on it.

The Government would insist, however, that grazing was controlled and only breeding stock was fed on leased land.

Peasant farmers were being encouraged to sell off their old stock and save only their breeding herds.

Mr Mahachi said they had to realise that this had been a bad season and they would have to save what they could. When maize was reaped the stalks should not be burnt but kept for fodder.

CSO: 4700/989

ECONOMIC OVERHAUL URGENT, SAYS MUGABE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

ZIMBABWE'S economy needs an urgent overhaul to serve the interests of the majority, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said yesterday.

Closing the Business International conference on Zimbabwe, he said the Government had inherited an economy built around a minority and geared largely to serve that minority. "It is one which has substantial distortions and inequities which accumulated over time."

The Prime Minister told local and international industrialists that the challenges facing Zimbabwe were those of restructuring and redressing serious imbalances in the economy so that it had a wider base and was able to serve the masses.

There were severe imbalances in development between urban and rural areas and in the possession of income-generating assets, particularly land and skills, including education.

Similar problems were found in health, housing and other social amenities. "In these areas, too, it is our desire to see both the Government and the private sector playing mutually supporting and complementary roles," Mr Mugabe said.

"Our socialist development takes full cognisance of the realities, including the factor of private enterprise, that derive from our history.

"We seek to combine the positive aspects of these realities with our own directly socialist initiatives to evolve a society that is at once prosperous and egalitarian, self-reliant but not isolationist, free and democratic."

Co-ops

The three-year transitional National Development Plan, soon to be published, would spell out in detail the role to be played by the Government and private enterprise.

The plan provided for more participation by peasants through co-operatives, as well as for active involvement of workers and their committees decision-making.

"The Government will, in addition, itself set about mobilising resources and energies for a co-ordinated attack on mass poverty and backwardness," said Mr Mugabe.

The Government recognised the private sector as a factor in the economic life of the country. Planning had been undertaken on the assumption and strong belief that it would join the Government in the fulfilment of national objectives as planned.

"In other words, we envisage a partnership; a partnership the fundamental impulse of which is the promotion of our people's welfare and happiness."

He assured businessmen that they had nothing to fear for their future in Zimbabwe.

On payment of compensation in the event of nationalisation, Mr Mugabe said it was not clear why there should be any doubts.

He said the Government had not nationalised any of the institutions since coming into power. In all instances where the Government had acquired part-ownership of an enterprise, by way of share or equity holding, it had been realised on the basis of offers freely made to the Government.

The Constitution was a unique document whose provisions included perhaps the most comprehensive and iron-clad guarantees in favour of private property anywhere in the world.

"Yet, in spite of our justifiable unhappiness with some of these provisions my Government has unfailingly enforced the Constitution and remains committed to the rule of the law and to due process of the law," Mr Mugabe said.

The Government was willing and ready to engage in a dialogue with the business community to reassure and establish a new relationship, and examine any problems.

He hoped the visitors would go back convinced that Zimbabweans and their Government were not the monsters that certain sections of the Western Press seemed to think they were.

CSO: 4700/989

INCREASED DEMAND DELAYS ISSUANCE OF PASSPORTS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Mar 82 p 5

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

THERE is a 10 to 12 weeks' delay in the issue of Zimbabwe passports, the Registrar-General, Mr James Chigwedere, said yesterday.

"When we invalidated Rhodesian and Zimbabwe-Rhodesian passports from January 20 we estimated that the exercise of replacing them with Zimbabwe passports would take us about 10 weeks, and we have been proved correct.

"We also felt that there might be some drop in the number of applications coming in after January 20, but this has not been very marked. Many people are still coming for passports, and some of them have not travelled for years — yet they still come for a passport."

He had been given permission for his staff to work overtime to cope with the pressure of applications. This permission would expire at the end of this month, Mr Chigwedere said.

If he did not get an extension of permission for his staff to work overtime it might take 12 weeks or longer to process applications, he said.

The delay in the issue of passports was caused by the pressure of demand. There was no other reason, he said. His department was not short of passport forms.

CSO: 4700/989

ZAPU 'DEVASTATED' BY DESERTIONS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Mar 82 p 4

[Text]

ABOUT 1 000 ZAPU supporters in the Mushumbi Pools area have resigned from the party to join ZANU (PF), a Mashonaland Central MP, Mr Joseph Kaparadza, said yesterday.

The move had delivered a devastating blow to ZAPU in the area, he said. The people had surrendered all their ZAPU membership cards to ZANU (PF) district officials before joining the ruling party.

Mr Kaparadza said a total of $328 had been donated towards the construction of new party headquarters. The money had come from Sipolilo chiefs who had donated $75, teachers $53, and a local firm, Jumbo Knittings, $200.

There would be two rallies this weekend in the area at which the new members would be welcomed into ZANU (PF). The meetings, to be addressed by Mr Kaparadza, would be held at Nyamatikiti School and Rusambo School in the Rushinga area.

● A total of 128 ZAPU members in the Midlands recently defected to ZANU (PF) and hundreds are waiting to do so, according to Mr Ernest Tongogara, the ZANU (PF) political commissar for the province.

In an interview with Ziana, Mr Tongogara said hundreds of former ZAPU supporters in Shabani, Belingwe, Gwelo and Gokwe were waiting for ZANU (PF) cards.

On Saturday hundreds of ZANU (PF) supporters staged a demonstration in Gwelo in support of the Prime Minister's sacking of ZAPU leader Dr Joshua Nkomo. They were addressed by Senator Lameck Makanda, Mr Byron Hove, the ZANU (PF) Midlands Province secretary, and Mr Tongogara.

CSO: 4700/989

DETAILS ON RESETTLEMENT PROGRAM GIVEN

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Mar 82 p 12

[Text]

THE Government has released details of the resettlement programme. In the accompanying list, Model A basis refers to the scheme where each family is given 0,2 ha to put up buildings and 5 ha for ploughing, while grazing is shared.

An accelerated resettlement scheme refers to a stage half way towards a completed project. It means that permanent structures such as roads and dip tanks have yet to be erected.

The ministry said families had been supported by the Government to improve livestock and crop production.

Promotion officers had intensified a campaign for the formation of co-operatives supported by the Department of Co-operatives and Markets, it said.

SCHEMES completed on Model A basis in the order name: place: ha and families:
Sengezi (Wedza)	8 037		289
Umfurudzi (Shamva)	52 305		565
Inyammzi (Manicaland)	27 174		461
Nyagundi (Manicaland)	8 928		163
Mpudzi (Manicaland)	14 700		229
Nyajezi (Manicaland)	11 941		191
Soti Bource (Victoria)	33 700		528
Vimvi (Victoria)	5 210		80
Murkosi (Victoria)	44 326		657
Tokwe (Midlands)	71 698		1 041
Mayo (Headlands)	73 650		1 385
Umgusa (Matabeleland)	36 010		255
TOTAL	367 071		5 844
ACCELERATED resettlement schemes:
Sanyati (Gatooma)	27 209		504
Ngezi (Gatooma)	9 350		247
Vuti (Urungwe)	29 000		390
Chiswana (Wedza)	1 273		43
Ngomahuru (Chibi)	3 575		46
Pakama (Selukwe)	23 677		306
Svosve (Marandellas)	9 489		423
Sanyatwe (Invanga)	8 103		262
Tendergate (Masvingo)	1 343		19
Bubi (Bubi)	21 059		353
TOTAL	128 663		2 684
SCHEMES started in January 1982:
Craigmore/Nyagadza (Chipinga)	4 924		156
Copper Queen North (Gatooma)	41 642		1 500
Romsley (Manicaland)	43 876		643
Chizwirigwi (Chiredzi)	24 230		230
Sessombi West (Gwelo)	48 598		547
Devuli One (Bikita)	75 932		894
Dombodema B (Bulalimamangwe)	61 315		700
TOTAL	240 517		4 720

CO-OPERATIVES: In the order scheme; membership and has

Simba Youth	58	1 953
Batsiranyi	236	1 654
Kwaedza	160	2 012
Mt St Mary's	200	1 359
Gaerezi	300	14 469
TOTAL	954	21 449

CSO: 4700/989

NATURAL RESOURCES MINISTER TO FIGHT FLOODING OF MANA POOLS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] THE Minister of Natural Resources and Tourism, Mrs Victoria Chitepo, said yesterday her ministry would do all in its power to support the Wildlife Society of Zimbabwe in preserving Mana Pools.

She said she was speaking as an independent viewer after watching Must Mana Die?, a film made by the society in the light of controversy over whether Mupata Gorge, downstream of the pools, should be dammed.

A hydro-electric plant at the gorge would mean the end of Mana Pools.

Mrs Chitepo said the proposal to use the gorge for a hydro-electric scheme, was one which the Government had to consider very seriously.

The Government would reach a decision only after taking into account the different views of the people, and considering whether it was the only site where a hydro-electric plant could be installed, she said.

"I can assure you that the Zimbabwean Government is a people's Government, and any decision that it might arrive at will be what the people want.

"My ministry will do all it can to make sure that the showing of this film will reach the highest point in Government and I will support all representations"

Commenting on the film, Mrs Chitepo said: "I should sincerely say that for all the time that you watch this strip, it is as if you are on a mountain top and suddenly come down and say, 'what beautiful wildlife Mana has'.

"You see animals responding to nature and living to what nature demands of them. These animals were created by God and are living where he wants them to be."

Speaking on the same occasion, the president of the Wildlife Society, Mr Peter Brookes-Ball, said his organisation was not against hydro-electric schemes but was asking that a better site be found before any major development started.

He said that when the Prime Minister opened the first national conservation congress of the Natural Resources Board in 1980, he had said:

"The conservation of the natural resources of the country is the concern of every member of the community. Those who, during their short lifetime, are entrusted with the handling of the land, or other assets of the country, should not be denied the right to use it reasonably."

Many opponents of the dam believe Mana Pools to be the only place in Zimbabwe which can attract tourists and hold them for a week or more.

The national park covers more than 500 000 ha of the "best preserved and richest wildlife habitat in Africa", according to the Wildlife Society.

Also present at the showing was the Minister of Industry and Energy Development, Dr Simba Makoni, who declined to comment on the film.

CSO: 4700/989

TOBACCO INDUSTRY SET FOR BIG EXPANSION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Mar 82 pp 1, 5

[Text] THE tobacco industry is planning to expand production by about 30 percent during the next three years, the Zimbabwe Tobacco Association president, Mr Bert Palmer, said yesterday.

In an interview he said most of the expansion would take place in the burley sector. There was a shortag of burley tobacco on the world market.

"We are looking at a planned and controlled expansion of 10 to 15 percent a year, bearing in mind that we now have the political stability that manufacturers are looking for in the long-term.

"We as a growing industry must try to expand the industry 10 to 15 percent for the next three years. This is what the manufacturers require if they are to put Zimbabwe tobacco in their cigarettes," he said.

Zimbabwean growers were expected to produce 90 to 92 million kg of virginia tobacco this year. This compares with 67 million kg sold last year at an average price of 183c a kg.

A total of 1 275 commercial and 5 000 small-scale farmers were now growing tobacco, the latter planting mainly burley. There had been a significant increase in the number of commercial farmers growing the crop — from 1 135 in the 1980-1981 season.

This year a total of 48 000 ha was under the crop, compared to 38 000 ha last year.

Commenting on quality, Mr Palmer said: "In every district we have some very fine tobacco. On certain farms the crop has suffered stress but we have been able to cope because of good advice given to growers.

"Credit must go to the Tobacco Research Board for the work on what we think was stress tobacco. We have been able to enhance this into a very fine tobacco."

During the past two years Zimbabwe had resumed its place as the world's second largest exporter of tobacco, and was now on a par with Brazil. The recovery was the result of the drop in world stocks.

A crop failure in China had helped create a world demand last year and Zimbabwe had been able to sell surplus stocks. This year mostly green tobacco, and very little older stock, were being sold.

"This is the way we like it," said Mr Palmer.

Zimbabwean tobacco was being sold all over the world, with 46 percent being bought by European countries, 23 percent by the Middle East, 10 percent by African countries and 12 percent by the Far East.

The single auction floor operation was working well, said Mr Palmer, adding that farmers had been encouraged to increase their average bale weight as this would help shorten the selling season considerably.

CSO: 4700/989

TRANSPORT MINISTER SLAMS NATIONAL RAILWAYS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 17 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] AFTER a two-day tour of the National Railways of Zimbabwe facilities in Bulawayo, the new Minister of Transport, Mr Farai Masango, said yesterday the company was still where it was 10 years ago.

The minister was angered by reports of white employees who still referred to the system as Rhodesia Railways and who told the African staff that it would remain so.

"In a way, it is still Rhodesia Railways, but we are definitely going to change that," the minister said at the end of the tour.

On a tour of the steam shed the minister was told by black staff that their European supervisor had a habit of telling them to "go get your leave from Mugabe" when they asked for leave.

Mr Masango, who on the first day of the tour said he was unhappy at the slow pace of black advancement in the railways said there used to be job discrimination against blacks in the past. "It might have to be the reverse now," he said.

Warning that "the shoe is now on the other foot", the minister said whites with racist minds in the railways had to change or they would find themselves on the streets.

He has already delivered the same warning to Air Zimbabwe in Salisbury. He said the corporation was dragging its feet on training blacks and voiced his disapproval of the airline's policy of training people who would leave on qualifying.

CSO: 4700/989

LOME CONVENTION HELPS SUGAR EXPORTS

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 18 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Angus Macmillan]

[Text] DESPITE low world prices, Zimbabwe's 1982 export sugar crop has already been sold on international futures markets.

But its foreign exchange value will be slightly down on last year's figure of $55 million, says Mr Geoff Thomas, general manager of Sugar Sales (Pvt) Ltd, the marketing arm of both Hippo Valley and Triangle.

Production of raw sugar, however, will exceed 1981's total of 370 000 tonnes, by 20 000, and should rise to 450 000 tonnes next year.

Of this year's projected 390 000 tonnes, about 190 000 is surplus for export, much of it is destined for the United States.

"The US is our best market at the moment as our sugar enters the country duty free under their general system of preferences," explained Mr Thomas.

Botswana takes about 30 000 tonnes under a special contract, and, as from July, about 25 000 tonnes will be going to the EEC through the Lome Convention.

"The Lome deal provides us with a fixed price that is very much higher than the current world price," he added.

Zimbabwe is also a member of the World Sugar Agreement, which specifies that it must stockpile 14 500 tonnes to act as a stabilising factor against low prices.

Transport problems reached crisis proportions last year when it was thought that 60 000 tonnes would have to be stockpiled, as they could not be moved to the sugar terminal at Maputo, which is shared with Swaziland.

The recent recovery in the transport situation has now taken care of this back-log, all of which should be exported by April.

Apart from the Botswana quota, all export sugar is raw, that way standing a better chance on the highly competitive world market.

Local consumption is rising, says Mr Thomas, unlike in many industrialised countries where a high fructose corn syrup is making inroads into traditional markets.

At 31c a kilogram, Zimbabwean consumers enjoy the world's cheapest unsubsidised white sugar, which has not gone up in price since November 1979.

This has not been for want of trying by ZSR, the country's sole refiners, who have sought an increase on a number of occasions since 1979 to counter rising production costs.

The government is studying the company's proposals on a price increase, which ZSR says, is vital if it is to be able to finance expansion needed to meet growing demand.

CSO: 4700/989

SWEDEN GIVES $1 MILLION TO ZIMSCI

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 17 Mar 82 p 5

[Text]

THE Swedish International Development Authority is to give the Zimbabwe Secondary School Science Project $1 million.

The head of SIDA in Zimbabwe, Mr Jan Cedergren, said yesterday that $500 000 was being given in the present financial year and $500 000 in the next.

"We think Zimsci is a very valuable project. It is unique in Africa in the sense that kits are almost entirely locally produced and because it makes it possible for local schools to get simple laboratory equipment.

"The project, we believe, could be used as a model for other countries. Indeed, we have had visitors here who have shown great interest and several people from neighbouring countries have said they wished they had done the same instead of buying expensive equipment.

"We gave the money so that the project could be developed and so that more schools could benefit. We were also gratified to see the project is of real benefit."

The head of Zimsci, Mr Alan Dock of the department of curriculum studies at the University of Zimbabwe, said half the Swedish money would go towards developing the Form 2 kits, and half towards those for Form 3.

The European Economic Community had given $300 000 towards the Form 2 kits, which were to be issued at the beginning of next term.

Zimsci was developed jointly by the University of Zimbabwe and the Ministry of Education and Culture.

CSO: 4700/989

PARTIAL RESUMPTION OF BUS SERVICE REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 17 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

A WEEK ago today Zimbabwe's busmen went on strike, but yesterday morning Salisbury had at least 400 of its 500 buses back on the road and the position in Bulawayo and Umtali was even better.

Umtali yesterday became the first of the country's cities to get back to a normal bus service with Bulawayo on 95 percent normal and Gwelo on 70 percent.

Mr Peter Hornblow, the general manager of Salisbury United Omnibus Company, said yesterday that 400 of the 500 buses normally running were on the roads during peak periods yesterday.

He said that recruitment of drivers was proceeding steadily, and that, in all probability, services would return to normal early next week.

The Umtali manager of Zimbabwe Omnibus Company, Mr David Lynas, said yesterday that all services in the city would be back to normal today.

The company had given priority to the city, and rural and urban services would resume "by the end of the week".

Mr Lynas said that all the 155 company staff arrested on Friday were released on Monday. Only 15 strikers had been re-employed with 24 new drivers starting.

In Bulawayo a spokesman for ZOC said that bus services were running at about 95 percent of normal yesterday morning with 200 of the striking drivers back on the payroll, bringing those taken on this week to 325.

Two buses were being used in Bulawayo to train the new drivers who should complete their courses early next week.

Mr David Dyer, ZOC's transport manager, said 30 of the conductors who were fired at the same time as the striking drivers had been given their jobs back.

Forty new conductors were being processed and should begin their training today.

None of the ZOC's new employees had been knowingly poached from other companies, although some may have resigned their jobs to join the company, he said.

A police spokesman said 315 Bulawayo strikers were being detained at Khami Prison. Three hundred and forty-nine drivers and conductors were arrested last Friday, of whom 34 were later released.

ZOC's Gwelo manager, Mr George Kerr, told Ziana that 70 percent of normal services were operating yesterday.

The 36 drivers on duty yesterday had been working long hours to cope with the work. "We are slowly coming back to normal," Mr Kerr added.

CSO: 4700/989

END

JPRS 80556

13 April 1982

Sub-Saharan Africa Report

No. 2605

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 80556

13 April 1982

SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA REPORT

No. 2605

CONTENTS

ANGOLA

Briefs
Canadian Delegation Visits 1
Foreign Investment Program 1

CAMEROON

French, Americans Compete for Gas Liquefaction Plant
(Bruno Dethomas; LE MONDE, 9 Mar 82) 2

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

Truce Between Military Regime, Opposition 'Over'
(Mark Doyle; WEST AFRICA, 15 Mar 82) 5

'Awkward Aspects' of France's Involvement Noted
(WEST AFRICA, 15 Mar 82) 7

CHAD

OAU Integrity Said To Be at Stake
(WEST AFRICA, 15 Mar 82) 8

French Minister Cot Calls Situation Deteriorating Daily
(AFP, 2 Apr 82) 9

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Briefs
Leader in Morocco 10

GHANA

Briefs

Former Officials in Lagos 11
Idle Lands Takeover, Chiefs' Contribution 11
GBC Affairs 12
Gasoline Supply Ensured 12

GUINEA

Sekou Toure Said To Remain 'Nobody's Puppet'
(WEST AFRICA, 22 Mar 82) 13

Mission to EEC Attempts To Obtain Industrial Aid
(Veronica Forrester; WEST AFRICA, 22 Mar 82) 16

GUINEA BISSAU

Briefs

Foreign Trade Figures 18

LIBERIA

Briefs

Hassan II Message 19
Monrovia Property Tax 19

MAURITIUS

Paul Berenger Writes on MMM Search for Moderate Socialism
(Paul R. Berenger; LE NOUVEAU MILITANT, 21 Jan 82) 20

Administration's Handling of Some Nations Scored (Editorial; LE NOUVEAU MILITANT, 30 Jan 82) 22

PSM Leader Deplores Sugar Workers' Living Conditions
(THE NATION, 13 Jan 82) 23

Report Analyzes Latest Unemployment Figures
(LE MAURICIEN, 28 Jan 82) 24

Briefs

Demographic Figures Reported 26

MOZAMBIQUE

Briefs

Cabora Bassa Electricity Distribution 27
Agricultural Cooperation With USSR 27

SENEGAMBIA

MOJA-G Leader Discusses Events of 30 July 1981
(Nii K. Bentsi-Enchill; WEST AFRICA, 22 Mar 82) 28

Joint Senegalese-Saudi Communique Issued
(LE SOLEIL, 10 Mar 82) 34

SOUTH AFRICA

Hope for Healing Split Voiced in Pro-Botha Commentary
(Willem de Klerk; DIE TRANSVALER, 3 Mar 82) 37

Defense Chief Appreciates U.S. Visa Relaxation
(DIE BURGER, 15 Mar 82) 41

U.S. Attitude Toward South Africa Criticized
(H.J. Grosskopf; BEELD, 9 Mar 82) 42

Rabie Report on Internal Security Discussed
(BEELD, 8, 9 Mar 82) 44

Preventive Detention Aspect Analyzed
Rabie Recommendations Not Adequate, by D.H. van Wijk

Attorneys See Inadequacies in Terrorist Law Amendments
(DIE BURGER, 12 Mar 82) 53

Communists Attacked Military Base From Pretoria Vicinity
(DIE BURGER, 16 Mar 82) 55

Unique Solutions for Mine-Resistant Vehicles Claimed
(PARATUS, Jan 82) 56

TANZANIA

Guidelines for Forthcoming Party Elections Set Forth
(Editorial; UHURU, 25 Jan 82) 60

Maintenance of Proper Accounting by Parastatals Urged
(Editorial; UHURU, 27 Jan 82) 62

Briefs 64
Port Security Stressed

UGANDA

'MILLIYET' Correspondent Interview Idi Amin
(Idi Amin Interview; MILLIYET, 11-14 Mar 82) 65

ZAIRE

Kinshasa Governor Diasspointed by Tour of City's Zones
(Kongo Luzayamo Nzundu; ELIMA, 28 Feb-1 Mar 82) 79

First Training Session of 1982 Begins
(Bitumba Miso-Mpoko; ELIMA, 23 Feb 82) 82

Debate on Scientific Research Draws To Close
(ELIMA, 23 Feb 82) 84

Protection of National Manpower Urged
(Editorial; ELIMA, 23 Feb 82) 85

Briefs
Spanish Wheat Donation 86
Kalemia Port Dredging 86
Judicial Reform 86

BRIEFS

CANADIAN DELEGATION VISITS--Cabinda, 26 Mar (ANGOP)--The Canadian delegation which has been paying a working visit to the Angolan province of Cabinda since last Tuesday, yesterday visited the "Saidy Mingas" agricultural cooperative situated in the Tando-Zinge commune. During the visit, the delegation met with officials of the cooperative in order to examine jointly various problems facing them. At the end of the meeting, the delegation expressed its desire to give material support to the peasants and the partners in the cooperative. The delegation, it was pointed out, comprises the following organizations: "Cuso" (Canadian University Service for Overseas), Suco (Canadian University Service) and the Oxfam-Canada which assist in the overall project of the Ministry of Agriculture and the Angolan secretariat of state for social affairs. The project is aimed at achieving the socio-economic integration of the repatriated people of the Tando-Zinge commune in Cabinda Province. [Text] [AB261517 Luanda ANGOP in French 1420 GMT 26 Mar 82]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT PROGRAM--Luanda, 30 Mar (ANGOP)--In a ministerial council resolution dated 25 February and signed by the president of the People's Republic of Angola, Jose Eduardo dos Santos, the government authorizes the implementation of a foreign investment project in Angola. The project is for the exploitation of oil zone one. The resolution was published in the official gazette. The decision also authorizes the signing of contracts for the sharing of the corresponding production between Sonangol and Agip SPA. It will be recalled that these contracts were signed a few days ago. [Text] [AB301541 Luanda ANGOP in French 1410 GMT 30 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/753

FRENCH, AMERICANS COMPETE FOR GAS LIQUEFACTION PLANT

Paris LE MONDE in French 9 Mar 82 p 44

[Article by Bruno Dethomas]

[Text] Since technological mastery of energy systems is one guarantee of exports for decades to come, the battle underway in Cameroon between French and American firms to supply the gas liquefaction process appears to be a decisive one.

The contract is certainly a modest one--between $25 million and $30 million--but it brings in its train the engineering and construction of the liquefaction plant, and that will be worth some $2 billion. Apart from the contract, the question is whether gas liquefaction is to be a U.S. monopoly.

Cameroon, which has hired the Mobil and Total oil companies as consultants, notified the TECHNIP firm by telex in December that it intended to adopt the French process on condition that Paris confirm the financing terms.

Three Processes

France, which is contemplating purchasing part of the Cameroonian gas, seems ready to provide $800 million (4.8 billion francs) for that project at 10 percent, with the amount to be repaid in 10 years. For its part, the United States is prepared to lend $1 billion for 18 years at 12 percent through EXIMBANK. The French answer, which reached Yaounde at the end of December, did not satisfy the Cameroonians. They expressed surprise at the insurance premium (0.05 percent) required by COFACE [French Insurance Company for Foreign Trade], even though that rate is always added to interest rates granted by Paris. Was it real surprise or a pretext? In any case, Yaounde has decided to reexamine all the data in the contract. And its decision to review the situation coincided--simply a coincidence?--with the visit to Cameroon by U.S. Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige, who, according to the weekly BUSINESS WEEK, did not conceal his opinion: "Our technology is very definitely superior to theirs, while their financing terms are superior to ours."

Incidentally, that idea of U.S. technological superiority was expanded upon by the managers of Air Products and Chemicals, Inc. James F. Dempsey, the firm's vice president, told BUSINESS WEEK that TECHNIP wanted to make the Cameroonians "guinea pigs" for a laboratory technology "in one of the industries where American technology is still predominant."

Excluding the cascade process, which is used in the oldest installations and is not patented, there are three gas liquefaction processes: those developed by Pritchard (Great Britain), Air Products, and TECHNIP.

Pritchard can offer scarcely more than three liquefaction lines at Skikda, Algeria as an example of a heavy unit, and that is an unconvincing reference due to the very numerous difficulties experienced at those installations.

So the competition is basically between TECHNIP and Air Products. The Americans have some weighty references: in Indonesia and Algeria--the two chief exporters of liquefied gas at present--they have imposed their technology. And 80 percent of the units already built or under construction are based on their process.

Even so, the Cameroonians would not be "guinea pigs" for TECHNIP. In the 1960's, the French firm cooperated with Algeria's CAMEL [Algerian Liquid Methane Company] in installing the first liquefaction unit ever built. In Skikda, following initial difficulties with corrosion, TECHNIP's first three lines showed performance superior to that produced by Air Products. The French company was chosen by the Algerians in 1979 to build the nine liquefaction lines at LNG-3 in Arzew--a contract broken since then by the change in Algeria's gas export policy--and by Canada for the pilot project in the Arctic.

TECHNIP's managers say that the improvement made to their process (mixed refrigeration) provides a performance superior to that of Air Products (on the order of 10 percent for the Canadian project) at a lower investment (from 10 to 15 percent less).

The decision by the Yaounde authorities--which should be reached in the next few days--followed by a decision by Nigeria's leaders, who have just received the new projects for that country's natural gas resources, will be decisive for the future in a market whose growth is certain.

Market With a Future

Natural gas reserves are close to those of petroleum, but natural gas consumption is half as great. As a hydrocarbon, it is the best substitute for black gold. Trade in natural gas is therefore going to grow, since production is declining in some of the chief consumer countries (the United States and the EEC) or is even practically nonexistent (Japan).

Pipeline deliveries are fast reaching their limits: from Mexico and Canada to the United States, from the USSR, Norway, and--perhaps in an unforeseeable future--Iran to Europe, and, lastly, from Algeria to Europe via Sicily and, later, Spain.

In this field, France will be far, for example, from finding enough industrial orders to offset its orders for gas from the Soviet Union, due to the simple fact that its industry does not manufacture the 56-inch pipe required for the gas pipeline that will link Siberia to West Europe.

A sizable share of the EEC's imports and all of Japan's will thus be supplied by LNG (liquefied natural gas). Because of the volume of the gas, it is essential to liquefy it by cooling it to cryogenic temperatures (-160°C, which reduces the volume 635 times) so that it can be shipped by LNG tanker.

If the American company, whose country is not a purchaser of LNG, wins the Cameroonian and Nigerian contracts, it will have imposed its monopoly for good. That is not desirable for Europe, which is the chief potential purchaser of LNG from Africa and, perhaps, from Argentina, Trinidad and Tobago, and even the Persian Gulf area.

11798
CSO: 4719/693

TRUCE BETWEEN MILITARY REGIME, OPPOSITION 'OVER'

London WEST AFRICA in English 15 Mar 82 p 693

[Article by Mark Doyle]

[Text] THE SIX-MONTH honeymoon truce between the military authorities and the opposition in the Central African Republic is over, and the consequences of the divorce have put President Mitterrand's Africa policy firmly in the spotlight. Following an attempted coup masterminded by M. Ange Patasse, the leader of the Mouvement pour la Liberation du Peuple Centrafricain (MLPC), Head of State General André Kolingba has purged his government of MLPC members and destroyed M. Patassé's residence at Kilometre Dix. M. Patassé escaped the attack, fled to the French Embassy in Bangui and requested political asylum.

In Paris, the embarrassment is acute; President Mitterrand has sent his personal Adviser on African Affairs, M. Guy Penne, to Bangui to try to find a compromise, and has meanwhile contacted friendly African governments to help him out of the impasse. As West Africa went to press the Central African army had surrounded the French Embassy in Bangui and the French troops, who number some 1200 (about 300 in the capital) had been put on alert.

There were rumours, inevitably, in both Paris and Bangui, of a "left wing Barracuda", and the French Socialist Party are split on the issue. M. Lionel Jospin, the Secretary of the Party has even found it necessary to deny sympathy for M. Patassé. General Kolingba demanded extradition, and gave the French negotiators a deadline. At the moment of going to press, Paris was continuing to refuse to hand over M. Patassé. A suggestion from M. Penne that he be handed to a neighbouring country pending further negotiations had been rejected.

M. Patasse arrived back in Bangui at the end of February after five months in France. A crowd of up to 10,000 greeted him at the airport.

Following the display of support at the airport, a leaflet was distributed the day before the coup attempt was announced on the radio. The leaflet, from a previously unknown group calling itself the Front de Liberation du Centrafrique (FROLICA), accused General Kolingba of "treason". The similarities in the wording and production of the FROLICA leaflet gave rise to strong suspicions that it had come from M. Patassé's residence at Kilometre Dix. The same day, M. Patassé told journalists that he considered himself "the President of the Republic". He added: "The people are no longer afraid of guns. General Kolingba is a traitor to them. I alone represent constitutional legitimacy. There is a power vacuum and I am going to fill it by becoming Head of State. I am now waiting for General Kolingba to pass power to me".

M. Patassé's optimistic tone was not justified. The leaflet, and the unrest which it stirred up, put the authorities on the alert. Road blocks were set up around Bangui and troops were sent to the quartiers populaires where M. Patassé is known to have support, such as Fou, Bongondo and boy-Rabe. The soldiers had had enough. The General's tactics had previously been to integrate the opposition or leave them to their own devices rather than to risk creating martyrs and inflame tribal tensions. The leader of the Front Patriotique, Dr. Abel Goumba, for example, was made Rector of the University of Bangui earlier this year (though he insists that this does not represent a compromise) and a former member of the MLPC had been given a top job in the Franco-Central African Tobacco Corp. Opposition elements in the armed forces were allowed to stay at their posts after General Kolingba took power despite the fact that all political activity was banned.

The purge had probably begun, and was almost certainly planned, before General François Bozize announced on National Radio that he had taken power. General Bozize, known for his sympathies with M. Patassé, echoed his mentor's words and accused General Kolingba of "treason". The announced takeover was shortlived and confined to the radio station; within minutes, the Commander of the Gendarmerie, Colonel Diallo, came on the air to deny Bozize's claims. The Colonel is reportedly a close confidante of General Kolingba and was denounced in the FROLICA tract as a "senegalo-yakoma" (the yakoma tribe dominate the Military Committee for National Redress).

The military response gathered momentum the next day. Exuberant demonstrations at Kilometre Cinq and in the quartiers populaires were quashed. Then loyal soldiers moved against MLPC leaders. At least five officers of the Gendarmerie and two from the army were arrested. The whereabouts of General Bozize and another suspected of involvement in the coup, General Mbaikoua, are unknown.

A ministerial shuffle was announced, described by the military as "slight", apparently in an attempt to minimise tension (see page 748). Generals Bozize and Mbaikoua were dropped, as were two other ministers known for their links with M. Patassé, Quartermaster Timothée Marboua (Economy and Finance) and Lt-Col. Martin Dokossi (Trade and Industry).

The presence of M. Patassé and his armed supporters at Kilometre Dix was by this time considered intolerable; over the weekend of March 6—7 the army moved in with vigour, destroying M. Patassé's residence and setting fire to that of the vice-president of the MLPC, M. Dehozendi. It is not clear whether M. Patasse was actually in residence at the time — he had been wanted by the authorities since the day after the radio announcement — but in any event he escaped to the French Embassy on the Saturday. M. Patassé entered the grounds of the Embassy on a moped, dressed in a boubou, according to one report.

Although General Grelombe, the newly appointed Information Minister, has attempted to play down estimates of the casualties of the purge, it is certain that it was very violent. Estimates went as high as 50 people dead and several hundred wounded, mainly resulting from clashes at M. Patassé's residence.

M. Penne flew to Bangui on March 9. The French External Relations Ministry are said to be "examining the affair in the light of France's well known attitude towards political refugees" (France traditionally grants asylum to those who flee their countries for political reasons.) M. Penne went straight into talks with General Kolingba. Those talks were bound to be heated; according to the Information Minister, M. Patassé "is an international criminal and must be handed over ... We are in Bangui, not in Paris."

CSO: 4 00/1015

'AWKWARD ASPECTS' OF FRANCE'S INVOLVEMENT NOTED

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3371, 15 Mar 82 p 692

[Text]

WHAT DO you do when, after having financed one of Africa's embarrassments for several years, you organise a coup d'état by flying in along with your troops the président de rechange: then after a reasonable period of troubled times, an Army General stages his own coup, then one of the politicians to whom you have been giving asylum for five months returns home and boldly pronounces that he is the rightful tenant of power: and then the ruling General razes the temeritous politician's house (and perhaps his political organisation as well) to the ground, and the said politician seeks refuge in your very own embassy in Bangui?

Central Africa appears to be developing its vocation as the arena where France gets shown up for the most awkward aspects of its pretty-near unrivalled intimacy of involvement in the political affairs of those countries to which it is, as the saying goes, linked "culturally, historically, and politically".

It is almost an ironic and flippant reflection to make that France traditionally grants asylum to those who flee their countries for political reasons. In this case, Ange Patassé, a prominent politician, was fleeing from a situation for which the French would be hard pressed to reject successfully at least some responsibility.

A further element of near farce is the demand made by the Central African Information Minister that Ange Patassé must be handed over as an international criminal . . . "we are in Bangui not in Paris". Are those days really gone when Bangui was only a Concorde's jump away from the Elysée Palace for a sparkling spot of hunting?

The new Socialist Government of François Mitterrand will have to wriggle well to sort out the repercussions of the curious case of Ange Patassé. It cannot hand him back, but on this basis, its future interventions in Central African politics will have to recommence in an infinitely more humble way.

CSO: 4700/1015

OAU INTEGRITY SAID TO BE AT STAKE

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3371, 15 Mar 82 p 692

[Text]

DR. ISHAYA AUDU, Nigeria's Foreign Minister, has been quoted from Nairobi as saying that Nigeria could pull its troops out of the Organisation of African Unity peace-keeping force in Chad, if there is no attempt to arrive at a political solution by June 30, as foreseen in the OAU peace plan. There is also concern in OAU circles that the February 28 ceasefire, also part of the OAU plan, should be observed.

All the signs are that, in spite of the presence of OAU troops in a number of strategic locations, such as the town of Ati in central Chad, fighting is still going on. Hissen Habre, the dissident former Defence Minister, has said he is observing the ceasefire, but on the side of the GUNT (Transitional Government of National Unity) there has been no such declaration. Since February 28 Vice-President, Colonel Kamougue, has twice clearly indicated the GUNT's attachment to a military solution, and spoken of efforts being made to recapture the important town of Oum Hadjer, which lies between Ati and the Habré stronghold of Abeché, near the Sudan border. The loss of Oum Hadjer he admitted was due to "military disorganisation" on the part of the GUNT.

The GUNT, in any case, has never accepted the prescriptions made by the OAU at their special Nairobi meeting on Chad in mid-February. The GUNT may be a fragile amalgam of political factions, with only a fictionally united fighting force, but it has one unifying factor: no negotiation with Habre. If that is ever changed, the GUNT would surely collapse.

The GUNT also feel let down by the OAU whose support they had imagined more substantial. President Goukhouni Weddeye, in particular, having gone out on a limb in requesting the Libyans to leave, has been irked, first of all at the limited mandate of the OAU troops, and then at being reminded by the Nairobi meeting that the GUNT was an OAU creation in the first place (i.e. has a slender constitutional claim to power).

It is scarcely surprising therefore that Colonel Gaddafi, after maintaining a discreet silence on Chad since last November, should have referred, in his speech opening the 13th Africa Cup in Tripoli early this month, to the "bitter and bloody struggle presently taking place in Chad," and the fact that, after peace had been achieved, and life spared, everything should collapse after the withdrawal of Libyan troops. This is Gaddafi's strongest card; whatever fears may have been raised by the operation, it did undeniably bring a "Libyan peace" to Chad. If he had not talked of mergers, and been more willing to work with the OAU, the Libyans might still be there.

Although the Libyan leader made no reference to the OAU, what Dr. Audu calls "the integrity of the organisation" is clearly at stake, as much over Chad as on the Sahara question. President Moi has now sent an envoy to Chad, who has, among other things, to discuss the finances of the peacekeeping force, but presumably will also see whether life can be breathed into the OAU peace plan, bearing in mind Dr. Audu's statement: "President Goukhouni's rejection of the peace plan should not be considered final."

CSO: 4700/1015

FRENCH MINISTER COT CALLS SITUATION DETERIORATING DAILY

AB021834 Paris AFP in French 1727 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Text] Paris, 2 Apr (AFP)--The situation in Ndjamena is still very chaotic and is deteriorating daily as far as public services and utilities are concerned, Jean Perre Cot, French minister of cooperation and development, said in Paris on Friday.

During a luncheon organized by the Eurafrican Press Association, the minister said that Chadian Transitional National Union Government [GUNT] was finding it "increasingly difficult to cope with the situation" and added that he himself was not "very optimistic" about the outcome of the situation in Chad.

"France," the minister indicated, "has neither the means nor the desire to solve the problems in Chad as they should be solved by the Chadians themselves or, failing that, by the OAU, but without outside interference." Mr Cot recalled that France supported the OAU's initiatives in Chad and the GUNT is recognized by the OAU as the legal government.

"We have obtained the withdrawal of foreign troops, we have supported the OAU in the deployment of an inter-African force and we are pursuing our reconstruction efforts, but we have no intention of going further," the minister said.

In another development, Mr Cot indicated that the reorganization of France's relations with southern Africa would take time. France, he said, hopes to strengthen its links with the Frontline States.

The minister referred, in this connection, to the cooperation agreement signed with Mozambique and to that which is about to be signed with Angola. France supports the proposed construction of a hydroelectric dam in the northeast of Mozambique, called "Cabora Bassa II" on the Zambezi River which would ensure, Mr Cot stressed, a "degree of independence in the area of energy" for the Frontline States vis-a-vis South Africa.

The minister further recalled that France strictly adhered to the embargo on arms supplies to South Africa and was seeking ways and means of becoming "less involved" in economic exchange with that country.

CSO: 4719/760

BRIEFS

LEADER IN MOROCCO--Rabat, 30 Mar (MAP)--The president of Equatorial Guinea, Mbasogo Nguema Teodoro, arrived in Rabat today on a private visit to Morocco for several days during which time he will conduct talks with the Moroccan monarch, King Hassan II, on the current situation in the African continent and on bilateral relations. [LD301752 Rabat MAP in Arabic 1530 GMT 30 Mar 82]

CSO: 4704/14

BRIEFS

FORMER OFFICIALS IN LAGOS--Lagos, 13 Mar--Two top executives of former Ghanaian President Hilla Limann's Government are reported to be seeking political asylum in Nigeria. The government-owned daily TIMES said today that Kwesi Bossman, former Propaganda Secretary of Mr Limann's party, and Kweku Osei Owusu, former party secretary for the Subim constituency in Ashanti, walked into its office Thursday looking "scared, haggard and unkempt." The men, who were said to have been sleeping under a flyover bridge since they arrived in Lagos on Tuesday, have appealed to President Shehu Shagari and Nigerians for help and support. Describing their ordeal, they told the newspaper they had been under arrest since they surrendered to the police on the appeal of Jerry Rawlings, the former Flight Lieutenant who toppled President Limann on New Year's Eve. They said they had been tortured and questioned at an army camp before they managed to escape. (AFP) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 16 Mar 82 p 15]

IDLE LANDS TAKEOVER, CHIEFS' CONTRIBUTION--The government has announced that it will soon take over all available idle lands in the country for agricultural purposes, Mr Atukwei Okai, Greater Accre Regional Secretary, said in Accra. He said that this formed part of the government's policy of ensuring that Ghanaians cultivated food to feed themselves, instead of depending on aid from abroad. Addressing a gathering of chiefs in the Ga-Adangbe Traditional Area, Mr. Okai regretted that although Ghana had vast land suitable for farming, past governments had failed to work out proper agricultural policies that would mobilise people to undertake farming to feed themselves. Mr. Okai stressed that the PNDC was determined to do away with the "old system of farming from offices by mobilising all available people into the farming sector." Mr. Okai called on all chiefs within the region to make available to the government 100 bags of maize at the end of the present farming season as their contribution towards the success of the agricultural programme, launched by Flt-Lt. Rawlings on March 6. The chiefs assured the Secretary that they had already decided to embark on such projects, and would also provide cassava, plantain and other produce. They however, appealed to the government to provide them with tractors to help them in the project. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3372, 22 Mar 82 p 824]

GBC AFFAIRS--A three man committee has been inaugurated to probe the affairs of the Ghana Broadcasting Corporation [GBC]. Its terms of reference include an inquiry into the operations of the corporation and its general administrative machinery with the view to determining areas of waste especially in the use of assets, finances, stores purchases, current procedures in use as well as possible misuse, embezzlement or misappropriation. The committee will examine any iniquities in the handling of tough matters such s appointments, promotions, training and staff development. It will also study whether the present structure of the corporation gives rise to the problems of the organization or militates against its smooth running. The committee is to make recommendations to the provisional national defense council. The members are Dr Kwasi Botchway of the faculty of law, University of Ghana, Legon; E. A. Nortey, a management and productivity adviser, and Mr C. Y. Dzigah, engineer and system analyst. The committee is expected to finish its work in 2 or 3 months depending on circumstances. The acting director general of the corporation, Mr Kwame Karaikari, who inaugurated the committee today on behalf of the secretary for information, also introduced the members to management and asked them for its cooperation in their work. On behalf of the members, Mr Dzigah said the role of the committee is to look for only facts and in doing this it will not rely on hearsay. The objective he said is by meeting the terms of reference to help review the GBC and make it a better organization. [Text] [AB011940 Accra Domestic Service in English 1800 GMT 1 Apr 82]

GASOLINE SUPPLY ENSURED--The office of the provisional National Defense Council has announced that it has been made aware of public anxiety arising out of long queues at some petrol filling stations in the greater Accra area and certain parts of the country. A statement from the council said this situation has been caused by the inadvertent disruption of crude oil supply from the country's traditional sources and this has necessitated rationing of the stock of finished products to meet the resumption of regular crude oil supply. The statement assured the public that efforts to ensure regular and normal crude oil supplies are well advanced and that the situation would soon return to normal. [Text] [AB301857 Accra Domestic Service in English 1800 GMT 30 Mar 82]

CSO: 4700/1022

SEKOU TOURE SAID TO REMAIN 'NOBODY'S PUPPET'

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3372, 22 Mar 82 p 759

[Text]

GUINEA'S FOREIGN policy has always been characterised by non-conformity. From the first spectacular act of saying "no" to General de Gaulle in 1958, Sékou Touré was the odd man out among the presidents of former French colonies, the one who did not fit into the system. Not surprisingly he sought friendships where he could, some of which lasted, some of which did not. Some wrote him off as hopelessly compromised with the Eastern bloc, but this was to misunderstand his genuine attachment to non-alignment.

On a West African level, the real and painful isolation of Guinea led its president to seek greater unity with a few like-minded neighbours; hence the Guinea-Mali union, and the Ghana-Guinea-Mali union, both of which proved to be more states of mind than practical attempts at mergers. Nonetheless Guinea has continued the experiment with regional groupings — abortively with the grouping of Senegal River States in the late 1960s, more recently with the OMVG (the Organisation for the Development of the Gambia River) and the Mano River Union (MRU).

Guinea has also been one of the main champions of the ECOWAS idea, having been there on the ground floor when the political movement towards ECOWAS started in Monrovia in 1968. Because of practical difficulties arising from the real problems of the Guinea economy and currency, her commitment to all extra-territorial schemes has tended to be restricted, and couched more in the language of future projects, but the manifest good intentions of the Guinea authorities have always been plain. The reconciliations with neighbours in the late 'seventies made the situation easier.

Reaction to President Sékou Touré's latest call for Guinea-Mali integration is therefore likely to be a mixture of fascination and prudent examination. Fascination, in particular, because the old master seems to have lost none of his magic and capacity to inspire. The integration of the two countries, he said, was in the interest of their two peoples as an "historical necessity" (they had in fact always been one) and as a beacon for African unity.

Greater fascination may be aroused by his support for "the dynamic path of the revival of the former Mali" whose present-day lungs are the actual Mali and Guinea. The call to revive the Mali empire, at its height in the 14th and 15th centuries, and which still has a profound cultural imprint on half a dozen West African states, is something that has very rarely been expressed politically.

In practical terms, prudent examination is necessary, simply because past experience has shown how difficult it is to mount projects for uniting any two African countries. Guinea, in particular, with its unconvertible currency, has met insuperable practical problems in any past proposed unions (Mali, Ghana, Sierra Leone). It may be that Mali, on the rebound from its failure to achieve entry to the West African Monetary Union, might agree to try again, but having had de facto convertibility with the franc zone, and the backing of the French franc, even the present improved state of Guinea's finances is hardly likely to be sufficient inducement.

Internationally, Guinea's opening to the West has been much mentioned. In spite of the continuing internal rigidity of the regime, both politically and financially, there has been a progression of investments from all over the world, with the West inevitably leading the way. This has been accompanied by increasingly cordial political relations. With the Americans there has always been a strong connection, only briefly disrupted by the Conakry invasion of 1970. But there was a détente with Western European powers during the 1970s, based above all on the new period of good relations with France inaugurated by President Giscard d'Estaing.

Giscard was partly anxious to show that he was not interested in old Gaullist feuds, and partly interested in the real investment opportunities that Guinea has to offer, above all in the mining sector. This has not been quite the rentrée en force that was possibly expected. Although President Giscard paid an official visit to Guinea, it was never reciprocated, possibly because of the continuing existence of important Guinean opposition elements who presented not only a political embarrassment but a security threat. With President Mitterrand in power, relations have been cool, in spite of the general enthusiasm for the French socialists in Africa. This has been linked to the Socialists' concern for human rights in Guinea. Even so, the slow reorientation has continued. The cordial strengthening of relations with the EEC, once anathema to Sékou Touré in the early 1960s, is one example (see article on page 806).

The increasing emphasis on Islam is also a case in point. The Guinea President's new-found role as mediator in the Iran-Iraq war may be seen as teaming up with the conservatives of the Gulf, or simply an extension of his old non-aligned commitment (keeping out the superpowers). What has surprised more is his absolute alignment against Polisario, officially explained in terms of OAU rules, but also perhaps related to the influence of conservative Islam. Sékou Touré may also be mindful of the fact that in 1984 he is to host the OAU, a condition that causes many to mature their attitudes. Whatever form his political evolution may take, it is still possible to affirm as this journal did in 1970, that Sékou Touré is "nobody's puppet".

CSO: 4700/1015

MISSION TO EEC ATTEMPTS TO OBTAIN INDUSTRIAL AID

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3372, 22 Mar 82 p 806

[Article by Veronica Forrester]

[Text]

SEVEN ministers from Guinea visited the European Commission recently to try to arouse European interest in a major scheme to develop the iron ore reserves at Mount Nimba. The delegation, which was led by the Guinean Minister of Mines, Mr. Ismail Touré, emphasised the enormous iron ore potential of Guinea during talks with EEC commissioners Pisani, Davignon and Ortoli.

Despite the Guinean authorities' confidence that the Mifergui mining scheme can now get off the ground, the financing plan seems far from complete. The total cost of the scheme is estimated at $1,000m. and, according to the Guineans, a third of the funds have still to be found. Moreover, the World Bank, which is supposed to be one of the main backers, appears to have still not made any firm commitments on its involvement in the project (potentially of the order of $200m.).

The Guinean delegation arrived in Brussels soon after hearing reports of EEC interest in providing a $500m. loan to Brazil to develop its iron ore potential. At the beginning of February the Brazilian Planning Minister came to Brussels to discuss the possibility of receiving a loan to develop the resources at Carajas, and subsequently supply iron ore to the EEC. The Brazilian and Guinean projects are thus in direct competition when it comes to marketing in the Community. Both involve high grade ore but reserves in Guinea are larger than those in Brazil. Guinea's reserves at Mount Nimba are alone estimated at 800m. tons. Mr. Touré also pointed out that there are other iron ore reserves in the Simandou range and Guinea has now asked the Community to finance a study of resources there.

EEC experts are weighing up the advantages and disadvantages of both projects. The Brazilian scheme involves substantial investment in infrastructure, notably laying 1,000 kms of railway line and developing port facilities to export the ore. Infrastructure costs in Guinea are substantially less. Mr. Touré emphasised that Guinea has reached an agreement with Liberia over the export of iron ore from the Mifergui scheme. Only 20 kms of additional railway line are needed to link Guinea up to the Liberian railway network and thereby to the Liberian port of Buchanan.

While EEC officials listened with interest to the Mifergui project, they made no commitments. No finance would be available from the Lomé II aid programme for Guinea for this project but the ministers are sounding out the possibility of a loan from the European Investment Bank.

The Guinea delegation also discussed EEC aid allocations under the Lomé II Convention. The Community is currently financing a study of the Konkouré integrated project which involves building a hydro-electric dam on the River Konkouré, which could supply power to an aluminium smelting plant. The aim is to build a 750MW dam which would enable 150-200,000 tons of aluminium to be produced annually at a plant at Fria. The study will not be completed before the end of the year, but the Guinean delegation asked the Commission to help to stimulate interest in the scheme.

The Konkouré project would involve an enormous investment of between $2,000m. and $3,000m. Potential donors include the World Bank, BADEA, Arab Funds, French bilateral aid and assistance from the European Investment Bank. So far initial pledges only cover about a tenth of the total cost.

While the Guinean delegation suggested that talks with aluminium manufacturers were progressing well, they asked EEC Development Commissioner, Edgard Pisani, to organise a meeting with manufacturers to convince them of the desirability of taking part in the Konkouré scheme. Mr. Pisani said he was impressed with the riches of Guinea and hoped to organise such a meeting before the summer, at the same time pointing out that the results of the study would not be known before the end of the year. One major problem experienced in Guinea is the cost of power and which needs to be examined more closely before embarking on the intended production of aluminium. Guinea also wants to export most of the production to the EEC.

Despite the lengthy discussion of large-scale industrial projects, the main thrust of EEC aid to Guinea under Lomé II is in the agricultural sector. Out of the 74m. ecu (1 ecu=about $1.10) allocated to Guinea, 28m. ecu has been earmarked for rural development, 9m. for housing schemes, 9m. for social development covering education and health, 7.5m. for transport, 7.5m. for energy projects and 2m. for the mining sector. The largest agricultural scheme concerns cotton production in Kankan in eastern Guinea. This is an integrated scheme involving cotton and food production. Under the Lomé I Convention, the EEC released 1.6m. ecu and a further 7m. has been earmarked under the Lomé II Convention.

CSO: 4700/1015

BRIEFS

FOREIGN TRADE FIGURES--Guinea Bissau's exports for the first half of 1981 totalled about 4.3m. pounds, according to a recent report from the Ministry of Trade. Industrial, agricultural and sea products headed the list. The main clients were Spain, Senegal and China. Imports for the same period were about 15.5 m. pounds. The main suppliers were Portugal, Sweden, China and the United States, according to the ministry. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3372, 22 Mar 82 p 809]

CSO: 4700/1023

BRIEFS

HASSAN II MESSAGE--A four-man high power delegation arrived in Monrovia today from the Kingdom of Morocco with a special message from King Hassan II to head of state CIC [commander in chief] Samual K. Doe. The delegation, headed by Moroccan Minister of Information, Youth and Sport Dr Abdelwahad Belkeziz, comprised a member of parliament, the special adviser to the Moroccan minister of foreign affairs and the assistant to the minister of information. At the airport to meet the Moroccan delegation were Information Minister Col Gray D. Allison; the charge d'affaires of the Moroccan Embassy, (Abdelaziz Taleh), a special assistant to the information minister, (Elbot Eldon); and the senior deputy chief of protocol, Ibrahim (Duke) among others. Speaking at the VIP lounge, Information Minister Allison commended relations between Liberia and Morocco and expressed the need for communication links between the two countries. The Moroccan information minister thanked Mr Allison and the Liberia Government for the hospitality accorded him and his delegation. [Text] [AB011945 Monrovia Radio ELWA in English 1900 GMT 1 Apr 82]

MONROVIA PROPERTY TAX--The People's Redemption Council has issued Decree No 61 empowering the Monrovia City Corporation to enact all necessary municipal laws and ordinances and collect all real property taxes as may be necessary for city purposes. The decree, which became effective 19 March, states that the city corporation of Monrovia will also perform all other necessary acts that are (?compatible) with the general laws of Liberia. The decree also states that 40 percent of all real property taxes collected by the Monrovia City Corporation should be retained by the city corporation for development and infrastructural projects in the city, while the remaining 60 percent of all real property taxes collected by the city corporation will be deposited into the revenue of the central government, the PRC decree said. The decree further said the collection of real property taxes by the Monrovia City Corporation will take effect as from 1 July 1982. According to the decree, provisions promulgated under the decree applied only to the city corporation of Monrovia and it shall not be construed or interpreted as an amendment, abrogation or change of the unitary [words indistinct] centralize functioning of the government of the republic. [Text] [AB262038 Monrovia Radio ELWA in English 1900 GMT 26 Mar 82]

CSO: 4700/1020

PAUL BERENGER WRITES ON MMM SEARCH FOR MODERATE SOCIALISM

Port Louis LE NOUVEAU MILITANT in French 21 Jan 82 pp 1,4

[Article by Paul R. Berenger, secretary general of the MMM: "Democratic, Nonaligned, and Modern Mauritian Socialism"]

[Text] For 12 years now, and today as yesterday, the MMM [Mauritian Militant Movement] has been militating for democratic, nonaligned and modern Mauritian socialism.

First of all, Mauritian. In its very inspiration.

Since late 1969, our struggle has had its roots in our country's history, which we have revived through communalism.

Since late 1969 we have been saying no to imported models.

For as long as we have existed as a national party, Rodrigues and the other islands which form the Mauritian nation and state have never been forgotten or neglected.

Next, democratic socialism. Profoundly democratic.

Our party was created by children of May 1968 for whom socialism was and remains synonymous with liberty, creativity, authenticity, spontaneity. With life.

Since 1968, the people who 1 year later would create the MMM, condemned the invasion of Czechoslovakia by Soviet tanks after having condemned American aggression in Vietnam.

Since then, we have uncompromisingly denounced those who trample upon liberty, wherever they do it--in Chile, in South Africa, in El Salvador, in Afghanistan, or in Poland--and whatever affiliation they claim.

Today as yesterday, without wanting, for all that, to lecture others, we say that we are going to build socialism in Mauritius with political pluralism and democracy and without witch-hunting.

The more difficult this undertaking, the more unyielding will be our determination.

Nonaligned socialism as well. Fiercely nonaligned with respect to the two superpowers before being of equally fierce independence with respect to all foreign powers.

Since late 1969, we have rejected bloc politics and to the utmost of our ability we have been fighting to put an end to Yalta, at the same time taking our place resolutely at the side of the Third World peoples in the North-South conflict, in the Middle East, in South Africa, in so-called West Africa, and everywhere else where liberty and the rights of Third World peoples are being flouted.

With the object of guaranteeing this nonalignment and this fierce independence, we are giving privileged status to our relations with India, leftist France, Algeria, Libya, Iraq, Canada, Australia, the Scandinavian countries, and tomorrow, with China and Mexico. And it is also with this object, among others, that we are already working on the development of as advanced regional cooperation as possible but with strict respect for respective circumstances and independences.

In the name of nonalignment and this fierce independence, we will not tolerate foreign intervention in the domestic affairs of our country, either today or tomorrow.

Finally, modern socialism. A socialism profoundly and permanently preoccupied with management and efficienty, which endeavors to learn all the lessons of the failures experienced elsewhere and which turns its back on the nationalization of enterprises and the bureaucratization of society in general.

We know that the electorate will ultimately judge us in terms of unemployment and inflation, here as elsewhere, and this in an international context of ruthless competition and in the context of a catastrophic local economic heritage.

It is this aspect of things which explains why, while since late 1969 we have without the slightest ambiguity taken our place in the camp of the workers and their unions, the farmers, fishers and their cooperatives, youth and the unemployed, we go on to say to the business leaders as well--who, under a leftist government in Mauritius, will respect the electorate's verdict--that they, too, will have an important role to play in helping our country, which today is dog-tired and winded, lift its head and make a new start.

Our country can only make this new start within the framework of democratic, nonaligned and modern Mauritian socialism for which we have been militating for 12 years and which the MMM and the PSM [Mauritian Socialist Party] are today preparing to translate into reality after the coming general elections.
9380
CSO: 4719/586

ADMINISTRATION'S HANDLING OF SOME NATIONS SCORED

Port Louis LE NOUVEAU MILITANT in French 30 Jan 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Disgrace and Hope"]

[Text] Last Saturday, in an editorial, we criticized the increasingly disgraceful or servile rout of present Mauritian diplomacy, whether it is a question of our relations with India, socialist France, Algeria, the United States or Great Britain and in particular with respect to Diego Garcia and the islanders uprooted since 1964, and South Africa.

Last Wednesday's verbal and diplomatic clash (reported below) between Professor Upadhyaya, the Indian high commissioner to Mauritius, and the number three man of the PTM/PMSD/CAM/(Transfuges) [Mauritius Labor Party/Mauritian Social Democratic Party/Muslim Action Committee/(Transfuges)] regime, Sir Satcam Boolell, shows how far this rout has gone.

The reception just given Jean-Claude de l'Estrac and Cassam Uteem in Paris and Algiers and the talks that they have just had with the man who will begin his duties as foreign secretary in New Delhi in a few days, are themselves yet another illustration of this increasingly disgraceful or servile rout of present Mauritian diplomacy.

But coming after the visits which Aneerood Jugnauth, Kader Bhayat, Paul Berenger and Jean-Claude de l'Estrac made to Paris and New Delhi in 1981, this reception and these talks also show that beyond the disgrace and servility of present Mauritian diplomacy, there is already hope and dignity.

We repeat: in the concert of nations and in our region, the Island of Mauritius hungers and thirst for regained dignity above all else. But we also repeat: in the wake of this regained dignity will come a policy of nonalignment worthy of the name and much greater foreign economic aid than today, including "old friends" who today have nothing but contempt for the PTM/PMSD/CAM/(Transfuges) regime.

Paris, New Delhi and Algiers are three key capitals today.

Three landmark countries where the PTM/PMSD/CAM(Transfuges) regime meets only with contempt.

And where tomorrow's Island of Mauritius, which will have regained dignity and strength after the coming elections, already has so many sincere and solidary friends.

9380
CSO: 4719/586

PSM LEADER DEPLORES SUGAR WORKERS' LIVING CONDITIONS

Port Louis THE NATION in French 13 Jan 82 p 1

[Report: "Boodhoo Deplores the Inhuman Conditions in the Camps"]

> [Text] The Mauritian Socialist Party [PSM] has made a formal commitment to acquire the territory where the sugar industry camps are located in order to liberate the 25,000 people who live there, if the MMM [Mauritian Militant Movement]/PSM alliance comes to power." This statement was made by Mr Harish Boodhoo, leader of the PSM, during a press conference yesterday.

Flanked by Messrs Karl Offman and Vijay Padaruth, two probable PSM candidates, Mr Boodhoo reported on the situation prevailing in the sugar industry camps. Mr Boodhoo stated that after the abolition of slavery and Mauritius' rise to independence, it is upsetting and revolting for a Mauritian patriot to find that there currently exists a system of disguised slavery in the sugar industry camps. Mr Boodhoo said that according to information obtained from Mr Razack Peeroo, minister of labor, there are 133 camps and 5,338 families living in them; the number of individuals amounts to 25,791.

These persons, added Mr Boodhoo, are considered third-class citizens. According to him, the government has not respected the clause in the country's constitution where mention is made of the freedom and right to citizenship of every Mauritian.

To support his argument, Mr Boodhoo cited a report on living conditions in these camps drafted by Mr H.C. Maudar, senior labor officer. The report, which was submitted to the government on 28 April 1978, notes the inhuman conditions under which 25,000 [as published] people live.

"This is a social class which is disadvantaged, inhibited and deprived of the basic necessities," explained Mr Boodhoo. The leader of the PSM stressed that it is inconceivable and unacceptable for our fellow citizens to live in degrading and inhuman conditions.

He then recalled that he had presented several motions on the condition of the camp inhabitants to the Legislative Assembly. The government, he said, was indifferent to this thorny problem. Mr Boodhoo berated the government for having established a second ad hoc committee presided over by Mr D. Daureeawo last year to study the same problem, while the Maudar report has never been implemented or made public.

9693
CSO: 4719/575

REPORT ANALYZES LATEST UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 28 Jan 82 pp 1, 5

[Report: "56,942 Unemployed Officially Recorded in June '81"]

[Text] The latest issue of the EMPLOYMENT SERVICE STATISTICAL REVIEW, published last 30 December and made public last week, informs that during the months of May and June last year there were 56,942 unemployed officially registered at the employment offices, or a 7-percent increase over the previous month when the number of registered unemployed was 53,048. On the other hand, the report of the Ministry of Employment points out that the largest number of unemployed are recorded in the rural regions.

To the 56,942 persons officially registered during May and June are added the 5,909 persons who already have jobs and were seeking better jobs, thus bringing the number of jobseekers to 62,851. If one takes into consideration the number of workers laid off since June 1981--almost 1,000--due to plant closings and staff reductions at certain companies and the unemployed who are not officially registered, there can be no mistaking that unemployment in Mauritius is on the verge of reaching the alarming figure of 60,000, with all the consequences that such a situation can have on the social life of the country.

During the period involved, the Ministry registered 10,038 new applicants, 4,352 of whom were registering for the first time, and 5,686 of whom were renewing their registrations.

On the other hand, it appears from the Ministry of Employment's report that the majority of the jobless are located in the rural areas where 60 percent of the total unemployed are recorded. The Pamplemousses and Riviere-du-Rempart districts are at the head of the list with 12,596 unemployed, while contrary to what one might expect, Port Louis and the heights of Plaines Wilhe have the lowest unemployment with 6,947 and 6,989 respectively.

Soon 60,000 Unemployed

It was further established that men, numbering 40,089, represent 70.4 percent of the total unemployed. Of this number, 7.8 percent are under 18 years of age.

In terms of age groups, 37,125 of the unemployed are in the 15 to 24-year-old range. Of this number, 56 percent are of working age and are in the 18 to 24-year-old bracket, which includes the majority of those leaving college and seeking their first jobs. The unemployed who are over 30 and can be considered to have family responsibilities number 19,977; of these 6,043 are men and 4,934 women.

Regarding qualifications, 59 percent of the persons registered with employment offices have completed studies to level six. Holders of the SC [expansion unknown] or an equivalent degree represent 13 percent of the total unemployed, or 6,077. Those who failed the Senior or GCE [expansion unknown] examinations and registered number 5,849. Holders of the HSC [expansion unknown] and Advanced Level GCE degree number 218, while 770 of the unemployed failed these examinations.

The Ministry of Employment's report also takes note of five Mauritians who accepted employment in Qatar during the period of May-June 1981, and 30 others who were supposed to leave for Saudi Arabia the first week of July 1981.

9693
CSO: 4719/575

BRIEFS

DEMOGRAPHIC FIGURES REPORTED--The Mauritian population will have reached the 1 million mark in 1984 if the current rate of population growth is maintained. This is what emerges from the projections made by Mr Mark May, a British actuary, in a review of the National Pension Plan published last week (see LA MAURICIEN, 23 January 1982). According to Mr May's calculations, in 40 years, that is in 2022, the population will number 1,671,054. Mr May bases his calculations on the current growth rate. The projections were made for 10-year period in 15-year age intervals, in other words, from 0 to 14 years, 15-29 years, 30-44 years, and so on, but for actuarial calculations, Mr May reduced the projection to 5 years and the age breakdowns to 5-year intervals also. The projections for the year 1992 anticipate a 20-percent increase which will decline in future decades; thus, an increase of 14 percent over 1992 in 2002, of 13 percent over 2002 in 2012, and of 10 percent over 2012 in 2022. The overall increase in the Mauritian population by 2022 will be 73 percent. Also there will be more women than men. The 5-6,000 [figures as published] ratio of men to women seems to be maintained according to Mr May's projections. [Text] [Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 29 Jan 82 p 1]

9693
CSO: 4719/575

BRIEFS

CABORA BASSA ELECTRICITY DISTRIBUTION--Maputo, 16 Mar--Electricity from the giant Cabora Bassa dam in Mozambique could be supplied to black states in Southern Africa as a result of talks between the governments of Mozambique and Portugal, which controls the company running the dam. At present, the dam's production of 11,000 megawatts is used exclusively by South Africa and Mozambique, with Mozambique itself consuming just 7 per cent of the total. The Mozambican news agency AIM quoted Energy Minister Antonio Branco as saying on his return from talks in Lisbon last week that the possibility of supplying neighboring black states was one of the topics discussed. Most likely clients would be Zimbabwe, Mozambique's western neighbor, whose growing industrial sector and rural electrification plans are demanding more current, and Malawi, which borders Mozambique on the north. AIM said Mr Branco and the Portuguese also talked about the possible export of Mozambican coal to Portugal and Portuguese participation in oil prospecting in the African state, a former colony of Lisbon. In addition, Portuguese engineering firms were to increase their supplies of railway wagons and other industrial equipment to Mozambique, AIM said. (AFP) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 16 Mar 82 p 7]

AGRICULTURAL COOPERATION WITH USSR--Moscow, 13 Mar--Mozambique and the Soviet Union plan to increase their cooperation in the agricultural sector, following negotiations that ended yesterday, TASS news agency reported. Projects to be assisted include cotton growing and the establishment of four state farms in Nampula Province, TASS said. (AFP) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 16 Mar 82 p 29]

CSO: 4700/1023

MOJA-G LEADER DISCUSSES EVENTS OF 30 JULY 1981

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3373, 22 Mar 82 pp 761-763

[Interview with leader of Movement for Justice in Africa-Gambia (MOJA-G) by Nii K. Bentsi-Enchill]

[Text] Q: Some people believed you were dead, you are alive and well. It was known you were shot. What happened?

A: I was shot in the morning of the coup by the police and military supporters of the government. We had gone to investigate the massacre of so many civilians around the police station, and it was under these circumstances that I was shot. There were a lot of rumours that I am dead but I was seriously shot in the stomach. With the interest of the people and with the work of the people I was able to survive this critical wound. My survival has nothing to do with me personally. The credit goes to the people, to the sympathy and activity of the people.

Q: You said you heard some people were getting shot around the police station. Who was in the station, was it some kind of organised resistance?

A: There was no organised resistance, but it was some of the high-ranking police and military officers who had barricaded themselves in the police headquarters and were going out kidnapping and murdering civilians. We went there as a result of the information that many people had been killed.

Q: When were they just barricaded in there and when were they going out?

A: This was in the morning, in the first six hours of the coup. I arrived there around two o'clock.

Q: Do you think the person who shot you knew it was you?

A: Whoever shot me knew who he wanted to kill. It was sniper fire. After I was shot I was taken away to the hospital, where again the people took care of me. I had an operation, then two days after, with the approach of these Senegalese special commandos to the hospital area, I was smuggled out of the hospital, again by the people.

Q: What kind of people?

A: These are ordinary people, poor people. They helped me to get out of the country to come to Europe. Our movement works for the people, in the interest of the people, and it is based in and supported by the people.

Q: What were these special commandos you were talking about?

A: These were Senegalese squads that had existed in the country since their first intervention. After the official withdrawal, Senegal had maintained special military commandos to intervene in any serious political development in the country. They couldn't operate on the first day of the coup because of the overwhelming support and sympathy of the people. But when the Senegalese began fighting in the border areas, the commandos were able to start their activities.

Q: What kind of activities?

A: They were making commando raids into the population, in isolated areas of the city and surrounding suburbs and killing people. They would open automatic fire on where civilians had gathered, in their houses. Most of the earlier killings of the civilians were carried out by these commando groups. The Senegalese and the Gambian government sends out propaganda that the civilians were killing each other, but this is not true. In fact, in the early days of the coup there were no incidents among the civilian population, there is no record of civilians killing each other. The deaths among the population caused by the population is insignificant. There were one or two isolated incidents, but the bulk, 99 per cent of those who were killed, was mostly carried out by the special Senegalese commandos who were in the country, and by their military forces, and of course the high-ranking Gambian police and field force officers who had barricaded themselves in the headquarters.

Q: Why do you say these special commandos had been left there?

A: This goes back to October, 1980, the first mass-scale Senegalese intervention in this country. In October 1980, the opposition of the mass of our people to the regime had developed to such a high level that both the Gambian and the Senegalese government were afraid of a mass revolt. And the Senegalese government used the developing rejection by our people of this corrupt government. The only way they could save this government, and also carry out principally their strategy of annexation, was to make an intervention in the country. And this was their first response, their first test of annexation.

Q: Did the Gambian government call in the Senegalese troops?

A: This is very controversial. You see, the Gambian government was very panic stricken with the developments during this period. But more panic stricken were the Senegalese: since they had been following the developments in the country they also thought that the masses were beginning to revolt, so, uninvited they came into the country. It was a virtual invasion of this country.

When they came into The Gambia, we were under arrest at this time and in the police station. But even in the central police headquarters of the country, they had no information of the coming of the Senegalese. They were surprised, like us, when they got the information that the Senegalese had occupied the airport, the borders and so on. It was an uninvited invasion of the country by the Senegalese.

This can be seen in the conflicting communiqués of the press reporting of the Senegalese presence in the country. Jawara said the Senegalese were in the country to carry out a military exercise, which was a lie. And the Senegalese refuted this by saying they were invited into the country to make a counteraction against a possible coup d'état.

Q: There was also some mention of Libyan involvement?

A: Yes, that was mentioned, but this can be seen in the context of the Senegalese pressure on The Gambia in the field of foreign affairs. It was the Senegalese government that had pressurised the Gambian government to get involved in this campaign of slander against the Libyan government and people.

Q: You said you were detained at the time with other members of the Movement for Justice in Africa, MOJA.

A: We were arrested and charged with the possession of arms and ammunition, and of managing an unlawful society. This could also be understood in the context of the high political tension that existed in this country at this period, because of the activity of the Movement for Justice in Africa and because of the overwhelming support of the masses of the oppressed people for the activity of this movement, the government thought MOJA was the main vehicle for the coming revolt of the masses. So they came and arrested us in the morning, that is the same day as the Senegalese intervention in the evening. The second day we were charged. It was proved in the courts that we were not in possession of arms and ammunition but of ceremonial bows and arrows, tourist artifacts. The count of managing an unlawful society: MOJA was made illegal publicly two days after our arrest, but it was backdated to one day before our arrest. Even the policemen who came to arrest us had no understanding of what charges they were arresting us for. Even in the courts, the senior police officers who effected this arrest, said they had no information of this banning. In fact the banning of this movement was announced on the radio two days after our arrest. So it was only a dictatorial method of neutralising us.

Q: They sought to neutralise MOJA by arresting six of you?

A: They came to our house and arrested five other people, innocent. Over fifty armed police officers came to my house, they maltreated my old mother, terrorised the whole compound, barricaded the streets, maltreating innocent spectators, in the hope of neutralising the movement, but it turned out that this was even a blessing because it exposed the undemocratic facade of this Jawara regime.

Q: You speak of political tension at the time and the government thinking MOJA was the vehicle for the coming revolt of the masses. What had caused this tension?

A: This tension that had developed by the middle of 1980 has its roots back twenty years in time. The development of this neo-colonial Gambian state had accumulated a heavy burden on our peasant and worker population. Our people were no longer willing to continue to suffer, because their living conditions had worsened. The country was under conditions of near starvation. There was no medical attention for the increasing disease suffered by workers. Their salaries had stagnated, inflation had gone to almost 500 per cent. Corruption had become a way of life for the ruling clique of the Jawara regime.

Some people had no schools to go to; prostitution had increased, even child prostitution which was unknown in this country; alcoholism as a result of the tourist industry had developed; the total absence of government investment in the countryside, and increasing taxation of the population of the countryside, almost 80 per cent of the nation; all this had reached a stage in which our people had no alternative but to break their chains. It was at the signals of the breaking of these chains that the government began to intensify its campaign of terrorism against our population, and against MOJA which symbolises the aspirations of this people for a society free from oppression, a new, just society.

The period of our arrest was the climax of all this regime represented. The signals of this revolt were manifested in mass strikes by the workers; the increasing victimisation and brutalisation of striking workers.

Q: What examples?

A: The Public Works Department, the Gambia Utilities Corporation, the workers in the groundnut mills at Denton Bridge, at mills in the countryside. Once before there was also a big manifestation of the women at the banning of the use of charcoal. The threat for the housewives was not even being able to cook the small food they could gather.

Q: But this was presented as a forestry conservation measure.

A: Yes, but Jawara knows more than anybody else that the cultivation of groundnuts over hundreds of years is the direct, immediate cause of the deforestation of our countryside.

Another manifestation that has increased seriously in frequency is corruption. There was hardly a week that passed without the discovery of thousands and thousands of dalasi that had disappeared from state coffers and the private institutions. The amounts and the frequency reached such proportions that almost everyday people talk of corruption. Over 22 million dalasis disappeared with the Rural Development Project (phase one); in the Gambia Port Authority, in medicine and health, in the Ministry of Agriculture.

These factors made the masses to come finally to the bitter decision that they must either survive as decent working citizens, or revolt against the main causes of this catastrophe.

Q: The Senegalese intervention in late 1980 prevented this revolt?

A: It only postponed this revolt. One cannot say there was going to be an immediate revolt that was aborted by the Senegalese intervention. The accumulated frustration of the masses of our people had reached such a high degree that with or without the Senegalese intervention this frustration was bound to explode, and in July it exploded, spontaneously.

"Sanyang was an accident"

Q: How spontaneously? There was the factor of Kukoi Samba Sanyang . . .

A: Kukoi Samba Sanyang in terms of the situation in July is very insignificant as a person, because all the factors for the explosion existed. Samba Sanyang was an insignificant catalyst. Samba Sanyang's activity was an accident, I think accident is a better word than insignificant. It was accidental because all the accumulated frustration of the people throughout the reign of this Jawara regime was bound to explode. The objective conditions for revolt were present all-along; the state power itself was so discredited and the masses were so dissatisfied with the state of things that any band of disorganised people, however uninitiated in politics, could have shaken the regime to its foundation as was shown in July 1981. Samba Sanyang and his band, an unknown group of politicians, by coming up in July, were able not only to shake the regime to its foundation but also even make us lose our national sovereignty. This shows how discredited the Jawara regime was, how dissatisfied the people were, and how weak the state apparatus was.

Q: You say the disorganised nature of Sanyang's intervention caused among other things the loss of The Gambia's sovereignty. What was the cost in human terms?

A: Innumerable. It cannot be properly quantified. The great majority of our people, in spite of the disorganised nature of the July revolt, who came and embraced it, with the thinking that their hopes were going to be realised, and who sacrificed their lives in resistance against the Senegalese invaders who showed that people had become so frustrated with the Jawara regime that all they wanted was change at all costs, no matter what. They knew they didn't want what they had; they didn't know what was coming; but they would rather gamble and do away with what they had than stay with it.

In spite of the bankruptcy of the Supreme Revolutionary Council, that is Sanyang and his bunch of people who constituted the new regime, the bankruptcy of their programme, in spite of the fact that even with their control of the radio they had no concrete programmes that identified with the needs and aspirations of our people, hundreds of thousands of Gambians came out to jubilate, to make the coup their own and were ready to sacrifice their lives in the face of the superior arms of the Senegalese invaders. This, we believe, was an indication of how discredited the Jawara regime was, how weak the state apparatus was, how much our people wanted change, even an unknown future under the reign of Samba Sanyang.

Q: By your critical position with regard to Sanyang, do you mean you had no political connection with him before July?

A: We hold a critical view of the developments of July. In fact we condemn the coup. But then, not because we support the Jawara regime, but because we know that a coup would play into the hands of the Senegalese expansionists, and this would be utilised to annex our country. Prior to this coup we existed as a strong political force to reckon with in this country. But we had no connection whatsoever with the planning of this coup.

As a movement, we have a view on the nature of the problem in the country, and the nature of the solution that differs from the rest of the political opposition, more so this Gambia Socialist Revolutionary Party of Dr. George. After the coup we recognised that the country was now faced with a danger, an experience in its recent neocolonial history. And as responsible and progressive citizens we had to stand up to the massacre of our people, we had to join our people in defending our nation's sovereignty against the brutal murders carried out since the beginning of the Senegalese intervention.

Whilst taking a distance from Sanyang's group and its amateurish revolt, we draw a strong line of demarcation between the coup and the intervention of Senegalese forces. For us, the coup, an internal matter, is a very different thing from the resistance. While we disassociate ourselves from the coup, we are proud to identify very strongly, as even having led resistance to the Senegalese invaders. The right to self-determination of our people, the Gambian nation's sovereignty are sacred rights we believe must be defended.

Q: How did the population respond to the news of the approach of the Senegalese troops?

A: The Gambian population had a heroic stand against the Senegalese military intervention. Our population, armed and unarmed, stood up heroically against an overwhelming military machine and lost so many lives. They knew they were going to lose their lives, but the love of their country, of their dignity, the rejection and hatred of the regime that has oppressed them for over eighteen years made them face death as a sacrifice for their nation. We are very proud of the heroic stand of our people. The history of our country will from now on be guided by this heroic resistance and determination of our people for freedom and a more democratic existence.

Q: The Gambian and Senegalese governments have insisted that most of the killings were caused by Gambians, that Gambians were killing Gambians.

A: It is in the propaganda interests of the Senegalese invaders and the Gambian rulers to give a picture to the world that there existed some anarchy and massacres of the civilian population to justify their intervention. But the whole population ridicules this propaganda because they know that until the start of the killing by Senegalese commando groups particularly in the Kombos area, apart from the killings in Banjul by these high-ranking police officers, and the killings by the Senegalese army, there was no killing by the civilian population, except very very few exceptional cases.

Q: The official estimate of people killed was 500; the high unofficial estimates have said 1,000. What do you say?

A: I believe the victims must be around 2,000. It is not in the interests of the Senegalese government, principally, to give high victim rates for their intervention. But it is known that as yet, the hundreds of people that disappeared have not been accounted for. There exist mass graves dug by the Senegalese in the Kombo areas, some bodies were sent for burial in remote areas of Senegal . . .

Q: I was told of heavy fighting outside Banjul at Somita and Kartong (that is, apart from at Brikama).

A: There were heavy casualties there and in southern Senegal in the Casamance border region, because there the Senegalese used heavy weapons against defenceless civilians. Tanks, grenade-launchers, bazookas, mounted machine guns were used. The resistance in these areas was not an armed one. It was the resistance of villagers using sticks, cutlasses and stones. The masses had mobilised themselves against the intrusion of the Senegalese and had made barricades on border routes. The only way the Senegalese could penetrate was by killing the civilian population.

Q: The official Senegalese death toll was 33.

A: It is in the propaganda interests for domestic consumption that the Senegalese would lower their death rates. But it is known that many innocent Senegalese soldiers were also killed, hundreds of them.

Q: The July 30 coup attempt has been characterised as wild and disorganised, full of looting.

A: It is a fact that there was looting as in all upheavals — dispossessed people try definitely to get themselves as many material gains out of social disorder. But one specific thing we are proud of is that the looting in The Gambia had a definite political character: none of the government-owned stores, the National Trading Co., were touched. Only stores owned by Lebanese and foreign companies who for hundreds of years had begun by buying and selling of our forefathers, then moved to buying and selling, importing cheap goods and selling them at expensive prices; foreign companies notorious for their exploitation of our people, these were the targets of the looting. This looting was just on the first day, because civilian guards, in spite of the amateurish nature of the coup, were able to put a stop to this looting. The looting was a political expression of a dispossessed people against the exploiter class.

Q: I heard there was looting by the Senegalese soldiers.

A: The Senegalese soldiery, employed by a state that is almost at the point of bankruptcy, is also a very poorly paid army. So in a conventional army of its type it was only to be expected. People were not surprised that when they came in, there was undisciplined, mass looting by the Senegalese; for them it was like war booty. But not only looting: on August 3, the female gardeners around the Stream Corner outside Banjul made an appeal to their Alkalo broadcast over Radio Syd, then controlled by the Senegalese soldiers, that if the government did not stop the Senegalese soldiers from molesting them, they would not go to their gardens.

The Gambian people know the government cares very little about their interests, much less about their lives. This was shown, very ridiculously, when on August 4 President Jawara made his first press conference in The Gambia since July 30, broadcast live over Radio Syd. The first two decisions he made were that a commission for looted goods was appointed, and also a commissioner for outside aid, foreign aid. This shows very clearly that the Jawara regime, given its established servility to foreign capital, values the interests of goods looted from foreign exploiter merchants more than the lives of our long-suffering people. Instead of constituting a commission for missing people, he was more interested in the recovery of missing property.

Q: The government justified the military intervention in terms of a 1965 agreement.

A: That can only be an excuse. This confederation, is more a question of fundamental economic interest that dates back to the 1800s and the scramble for Africa, the struggle between the French and the English to control this strategic piece of land. Even before that, in the struggle to kidnap slaves, this has been an area of contention between various imperialists as an avenue of penetration to the hinterland. It was temporarily settled in the partition of Africa, but the economic struggle between these imperialist colonial powers continued. In the 1960s this economic struggle to control The Gambia was transferred from the colonial powers to their neo-colonial rulers: this government in Senegal headed by Senghor, and Jawara's government in The Gambia. Since 1962, given the size of Senegal's population, the size of their neo-colonial economy, it has always pressured The Gambia into accepting the strategy of annexation.

It is interesting to note that in all the public statements since 1962 until the day of the coup, Jawara, has totally opposed all idea of immediate confederation or immediate association. But the July event was the immediate factor that gave the Senegalese the chance of resolving through military means what they had found difficult to achieve peacefully. The context of annexation cannot be justified by the signing of this treaty which was imposed on our people, never ratified by Parliament, and which specifically stated the case of external aggression on The Gambia and Senegal. But we know this was one of the military ploys, in the event of any internal development in The Gambia, or of any conflict between the two neo-colonial states, the Senegalese would use this as a pretext for intervention.

The second phase of this treaty was that after 1980, a new treaty was secretly signed in Senegal to give more favourable conditions for any pretext for the Senegalese to intervene and annex this country. The Senegalese realised the government had totally lost credibility, that the people had disowned this regime. The only thing to do to fool the outside world was to update the old treaty in a secret new one to give immediate legal justification to the annexation of this country. This confederation was imposed.

Jawara regime not united

Q: Aren't there elements in the Jawara regime who can profit from the confederal arrangements?

A: Of course yes. The Jawara regime is not united, it is pregnant with so many factions with interests to safeguard, with a base exterior to the country. The faction that has now virtually taken control is the faction that over the last five years has been an agent of the Senegalese state inside The Gambia.

Q: Do you characterise this faction in an ethnic way, a political way, or both?

A: There is a political, an ethnic and a bureaucratic character to this Senegalese fifth column that has been very active in this country during the last five years. On the ethnic side, you have a small clique of reactionary Woloff chauvinists in the administration, in the PPP, in the security side of the bureaucracy. It is this group that has now virtually taken over power to oversee the annexation of the country. It does not mean there are not cross-ethnic interests. But the core is this bunch of reactionary Woloffs.

Q: How does this relate to domestic Senegalese politics?

A: A discussion of this confederation requires the understanding that inside Senegal there are certain factors that make it extremely important for the resolution of The Gambia's existence. Principally, the Senegalese state for the past ten years has been experiencing serious economic crisis. In this period the crisis has come to near-climax. Any change in The Gambia, any revolt of the masses against the government will definitely have its consequences in Senegal. In this state of political and economic crisis in Senegal, it would not serve their expansionist interests to see a Gambia that is democratic and progressive.

CSO: 4700/1015

JOINT SENEGALESE-SAUDI COMMUNIQUE ISSUED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 10 Mar 82 p 15

[Joint Senegalese-Saudi communique concerning Senegalese President Abdou Diouf's official visit to Saudi Arabia on 7-9 March 1982]

[Text] At the invitation of His Majesty Khalid ibn 'Abd al-Aziz Al Sa'ud, king of Saudi Arabia, His Excellency Abdou Diouf, president of the Republic of Senegal, made an official visit to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia from 12 to 14 Jumada I, 1402 of the Hegira, corresponding to 7 to 9 March 1982.

The kingdom's illustrious guest and the delegation accompanying him were warmly welcomed by the Saudi Government and people, who expressed their profound gratitude to His Excellency President Diouf and the brother Senegalese people for the support they have always given to the just Arab and Islamic causes in all areas.

His Excellency President Abdou Diouf and His Majesty King Khalid ibn 'Abd al-Aziz Al Sa'ud held talks that took place in the spirit of the fraternity and understanding that link the two Moslem countries.

On that occasion, they proceeded with a broad exchange of views on current international problems, with emphasis on the strengthening of Islamic solidarity, Arab-African cooperation, and issues related to bilateral Senegalese-Saudi relations and peace in the world, particularly in the Middle East and Africa.

The following participated in the talks:

His Highness Prince Fahd ibn 'Abd al-Aziz Al Sa'ud, crown prince and deputy prime minister.

His Royal Highness Prince 'Abdallah ibn 'Abd al-Aziz Al Sa'ud, second deputy prime minister and commander of the National Guard.

His Royal Highness Prince Sultan ibn 'Abd al-Aziz Al Sa'ud, minister of defense and aviation.

His Royal Highness Prince Nayif ibn 'Abd al-Aziz Al Sa'ud, minister of interior.

His Royal Highness Prince Sa'ud al-Faysal, minister of foreign affairs.

Sheikh Muhammad 'Ali Aba al-Khayl, minister of finance and national economy.

Sheikh Ahmad Zaki Yamani, minister of petroleum and natural resources.

Sheikh Hisham Muhyi al-Din Nazir, minister of planning.

Sheikh 'Abd al-Wahab 'Abd al-Wasi', minister of pilgrimage affairs and religious trusts, and several members of the Saudi Government.

On the Senegalese side:

His Excellency Moustapha Niasse, minister of state for foreign affairs.

His Excellency Ousmane Seck, minister of economy and finance.

His Excellency Mamadou Toure, minister of plan and cooperation.

His Excellency Moustapha Cisse, Senegalese ambassador to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

His Excellency Moustapha Cisse [name repetition as published], deputy chairman of the National Assembly, and other high government officials.

His Excellency President Abdou Diouf and His Majesty King Khalid ibn 'Abd al-Aziz Al Sa'ud were delighted at the strengthening of relations between the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and the Republic of Senegal in every area. In that connection, the two delegations agreed to continue efforts by their two countries to intensify those fraternal relations, particularly in the cultural, economic, and political areas, and to strengthen understanding and cooperation between Islamic countries and between African and Arab countries, which are struggling to safeguard their political and economic independence and preserve their cultural values, as well as to bring about a world of justice and peace. His Excellency President Abdou Diouf spoke to His Majesty King Khalid ibn 'Abd al-Aziz Al Sa'ud concerning the establishment of the confederation between Senegal and The Gambia, which is aimed at developing further the many ties that unite those two brother countries. His Majesty King Khalid warmly saluted that initiative and expressed the hope that the objectives sought within the framework of that confederation would be achieved.

His Majesty King Khalid ibn 'Abd al-Aziz discussed the reasons underlying the establishment of the Gulf Cooperation Council and the actions that have been carried out since the founding of that organization to serve the interests of the region's peoples in peace, security, and prosperity.

His Excellency President Abdou Diouf reaffirmed his country's support for that initiative and expressed wishes for the council's complete success.

His Majesty King Khalid ibn 'Abd al-Aziz and His Excellency President Abdou Diouf examined the situation that prevails in the Middle East. In that connection, they reiterated their condemnation of Israel's acts of expansionist aggression and reaffirmed the need for Israel to evacuate all Arab territories occupied since 1967, including the city of Jerusalem, and to recognize the Palestinian people's inalienable right to self-determination under the aegis of the PLO, their legitimate and sole representative. They renewed their condemnation of the aggressive actions in southern Lebanon as well as Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and the Golan Heights. They considered that those measures, which are disapproved of by the international community, are null and void, and they asked all states to comply with the resolutions recently adopted on that subject by the UN General Assembly by enforcing the called-for sanctions against Israel.

His Excellency President Abdou Diouf was careful to stress his country's total support for the eight-point Arab peace plan, which has been approved by most of the world's countries that love peace and justice.

His Majesty King Khalid ibn 'Abd al-Aziz and His Excellency President Abdou Diouf condemned the presence of foreign forces in Afghanistan and demanded their complete withdrawal from that country to allow the Afghan people to choose the type of government appropriate to them, free of all outside pressure. This would insure the return by Afghan refugees to their country.

The two parties are convinced that such a solution is the most appropriate for guaranteeing international security and peace in keeping with the right of all peoples to live in peace and security.

In discussing the problems related to complete achievement of the African continent's liberation, His Majesty the king of Saudi Arabia and His Excellency the president of the Republic of Senegal renewed the commitment by their governments to contribute to the elimination of colonial domination and apartheid in Africa. In that spirit, they reiterated the total support by the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and the Republic of Senegal for the just struggle being carried on by the liberation movements in southern Africa and considered it urgent that the entire territory of Namibia, including the Walvis Bay area, become independent.

The two delegations expressed their concern at the presence on that continent of forces from outside Africa, whose objective is to destabilize the African states in order to establish regimes loyal to them and scorning the African peoples' aspirations for peace and development.

At the conclusion of his visit, His Excellency President Abdou Diouf expressed his profound gratitude and that of his accompanying delegation to His Majesty King Khalid ibn 'Abd al-Aziz, His Royal Highness Crown Prince Fahd ibn 'Abd al-Aziz, the royal family, and the brother Saudi Government and people for the warm and friendly welcome shown them during their visit within the framework of the great traditional friendship existing between the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and the Republic of Senegal. His Excellency President Abdou Diouf invited His Majesty King Khalid ibn 'Abd al-Aziz to visit Senegal. His invitation was accepted with pleasure, and the date of the visit will be determined later through diplomatic channels.

11798
CSO: 4719/696

HOPE FOR HEALING SPLIT VOICED IN PRO-BOTHA COMMENTARY

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 3 Mar 82 p 10

[Perspective Column by Willem de Klerk: "Is this the Epitaph?"]

[Text] Today I am writing from a very personal point of view; candidly and directly I want to say that for me it is not a matter of what people are involved in the Nationalist Party split no matter how close or how far some of them are apart. Surely all of us have positive and negative relationships in both camps.

This is not a matter of blind loyalty to the Nationalist Party or to any other Afrikaans institution. Neither is it a matter of flighty ideals such as unity, reform, tradition or whatever...

For me the basic rule of measure is the interest of the Afrikaner people as a first and last consideration regardless of what other considerations of principle are put aside in between.

The interests of the Afrikaner people include such things as preservation of identity, a voice and survival placed in the reality in which the people exist; participation and initiative in the political developments of the fatherland; honesty, wisdom, freedom, sobriety and all the other good things which can be said of a people; putting into practice their religious convictions even in their politics.

The Afrikaner's uprightness, his open outlook, his responsibility and fitting pride and modesty, his choice of a meaningful future... all this is what involves me in political journalism.

Gamble

When I measure the most recent turns in Afrikaner politics by this, my honest deductions are these: (This also represents the political views of DIE TRANSVALER).

The schism or splintering, or whatever you want to call it, was an unavoidable and necessary political event. Differences in emphasis definitely developed into differences in points of departure. Time is forcing us to the cross-roads and daring decisions, because urgency, facts and finality demand dynamic action. Things in the Nationalist Party cannot go on like this indefinitely. One group has started an effort to neutralize the other and doubletalk, vagueness, attempts to accommodate, to filch and to outmaneuver each other has determined the pace. This is exactly what has caused confusion. For the sake of keeping together we have started to gamble with our credibility, but in order to practice responsible politics this had to reach the breaking point. For the sake of being honest with the voters, with all the peoples in the country and with the world we have been forced to make a choice and therefore to split. This is a sad day. I have personally pleaded for Afrikaner unity in writing and in talks for many years; I have taken risks for Afrikaner unity and I have been humbled for Afrikaner unity. But for the last 2 years it has been clear to me that Afrikanership has been coming out with the call for the unavoidable further family confrontation in the Nationalist Party.

Credit

Leaders on both sides are credited with having cut the Gordian knot. The shudder felt throughout the nation can only have a purifying effect.

Frankly I side with the policy choices of Nationalist Party leaders of the P. W. Botha cabinet who have refused to be intimidated by their colleagues under the leadership of Dr A. P. Treurnicht. This is not something like choosing a style. It was 4 months ago that I spent 9 years of my political journalistic career advocating what is now being called reform. Then everybody in the Vorster cabinet scheptically treated that as deviation. My point of view (at that time they referred to it as "progressivism.") was that drastic changes had to be made in what was then traditional policy. This progressivism [or enlightened policy] centered around the basic fact that, besides teh necessary policy of separateness, togetherness must also be expanded dramatically if the Afrikaner and other national groups want to survive.

This is what the present split is all about... a rejection of the practical implications of togetherness.

Demands

Viewed against the background of the national and international facts available to us the Afrikaner must, in my opinion, follow the following policy as his first choice for the sake of his love for his people's future, for his country and for his accounting to God and the people. If there is no progress in this then there are other alternative choices such as the radical regional separation, although this entails greater risks.

1. The demand of white self-determination and freedom of our own existence is an non-negotiable right concerning which we are ready to do hard bargaining and to force a confrontation if we cannot settle the matter in any other way.

2. Have whites, coloreds and Asiatics of South Africa share one citizenship in one fatherland, in one state, with one government which is not a classic Westminister type unitary state, but three communities which, for the sake of each other's interests, maintain self-determination over their own communities and regions at all levels of government, but also maintain co-responsibility at all levels in decision making about common interests. In actuality this is a form of "healthy sharing of power." However, in order to avoid misunderstanding we will delete this word and we will use the words co-responsibility or joint authority.

3. On a totally different plane, co-responsibility must be practiced between the republic and the black states in a confederation which, through its state councils, participates in decision making processes on matters of common interests within a voluntary association of each state without sacrificing self-determination in any shape or form.

4. Besides having their own say in local administration, urban blacks must have meaningful lines of connection with their own states, but they must also have means to be in touch and have a voice with authorities and districts whose collaboration is needed to provide financial, administrative and technical help to their cities. They can organize as a national body, be linked up as a branch of the confederation, if consultations move in that direction.

5. Discrimination is unacceptable and must disappear, save for agreed-to legal stipulations regarding differentiation of communities.

6. Because togetherness cannot become so sectioned as to have us live in compartments some of the facilities, contact situations, coexistence and working and playing together are accepted as being typical South African. We will have to get over all sorts of irritating measures and over-sensitive reactions.

7. There will have to be a labof order of things along the lines of Wiehahn and Riekert and that should go hand in hand with a vigorous industrial decentralization, an imaginative expansion of growth points in or near black states, meaningful encouragement of industralists to collaborate with each other, projects which can be tackled together and which provide advantages for all those involved in them, an economic development program on a regional basis, and in general a diversity of projects (a development bank, small business undertakings, housing, education, training, etc.) for improving the quality of life in South Africa and paving the way to prosperity and equal opportunities.

Roots

This is the essence of what the split is all about. The Treurnicht people are saying no to the underlying idea of the aforementioned seven points.

As long as the Nationalist Party of today promotes these seven points (be it in acc ordance to other formulations, emphasis and methods) in my view it deserves Afrikaner support for the sake of Afrikaner principles and self-preservation.

Those who do not support this philosophy must not be screamed at and driven to a precipice. They are to remain very much with us (strong and upstanding loyal Afrikaners); people who through logical arguments, persuasive work, constructive political meetings and confrontations, remain linked to the Afrikaner corps' search for solutions. We must preserve our candor with each other in politics and in other Afrikaner organizations.

This political split will be permeating to the roots of each local Afrikaner. If bitterness is rampant, if the Reconstituted Nationalist Party's ace-policy is avoided, if this dispute is kept away from our Afrikaner churches and organizations and these are not also torn from each other in the process, if mutual respect and high level political activity is practiced in matters of principle... if these things can be brought about, then two dominant Afrikaner political parties (the Nationalist Party and the Treurnicht party) can place the two choices along each other and moreover our politics can profit from that.

Dog-Eat-Dog

Of course it all depends on what kind of alliance and policy the break-aways are going to maintain. Who is going to swallow whom in the so called rightist camps? They are already keeping eyes on each other.

We can even derive profit in tackling and daring each other with arguments. We can conduct all the typical things of politics with each other.

Of necessity hard blows will be dealt even in political journalism.

If we learn to tolerate each other in our differences and not force anything upon each other and to treat each other as Afrikaners and do so with integrity then we will have no need to alienate each other.

I am terribly afraid that we will adopt a dog-eat-dog attitude. If we become divided then we will pay for it.

In due course everyone will be making his choice; every group will be showing its inclination... and inclinations will be measured.

7964
CSO: 4701/42

DEFENSE CHIEF APPRECIATES U.S. VISA RELAXATION

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 15 Mar 82 p 5

[Text] The U.S. decision to the effect that from now on visas may again be granted to South African military personnel, without too many limitations, was welcomed yesterday by Minister of Defense General Magnus Malan as a positive action.

It was mainly under the Carter Administration that South African military personnel were, with the exception of military attaches, forbidden from entering the United States.

The ban on the visas has now been relaxed. According to U.S. officials this has been done for the sake of the negotiations on South-West Africa's future.

In response to an inquiry yesterday General Malan said that the U.S. attitude is a part of a new objectivity which has asserted itself in the country of late. "The objective approach of the Reagan administration does not only apply to South Africa, but also to the negotiations regarding the South-West."

Uproar

The U.S. was previously very subjective with respect to the South-West, however, its attitude has changed a lot. We can now present our case a lot better."

Last year two highly placed South African military personalities were the center of a big uproar when they visited the United States, secretly so to speak, and also engaged in discussions with that country's ambassador to the UN, Mrs Jean Kirkpatrick.

With respect to this General Malan stated: "At the time the influence of the Carter Administration was still clearly present in the U.S. State Department. The fact that the visa control has now been relaxed is a very positive step."

7964
CSO: 4701/43

U.S. ATTITUDE TOWARD SOUTH AFRICA CRITICIZED

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 9 Mar 82 p 19

[Report by Washington correspondent H.J. Grosskopf: "Yankees Make One's Blood Boil!"]

[Text] Yankees can make one very angry, no matter how hard one tries to understand the delicate diplomatic game they are playing with respect to South Africa. You understand that they have to weigh various factors against each other, that their interests are different from ours and that they will oppose us in a great number of matters.

You believe that "constructive involvement" is much more advantageous for us -- and for them also, of course -- than the misery of before.

But then something happens that is bad for your blood pressure, such as the mission from Bophuthatswana today.

I can even understand that the United States, for its own reasons, still refuses to recognize the black national state as independent. But why is there so much nonsense in their arguments?

The official story is that the United States cannot recognize the independence of Bophuthatswana and cannot have contact with its visitors because, amongst other reasons, they travel with South African passports.

The United States is not always so sacrosanct either about tenuous diplomatic protocol. When Dr Jonas Savimbi of UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola], with even less international recognition, recently came here with the passport of a different country, all important doors in the American State Department were opened for him. He talked on numerous public occasions. The men from Bophuthatswana were warned to keep the lowest possible profile.

What was also less pleasant was the full volley discharged against South Africa in Geneva by the UN Commission on Human Rights. That happened some time ago, but it might still take a while to get the documentation.

Warren Hewitt flew out against us there on behalf of the U.S. Government with the full Carter rhetoric: just the dark side of our situation, in places as thick as syrup, in truth very misleading.

There was no suggestion in his entire speech that anything had changed for the better. He looks at South Africa and sees only misery and oppression. One example suffices.

Surely one cannot speak about labor matters in South Africa without mentioning the fact that black labor unions now are recognized for the first time on an equal footing with white unions. But this, for example, is precisely what Hewitt did as a representative of his government. What he notes about labor unions is that South Africa "commits treason against justice" by weakening labor unions; he determines with sadness "how the government limits and restricts those (black) unions, takes their leaders into custody and restricts their free association and right of free expression."

I am mentioning this because it emphasizes a point one can easily miss. The United States, as does every other country, primarily pursues its own interests. Certainly Hewitt merely spoke in accordance with what he thought American interests required in that specific meeting.

We now have a fair relationship with the United States. If things go wrong, it might happen -- as DIE BURGER wrote today as a result of something else -- that "the American Government can no longer afford to be associated with the South African Government even indirectly." That could be troublesome -- if we had not thoroughly straightened out our domestic matters in time.

In that respect the latest happening in the National Party looks like a good omen for a stronger South Africa -- inwardly and outwardly.

8700
CSO: 4701/45

RABIE REPORT ON INTERNAL SECURITY DISCUSSED

Preventive Detention Aspect Analyzed

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 8 Mar 82 p 11

[Text] In many circles there is a special interest in revised legislation which can result from the report of the Rabie Commission on internal security. Professor Francois Venter, a professor of public law at the Potchefstroom University for Christian Higher Education, today discusses aspects of that report, in particular Article 6 of the Law on Terrorism, the matter of a review council, interrogation and visitors for detainees. He makes suggestions as to how the public possibly can be even less burdened than it would be with the recommended adjustments of the Commission.

The report of the Rabie Commission deals with South Africa's "Legislation on Internal Security." The commission (just like Parliament and the courts so far) did not wish to make a pronouncement based on a narrow definition of internal security.

What this means, however, is an important question which has to be considered when the necessity, adequacy, fairness and effectiveness of security legislation are judged. That is not to say that the report of the commission is essentially defective. On the contrary, exemplary research work has been done. A greater service would be done, however, if the legislator could indicate in any future legislation what he intends to protect with his security legislation.

A logical standpoint which could be taken on that question is that state security is the ideal condition which prevails when no threat exists for the survival of the state. The orderly existence and makeup of that state is due to the existence, functioning and obeying of certain rules of law, the most important of which are contained in constitutional legislation such as the constitution. Thus it can be stated positively that state security comprises the survival of the state (not of a certain government), as constituted by law. In a draft bill on internal security which the commission composed and attached to its report as a supplement, expression is in fact given to the concept "state security" as meant above. This is done, for example, in Article 54 of the draft which deals with terrorism and related crimes.

That article, namely, deals primarily with violent actions whose goals are, amongst others, to overthrow the state authority, to achieve political, industrial or economic objectives or changes, to cause the government to do something and to create fear among the inhabitants. Thus it concerns actions which threaten the orderly survival of the Republic as it exists by law.

Article 29 of the proposed bill -- in a manner similar to the notorious Article 6 of the Law on Terrorism of 1967 -- allows a police officer with at least the rank of lieutenant colonel, amongst other things, to arrest someone he suspects of being able to give information on the committing or planning of a crime under the above-mentioned Article 54 and to have him detained without a warrant. Different from the existing Article 6 of the Law on Terrorism, it is proposed that certain mechanisms be built into the legislation to provide better protection for similarly detained persons against maltreatment and abuse of the discretionary authority granted to the police.

Review

Following is an evaluation of the question of whether, on the one hand, some of the proposed methods of protection are adequate and whether, on the other hand, the required preservation of the security of the state is suitably addressed.

The bill proposed by the commission provides for the establishment by the State President of a review council of three members to be appointed on the recommendation of the minister of justice. It will not apply to detention under the new Article 29. The qualifications of the chairman of such a review council are that he must be a judge or former judge, a former chief or district magistrate, or a person who is qualified to practice law and has 10 years of experience in the law. The second member must have an academic legal degree and the third can be anyone.

In order to review the minister's action, the review council must receive the relevant information concerning the case in writing from the minister within 14 days after the minister has taken steps to limit or terminate someone's membership in an organization or public body, or after a person has been restricted or barred from attending meetings, or has been placed in preventive detention in order to prevent the undermining of the state.

The work done by the review council is not intended as legal review, but as administrative review; the task of the council is not to determine whether the minister acted according to the law, but whether he exercized his discretion fairly, according to the merits and the facts of the case.

The bill also makes provision, however, for an adapted sort of legal review; the minister is not obliged to follow the recommendations of the review council, but if he wants to pursue a stronger action than the council recommends, he must refer the entire matter to the chief justice. The chief justice or an appelate justice appointed by him must then consider all the documents on legal grounds and decide whether the minister's action must be abandoned or is upheld. The legal grounds the chief justice or appelate justice must consider are whether the minister exceded his authority, did not act in good faith, or based his action on unlawful considerations.

This proposed review procedure is a definite improvement on the current system since it gives satisfaction that the minister cannot act randomly, merely according to his own opinion in the relevant case. The fact that the traditional liberal argument of "indict or set free" is not satisfied, can be attributed to the realistic view of the commission that action for the protection of state security in the type of political system now in effect in South Africa is primarily a task of the executive authority and not of the administration of justice: review is done administratively, although reviewed on legal grounds by the jurists and the chief justice (or appelate justice), but not as a court of justice.

After all, someone who has been restricted, banned from membership in an organization, or put in preventive detention, is not charged with a crime and punished for that, but his actions or planned actions, which -- according to the opinion of the executive authority -- threaten the orderly survival of the state, are being neutralized. If the courts as such were to play a more important role in moderating the extent of the executive authority in this context, it would require a fundamental change in the constitutional polity of the Republic.

Interrogation

The preservation of the system of detention for the purpose of interrogation, by order of at least one lieutenant colonel of the police as a result of Article 29 mentioned above, is certainly the most drastic measure planned in the draft bill because:

--it is one of the many officials (police officers) and not the minister himself who can make the decision for detention;

--it is not necessarily the person who commits or plans a crime threatening the state who is detained, but also someone who only knows something about it and, thus one may assume, does not want to furnish his information readily to the police;

--the new review procedure discussed above is put into effect in such a case only at a late stage;

--the common law jurisdiction of the courts to review the action of the police is entirely excluded.

Review of the officer's decision initially occurs only at the departmental level; the police commissioner has to be informed about the detention as quickly as possible, and he in turn, has to inform the minister; within 30 days after the arrest the minister must authorize further detention in writing, and once a month the commissioner must give reasons to the minister why the detainee must not be released. That is all that is required from the administration during the first 6 months of detention.

The question which now arises is whether it is necessary for the preservation of the orderly survival of the state to treat such a person (and especially the detainee who could serve as a witness and is not necessarily suspected of planning or having committed a crime of terrorism himself) so harshly and, in any event, to give him less right of review than other people against whom action is taken because they have already done things which threaten state security.

The suggestion has been made that the sting could be removed further from criticism against our state security law if the review procedures discussed above were also applied to those detained for interrogation purposes, while the security of the state could be preserved just as effectively.

As far as can be determined from the report, the most important intention of the commission with the retention of the Article 6 procedure (of the Law on Terrorism) is the fact that "information obtained from persons in custody is the most important, and to a great extent, the only weapon of the police to anticipate and prevent acts of terrorism and subversion and also that information obtained in that manner can be used in appropriate cases as evidence in the trial of persons who have been accused of the relevant crimes."

The claim that the effectiveness of police interrogation becomes limited when the situation of persons detained for interrogation can also be judged by the review council within 14 days and possibly also by the chief justice in the end is difficult to see, unless the motive for the continuation of the regulation is unjustifiable interrogation methods on the part of the police.

Visitors

While no responsible Afrikaner wants to hamper the state-protecting work of the police, those same responsible Afrikaners must be satisfied that justice is always a foundation of all branches of our law and administration.

Access to persons who have been detained for interrogation is, according to Article 29, mainly limited to officials, namely at least every 14 days a magistrate and a district physician, and a newly proposed official called an "inspector of detainees," who "must visit the detainee as often as possible in order to assure himself of the well-being of that person." According to the proposed bill, however, the police commissioner also will be able to grant permission to other people to visit the detainee.

Solitary detention however, in spite of the proposed expansion of the official visitors' list of the detainees, continues to be an extremely drastic matter, especially if it can continue for an undetermined length of time.

Composition

With the same question mark about possible methods of interrogation already mentioned, and continually keeping in mind on the one hand the necessity of preserving state security and on the other hand that of justice, the question arises whether even the somewhat less solitary confinement of potential witnesses is necessary for the effective protection of the state against attacks on its orderly survival.

Finally a word about the composition of the proposed review council. As already mentioned, these councils are really administrative tribunals which have to concern themselves with questions of fairness, administrative correctness and necessity. Although the chairman of such a council can be a judge in office according to the draft bill, he can also be someone like a state prosecutor with a Doctor of Law degree and 10 years of experience.

The fact is that, although the intention may be good, the impact of a review council and the impression it creates outwardly could -- because of its composition -- be one of dependence on the administration, since all the members could have professional careers behind them as officials of the state.

Preferable is a composition of such a review council which does not leave an impression of preference for the official view in the mind of the average citizen; such a composition, for example, could include an active judge as chairman and two members who do not have a background of state service and are recognized experts in one or another appropriate professional area such as, for example, psychology, public administration, social work, politics, law or criminology.

Whatever the composition of such a council may be, it is of decisive importance that there should be no grounds for argument with respect to the objectivity of its members.

Rabie Recommendations Not Adequate

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 9 Mar 82 p 19

[Article by Professor D.H. van Wijk: "Rabie Commission Does Not Solve Detention."]

> [Text] Professor D.H. van Wijk, professor of Law at the University of South Africa, discusses security legislation and the report of the Rabie Commission. He points out that there are positive recommendations in the report, but that the greatest objections to the existing system of security legislation are not met.

Security legislation is a sensitive matter in any state in which a premium is put on freedom and justice. In South Africa with its special internal and international position, security measures are always the center of interest.

The fact that the government is very thoroughly aware of that is reflected by two public inquiries which were recently made, namely the one into the media (by the Steyn Commission) and the one into security legislation (by the Rabie Commission).

In general the Rabie report had a favorable reception. The cynics would say that that's only logical, for any proposed change in the existing arsenal of "Draconian" security legislation necessarily has to be an improvement. Others would claim that the proposed consolidation of the existing legislation into primarily three laws establishes a neat and civilized set of security legislation any state can be proud of.

At the other extreme there would certainly also be those who feel the proposed polity is too civilized and toothless and, with all those new protective measures, would play nicely into the hands of the enemies and their sly and cunning plans.

But what is the truth about the report of the Rabie Commission? It can be summed up in just a few points.

First, it is as clear as crystal that it is a good report. The commission was composed of esteemed and responsible members who acquitted themselves very well of their duty. The report was approached methodically and written in an easy, legible style.

Critical

Further, the commission did not refrain from looking thoroughly and critically into the actual existing threats to state security and the measures for its protection.

In reading that critique and the proposals, one continually gets the impression that the commission members demonstrate a good understanding and feeling for our civilized values of justice.

This feeling clearly comes through in the draft laws the commission proposes at the end of the report. In comparison with the existing legislation -- such as the Law on Internal Security of 1950, the Law on Rebellious Meetings of 1956, the Law on Illegal Organizations of 1960, the Law on Terrorism of 1967 and various general laws on legal modifications -- the proposed laws of the commission demonstrate an acceptable and greater sensitivity for the rights and liberty of individuals and organizations, without relinquishing effectiveness, it should be added immediately.

In the third place, one can categorically state: acceptance and initiation of the recommendations of the commission will already bring great improvement in the existing state of affairs. It will not be unique in southern Africa, however for the informed and careful observer would soon find out that there are rather broad similarities between the proposed South African Law on Internal Security and the Law on Internal Security of 1979 of the Republic of Bophuthatswana. Needless to say, the latter was also a rewrite of former South African legislation.

However, will the implementation of the commission's recommendations, which primarily comprise better management, silence the critics and make the security polity generally acceptable?

One would like this to happen. However, there are certain aspects of the existing system which are also found in the recommended polity which have become too notorious to be incorporated without definite counter measures.

Controversial

The most controversial of those is certainly the phenomenon of what has become known as detention without a hearing. Strictly speaking, various categories must be distinguished here.

For example, there is preventive detention. The minister of justice can let someone suspected of activities threatening to the state be held in prison for 4 to 12 months without charging him with any crime.

Further, the attorney general can order witnesses for the state who might be tampered with to be detained until the case in queestion is dealt with.

A third form of detention without a hearing is the so-called detention for interrogation. This can, moreover, be authorized under existing law, but the most notorious is probably Article 6 of the Law on Terrorism which specifies that someone who is suspected of being or having been involved in terrorist activities can be detained by the charge of certain police officers until he has satisfactorily answered all questions in the opinion of the police commissioner, or until the commissioner thinks it useless to detain him any longer.

An interesting phenomenon in all these cases is that the laws which provide for that on the surface contain reasonable mechanisms of control. For example, someone detained according to Article 6 of the Law on Terrorism can be visited every 14 days by a magistrate and the detained party can at any time address remonstrances to the minister in connection with his detention or release.

Further, the police commissioner must furnish reasons to the minister once a month as to why the detainee cannot be released. The minister has the authority to order the release of a detainee at any time.

In some cases under the new polity, review of the minister's decision by the chief justice is even possible. What more reasonable treatment can a detainee really expect, people are apt to ask.

Still, detention without a hearing is the tinder. Awkward questions are regularly being asked about detainees who die under suspicious circumstances -- just think of Timol, Biko and recently Aggett. Recently psychologists have been asking serious questions about the effects of detention and isolation, for, it should be added, detention as a result of security legislation is usually solitary confinement.

Doubt

There are doubts about the credibility of confessions made in isolation. This makes one wonder whether somewhere, in spite of all the legal or statutory control measures, there isn't an Achilles heel in the system.

In my opinion there is one. Unfortunately it is one which cannot easily be eliminated without a great degree of legislative consideration. Nowhere in any legislation, including in the proposed legislation of the commission, is provision made for effective control over the activities of the police officers who deal with the detainees. Instead, the contrary is true. The legislation makes the specific provision that no one except the minister or an official in the service of the state doing his official duty has access to a detainee or is entitled to information with respect to the detainee.

Also, no court is authorized to judge the validity of action resulting from the detention regulations.

Thus no one can really prevent the police from employing so-called "third-degree" methods, detainees from being attacked and martyred, or even furnished with means to take their own lives.

Further, there is no way to really control whether the detainee is in a position to assert his rights under that law. For example, to whom would the detainee complain if the police or prison authority refuses to give him writing materials in order to send a remonstrance to the minister?

Perhaps the answer is obvious: to the magistrate who can visit him every 14 days or, under the new system, to the inspector of detainees who can visit him at any time.

Even if such visits take place regularly, their usefulness is still doubtful. A magistrate or inspector of detainees will always be seen as a servant of the state, and his independence is not viewed with great enthusiasm.

In light of this the proposals of the commission that in some cases a legal representative can be helpful to a detainee in the drawing up of a remonstrance to the minister, or that someone appointed by an advisory committee to investigate organizations or publications can be assisted by a legal representative in preparing his written remonstrances, should be welcomed.

The important question still remains, however: why didn't they go all the way and furnish all detainees access to legal representatives under the security legislation? This could be a way to assure humane treatment of detainees and to counter biting criticism against the system.

An alternative is for the legislator himself simply to make provision in the legislation for minimum standards of detention and interrogation. Authority is indeed given to the minister in existing and proposed legislation to prescribe terms through regulation in that context.

Such regulations, when they are issued, are often inaccessible and discretionary in their effect, however. Otherwise the detainee is simply subjected to prison regulations.

The latter can be just as discretionary however, as is clearly obvious from the recent Goldberg case. In that case the prison authority cut off completely a group of "political" prisoners from all news. The court of appeal decided that this was the right of the authority because of regulations.

Balanced

South Africa cannot really afford to set up conspicuous targets for criticism, least of all in the very sensitive area of state security. In spite of the total attack, every attempt must be made to give a balanced and moderate character even to security legislation. The Rabie Commission succeeds in that to a certain extent.

The question, however, is whether the commission has gone far enough. It does not appear they have.

Perhaps the question might be put forward why there is such a strong emphasis on some form of external control over the action of people charged with carrying out security legislation. There is a good answer. In any free, modern state the so-called principle of separation of powers is seen as an important means to regulate and limit the execution of state authority.

To put it in simple language, this means that the action of the executive authority (for example the government, administration, police) in principle is viewed with a degree of suspicion, no matter how responsible that police or government is.

That phenomenon is a natural outcome of the fact that the government is permitted to have executive authority. Because it is human (and experience has taught) that the possession of power is an invitation to abuse of it, it is only natural that execution of power has to be controlled.

Because, further, it is not a healthy concept for someone to be a judge in his own case, it is obvious that that control must be carried out by someone other than the one in power or his allies.

In the modern state this is the judicial machinery and this includes lawyers and attorneys. This watchdog function, in my opinion, is too much neglected even in the proposed legislation of the commission.

In summary, it can be stated that many positive recommendations sprout from the report of the Rabie Commission. The recommendations do not, however, counter the greatest objections against the existing system of security legislation, namely defective control over the circumstances of detention and the methods of those who do the detaining. It is a prickly problem, but one for which answers must be found.

Otherwise the danger exists that the proposed policy will be seen as a refined form of the existing one, with extensive and more cumbersome formal control, but less substantive or actual protection of the position of individuals who under our law are considered innocent until they have been proven guilty.

8700
CSO: 4701/45

ATTORNEYS SEE INADEQUACIES IN TERRORIST LAW AMENDMENTS

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 12 Mar 82 p 8

[Text] The Association of Incorporated Attorneys yesterday welcomed certain recommendations of the Rabie Commission regarding the security legislation, but said that in certain respects the recommendations fall far too short of expectations.

The association's chairman, Mr J. E. Knoll, said that the statement which has been issued here is that the entire council of the association discussed the report and its recommendations last week in Capetown and communicated its opinion to Minister of Justice Kobie Koetsee.

From the commission's report it appears that it has given "full and careful" attention to the association's recommendations and that to a certain measure the commission has tried to follow what the association has submitted.

"Thus, for example, the commission's proposal that a review board be provided for the purpose of reviewing the draft law on internal security is a definite step forward." So stated Mr Knoll.

"However, the association believes that the board should be independent and that its members must not be exposed to dismissal by the state president." He does have the power to summarily dismiss them.

The commission also proposed that:

The series of offenses related to terrorist activities be reduced to three. These are: crimes of terrorism, subversion and sabotage as described in the draft law. The commission also proposed doing away with the statutory imposition of minimum sentences.

Need

Mr Knoll said: "These proposals are welcome, although the association proposes that the definition of the above mentioned offenses be limited even further."

"The association does not deny that under the present circumstances there is a need for security legislation for enabling the authorities to carry out their duties of protecting the public. However, the greater the power of the state the greater must be the measure of supervision and control, by effective independent bodies or persons, over those who exercise exceptional powers in the name of the state."

"The commission rejected the view that common law and the judicial process can assure the security of the public. Nevertheless the association emphasises that the prosecution of common law transgressions must be chosen whenever possible in accusing defendants in accordance with common law or statutory provisions."

Examples

"For example it appears that there is no good reason why, if the overthrow of the government is shown to be the main objective, common law transgression applying to crimes of high treason and incitement is not widely sufficient for covering the majority of terrorist activities and sabotage."

The association felt that the commission's recommendations fall too short in certain respects. Three examples of these are as follows:

The failure to take sufficient precautions to insure that persons are not arrested unless their detention is proven to be justified;

Failure to make provisions for detainees to be visited by their lawyers, subject to the necessary precautions.

Failure to make provisions for the payment of indemnity by the state to persons under detention.

7964
CSO: 4701/43

COMMUNISTS ATTACKED MILITARY BASE FROM PRETORIA VICINITY

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 16 Mar 82 p 13

[Text] Pretoria--A peaceful small plot of land in Erasmia, Pretoria, served as a nest where a number of terrorists kept in hiding before they launched a rocket attack against Voortrekkerhoogte last year. The house is about 1 kilometer north of the Erasmia police station and less than 300 meters from the place where the rockets were fired. The spacious four-bedroom house had been used as a hiding place since May of last year by Nicolas Francis Henry Heat, Miss Bonnie Lou Mullar, David William Hedges, Guido Luciaan van Hecken and Dr Eduard Wethli, all of them agents of the British Communist Party.

The owner of the premises, Mr G. J. O. Basson told DIE BURGER yesterday: "I advertised in a newspaper that the house was for rent and two persons who presented themselves as Mr and Mrs Heath took the place. Mr Basson is the managing director of a Pretoria company which supplies farming chemicals. Both persons made a good impression, but the woman was dressed more informally. Mr Heath claimed to be an educator and they provided addresses in Britain. Mr Basson said: "I will not be surprised if they have post-graduate qualifications."

Mr Basson invested more than 2,000 rand on the house to recondition it before the communist agents occupied it. They took it over in May of last year and made 3 months payments (1,500 rand) in advance.

The agents hid some of their weapons under the wooden floor of the house. In one of the bedrooms, which is now occupied by Miss Wanda Venter, there is a hole cut through with a saw for gaining access to the space below. The hole was covered neatly with an iron metal plate and a wall-to-wall carpet. Some of the weapons are also believed to have been hidden in the ceiling of the building. Miss Venter found a bullet in the room next to her own, but it cannot be said that this is one of the terrorist's bullets, because shortly after the 12 August attack the police combed the house thoroughly for clues.

7964
CSO: 4701/43

UNIQUE SOLUTIONS FOR MINE-RESISTANT VEHICLES CLAIMED

Johannesburg PARATUS in Afrikaans Jan 82 pp 6-7, 22

[Text] The threat of landmines brings to mind the spectacle of sudden destruction, victims strewn all around, or nerve-racking minesweeping patrols.

Not much more than a decade ago the possibility of such danger did not occur at all to a soldier when he thought about military techniques at our borders. The terrorist onslaught was certainly a lot more limited than it is now. Today the sun seldom ever goes down on the dry Ovambo in Northern South-West Africa/Namibia without there being a mine incident somewhere .

In the light of these unique circumstances, which have so rapidly assumed a great dimension, the South African Armed Forces have been obliged to find a solution to the threat of land mines.

The local history of the threat of land mines dates back to the initial incidents in what used to be Rhodesia when the threat of terrorism was experienced on a large scale. The whole scenario of land-mine activity very soon increased to a dangerous level so that movement in some of the regions had to be limited to mine sweeping operations. The transportation of soldiers and large troop movements of any sort were curtailed not only by the implications of a mine explosion, but also by the pattern of psychological warfare which created the idea of an omnipresent enemy.

With the hard lessons learned in Rhodesia on hand, the South African Armed Forces contracted the local research organizations to develop mine-resistant, mine-detecting and mine-exploding vehicles.

With the help of the explosives expertise of these organizations it was possible to work out the basic background know-how for the first group of mine-resistant vehicles and a special division of KRYGKOR [Arms Corporation] was set up.

Main Objective

The main objective of the mine-resistant vehicles is to provide the best possible protection to the personnel. Since South Africa is the first country in the world to be saddled with this problem on such a large scale it meant that for all practical reasons the developers had to start out with a clean sheet of paper. There was no previous expertise with respect to this problem anywhere in the world.

The first things done were to pour water in the wheels of the vehicles, load the vehicle bed-frames with sandbags, install heavier plates around the vehicles and also devise a method of tire protection. All these efforts were successful to a point, but the vehicles were still not fully mine-resistant.

It was soon apparent that the solution was to be found in a totally new construction of the vehicle. Two objectives had to be included here: Protecting the soldier and his morale (he must be aware of the fact that his chances of being involved in a mine explosion are high, but that he will nevertheless be safe). The second objective entailed the cutting down of the costs related to repairing the damages of a land mine explosion as well as the protection of the vehicle.

As this sort of research was going on, the degree of the threat became all the more serious. Not only wheel-triggered mines were being used, but mines were being positioned in the middle of the road and detonated electrically.

This new form of the threat meant that the less resistant underside carriage of the vehicles were now exposed to the force of the explosion. This led to the wedge shaped design of the body of mine-resistant vehicles so that the force of the explosion would be deflected away from the undercarriage.

The logical assumption was that now the enemy would start using more powerful mines. Two, three and in some cases even five mines were buried in one hole! This meant that much better protection of the personnel in the vehicle was necessary. The employment of plastic mines meant that these mines could no longer be detected by metal detectors.

The situation was viewed with a great deal of circumspection and the requirements of the South African Armed Forces were carefully studied. Three types of vehicles were brought into the scene as a result of this. These were: Mine-resisting vehicles for the protection of personnel, detection vehicles which carry detection devices and triggering vehicles which go out for the very purpose of triggering mines and are at the same time very easy to repair quickly.

A milestone in this development was the "Buffalo" mine-resistant vehicle. Resistant against the simultaneous explosion of two mines, the Buffalo offers sufficient protection to the personnel to survive the explosion with a minimum of injury. Developed on the design of the SAMIL-serie vehicles their engines and gear boxes are also protected against explosions. An ambulance vehicle based on the same principle as the Buffalo, is built with the SAMIL-50 cabine and also offers total protection for the personnel.

With the urgency of the situation pressing them the project team came up with a great diversity of variants of mine-resistant vehicles, for the protection of operational personnel, with the Buffalo as the most adaptable of the series. Equipped for carrying a troop-section it is ideal as a patrol vehicle. The Buffalo had also its origin in the Bosvark (Bush Pig) mine-resistant vehicle with the V-shaped body. However the Buffalo has the additional armor protection and a more rounded appearance.

The Buffalo is resistant even against the so-called bespectacled mines (two mines which are planted side-by-side in the tracks of a vehicle for the purpose of overturning the vehicle and in so doing hurl out the occupants).

Thanks to the comprehensive improvements in the original undercarriage construction, today the Buffalo is a perfected and proven vehicle which answers well to its purpose.

From the expertise which KRYGKOR has built up over the years today we find a wide range of these vehicles already in service on the roads or on the field. Thus, for example, there is a 10-ton freight truck known as the Kwevoel (Grey Lourie) so reconfigured that it offers maximum security to the drivers inside a closed and armored driver's cab. Similar to this type are 5-ton vehicles reconfigured as mine-resistant recovery vehicles, ambulances, a troop carrier as well as the smaller 2-ton frieght carrier.

Still another interesting vehicle is the mine resistant bus design a number of which have already been tested and accepted by KRYGKOR.

As technology and know-how improves the teams of KRYGKOR and those of the South African Armed Forces see to it every time that they stay a step ahead of the enemy in what they employ against us. Today our mine-resistant vehicles actually stand up against all the land mines which the enemy is using against us, provided of course that those who operate the vehicles take all the precuationary measures.

Another advantage is the fact that through standardization the vehicles are easy to maintain. The South African Armed Forces attach a high priority to the serviceability of the vehicles. KRYGKOR sees to it that upon acceptance all the manufacturing specifications have been observed.

In so doing KRYGKOR sees to it that things are kept within the limits of standardization with the necessary adaptations, but that also continuous improvements are made on the preceding models.

Through KRYGKOR it is possible for the consumer (the South African Armed Forces) to be in touch with the manufacturer of the vehicles and in so doing the armed forces are assured of a high standard of quality control.

Unusual solutions are usually the most successful in the sort of warfare which is taking place on our northern frontiers. In the field of mine-resistant vehicles we have here in South Africa a know-how which is unique in the world.

7964
CSO: 4701/40

GUIDELINES FOR FORTHCOMING PARTY ELECTIONS SET FORTH

Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 25 Jan 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Text] This is the year for the election of leaders of the Revolutionary Party [OCM]. The Party has already issued a booklet containing the rules for this election. The Party felt it was necessary to issue this booklet of election rules early in order to avoid the problems which occurred during the 1977 Party elections.

As a result of the problems which occurred in the past election, the Party discovered 2 major deficiencies: deficiencies in honesty, and deficiencies in performance.

In this election of 1977 people were running for office who had not acknowledged equality or socialism, ambitious and self-interested people and some of these were elected to leadership. Likewise people pushed themselves into the leadership by using tricks and other stratagems like tribalism, the Booklet of Election Rules said.

Not only this, but because of things done hastily in the 1977 elections, truly trustworthy people faltered and were unable to participate in the elections, while the wild ones were able to work their way into running for party leadership.

In the elections of this year the party should avoid all these problems. It is important for party members, and especially the leaders at various levels to understand these party goals, and make certain that not only do they understand the election rules well, but also, when the time comes, they will use them correctly.

We have one nation of Tanzania, and our single political party, the CCM, has established restrictions and a system to obtain leaders in order to maintain democracy and get leaders who are suitable according to the qualifications made clear by the party. Also the party's objective is to build and sustain the strong unity of the country and citizens.

But as was obvious during the last party election, and as the Party Chairman, Mwalimu Nyerere explained the day before, a pattern appeared of using things that are contrary to the restrictions of the party. Instead of using the qualifications for leadership desired by the party, some people used favoritism because of friendship or kinship, money, tribalism and religion in the elections.

The CCM is not capitalist. Thus it is impossible to permit people to run for office in this party by using money. Likewise, using favoritism in the election because of friendship, kinship, tribalism or religion divides the citizens. The CCM cannot agree to the division of the citizens or of our country.

In addition to the Booklet of Party Rules, the CCM Guidelines explained entirely clearly what kind of leaders are needed in our party. Among other things the Manual says:

"Leadership is not work, although there is work in leadership. Thus members of party sections must either have regular salaried work, agricultural work, or have leadership work in the party, government or parastatal organizations. Otherwise there will be people in the party who are not farmers, or workers, and this is the start of building a group of political cheaters, a matter which is a danger to the activities of socialism."

Explanations such as these and others are in the Party Guidelines, together with the Election Rules, it is necessary that they be kept in mind properly for this year's election, and all others in the future in order to have first class leaders to cause us to achieve the desired development--the development of socialism.

6143
CSO: 4749/22

MAINTENANCE OF PROPER ACCOUNTING BY PARASTATALS URGED

Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 27 Jan 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Text] Yesterday in the National Assembly there appeared three reports concerning the maintenance of accounts in public institutions. Appearing were: Report of the Officer and Inspector General of Government Accounts for 1979/1980; Report of the Parliamentary Committee on Government Accounts for 1977/1978; and, the Report of the Parliamentary Committee for Examining and Managing Accounts of Parastatal Organizations for 1979/1980.

These reports remind us again of one very important thing, that a great effort is still needed in order to keep the accounts of Government and parastatal organizations in good condition. These reports mentioned several defects which continue to exist in the keeping of accounts and which cause losses for the Government and parastatal organizations.

Among these defects are making expenditures which do not have documents or which have incomplete forms. For example, the Report of the Officer and Inspector General of Accounts of the Government says that during the year ending 30 June 1980 expenditures were made which were undocumented or had incomplete forms with a value of 258 million shillings, and of these, 77.41 million shillings of expenditures had no documents at all.

Likewise the practice of not complying completely with regulations concerning the issuance of personal loans and advances is continuing. Some of the accounting officers do not maintain proper records, or do not have different systems for money noted as loans or advances.

The reports also mention weaknesses in controlling purchases of supplies for public work. It was discovered that some money was paid before goods were received.

The results of these defects and others in keeping accounts is the loss of much public money and many supplies. It is clear that we cannot make progress with these conditions when every year the nation suffers losses merely because of not fulfilling the regulations and system which must be followed in the keeping of accounts.

It is obvious that one of the reasons for these conditions in our country is the shortage of sufficient people with skills in these accounting tasks. In recent years efforts have been made to teach more citizens a knowledge of accounting. But it is obvious these efforts must be expanded in order to increase the number of people with this knowledge and to increase the quality of the knowledge which they obtain.

But sometimes there are deficiencies because of laziness in the supervision of work and weakness in the control of money. And these occur because some of the work chiefs do not completely concern themselves with matters involving expenditures of money.

One of the things we are urged to do by the CCM Guidelines and the Plan for Economic Survival is to be watchful in the spending and care of the public money and equipment. It is only when we ensure the good keeping of accounts that we will have the proper use of the public money and supplies.

6143
CSO: 4749/22

BRIEFS

PORT SECURITY STRESSED--The Tanzania Harbors Authority [THA] has requested the cooperation of all agencies which use the ports of Tanzania to improve security in order to prevent thefts and the loss of goods. This request was made the day before yesterday by the director of operations of the THA, Peter Cholobi, during a meeting of managers of the National Shipping Company Agencies, Ltd [NASACO]. Cholobi said that the THA will make an effort to seek means of preventing thefts and losses of goods in ports but that the THA alone will be unable to be successful without the full cooperation from all the agencies which use the ports. He asked NASACO to consider again the question of placing reliable guards near ships because without paying attention to this question, thefts of goods will continue to increase. He informed the managers that recently the THA announced 90 positions for guards and of the 600 persons who were interviewed for these positions, nearly 590 persons had a history of theft from ports. The NASACO managers agreed that it is necessary to improve security and that there should be cooperation among NASACO, the THA, the Customs Department, and the police in order to insure that goods which are entering the country arrive securely, rapidly and intact. The general manager of NASACO, Chriswell Simfukwe, explained to those attending the meeting that the present procedure for counting goods which enter our ports requires revision because the quantity of goods shown and recorded by NASACO as having been received from ships does not correspond with the quantity shown by the THA. Simfukwe said that NASACO usually counts all goods which enter the country as soon as they are unloaded from ships, whereas the THA usually counts goods made available outside the port after remaining at the port for several days or months. [Excerpt] [Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 10 Mar 82 p 1]

CSO: 4749/27

'MILLIYET' CORRESPONDENT INTERVIEWS IDI AMIN

Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 11-14 Mar 82

[Interview with Idi Amin by Leyla Umar]

[11 Mar 82 p8]

[Text] I spoke with Idi Amin Dada, Uganda's exiled leader, in Jidda. Much has been said and written about Amin, who disappeared in 1979 after being deposed by his rival, Obote. It was claimed at the outset that he had been invited to Libya by Qadhafi.

Amin, for whom the search lasted 3 years, has lived in the city of Jidda in Saudi Arabia since 1980. At first, he lived in a hotel. Now, he is living together with his family in a palace-like home.

In answer to my question, "How many wives and children are living with you?," Amin answered, "Forgive me, for I do not wish to respond to questions about my family." He added:

"All those close to me were killed by Obote."

Later, Amin, who claimed that he has been subjected to an enormous amount of slander, defended himself, saying:

"I did not have anyone beheaded. I did not chop up people, drink their blood, eat their flesh. The bodies of thousands who were taken prisoner in Kampala and tortured were thrown into pits by my enemies. They threw them on top of me!"

Amin said that he loves to make fun of the British and that he "does not like Reagan because he makes the rich richer and the poor poorer. He does not talk about French President Mitterand. He stated:

"I am gathering information about him with due care, and I will announce my thoughts in the future."

Later, he spoke about Turks, his "blood brothers," saying:

"When you invaded Cyprus, I was the person who informed the world in the United Nations that you were right. The next morning, Kurt Waldheim telephoned me and asked how I was. Then he questioned me, 'What is this to you?' Of course, he received an answer from me."

The Amin whom I saw in Jidda and with whom I spoke for 2 hours is "Africa's savage," its "butcher slaughterer," who sometimes causes the world to laugh, sometimes horrifies it.

Amin's year of birth must also be disputed. Whereas the whole world says that he was born in 1925, he claims it was 1931. When he was 18, he attracted the attention of a British sergeant.

At that time, in order to enter the army all that was necessary, according to the British, who viewed Uganda as a colony, was to be powerfully built and strong and to be able to close one eye in order to aim.

Since he possessed these qualities, Amin was taken into the army, was sent to Burma, and was given the job of kitchen duty.

This faithful soldier of the king rose to corporal in 1949 and was sent to Kenya to fight the Mau Maus. According to observers' allegations, when Amin brought natives in for questioning, he used his own special methods. He had severed male genitals and placed them on the table. He served the imperialists by frightening the natives with threats such as, "If you do not tell the truth, I will castrate you."

Amin rose to sergeant-major within a shortime and became part of the officer class when the British gave Uganda its independence.

A year later, Amin, who was a major, was promoted to general. That was in 1967. In 1971, when President Milton Obote, a close friend, was out of the country, Amin took control of the government.

After becoming president, Amin sent telegrams to a number of presidents of state throughout the world and, most of the time, ridiculed them. At first, he was characterized by Africans as a "man who takes revenge on western nations that play with our dignity and who gives us strength." However, in February, 1973 when the death penalty was carried out on 11 guerrillas who had opposed him and was broadcast on world television, the horror felt by his own people suddenly began to overshadow Amin's lovable aspects.

According to statistical information cited by the world press and the International Amnesty Organization, Amin was responsible for the killing of 300,000 persons during his 8 years as president. America's last ambassador to Uganda, Thomas Patrick Melady, said of Amin, who was featured twice on the cover of TIME magazine:

"In my opinion, Amin is a person aware of everything he does. He is extremely intelligent, but he is, to the same degree, cruel."

According to William McWhirter, TIME's Uganda correspondent at the time, Amin's qualities are innumerable:

"Amin, who can be as sociable and gentle as a kitten when he wishes, is usually as savage as a tiger. His body, which stands almost 2 meters tall and weighs 150 kilograms, contains the heart of a child capable of committing every sort of madness in order to attract attention. However, this heart sometimes becomes evil, and, at that time, humanity is cut into shreds or has its throat sliced and is tossed into the Nile River. Hippopotamuses and crocodiles do not go hungry in Uganda. Above all, there is a team trained especially by Amin whose name is the "State Research Bureau," an organization of his friends. The members of this organization wear sunglasses day and night and, at any time, at any place, carry out raids, throwing their victims into the trunks of cars. It is unusual for an Ugandan who has disappeared to be seen again alive. In fact, the bodies of most of those who are taken away are, the next day, floating in the river riddled with holes."

"When President Carter, informed of such incidents, made a statement about Amin, saying, 'The frightening things committed by Amin horrify the entire world,' I could not find the words to explain how the statement aroused the tiger in the childish man and extinguished the breath of us Americans living in Uganda. Amin immediately issued an order, and as many as 200 Americans residing in Kampala were told that they would not be able to take a single step outside. At that time, Carter and his administrators understood that this man was not one who made jokes, and they met together at the White House. United Nations Secretary General Kurt Waldheim and leaders of several African states were asked to serve as intermediaries. The Enterprise, an American destroyer on maneuvers in the Indian Ocean and five warships that accompanied it were placed on general alarm.

"At a moment when the hearts of all those at the White House had almost stopped beating from suspense, a Ugandan diplomat presented Carter with a 1,000-word telegram sent by Amin.

"In the telegram, Amin said that Carter is a Zionist toy of the Israelis, that Amin had information that over 5,500 soldiers were being dispatched in order to retrieve the 200 Americans in Uganda, and that the Americans having the good fortune to live in Uganda were left free to go about their own business comfortably. Amin did not refrain from adding at the end of the telegram, 'I adore Americans. No matter what their color, they are my true friends. Please give my regards to all your citizens. I am looking forward to my upcoming visit to the White House.'

"President Carter was deeply annoyed by the telegram. He said, 'It is well that Amin did not treat me with scorn as he did with the British queen, telling her to pull up her stockings a bit.'

"Fortunately and happily, the incident was not prolonged. Amin said that the 200 Americans were being detained for several days for their own protection, and he gave them permission to leave the country. He even overwhelmed them with gifts and medals. At that time, I was among those who left Uganda never to return again."

The only goal of Amin, who comes from the 800,000-member Muslim Kakwa tribe of Uganda, was to negate the influence of the Christian Acholi and Langi tribes, which total more than 7 million persons and which oppose him. There was nothing he would not do in order to attain his goal. Most of the foreign aid received by Uganda, which is trying with great difficulty to put its economy on its feet by exporting coffee and cotton, was spent on keeping the 30,000-man army happy. For example, there is a single airplane at the Uganda airport, and this plane was used to transport the amount of whiskey and the number of items such as butter and milk that were very hard to find and pieces of electronic equipment such as television sets and tape recorders the army officers wanted. Amin, who believed the soldiers were very closely tied to him, placed absolutely no importance on agricultural technicians and equipment that could truly strengthen the nation. He paid no attention to the fact that sacks of coffee rotted in fields. He imported coffee from abroad. Amin, who repeatedly spoke of the importance of tourism, became the reason why the seven or eight tourists that got off the solitary planes that landed turned around and fled from Uganda after hearing about the terror that was said to abound in the nation.

According to statements of several European advisors that like and support him, "Amin is a brave man and will venture to do anything for his beliefs. His only wish is for the world to recognize that he is right."

McWhirter, who lived in Uganda for a long period of time, defends the opposing view:

"Uganda, which obtained its independence from England in 1962, was administered by Edward Mutesa II (known as King Freddie), a graduate of Cambridge University.

"In 1966 when Obote crushed the king's men and seized control, Freddie fled to England without a cent and died there in poverty 3 years later. However, discontent among the people raised its head, because Obote was unable to unite the tribes living in Uganda as had been expected. For this reason, when Amin took the government from Obote, great things were expected and hoped from him.

"At first, Amin promised that free elections would be held and later called upon Obote to cooperate with him in Uganda. His proposal, however, was rejected. He gained a lot of sympathy when he brought King Freddie's body from London and had him buried with a great deal of ceremony. But, just as he failed to keep his word, he became involved in clashes with neighboring Tanzania, and, a year later, he expelled 55,000 Indians and Pakistanis who lived in Uganda. Three years later, when British businessman Dennis Hill called Amin a "butcher executioner," Amin struck like lightning once again. Hill was imprisoned in order to be killed. James Callaghan, secretary of state for foreign affairs at the time, flew to Uganda at the command of Queen Elizabeth and begged Amin's pardon. With great difficulty, Hill's life was spared.

"Later, Amin, who praised Hitler, began to make statements that he was planning to build a monument for Hitler in the capital city of Kampala. Amin sought new and unique means to belittle Europeans and arrived at a party given in his honor on a chair carried by four British businessmen. The western businessmen were forced to kneel before him and read statements of praise to him. He even accused his own minister of foreign affairs, Princess Elizabeth Bagaya, of engaging in immoral behavior in a bathroom at the Paris airport.

"Of course, one of the most renowned incidents was the massacre that took place at Entebbe Airport. It appears as if no one will forget that in the Entebbe incident, the subject of two or three movies, an Air France plane together with its passengers was skyjacked by German nationals and guerrillas sympathetic with the Palestinians and was taken to the Entebbe Airport in Uganda."

[12 Mar 82 p 12]

[Text] Leaving to later articles the details of the "Entebbe raid," which has long been of interest to the world, I will now explain how I found Amin.

I went to Saudi Arabia as part of a program designed by Vice-Admiral Isik Biren for the purpose of introducing Turkey.

During this introduction, which strengthened relations between the two nations more than had been anticipated, tasty Turkish foods prepared by the Maramara Etap Restaurant; Beymen's clothing, which is greatly superior to that of Europe's most chic couturiers; the Aykut Carpet's silk carpets; calligrapher Prof Emin Barin's work; and Suna's lampshades attracted great interest and were even purchased eagerly.

We relished the heat of this beautiful city while in the swimming pool of our embassy, and, in the evenings, we ate Arab foods at magnificent dinners given by the hospitable Saudis.

While I was swimming on the last day of our trip, a Turkish youth studying in Jidda approached me and said, "You seem to love swimming as much as Amin does."

I asked, "What made you think of Amin?"

The youth smiled and answered, "I am in the same class as his son, and I have seen his father swim."

I leaped out of the pool immediately and shouted, "Does Amin live here?"

In a most normal voice, he queried, "Didn't you know?"

"Are you joking? The whole world is trying to find where he is. Find him for me now," I ordered.

The youth suddenly became fearful.

"If I said something as important as this, trouble will follow. Forgive me," he said, and he jumped from the pool and left.

I forgot the pool, the heat, everything. I dried off and went straight to my hotel. I had made friends with all the hotel employees during my 10 days there. Most were youths from Tunis and Lebanon. They had a deep affection for Turks. Once inside the hotel, I quickly went up to Hasan, the most pleasant of all, and, in the manner of a police detective, I demanded, "Do not raise your voice a bit, Hasan. Did you know that Amin lives here?"

Laughing, he said, "Of course, I knew. A very close friend of mine works at the Sands Hotal, where he stayed 5 months. They became good friends. If you can wait several hours, I will be able to find out from my friend for you where His Excellency is."

I told Hasan, "Find your friend for me immediately, right now. My plane leaves tomorrow. I will not go anywhere before seeing Amin."

Hasan must have been frightened, for his voice became strained and he called me, "Doctor Umar." (Saudis address persons for whom they feel respect as "doctor." Truthfully, this did not displease me one bit.) He said, "I have never seen you this excited. Since it is very important, I will tell you where Amin lives this evening. I give you my word of honor."

[13 Mar 82 p 8]

[Text] I went to my room immediately. Because I had learned that Saudis are very sensitive about every subject, I phoned Ambassador Abbas Ghazzawi, who is responsible for the Middle East foreign affairs desk. I asked him for permission to talk with Amin.

He said, "Since you are leaving tomorrow, I do not think you will be able to find him in such a short time. He frequently goes to the Kaaba at Mecca. However, I promise you that during your next visit I will personally introduce you to him."

I was so excited that I could not describe the excitement of a reporter to His Excellency Ghazzawi.

I ran downstairs and found the hotel manager. He was a very charming Portuguese. "Garcia," I said, "I promise you and your wife a delightful 2-week vacation at my home in Turkey's Marmara paradise. Please find Amin for me immediately."

The poor fellow at first looked at me very strangely. He, too, did not know that Amin was living there. I took his arm and led him to Hasan.

Both convinced me that it was necessary to wait until evening. I quickly dashed to the home of Huseyin Celem, our ambassador. I explained the situation to him in one breath. Despite the fact that he is extremely helpful and is an ambassador who performs his job very well, he said that he truthfully did not know anything at all about this and could not do anything.

I returned to the hotel disappointed and disgruntled. I was forced to wait until morning, and, of course, I could not close an eye. I was simply filled with despair. My plane was leaving the next day, and I was compelled to return.

The next day, I became a fixture in the hotel lobby. While I was running back and forth between Hasan and Garcia, someone tapped my shoulder. I turned. A bespectacled Lebanese who appeared to me, at the time, to be the handsomest man in the world said, "Doctor Leyla, I am Joseph, Amin's friend. My friends told me to find you and, if I could not help, never to look them in the face again. Come, let us go to the telephone booth. Let us phone the old fellow."

I walked to the booth like a robot. Joseph dialed a number. I heard a voice on the other end. Joseph said, "Excellency, I hope I am not disturbing you. At my side is a woman reporter from Turkey. Her name is Leyla. She definitely wishes to speak with you today. With your permission, let me give her the phone."

I took the receiver. A voice on the other end said, "Leyla." I could not believe my ears. "Yes?," I answered. He said, "Leyla is the name of my favorite sister." "Oh, really?," I responded. "Yes," he replied, "Since your name is Leyla and since you are a Muslim Turk, I will personally come to your hotel to talk with you. My only condition is that you wait for me at the door with Joseph and that you take us to a suite unknown to anyone." "Of course, my friend," I responded and returned the receiver to Joseph.

Joseph said that we were to wait at the door several hours later, and he ordered the hotel manager to prepare Suite No 321 immediately.

I phoned Ambassador Celem and told him Amin was coming to visit me. "I don't believe it," he said. "Since you're a woman, you probably misunderstood what was said on the phone. To date, he has not spoken with anyone. Why would he suddenly change his mind now? I am telling you this now so you won't be disappointed later. Don't wait."

Several hours later, I began to wait with Joseph at the door. At exactly an hour after Amin said he would arrive, I began to think bitterly that our ambassador was correct. Because I never in my life have been successful at taking photographs, I had purchased a fully automatic minicamera. While playing nervously with this device, which I will call "Amin" from now on, I turned to Joseph, who had by then become my very close friend, and said, "What is going on? Go and call His Excellency. If he is not coming, let us stop waiting at the door and stop disgracing ourselves before those who are coming and going. A woman waiting for hours at the door is not looked upon as pleasing not only in Arab countries, but in European countries as well."

Joseph, completely apologetic, left and returned 5 minutes later full of excitement. "Don't worry, Doctor Leyla," he said. "His Excellency was delayed by an unexpected visitor. He said that he will leave immediately. And he begged our forgiveness."

A half hour later, a huge black automobile stopped before us. It was driven by an extremely handsome black youth of 14. On his head was a knitted skullcap. After parking the automobile proficiently, he jumped from the car and opened the passenger door. From inside with complete grandeur leaped Amin. He quickly took the youth and Joseph to his side and took running strides straight toward the elevator.

While I was watching their backs, the other Turks were doing so as well with looks of greater surprise than my own. They ran after Amin to the elevator, but lost him. I looked at the number on the paper in my pocket and went to the suite reserved for us.

When I entered the room, Amin rose with a little difficulty, bowed, and kissed my hand. "Pardon me," he said. "Forgive me for making you wait. Let me introduce you to my son, Suleyman."

After exchanging pleasantries, we began the interview.

Question: How long have you been living here?

Answer: I have been living in Jidda, which has demonstrated to me great friendship and which has opened its heart to me, since April 1980.

Question: Where were you before that?

Answer: I do not wish to say. Excuse me.

Question: Will you talk about your life here, your daily schedule?

Answer: I have an extremely quiet and orderly life. Since I am a good Muslim, I read the Koran for at least 2 or 3 hours a day and visit the Kaaba at least twice a week.

Question: How many of your wives and children are living with you?

Answer: Please forgive me. I do not wish to respond to questions concerning my family.

Question: How many members of your family remain in Uganda?

Answer: Absolutely none. All of my relatives there were killed by Obote.

Question: Are you able to come and go as you please here?

Answer: Certainly. The Saudis do not interfere in any of my affairs. If I wished, I could go anywhere in the world.

Question: At this time, have you applied to go to any country?

Answer: (laughing) A year ago, I requested a visa to go to England, but they did not issue one.

Question: I do not believe that your relations with the British and with Queen Elizabeth are very agreeable. Why did you choose to go there?

Answer: I bear absolutely no grudge against the British. In fact, I have infinite love for Queen Elizabeth and Margaret Thatcher. When Queen Elizabeth was in Africa years ago, it was before my eyes that she received the telegram informing her of her father's death. I'll never forget her sorrow on that day. We were performing a sword and shield pageant for the entertainment of the royalty. She immediately left our country, and I became one of the first to pay my respects to King George. He was a friend I loved. In fact, when I became president, England was the first country to recognize me. America was the second.

Question: But later you angered Her Majesty a great deal. When you, for example, sent her messages such as, "If you wish to meet a real man, come to me," and "Pull up your stockings. They're falling down," there were great rows in the press.

Answer: (laughing loudly this time) That is what appeared in the press. There was also a great deal more that did not appear that enraged the queen. I will not deny I said that. The barbarism of the British caused us to moan for centuries. I love the people individually, but one of my favorite forms of amusement is to ridicule the British, to belittle them. If, after all, they issue a visa, then you will see how much more I will invent to anger them.

Question: Very well. What do you think of the Americans? You have mocked them to a great extent. In fact, at one point, when Carter had just taken office, you kept everyone awake for days with the threat of imprisoning 200 Americans.

Answer: But, I never made fun of them as I do with the British. You must recall when I told the queen one day, "I have begun an economic assistance program for your country. I have established a special bureau, and my people will bring whatever they wish to give as gifts to you." Everyone laughed when the Ugandans formed a line with their goats, pigs, and roosters and took part in the assistance program for England. However, I did absolutely nothing to Carter. I asked him what business he had in Africa, Vietnam, and so forth when he had plenty of work to do in his own country. Such a question was necessary.

Question: Very well, then. Do you approve of the Reagan administration?

Answer: Truthfully, I was not full of negative feelings toward him at first, but I am following his actions closely, and what I do not like is this. Reagan is making the rich richer and the poor poorer. I no longer like him.

Question: What do you think about Mitterand?

Answer: I do not have sufficient information to be able to talk about him now. However, I am gathering information with great care. I will tell you what I think in the future.

[14 Mar 82 p 14]

[Text] I continued my conversation with Amin.

Question: According to accounts, you invited ministers of your cabinet to dinner one night. Following the serving of coffee, you sent for three large trays. When the trays' covers were lifted, those who saw upon them the recently severed heads of three of your closest ministers fainted. What do you have to say about these rumors?

Answer: (laughing for a very long time) If that were all that was said. I supposedly had an ice house at my home. I would enter it and speak there in a loud voice with all the people I had killed. Be fair! Do you see such a quality in me?

Question: Very well. I cannot forget this among the many things that were written about you. In 1973 when your relations with Israel were good, you allegedly asked Moshe Dayan for 24 Phantom jets while you were at the home of Abba Eban, then minister of foreign affairs. When asked the reason for the request, you said, "To bomb Tanzania." Is this correct?

Answer: Yes. Without embarrassment, Dayan said, "We cannot do a thing without America's permission." Later, when I persevered, they spoke about something in their own language. According to what I learned later from articles in the press, they had started quarreling saying, "This fellow is a crazy one. Let us toss him out." When the same request was transmitted to the British ambassador, the man stared at me foolishly and asked, "Would you like a cup of tea?" Of course, I did not receive the Phantoms.

Question: French cinematographer Barbet Schroeder made a film of you with your permission. In this movie, you are portrayed as a person who talks with crocodiles and who constantly belches and shouts. What was your reaction to the film?

Answer: That man misled me. For a week, he took movies of me, never once leaving my side. Later, he placed me in supposedly comical situations with other film clips he stealthily obtained from places he wished. I informed Giscard d'Estaing. I told him that, if the film was not banned, the 132 Frenchmen in Uganda would worry about the consequences. The film was flown to Uganda the next day. Still, nothing very pleasant was shown in the film. This is evidence that I am democratic.

Question: What do you know about Ataturk?

Answer: If you want the truth, I possess little information about him. But according to what I have heard, he was a man to be admired. If you will send me a book about him, I will read it with pleasure.

Question: What are your thoughts about Turkey?

Answer: I find Turks very much like me. I am even able to call your people my blood brothers. In fact, when you invaded Cyprus, I was the person who informed the world in the United Nations that you were right. I told everyone how fortunate I felt because of this invasion. The next morning, Waldheim telephoned me and asked how I was. Then he questioned me, "What is this to you? Is it proper for you to demonstrate pleasure over a situation that everyone reproaches?" Of course, he received an answer from me.

Question: Do you have other impressions of Turkey?

Answer: No. Unfortunately, I have never seen your country, but I would very much like to go there. If you invite me, I will come. Almost every day, I have Turkish food cooked here at my home. I am crazy about your roast lamb.

Question: What is the situation in Uganda today? Do you hope to return?

Answer: (His Excellency's face quickly became serious, and the whites of his eyes grew larger. He spoke after turning the prayer beads in his hand several times.) No matter what I tell you about my beloved country, it will be insufficient. Ugandans, who, with time, are not pleased with the administration, now send news from every direction and beg me to return. In my time, journalists were free to enter Uganda and wrote what they pleased. Today, Obote has driven from Uganda even those who work for the United Nations and the Red Cross. A minimum of 10 children die each day from starvation. There is no medicine for the sick. A man's leg is amputated and he washes his wounds with the water from a filty stream -- because he cannot find medicine.

Question: Obote and a number of other persons in the world claim that much worse crimes were committed in your day.

Answer: (laughing very bitterly) They are enormous lies broadcast by my enemies and by the superpowers, in particular, that do not wish small nations to make progress. But, what is said about what Obote is doing is true. Why can't anyone enter my country if there is nothing to fear?

Question: Don't you have anything to discuss with Obote? Isn't there a message you would like to send him?

Answer: I, forgetting what he did to me, beg Obote. My wish is not to become president again, but to save my people. I send him messages, but he is not even there. He is gone from Uganda. Now, I am calling out to the entire world. Where are the great defenders of human rights? Why are they silent? Where is America? Where is England, France, China, or Russia? All of them criticized what I did. If they turned their eyes on the Uganda of today for a while, they would run to its aid.

Question: If there were an opportunity to return, would you return?

Answer: I will never become president again. My first presidency came about through force.

Question: Didn't you overthrow his government when Obote was abroad?

Answer: Wasn't that a favorable opportunity? Those displeased with Obote took advantage of the fact that he was abroad, approached me, held a gun to the tip of my nose, and said, "We give you 8 hours' grace." That was January 25, 1971. I will never forget it. When I understood that I was in a very difficult position, I accepted the presidency.

Question: What do you have to say about the allegation that, after saying in the beginning that there would exist a democratic regime in every respect, you personally took part in massacres that would terrorize the people, that you had Israelis killed in the Entebbe incident, and that you yourself dismembered the nurse, Dora Bloch, because she was Jewish?

Answer: All sorts of other things have been said. What of it? There are also those who have written or said that I am a barbarian who beheads his friends, drinks their blood, and eats their flesh. The source of this is the British, who are more barbarian than anyone.

Question: The bodies of thousands of tortured persons who were taken prisoner in Kampala were removed from pits. Is this a lie?

Answer: Those were the corpses of persons killed personally by my enemies and whose murders were then attributed to me.

Question: It is said that you had a great deal of money on you when you escaped from Uganda.

Answer: First of all, I definitely did not escape from Uganda. An army six times larger than my own army was about to come from Tanzania. Using tactics I learned from the British, I withdrew quietly. As for the money, I do not believe that there is a poorer leader than I in the world. Ask anyone, ask any bank. No one will say that I have one penny.

Question: Who supports you here?

Answer: I live thanks to the generosity and brotherhood of my Saudi Arabian friends. I will never be able to repay them.

Question: Aren't you at all threatened by death? According to what I have heard, you are protected by seven policemen.

Answer: In my country, I was saved from nine assassination attempts. For this reason, it is said that I have nine lives. Now, I am being tailed constantly by Obote's men, and he wants to poison me. However, I believe in divine power. I do not believe that I will be able to be killed by anyone if my death is not beneficial to my country.

Question: Have your friends been loyal to you, or don't you expect their loyalty?

Answer: They have been much more loyal than I believed them to be. I am consoled by the letters and phone calls from every corner of the world and with friends who come to visit personally.

Question: Don't you have any other diversions?

Answer: Isn't it possible not to have others? Swimming is my greatest enjoyment. You probably know that. In order to demonstrate to Egypt my feelings of friendship, I went there and swam across the Suez Canal. Now, because I have lost my form, I cannot swim as much as I wish.

Question: Do you eat a great deal of food?

Answer: Yes. I love to eat. But I noticed that, after swimming for half an hour, I was getting out of the pool exhausted. I immediately put myself on a diet. And I quickly lost 10 kilograms in a week.

Question: How did you succeed in losing so much weight in such a short time?

Answer: Using a principle I invented myself. For a week, I ate only fruits and vegetables. And, of course, I reduced the amount of food.

Question: It is known that, in addition to being a swimmer, you are a boxer. Do you continue to box?

Answer: No, I cannot devote enough time to boxing. However, I have taught everyone at home to swim. Every day now, we have races in the pool.

Question: Do you win?

Answer: If I lose a few more kilograms, no one will beat me. Neither here nor in the world.

The telephone rang at this point in the conversation. My Turkish friends in the lobby were looking for me. They wanted to know why I was staying upstairs so long. They laughed, saying, "Beware that His Majesty does not eat you up." They continued, "Here, the chauffeur of Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil's cousin, Aziz Ziya, is looking for you madly. Don't keep him waiting. Come down. You have an appointment with him."

And I got up, because I do not like to keep anyone waiting. "Excellency," I said, "I beg your pardon, but someone is awaiting me downstairs. I seek your permission." He jumped up, again with a little difficulty. He bowed before me and said, "The fault is mine." I replied, "I am late for an appointment. Therefore, I have lost the opportunity to speak longer."

I ended the conversation saying that, when I returned to Turkey, I would have a thousand regrets that I could not extend the 1½-hour-long discussion. I asked, "I wonder if I may take several photos of you with my camera?"

Amin replied, "Let me go into the bathroom and tidy up. Then, you may take as many photos as you wish."

And, trusting in myself for the first time in my life, I took seven or eight pictures. For one photo, I gave my machine to Amin to take a picture of me hugging his son, Hasan Suleyman, whom I adored for his pleasantness and sweetness. Dear Joseph, who sat in the room with us, also wanted me to take a souvenir photo. While Joseph, my friend of several hours who accepted absolutely nothing in return for helping me so much, bade me farewell, he said, "This is the first time His Excellency has revealed himself to a reporter, and he is very worried. With your permission, let me stay and console him a bit."

Amin, who has the largest hands I have seen in the world, kissed my hand and said in a soft voice, "Doctor Leyla, I hope to see you soon. During your next visit, I will tell you many more interesting things."

11673
CSO: 4654/227

KINSHASA GOVERNOR DISAPPOINTED BY TOUR OF CITY'S ZONES

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 28 Feb-1 Mar 82 pp 2-3

[Article by Kongo Luzayamo Nzundu]

[Text] For 2 weeks--from 4 to 19 February of this year--citizen Sakombi Ekope, regional chairman of the MPR and governor of the city of Kinshasa, made an inspection and information tour of the zones under his jurisdiction. His rounds enabled him to put his finger on the evils afflicting Kinshasa's militants. For their part, the latter were delighted by his visit, since it gave them an opportunity to present their grievances and, above all, to pass public judgment on their leaders, who are in fact the councilors and zone commissioners.

In general, the head of the urban administration came home disappointed by his tour. He has realized that his closest collaborators in the zones are genuinely irresponsible people who look after their own interests to the detriment of the inhabitants. Our survey of administration in the zones, which appeared in our Friday morning edition, speaks volumes. This summary constitutes an account of what was experienced during the tour. What is happening in Kinshasa's zones? That is surely what the city of Kinshasa's governor was asking himself before he took up his pilgrim's staff last 4 February. Now that he has been sufficiently enlightened concerning the burning issues in his jurisdiction, there is reason to expect a change in working methods in Kinshasa. Otherwise this city, even though 100 years old, is in danger of dying out more from the thoughtlessness, irresponsibility, and greed of certain leaders than from anything else.

Party Activities in Neutral Gear

Everyone knows that in Zaire, the party takes precedence over everything. And as part of the revitalization of its activities, the zone commissioners, who are the MPR's section chairmen, were asked at one time to hold meetings on Thursday of every week. On Fridays, the local headmen were, in turn, to pass on the teaching they had received to the party members. Are those instructions still being followed? We say no. And we felt this during the tour. What a fuss there was during the working meetings, when the zone commissioners and their local headmen exchanged a few home truths. As a result, there has been a drop in party activities. If mobilization in certain zones was complete during the governor's tour, it was because the inhabitants wanted to hear the city's new boss, who from time to time allowed dialogue with anybody. Otherwise, the zone commissioners and their local headmen almost abused their role as leaders of the masses.

Third-Rate Administration

Throughout the tour, citizen Sakombi Ekope, regional chairman and governor of the city of Kinshasa, did nothing but deplore the administration of the zones. The bad behavior of the zone commissioners is reflected in that of the civil servants, who have developed a taste for fleecing the inhabitants. Can a civil servant be expected to change his mentality when he knows for a fact that his boss is also an accomplished crook?

Moreover, there is no followup to the instructions that zone commissioners receive from the urban authority. Let us take only the example of schools. In their welcoming words, some zone commissioners deplored the conditions in which children study. The latter have no desks. In response to that complaint, the governor simply asked them whether they had taken an inventory of the schools under their jurisdiction where the children study on the ground. Citizen Sakombi Ekope then went on to say that the Executive Council provides for equipping schools with desks. No zone commissioner was able to give him a favorable answer. This example proves sufficiently that Kinshasa's zones are not only poorly managed but also poorly administered. It is not even necessary to say that this situation is due to the fact that the zone commissioners are reaching the end of their term in office. Not at all. Since they have been in power, they have not been able to find an effective remedy for their administration.

Greedy Officials

During the tour, Kinshasa's jurisdictions gave us the impression that their cashboxes are empty. At this rate, and especially since the terms of office have almost ended, there will be no more miracles in the capital's organizations. What was actually done with the revenues collected over a 5-year period? The governor regularly asked that question. Very few zone commissioners took him on a tour of their accomplishments, because they know that in fact, they have done nothing. The zones collect revenues in earnest at the start of each year--during the first 6 months, to be exact. But there was no planning by those managing the credits in the zones. One has merely to look at the Matete zone's table of revenues and expenditures for 1981, which was published in our edition for last Friday. So the money is often used in an improper manner. And in all of this, it is the inhabitants who suffer, because people are getting rich at their expense.

In the zones where urban markets are located, the criminal element is supported by both the zone commissioners and the city officials assigned to them. Realizing that, the governor has promised to organize the administration of the urban markets.

Being as greedy as they are, some zone commissioners clashed with the ANEZA [National Association of Zairian Enterprises], which opposed their overcharging of taxes. City Hall, which actually supported the ANEZA, brought the zone commissioners back into line. The reason is that taxes are set by the City Council during the budget session and cannot be changed in any way except with permission from the members of that important organization. But who profits from the overcharging of taxes? The officials whose terms are coming to an end. Achievements that benefit the people are few. The zone commissioners ignore the departmental decree, signed by the late Mafema, relative to their remuneration so that they can fill their pockets.

Nonimplementation of Decisions

During the tour, citizen Sakombi Ekope, regional chairman of the MPR and governor of the city of Kinshasa, announced a series of decisions dealing with the closing of illegal garages and markets, the banning of motor oil sales on thoroughfares, and the banning of the din from radios and so on. A brief period was allowed for implementing all those measures. We are greatly astonished to note that so far no one has followed through. Illegal garages and markets are still found here and there, motor oil is still being sold anarchically, and radios are still blaring. Such a situation leaves one baffled. The zone commissioners must be waiting for the governor to leave his office and come do their work for them. That, in any case, is the conclusion we draw from their behavior. For example, Kinshasa is still dirty because the permanent salongo [compulsory work on Saturdays] is disappearing.

Control Commissions in all 24 Zones

The governor's schedule in all the zones called for working meetings with the councilors and rank-and-file cadres. It is clear from that dialogue that an unhealthy climate prevails in the capital's organizations. The councilors, zone commissioners, local headmen, and leading cadres in the JMPR [Youth of the Popular Movement of the Revolution] all live "with daggers drawn." The zone commissioners are often accused of misappropriating funds. As a result of that situation, citizen Sakombi Ekope, regional chairman of the MPR and governor of the city of Kinshasa, has decided to send control commissions into the capital's 24 zones. The head of the urban administration has promised to strike hard at those who have abused their office.

City Council and Regional Economic Conference

After touring the 24 zones under his jurisdiction, the city governor considered it necessary to call all the city councilors into special session within the next few days. During that meeting, he will inform them of the situation he personally encountered in the zones. Solutions to the problems will then be considered by that body as a group.

As for the regional economic conference, it will bring all of the economic agents in the city of Kinshasa together to work out reasonable prices for staple food items.

11798
CSO: 4719/690

FIRST TRAINING SESSION OF 1982 BEGINS

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 23 Feb 82 p 2

[Article by Bitumba Miso-Mpoko]

[Text] Following a two and a half month vacation at the end of the year, the urban cadre training center in Kinshasa, the first project of the Hanns Seidel Zaire Foundation of the Free State of Bavaria (Federal Republic of Germany), resumed its work last week with the organization of training seminars for political-administrative officials in the city of Kinshasa. It was the conference room of the parish of Saint Marc de Kingasani II in the Kimbanseke district that was the scene of the opening ceremony for this first session of 1982, organized for secretaries of urban divisions and those appointed to district secretarial offices. The regional president of the MPR and governor of the city of Kinshasa, Citizen Sakombi Ekope, visiting the districts, was represented by Citizen Kasongo Mudimbe, urban director.

Among those attending was M. G. Leicht and citizens Toto-Zita Mamvu and M'Vuanzi Lemfu, directors of the center and the seminars and municipal councilman from Kimbanseke respectively, the latter representing the head of the jurisdiction.

In his address on the occasion, the district commissioner's representative first of all welcomed all guests and then said that the organization of the first session of the year in his jurisdiction constituted a privilege for all those in the district. Center director M. G. Leicht then particularly emphasized the importance of the office of secretary in any enterprise. "If the person who wants to go far spares his mount, any entrepreneur who hopes for the success of his establishment must organize the office of secretary properly. This must be of special concern to all those who have the duty of contributing to the harmonious development of the urban administration," the speaker said. Leicht also stressed that the organization of the seminar was made possible by the moral support constantly given by urban officials to the different programs of the center.

Concluding the series of speeches, the urban director then said that the program would never have been possible without the constant paternal backing of the guide of the authentic Zairian revolution, Citizen Mobutu Sese Seko, who has never ceased expressing his desire to see the public administration in general and the urban administration in particular become a precious instrument for the achievements of the objectives which the MPR has set for itself in order to ensure the well-being of the Zairian people. "There will be no more complacent little sessions from which some participants absented themselves without any plausible reason," the governor's spokesman said, before going on to announce that henceforth, the seminar director will transmit a report on the progress of every participant to the urban authorities at the close of each session, through center officials.

The current session will last two weeks.

11,464
CSO: 4719/688

DEBATE ON SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH DRAWS TO CLOSE

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 23 Feb 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] The various reactions to our investigation published on Tuesday, 26 January, on scientific research in Zaire have caused us to begin a debate that has been going on since Tuesday, 9 February. Several aspects of the subject have been analyzed in this fruitful dialogue. In particular, the human side of the problem, the role of the ministry in charge, the socioeconomic importance of certain disciplines and the problem of protecting Zairian discoveries have been taken up one after the other in the course of the debate.

Despite the inflow of letters from occasional correspondents, most of whom repeat the same ideas as those mentioned, we are bringing this interesting debate to a close, careful to recall certain main ideas.

The sector is of cardinal importance to the development of the country, as was emphasized during the debate. But the Scientific Research Institute (IRS) has not yet played the proper role and our research workers are faced with an inadequate environment, justified by insufficient investments in the field. While recognizing the sacrifices made and the efforts put forth by the nation's officials in order to promote scientific activities, we nevertheless wish to emphasize that the task of the Executive Council remains enormous and must allocate substantial resources. We also recognize that in order to be profitable, scientific research must not only be the object of a selective policy, but also require a certain number of elements, the most important of which seems to be a national and even regional political will. In addition to this first element are two others of equal importance, to wit: real short- and long-term investment in scientific research and a system of scientific information and documentation.

We also suggest the reform and far-reaching reorganization of the Scientific Research Institute so that it will truly respond to the mission assigned to it. Finally, it is essential that our inventers be encouraged and given incentives and that their inventions be protected so that Zairian genius may be elevated to the level of the great geniuses of the world.

11,464
CSO: 4719/688

PROTECTION OF NATIONAL MANPOWER URGED

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 23 Feb 82 pp 1, 7

[Editorial: "Protection of National Manpower"]

[Text] During its latest weekly meeting, the Executive Council asked the state commissioner for labor and social security for strict application of legislation on the hiring of foreigners "in order to keep spending firmly within limits compatible with a revival of the economic structure and without overheating." This decision of the Executive Council is particularly fitting because despite legal provisions on the hiring of foreigners, we have the clear impression that several enterprises established in Zaire do not wish to conform to it and prefer to use foreign labor, which is too costly.

It is common to read advertisements offering jobs to expatriates even if there are competent nationals available. In fact, in keeping with the spirit of the law, priority is to be given to Zairian workers and one cannot hire expatriates except in very precise cases when specialists cannot be found locally. For the mission just entrusted to the Executive Council, the Office of State Commissioner of Labor and Social Security must do everything possible to eliminate the anarchy prevailing on the labor market, ensuring strict compliance with legislation now existing on the subject. In this way, not only will the country, which has made great efforts to train upper-level personnel, be able to use those brains and thereby relieve unemployment, but we shall also save on foreign exchange now used to pay the salaries of expatriates whose presence is not necessary in Zaire.

Protection of national manpower must therefore become a daily concern of the Office of State Commissioner of Labor and Social Security in order to guarantee work for Zairians, for it is incomprehensible why, for example, at a time when our schools are training management personnel, there should be enterprises that continue to bring in foreigners. In the face of such practices, the government, while extending its hospitality to all those who wish to work for our economic development, can no longer shut its eyes and must react in order to ensure respect for the law. It is within such a spirit that one can understand the decision of the Executive Council to examine the lists of expatriates working in state commissioners' offices and public enterprises.

11,464
CSO: 4719/688

BRIEFS

SPANISH WHEAT DONATION--The arrival of the "Amalinda," a ship carrying 2,000 tons of wheat donated by the Spanish Government to the Republic of Zaire within the framework of cooperation between the two countries, was announced for Saturday, 20 February 1982, at the Matadi port. Officials from the Spanish Embassy went to Matadi in order to receive the shipment and officially turn it over to authorities from the Republic of Zaire. [Text] [Kinshasa ELIMA in French 23 Feb 82 p 7] 11,464

KALEMIA PORT DREDGING--The European Development Fund will supply 5 million UC [accounting units] to finance the dredging of the Kalemia port, within the framework of the regional transport program known as the "central corridor." This regional transport system is aimed at opening up East African countries that export goods through the port of Dar-es-Salaam, while the "northern corridor" involves those shipping goods through Mombassa, Kenya. The decision to finance the work was made at a conference in Brussels from 17 to 20 February, attended by the main financial backers of the countries involved: Zaire, Rwanda, Burundi and Tanzania. The state commissioner for transport and communications, Citizen Mananga Dintoka Pholo, head of the Zairian delegation, told AZAP that in addition to strengthening the regional importance of Kalemia, rehabilitation of the port will make it possible to ship some 30 percent of Zaire's ore through Dar-es-Salaam and thereby relieve congestion on the national railroad. In addition, the Zairian delegation made contacts for financing of the repair of the SNCZ [Zairian National Railroad Company] and 200 flatcars to transport containers for the Ilebo-Kalemia line. The next meeting of ministers from countries in the central corridor will be held during the first half of April in Arusha, Tanzania. The state commissioner for transport left Brussels Tuesday evening and made an information visit to the Brussels Air Zaire offices as a guest of Citizen Mpeti, director of Air Zaire in the Belgian capital. [Text] [Kinshasa ELIMA in French 25 Feb 82 pp 1, 7] 11,464

JUDICIAL REFORM--Citizen Bayona Ba Meya, chief magistrate of the Supreme Court of Justice, recommends meetings of lawyers, judges and magistrates (courts and tribunals) in order to achieve true judicial reform in Zaire in the future. Bayona made the suggestion at a working meeting he had in the chambers of the Supreme Court of Justice with members of the Council of the Order of Lawyers to the Kinshasa Court of Appeal, who were led by Mukendi wa Mulumba, president of the barristers. The meetings, which will be based on legal criticisms and errors detected in every department, will enable all three parties to work out a specific program on certain problems in the field of law, Bayona said. In this connection, he expressed the wish that a legal journal be set up in order to publish articles noting the flaws in rulings handed down and bringing out inadequacies of the law. Mukendi told the chief magistrate of the Supreme Court of the establishment within the Kinshasa Bar of a permanent organ of consultation between the Bar and the magistracy. In order to better inform those subject to the law, Mukendi asked authorities for an office to serve as a place of free consultation for the people. The office would be staffed by lawyers. The office will function along with another information office giving informing the people of progress on their cases. The president of the Kinshasa Bar had previously expressed the concern of the Council of the Order of Lawyers over working closely with judges to ensure proper administration of justice. [Text] [Kinshasa ELIMA in French 27-28 Feb 82 pp 1, 7] 11,464

CSO: 4719/688 END

JPRS 80566

14 April 1982

Sub-Saharan Africa Report

No. 2606

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 80566

14 April 1982

SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA REPORT

No. 2606

CONTENTS

INTER-AFRICAN AFFAIRS

Briefs
French Loan to OMVS 1

ANGOLA

Moscow Reportedly Concerned About Foreign Policy
(Thomas Ferenczi; LE MONDE, 16 Mar 82) 2

UNICEF Financing for Huambo, Bie Villages Planned
(Ramiro Aleixo; JORNAL DE ANGOLA, 17 Mar 82)..... 4

Bread Shortages Entail Further Difficulties
(JORNAL DE ANGOLA, 11, 13 Mar 82) 5

Bread Warehouses Destroyed, by Joao Serra
No Flour Available

Rumormongers Attacked in Refinery Sabotage
(Editorial; JORNAL DE ANGOLA, 5 Mar 82)..... 7

Briefs
Border Talks With Zaire 9
Comment on USSR Cooperation 9

CAPE VERDE

Briefs
Fomenters of Trouble on Trial 10

COMOROS ISLANDS

Briefs
SDAR Delegation 11

DJIBOUTI

Briefs
New GCF Commander 12
Saudi Transport Aid 12

ETHIOPIA

Eritrean Leader Leaves Doha for Bahrain 31 March
(QNA, 31 Mar 82) 13

Briefs
Eritrean Says Ethiopians Repelled 14

MOZAMBIQUE

Clashes With NRM Reported in Sofala Province
(DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE, 1 Mar 82) 15

Solutions Imposed Seen as Too Dogmatic
(Jean-Pierre Langellier; LE MONDE, 17 Mar 82) 16

GDR Sports Training Assistance
(DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE, 27 Feb 82) 20

Portuguese Vine Culture Assistance
(DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE, 24 Feb 82) 21

Measures Adopted To Improve Beira Food Supply
(DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE, 20 Feb 82) 22

French Trade Union Delegation Visits
(TEMPO, 7 Mar 82) 23

Increase in Port Construction Activity Noted
(TEMPO, various dates) 25

Quelimane, Macuse Ports, by Pedro Tivane
Maputo Port
Moma, Mocimboa da Praia Ports

Briefs
Portuguese Construction Assistance 29
PCP Anniversary Celebrated 29
Charcoal More Expensive Than Gas 29
Repairs in Floating Drydock 30
UN Refugee Assistance 30
Cuban Movie Producer 31

NAMIBIA

Briefs
Population Figures Published 32

SENEGAMBIA

Paper Says SDAR Issue Should Not Disunite OAU
(Editorial; GAMBIA NEWS BULLETIN, 19 Mar 82) 33

SEYCHELLES

Briefs
Mercenary Alleges S. African Threats 35

SIERRA LEONE

President Departs Morocco, Makes Statement
(Rabat Domestic Service, 26 Mar 82) 36

SOMALI

Briefs
EPLF Successes in Eritrea 38

SOUTH AFRICA

Botha Rebuffs Conjectures About an Early Election
(DIE BURGER, 17 Mar 82) 39

KRYGKOR Given Wide Powers in Arms Import, Manufacture
(DIE BURGER, 17 Mar 82) 41

'Operation Super' Destroys SWAPO Base in Southwest Angola
(DIE BURGER, 17 Mar 82) 43

KRYGKOR Weapons Used
Description of the SWAPO Base
Zimbabwe Involved

Critique of Draft Amendments to Law on Terrorism
(Francois Venter; DIE BURGER, 10 Mar 82) 48

Briefs
Corporation Reveals New Weapon 53
Mercenaries 'Welfare Organization' Registration 53
Nationalist Federal Congress 54

ZIMBABWE

South African Spy Ring Uncovered, Three Arrested
(AFP, 29 Mar 82)..... 55

BRIEFS

FRENCH LOAN TO OMVS--Today the Senegal River Development Organization [OMVS] and the French Cooperation Fund signed a financial agreement under which the fund will grant the OMVS 600 million CFA francs to be used in construction of the Diama dam. [Text] [AB040630 Dakar Domestic Service in French 2200 GMT 2 Apr 82]

CSO: 4719/758

MOSCOW REPORTEDLY CONCERNED ABOUT FOREIGN POLICY

Paris LE MONDE in French 16 Mar 82 p 23

[Article by Thomas Ferenczi]

[Excerpts] Moscow--The two main bridgeheads for Soviet penetration of Africa, i.e., Angola and Ethiopia, are causing the Kremlin leaders some concern. These two countries, along with several others, are situated at the top of the hierarchy established by Moscow for the countries of the Third World, based on their revolutionary and anti-imperialist ardor. They are not only "socialist oriented" but have also embarked upon "the path of socialist development," relying domestically on a Marxist-Leninist vanguard party, and in the foreign sector, on a "close political alliance" with the Soviet Union. In addition, thanks to their strategic location, one within the boundaries of southern Africa and the other near the horn of the continent, Angola and Ethiopia are of special importance to Moscow as priority bases for the Soviet presence. Since the middle of the 1970's, these two nations have benefited from Cuban military aid and have also participated as observers in the sessions of the CEMA.

Concerned about protecting itself against any reversal in the situation in that part of the world, the USSR keeps jealous watch over the implementation of the principles defined at the Berlin conference in October 1980. Mr Ponomarev, when he said that "to maintain and consolidate the progressive positions of these countries," it is necessary on the one hand "to have a revolutionary party leading society and basing its actions on scientific socialism," while on the other hand "developing links with the socialist countries, those most faithful and certain friends of the nations which are independent and dedicated to freedom." Now on these two questions, that of the party and that of alliances, Moscow has for some time been expressing its concern with regard to the development in these two precious partners in its eyes--Angola and Ethiopia.

In Angola, the party is in fact faithfully based on the Soviet model, but it is the Luanda diplomacy which torments the Kremlin here. The problem dates back to the gestures initiated by the Angolan president last December toward the United States. A meeting subsequently was held--this very month--between Assistant U.S. Secretary of State Crocker and Angolan Minister of Foreign Affairs Jorge. Moscow reacted by denouncing "the three Washington traps," in other words the three "prior conditions" established by the Americans for resumption of dialogue--the participation of Mr Savimbi in a coalition government, withdrawal of Cuban troops, acceptance by Luanda of the proposals of the Western "contact group" on Namibia. These "prior conditions," the USSR says, are unacceptable.

At the end of January, Mr Lucio Lara, member of the MPLA political bureau, traveled to Moscow, where he confirmed the desire of his country to develop its cooperation with the Soviet Union, but he also voiced its desire to renew relations with the United States. In February, Moscow used an Angolan-Cuban statement on the posting of troops from Havana as a pretext for mentioning the conditions which would make their withdrawal possible again: a cessation of all forms of aggression against Angola, enabling the people of Namibia to choose a truly independent government, and the evacuation from its territory of the South African occupation troops. The weekly LES TEMPS NOUVEAUX carried an article on this subject entitled "Dotting the I's."

If the extent of the disagreements between Moscow and both Ethiopia and Angola should not be underestimated, the fact nonetheless remains that the USRR feels obliged in both cases to "dot the i's." Thus it has clearly indicated its fear that these two countries might be tempted to seek the solutions to their economic and military difficulties elsewhere than in Moscow.

5157
CSO: 4719/729

UNICEF FINANCING FOR HUAMBO, BIE VILLAGES PLANNED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 17 Mar 82 p 4

[Article by JORNAL DE ANGOLA correspondent Ramiro Aleixo]

[Excerpts] Huambo--a seminar was held in this city from 13 to 15 March at the premises of a Ministry of Agriculture delegation during which discussion centered around the establishment of 75 villages in the provinces of Huambo and Bie, to be financed by UNICEF; this is in keeping with the principal guidelines aimed at helping rural residents solve their problems more effectively and make a greater contribution to the country's economic development.

The opening ceremony was chaired by Deputy Provincial Commissioner Evaristo N'jamba.

The following subjects were broadly discussed during the sessions: the status of the project relating to provincial representatives from the departments of social affairs of Huambo and Bie, the precise location of the villages to be established, and progress made up to now by the organizations of the two provinces to bring the work to a practical conclusion, materiel needed to support the project, personnel requirements and coordination of the project.

Joint Action to Convert Broad-Range Project From Theory to Reality

In speaking at the opening session, the deputy provincial commissioner said that this undertaking is particularly aimed at benefiting displaced people and settling them in the life style of the new society being developed. In this respect, he said that greater cooperation among the various organizations involved is essential to carry out the project successfully.

With regard to the reintegration of displaced people, Evaristo N'jamba also said that the creation of better living conditions for those people is directly dependent upon the country's economic development. In conclusion, he thanked the UNICEF representatives for the efforts they made on behalf of the project as well as for the support they gave in overcoming some of the difficulties our country is experiencing.

8568
CSO: 4742/247

BREAD SHORTAGES ENTAIL FURTHER DIFFICULTIES

Bread Warehouses Destroyed

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 11 Mar 82 p 2

[Article by Joao Serra]

[Text] Irregularity in the supply of bread to the city is a problem which, unfortunately, has been dragging along for several years, primarily because of a shortage of wheat production in the country but also because of the irregularity of imports in this sector. Some bakeries are doing their best to supply as much bread as possible to the consumers, but delays in the unloading of ships sometimes interfere with their productivity.

At present, the main problem is a shortage of bread--a temporary situation which will naturally be overcome as soon as certain conditions are corrected. However, 2 years ago, the basic problem was a shortage of sales outlets, and that resulted in the creation of a relatively broad network of bread warehouses which now assure the city relatively efficient distribution.

As many warehouses are not regularly involved in the sale of bread, residents in those areas, particularly children, have taken it upon themselves to destroy them, converting them into public bathhouses, breaking doors and windows and, in a nutshell, making them completely unsuitable for the purpose for which they were designed.

This attitude reflects an obvious lack of civic pride on the part of those who, through criminal indifference, are destroying property whose usefulness does not need mentioning. In fact, the construction of the hundreds of bread warehouses now located throughout Luanda undoubtedly represented an enormous effort and investment whose achievement, as everyone certainly knows, was due principally to the austerity of the national reconstruction phase which the country is still undergoing.

How can we then explain the disrespect which has become commonplace relative to the preservation of the warehouses for the sale of that valuable product? Can it be that its present inactivity will be final, or should we first reflect on the future usefulness of these bread-marketing stations once the problem of flour supply is completely normal?

The second aspect undoubtedly merits our attention. The present destruction of inactive warehouses is jeopardizing the future success of the marketing and efficient distribution of bread in Luanda. This is all the more true since individuals connected with the bakery sector have indicated that the problem of supplying the city with bread will be resolved very soon. But reestablishing the warehouse network could be much more difficult, which will mean jeopardizing the distribution of that product.

Not to speak of judicial responsibilities, common sense tells us that the residents of Luanda must take urgent steps to put the bread warehouses back in order in the most civic-minded and responsible way.

This attitude is not confined to warehouses which are only being used from time to time. The same uncivilized behavior is frequently observed in connection with warehouses which maintain a daily supply of that commodity to specific districts.

Many of the structures are now without doors or windows, reflected in lack of cleanliness. And, after all, cleanliness is the principal requirement in places where products for public consumption are handled and which are, therefore capable of transmitting diseases, if proper hygienic measures are not carried out.

At this point, we are appealing to the capital's residents: "Your direct participation in the protection and maintenance of the warehouses is an ever-increasing need from which you can only benefit.

"A bread warehouse half-destroyed, without doors or windows, or converted into a public latrine, represents a health hazard and may at any moment be closed by the health authorities. Then, there will be no more bread...."

No Flour Available

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 13 Mar 82 p 2

[Text] "The shortage of bread in the past few days in the provinces of Luanda and Bengo is due to the lack of wheat flour, both domestic and imported, and this is causing EPAN (Luanda Bakery Company) to shut down," said Armando Mendonca, the firm's director, over Angolan National Radio.

With a daily production capacity of 2,000,300 loaves (a sufficient quantity to supply Luanda Province), EPAN received 1,936 tons of wheat flour from the Ministry of Industry's general supply from 10 January to 2 March, a quantity consumed in 15 days.

8568
CSO: 4742/247

RUMORMONGERS ATTACKED IN REFINERY SABOTAGE

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 5 Mar 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Victory of the Workers"]

[Text] There is a marked reactionary trend not yet completely eliminated in Angolan society: it is an attempt gradually to affect the consciences and revolutionary morale of the people through clever manipulation of what is primary and what is secondary, through the game of intrigue and rumor, and through alarmism and bold-faced lies.

That trend is expressed and is based, as is understandable, on the persistence in our midst of a specific social stratum which still hopes to recover lost privileges or, with historic marked delay, is now trying to obtain them for the first time.

The echo of that trend, almost always underground and petty in its methods of action, is excessively amplified and even stimulated abroad by the powerful capitalist press.

The most insignificant event serves as a pretext for reactionary speculation, aimed at striking at the roots of our revolutionary process, as happened recently with enemy action designed to sabotage the PETRANGOL [Angola Petroleum Company] refinery.

It now remains to undo, in as short a time as possible, all those prejudicial and fanciful schemes so laboriously devised. The promise made by the Angolan party and government leaders, backed by a commitment by the workers to carry out that promise, has been fulfilled.

Within a few weeks the effects of that criminal destruction were obliterated and the refinery was back in operation. The government even intends to expand that production facility so that it may also serve the countries of southern Africa, which are daily faced with attacks by racist South Africa, and thereby aid in destroying the hateful apartheid system once and for all.

The destablizing objectives which the saboteurs in the service of imperialism and the South African racists were hoping to achieve--paralyzing the economic activity, cutting off the supply of fuel to the armed forces at the battle front and creating panic among the people--were rapidly overcome by the prompt response of the workers engaged in the process of national reconstruction.

In this "Year of Economic Organization and Popular Vigilance," this victory by the PETRANGOL workers emerges as a symbol of the will of all Angolan people and represents an incentive to neutralize the enemies of the revolution--both domestic and international--in all areas.

All those who became panicky upon seeing the blinding flames and dense smoke which momentarily darkened the capital's beautiful bay now have an opportunity to reflect on the origin of their constant fright. They will surely conclude that this fright stems entirely from the credence they gave to the profits of doom and despair and from their lack of confidence in the unshakable determination and ever-increasing maturity of a people which, led by the MPLA--yesterday a movement, today the Labor Party--has for more than a quarter of a century carried out a victorious struggle for a world of freedom, national independence, peace and social progress.

The Struggle Continues!

Victory is Assured!

8568
CSO: 4742/247

BRIEFS

BORDER TALKS WITH ZAIRE--Uige--A meeting was held last Friday in Makela do Zombo between Angolan and Zairian leaders to discuss the possible reopening of the Kimbata-Kimpangu border station. The Angolan delegation was headed by Damiao Santos, coordinator of the productive sector department of the provincial committee of the MPLA-Labor Party. Quarta Punza represented the provincial commissioner of Uige. Malumba Mbangula, governor of the Lower Zaire area, headed the Zairian delegation. This is the first meeting of its kind between the Uige and Lower Zaire leaders. A second meeting is planned for the first half of April in Matadi, Republic of Zaire. Commenting on the conversations with the Zairian leaders, Damiao Santos called them "very significant for both peoples, particularly in the border areas." [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 9 Mar 82 p 12] 8568

COMMENT ON USSR COOPERATION--Lopo do Nascimento, minister of planning and foreign trade, told the newspaper, MOSCOW NEWS, recently that the future construction of the Kapanda Hydroelectric Power Plant on the Cuanza River will be the biggest project in the realm of Angolan-Soviet cooperation. During the interview, Lopo do Nascimento attached particular importance to the accords recently signed during his visit to the Soviet Union and stressed, among other things, USSR assistance in the construction of industrial, agricultural and transportation enterprises. During meetings held with a delegation from the USSR Ministry of Foreign Trade, the Angolan official said that a program of commercial exchanges had been worked out between the two countries. "I am certain that the implementation of all these accords will have a positive effect on Angola's economic development," he said. In conclusion, Lopo do Nascimento said that "to diversify cooperation an effort will be made to extend it to the greatest possible number of economic sectors. [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 9 Mar 82 p 2] 8568

CSO: 4742/247

BRIEFS

FOMENTERS OF TROUBLE ON TRIAL--A group of 19 individuals is being tried in Cape Verde by a military court on charges of "inciting to rebellion," it was reported by REUTER, as quoted by ANOP [PORTUGUESE NEWS AGENCY]. According to the public charges, the individuals, all of whom are Cape Verdians, are further accused of having participated in an "attempt to alter the Constitution through violence." The trial, which began on Friday on the Island of Santo Antao, is the result of two incidents which took place last August (ending in one dead and two injured), in a dispute on the agrarian reforms. The agrarian reform bill--which is to take effect by the end of the year--is currently being publicly debated. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 8 Mar 82 p 8] 5058

CSO: 4742/250

BRIEFS

SDAR DELEGATION--Moroni, 1 Apr (AFP)--An SDAR delegation composed of Ali Mahmoud and Habib Boikhreis, SDAR minister of education and SDAR ambassador to Madagascar respectively, left Moroni on Thursday for Mauritius, via Mayotte, after a 2-day working visit in the Comoros Islands. It is believed that the Saharan delegation, which was received by Comoran Prime Minister Ali Mroudjae and Said Kafe, minister of foreign affairs, cooperation and foreign trade, came to Moroni to plead the cause of the SDAR admission to the OAU. A Moroccan delegation bearing a message from King Hassan II to President Ahmed Abdallah of the Comoros Islands was here from 27 to 30 March, it is noted. [Text] [AB011752 Paris AFP in French 1653 GMT 1 Apr 82]

CSO: 4719/756

BRIEFS

NEW GCF COMMANDER--On 28 March, Chief of Staff Col Ali Meidal Wais presided at the change of command of the Frontier Commando Group (GCF) at Dammerjog. Replacing Major Omar Barreh Darar, who commanded the group since June 1977, is Capt Mohamed Abdillahi Chireh. Major Darar has been named deputy chief of staff for defense. [Summary] [Djibouti LA NATION DJIBOUTI in French 1 Apr 82 p 1]

SAUDI TRANSPORT AID--The Saudi Development Fund and the Djibouti Government signed two loan agreements Saturday totaling 27.5 million dollars. The first of 25 million is for tarring the Djibouti-Tadjourah road which extends 114 km. The second of 2.5 million is for building a central market in the capital. The loans are reimbursable in 20 years without interest. [Excerpts] [Djibouti LA NATION DJIBOUTI in French 25 Mar 82 p 3]

CSO: 4719/791

ERITREAN LEADER LEAVES DOHA FOR BAHRAIN 31 MARCH

GF311410 Doha QNA in Arabic 1215 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] Doha, 31 Mar (QNA)--Osman Saleh Sabbe, chairman of the executive committee of the Eritrean Liberation Front-Popular Liberation Forces (ELF-PLF), left Doha this morning for Bahrain, following a 10-day visit to Qatar on his current tour of the GCC states.

Mr Sabbe praised Qatar's stand on the Eritrean question and its continuing support for the Eritrean people's struggle to achieve their independence and the liberation of their land.

In a statement made to QNA, the Eritrean official said that during his meeting with Qatari officials he found a true desire and anxiousness to support the Eritrean Muslim people in their struggle for the achievement of their legitimate rights. He also indicated that he had briefed officials on developments in the Eritrean question and the current situation in the Eritrean arena, as well as developments in the region of the Horn of Africa.

Mr Sabbe said that the aim of his current tour of the GCC states is to obtain political efforts on an international level in order to denounce the current Ethiopian regime, to work to stop the Ethiopian massacres against the Eritrean people, to resolve the Eritrean question justly and to raise this issue in world circles, particularly in the United Nations. He explained that the Islamic summit conference's decision on supporting the Eritrean people's right to self-determination has prepared the appropriate atmosphere for this action.

The Eritrean official stressed the Eritrean people's determination and the determination of their revolution to continue their struggle in order to achieve their basic demands of full national independence, which will never be relinquished. He said that the failure of the sixth Ethiopian military campaign, which started in January, to achieve its goal of liquidating the Eritrean people and their question was the result of the steadfastness of the revolutionaries and of the Eritrean people who back them.

During his visit to Qatar, Mr Sabbe was accompanied by Mohamed Osman (abu Bakr), representative of the ELF-PLF in the Gulf states.

CSO: 4704/15

BRIEFS

ERITREAN SAYS ETHIOPIANS REPELLED--The Ethiopian forces which launched a new offensive--the sixth since 1978--against the Eritrean resistance in northern Eritrea on 16 February are now suffering "a resounding defeat," the representative of the Eritrean People's Liberation Front [FPLE] stated in Paris on Wednesday 31 March. During a press conference Nafi Kurdi said that since the beginning of the offensive 11,615 Ethiopian soldiers have been killed, 16,164 wounded and 1,131 taken prisoner by the FPLE. According to Kurdi hundreds of Soviet experts, plus South Yemen troops, are taking part in the fighting and Libya is supplying the Ethiopians with minor financial aid. Kurdi also condemned the use of nerve gas by the Ethiopian Army. [Text] [PM051053 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Apr 82 p 6]

CSO: 4710/785

CLASHES WITH NRM REPORTED IN SOFALA PROVINCE

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 1 Mar 82 p 16

[Text] The Mozambican armed forces early Thursday killed 15 members of the armed bands paid by the racist Pretoria regime which, in a frustrated incursion, tried to attack and loot Vila de Gorongosa in Sofala Province. It is believed that more bandits were killed because during search operations more enemy bodies are being found.

Also during this action our forces wounded several bandits and captured war materiel, among which were weapons, ammunition belts for machine guns, rockets and ammunition for mortars and bazookas.

The intention of the enemy repelled by the FPLM [Popular Forces for the Liberation of Mozambique] with direct support of the local population, was to attack and loot Vila de Gorongosa in order to supply themselves with food, and from there to develop their criminal actions against the population.

In view of the prompt intervention by our forces, the enemy was dispersed after having killed a civilian in cold blood and wounded three citizens, among them a 7 year-old child.

During their flight the bandits stole a Land Rover vehicle belonging to a private citizen, which they used to evacuate their wounded.

According to statements of the antiaircraft defense commander in Gorongosa, the armed bandits tried to attack the town early on the 25th of this month, and for this purpose opened fire against the FPLM positions in the barracks and against the antiaircraft defense.

All their efforts failed, in view of the prompt response by our forces which also caused heavy casualties to the enemy, and continue to pursue them relentlessly.

11635
CSO: 4742/239

SOLUTIONS IMPOSED SEEN AS TOO DOGMATIC

Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Mar 82 p 5

[Article by Jean-Pierre Langellier: "The Regime Is Incapable of Effecting Economic Recovery"]

[Text] Maputo--Inhaminga is a town of about 10,000 located less than 200 km from Beira, the second largest port in the country. It is also an important railroad junction, with repair workshops located on the line leading to the Moatize mines and with an extension to Malawi. One day in January, several hundred armed Mozambican National Resistance (RNM) rebels occupied Inhaminga from dawn to midafternoon. This was a triumph with little risk, for the local authorities and the military at the garrison had decamped as soon as the attackers arrived. The assailants distributed loincloths, shouting slogans mocking the FRELIMO, single Mozambican party.

They plundered the shops, carried off foodstuffs and emptied the barracks where the weapons and ammunition were stored. They also kidnaped a French citizen. According to his statement, the rebels appeared to be drunk or drugged. They all wore military uniforms. They were well equipped and had a Sam 7 missile. As they departed, a Mozambican air force Mig fighter plane buzzed the rebel column, but did not attack it. This threat from the sky was enough to sow confusion, from which the Frenchman profited to escape.

The fact that the rebels were able to occupy a town of respectable importance for a number of hours says considerable about the new boldness of the movement. It is now believed to have between 5,000 and 10,000 men. Despite repeated denials, the RNM continues visibly to receive vital logistic support from Pretoria, in particular in terms of parachute drops of weapons and ammunition. The South African air force shamelessly overflies the territory of its neighbor, while the Voice of Free Africa, the RNM radio station, apparently broadcasts from Transvaal. The destruction of the buoys at the port of Beira in November, for which the rebels claimed credit, was probably the work of a South African commando unit.

The detailed documents seized by the army in December after the rebel camp at Garanga was taken (LE MONDE, 13-14 December 1981) remove any remaining doubt about the close collaboration of the RNM with its protectors in Pretoria. The opportunity for Mr Botha to "destabilize" a fragile regime is too tempting. On the other hand, the RNM does not seem to enjoy the same sympathy as in the past with its neighbor, Malawi. President Banda often closed his eyes in the past to the comings and goings of the rebels in the southern part of the country. This connivance, which irritated Maputo, has apparently ended. The two governments, moreover, established diplomatic relations last summer. It does not serve the interests of Malawi, a landlocked country, to strengthen the rebels who are sabotaging communications routes linking its territory with the ocean.

Like any guerrilla army, the RNM derives the best advantage of terrain which favors ambushes and sabotage, especially in the center of the country. It retains the initiative in the clashes, with a ratio of 1 to 10. The few governmental successes have seemed to leave its combat capacity intact. The RNM has neither the means nor probably the desire to establish itself permanently in the towns, from which it would certainly be dislodged. But its very presence near the communications axes paralyzes the economic life of the central region. Between Beira and Maputo, over a distance of more than 300 km, no one travels except in military convoys. Barring an unlikely "abandonment" of the RNM by Pretoria, this insidious war could last a long time. Although it does not pose a mortal threat to the regime, it is making the financial burden heavier--defense accounts for 30 percent of the budget--and it is hindering development. The insecurity maintained all along the railroad and the Beira-Umtali oil pipeline poses a threat to Zimbabwe, by making the shipment of its oil products chancy. The oil pipeline, although buried underground, remains vulnerable to sabotage. As a result, the economic dependence of Salisbury on Pretoria is prolonged.

The political inconsistency of the RNM is its weak point. Its anticommunism, in principle, and a few vengeful slogans take the place of a program. Faced with such ideological poverty, Maputo has difficulty in accusing the dissidents of being mere "puppets of the racist regime." However, the persistence of the rebellion is a greater worry to the government to the extent that instances of desertion from the FRELIMO are multiplying. Certain officials no longer conceal these defections of an "economic" nature in private conversations.

The deserters, fleeing an army in which it is less and less possible to eat one's fill, turn to brigandage and may become a factor which can be maneuvered to the benefit of the dissidents. At the end of December, the government indicated its desire to take matters in hand again by appointing a strongman, Lt Gen Armando Guebuza, as "resident minister" of the central province of Sofala. The political commissar of People's Forces for the Liberation of Mozambique and a former vice minister of defense, he serves as a military governor in the region most seriously affected the rebellion.

This effort to reestablish order in the field has been accompanied by various corrective measures designed to raise the morale of the population again. The "political and organizational campaign" launched in March of 1980 was to give the signal for a "total war against the internal enemy." It hardly produced the expected effects. The opponents of the revolution had not been laid low. On the contrary, their stubborn ill will makes incessant campaigns of vigilance necessary. It is true that the portraits of the former "collaborators with the colonials" have been taken down in the work sites where they had hung for 3 years, but the enemy conceals himself behind other disguises.

In November President Machel launched a "campaign against illegality," the targets of which were incompetence, corruption and abuses of power. The police and the intelligence services were call on the carpet. The president harshly reprimanded the policemen guilty of physical brutality, reminded them of the need to obtain a warrant before making any arrest, and ordered the release of 3,000 persons who had been rotting in the reeducation camps since 1976. Among them were a number of the initial militants in the FRELIMO. The only crime of some of them was to have forgotten to carry their identity cards.

"We do not want any secret police in Mozambique," Mr Machel says, "because we need none." In brief, revolutionary vigilance and its corollary, the denunciation of crime, should suffice to maintain collective discipline. In the Portuguese era, the political police were the focus of hatred. If we should not take Mr Machel's profession of faith literally, it is a fact that his regime, in turn, cannot afford to have an unpopular police force. Security agents will henceforth be recruited much more selectively.

Shortages

This political mobilization may seem laughable to the average citizen of Mozambique, whose life is steadily deteriorating. The government recently announced "the war against hunger" in 7 of its 10 provinces. Mozambique is importing wheat from the West (United States and France), corn from South Africa (nearly 200,000 tons in 1981), rice and even fish (300,000 tons, costing the state 45 million franc in foreign exchange) in increasing quantities. It is true that the fishing fleet is in the main chartered by a mixed Soviet-Mozambican company which supplies the Soviet Union with fish locally. When the restaurants in Beira are not closed, they usually offer a single menu, "carapau," a fish with mediocre flesh accompanied by rice. The "new supply system" created in March 1981 did nothing but place the official stamp on shortages. Each citizen has a ration card entitling him to a monthly quota of 10 or so basic products. At least this is true in theory, for the cooperatives and the authorized stores cannot fully meet the demand. Fuel is also rationed. Diplomats assigned to Maputo pay for their gasoline in foreign currency. The battle to control the black market, which maintains the distribution circuits between the capital and the rural sector, has led to the classic process--the disappearance of the clandestine sources without any improvement in city supply.

The lines in front of some of the shops have simply disappeared for lack of anything to buy. Mr Machel accuses middlemen or bureaucrats, has some tradesmen arrested and promises progress, but the shortages continue.

The prices of beer and cigarettes have just been increased by from 60 to 100 percent, while wages have been "frozen" for a year and a half. The Mozambique unit of currency, the "metical," can be exchanged on the black market at a rate one-sixth of its fiduciary value.

Mozambique has never produced so little since it won independence. It imports goods worth three times its exports. The "central state plan," published in January to the accompaniment of a slogan calling for economy and austerity with a view to correcting the imbalance, resembles more than anything else a list of good intentions. The majority of the businesses are at a standstill.

This factory, for lack of replacement parts, is producing only one-ninth of the bicycles called for in the plan, while that sugar mill is producing a tenth of its maximum tonnage. In all of the ports, traffic is dropping off. The upsurge in trade with neighboring countries does not suffice to compensate for the decline in activity due to the gradual "disengagement" of South Africa. The port of Moputo is operating at 40 percent capacity.

This underutilization of the productive mechanism does not prevent waste from occurring. Bulgarian experts are supervising a vast rural development project in Chokwe. Dozens of pieces of farm machinery are rusting there for lack of maintenance.

The collectivization of agriculture is the big issue now. The goal of the plan is categorical: to multiply the peasant population incorporated in the cooperative and state farms by 70 by 1990. The task is a monumental one, for at present nine-tenths of the production is harvested on individual plots. An energetic minister of agriculture was needed to direct this difficult reform. During the December reorganization, the choice fell to Mr Sergio Vieira, former governor of the Central Bank.

The strategy here has at least two shortcomings. On the one hand, it is being imposed from above against tradition and the will of the producers. On the other hand, Mr Vieira lacks any special competence in this field. His appointment was a political move. Is this the best response to technical and human problems? In short, the leadership team, chosen to be and avowedly pragmatic, is overlaying the reality in Mozambique, in this connection, with dogmatic schemes. This is perhaps its greatest weakness. Seven years after independence was won, it can no longer in any case be called a youthful error.

5157
CSO: 4719/729

GDR SPORTS TRAINING ASSISTANCE

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 27 Feb 82 p 14

[Excerpt] Five persons have been selected to participate in two courses for coaches in handball and athletics in the GDR next March. The courses will last 8 months. These trips are the result of scholarships offered to the DNEFD by the DTSB, an organization of the GDR sports office, and which forms part of the provisions of cooperation between the two countries, especially in the agreements signed by the sports associations of the two countries.

Jose Pereira said that "a management and sports planning course will also be suggested for 20 persons in the GDR, lasting 2 months to start at the beginning of the second quarter of this year. The participants later will be district officials of the EFD."

Four Physicians in Iraq and Berlin

To strengthen the preparation of cadres, an official of the Office of International Support and Cooperation of the DNEFD told DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE that in the program of activities for this year they are contemplating sending, shortly, four physicians specializing in sports medicine to Iraq and the GDR, two for each country.

For those who are going to Berlin the expenses are covered by that European socialist country, while those who are going to Iraq will be financed by our Ministry of Health. All selected physicians will participate for 5 days in training in medical techniques connected with sports.

11635
CSO: 4742/239

PORTUGUESE VINE CULTURE ASSISTANCE

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 24 Feb 82 p 16

[Text] The work of grafting--which this time had to be repeated because of infestation of "muchem," lack of rains and almost total absence of a system of drop irrigation (absolutely necessary for this type of cultivation)--should already be finished at the farm of the vine-growing project in Manica, as planned.

Information given to DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE by Catarino and Francisco Romao, two Portuguese experts involved in the project, says that there has been poor support, especially in the use of appropriate machinery, in this first stage of vine clearing.

The delay which up to now has been noted in setting up the system of drop by drop irrigation is also one of the factors that endangered the program of grafting from the beginning. This is what Francisco Romao told DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE reporters on the subject:

"I am sure that if all the necessary material were given to us on time, the work of grafting would be successful. However, difficulties beyond the control of all of us here in the district and the province, only delayed the program. As to the land, I believe that it is suitable and good for vine cultivation."

Francisco Romao, who has been working in vine cultivation since childhood, is one of the Portuguese experts of a group of 10 who have been in our country for 2 months, within the provisions of a contract signed between Portugal and Mozambique.

The team has worked in Namaacha and Massingir, where they also worked on grafting, and then they went to Manica Province, to the experimental projects covering 30 hectares in that area.

11635
CSO: 4742/239

MEASURES ADOPTED TO IMPROVE BEIRA FOOD SUPPLY

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 20 Feb 82 pp 1,7

[Sofala Provincial Council Communique from Beira, 19 February 1982]

[Text] The following communique was received last night from the Sofala Provincial Council:

The Provincial Council has paid close attention to the evolution of the supply situation in the city of Beira and various districts of Sofala Province, and has established measures so that within local possibilities and with the support of central organizations, the most important problems can be resolved.

There are cyclic periods of shortage of such food as rice, corn, vegetables, fruit, meat, fish and so on.

The most problems occur in the period December-March, the period when rains make transportation difficult.

Actions developed to overcome this situation will permit, within a short time, significant improvement in supply to be evident, although all problems will not be solved.

Therefore the Provincial Council orders:

That all stores selling food must show in front, in a very visible manner, the information as to the availability or not of food products of greatest importance, especially corn meal, rice, sugar, oil and soap.

That all storekeepers rigorously carry out this order and proceed to sell the food products that they may have in their stores, preparing the needed packaging in advance.

In view of lack of charcoal, the Provincial Council has given instructions to study the sale of kerosene in more stores to facilitate the purchase of this fuel and to prevent large movements of population. Within a few days measures to that effect will be announced.

The Provincial Council points out that the announced measures and others that will be announced later, are aimed at preventing the population from standing in lines unnecessarily and also to prevent actions of speculators and hoarders who take advantage of the shortages to satisfy their personal desires.

11635
CSO: 4742/239

FRENCH TRADE UNION DELEGATION VISITS

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 7 Mar 82 pp 6-7

> [Text] A delegation from the Central Confederation of Labor [CGT], the French union federation, visited Mozambique from 28 February to 3 March. The purpose of the visit was to strengthen relations with the Commission for Implementation of the Production Councils [CNICP].

Following the first session of discussions with the Production Councils, Pierre Pensaes, leader of the visiting delegation, told the press that they had confirmed the need to develop relations between the two organizations. In this context, it was expected that a document would be signed at the end of the visit, which would serve as a foundation for these relations in the future.

The three-member CGT delegation included Pierre Pensaes, director of international relations, Omet Marcel, director of African affairs, and Bailly Jacqueline, director of the Asian sector in the organization's International Department.

In the discussions with the French union leaders, the Mozambican delegation was led by Augusto Macamo, member of the FRELIMO Party Central Committee and executive secretary of the CNICP.

Pensaes also reported that during the discussions the delegations noted "an agreement of views on the situation in southern Africa" and in the rest of the world.

The CGT and Southern Africa

The CGT delegation leader explained to the press that his organization is interested in maintaining good relations with the labor organizations in southern Africa. In France, the CGT plays an active part in efforts to break that Western country's ties with the racist South African regime.

In effect, the CGT is struggling, along with other progressive French organizations, to put a stop to nuclear cooperation between France and South Africa.

Pansaes explained that the French monopolies are stubbornly cooperating with the apartheid system, despite public criticism. The union organizations in the Western countries have played an important role in mobilizing antiapartheid campaigns.

During the Year of Implementation of Sanctions Against Pretoria, it is expected that organizations like the CGT will promote several days of boycotts against trade between the West and South Africa.

6362
CSO: 4742/248-A

INCREASE IN PORT CONSTRUCTION ACTIVITY NOTED

Quelimane, Macuse Ports

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 9 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Pedro Tivane]

> [Text] A hydrographic study of the ports of Quelimane and Macuse, in Zambezia Province, has just been concluded, and a similar study is planned for the port of Moma, Nampula Province. Surveys have also been conducted in the capital of Zambezia, and Macuse has reached the stage of analyzing the data and control of variation in sea levels.

Rehabilitation of the ports is vitally important to the distribution of agricultural products. In the copra sector alone, sources in the sector estimate that over 50 tons of the product are being held at BOROR, MADAL and the Companhia da Zambezia, awaiting shipment.

The location of the centers where the copra is concentrated does not permit distribution by land. This is especially true of Zambezia Province, where the rains that have fallen in the region have made most of the roads impassable.

According to a worker at BOROR, in Macuse, "A tractor might be able to reach some regions, but it would be impossible to get there by truck."

Ministry of Ports Provides Manpower

While the hydrography and survey team is studying port rehabilitation, two tugboats (the "Moma" and the "Macuse") are now being overhauled in the Macuse shipyard, after a third tugboat went back into service about 2 weeks ago.

There were emergency imports of parts to repair the tugboats, and the parts have already been delivered to Macuse by an employee of the National Directorate of Maritime and River Transport.

To expedite the works in progress at the Macuse shipyard, a technical team from the directorate should arrive there in the next few days to join the group of workers engaged in the overhaul.

Local predictions are that the two tugboats will be ready to resume operations in 2 months. With the arrival of the team from Maputo, it is expected that this period will be shortened.

This measure was taken partly because the initial estimates of the recovery time did not hold up.

An employee of the Ministry of Ports commented: "When we were there last October, they assured us that the recovery work would be completed as soon as the missing parts were delivered. The fact is that, to date, nothing has changed."

The recovery operation itself was the object of a study to analyze its advantages. Some people felt it would be safer to buy new tugboats, bearing in mind the amount of work waiting for the boats.

Rehabilitation was chosen after an individual involved in the matter gave assurances that it would be feasible; however, the work was not completed as soon as expected. A worker at BOROR said:

"Our generator group is out of order. This limits the capacity of BOROR's machine shop, making the work slower. In addition, the tugboats were already very run down. As soon as we repair one part, another problem shows up. We are not sure we can complete work on the tugboats in time to ship the copra that we are holding in the production units there."

Meanwhile

While the two tugboats are being rehabilitated, once the study of the hydrographic and survey data at the port of Macuse is concluded, the technical team will go to Moma. It is expected that the ship "Ana Caria" will go along with them, so the copra concentrated at Moma can be loaded for shipping as soon as possible.

The port of Moma has not been in operation for over 5 years. Before 1976 it handled ships of medium tonnage.

Maputo Port

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 11 Mar 82 p 1

> [Text] Navigation at the port of the Mozambican capital, as well as the other piers in the area, is now more secure, we learned from a source linked to maintenance of water depths at the port of Maputo.

According to the same source, this security in navigation is the result of intensive dredging operations in the major access channels at the port, conducted by the dredging ship "Rovume."

The dredging was initiated last year as part of a program of regular maintenance of maritime access channels, specifically at the ports of Beira and Maputo.

At the port of the Mozambican capital, the dredging operations take in the Polana channel, the primary route for ships entering and leaving the port, the Xefina channel, the Catembe channel and the junction at the mouth of the Matola River.

The dredge "Rovuma" conducted similar work at the Matola piers (the mineral, oil and coal docks) and in the entire docking area at the Port of Maputo.

In the specific case of the ports of Maputo and Beira, Mozambican port authorities consider maintenance of depths in the respective access channels to be of vital importance, considering the role the two ports play in the national economy and in international traffic relations in the regime.

In the context of regional cooperation, it is noted that the ports of Maputo and Nacala play an important role as access routes for imports and exports of neighboring countries in this zone of our continent.

Moma, Mocimboa da Praia Ports

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 12 Mar 82 p 1

> [Text] The ports of Mocimboa da Praia and Moma, in Cabo Delgado and Nampula provinces, respectively, will be reopened to coastal shipping, we learned from a source linked to the Mozambican Merchant Marine.

Rehabilitation of these ports will follow on the hydrographic studies now under way by a team from the Directorate of Hydrography. These studies may possibly include the port of Chinde, in Zambezia Province.

All these ports, considered small coastal shipping ports, have been closed to navigation for several years because of changes in their access channels and inadequate use of the dredging equipment.

In the specific case of the port of Mocimboa da Praia, the reopening is of primary importance for the region's economic development; at this time, agricultural products from the region are shipped by highway, at much higher costs than maritime shipping.

The port of Moma is equally important to the distribution of the agricultural production of Upper Zambezia, specifically, copra, peanuts and woods, among others. The port also has refrigeration equipment to preserve fish, in which the zone is also quite rich.

The hydrographic studies now in progress follow completion of similar work last year at the ports of Maputo, Beira and Quelimane.

The brigade sent by the Directorate of Hydrography will take a survey of present depths from the approach areas (channels and bars) to the piers, including a study of tides at each of the ports. On completion of this work it will be possible to make an accurate determination of the sizes of ships that may call at any of these northern ports.

Equipment Deteriorating in Mocimboa da Praia

Because of the prolonged shutdown of the port of Mocimboa da Praia, various pieces of port and navigational equipment there have been deteriorating.

Notable among the deteriorating equipment are the two 2-ton cranes and all the barges moored there. Reopening of the port presupposes the rehabilitation of this equipment.

6362
CSO: 4742/248-A

BRIEFS

PORTUGUESE CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE--The National Housing Directorate and the Portuguese enterprises PARTEX of the Gulbenkian Foundation signed a cooperation agreement on Saturday. According to a source connected with the conversations, the agreement is aimed at starting the construction of the project previously disclosed and concerning the construction of 5,000 housing units in some parts of the country. The first phase of this project will be launched shortly; it will immediately have an effect on the civil construction industry both up the line and down the line with a view to the determination of the existence of support facilities in terms of carpentry, sawmills, and masonry work. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 8 Mar 82 p 8] 5058

PCP ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED--The 61st anniversary of the establishment of the Portuguese Communist Party was marked on Saturday in the auditorium of the Avenida motion picture theater in Maputo. During the ceremony, Jose Pascoal Zandamela, member, Central Committee, FRELIMO Party, addressed "particularly warm greetings to the Secretary General of the Portuguese Communist Party, Comrade Alvaro Cunhal, whose self-denial, firmness, lucidity, and identification with the interests of the Portuguese people and other peoples of the world are an example to any consistent communist and Marxist." In analyzing the activities of the PCP [Portuguese Communist Party], Jose Cavaco, alternate member, Central Committee, of that party, said that the PCP "is strong because it is also an internationalist party. We are not alone in our struggle. The struggle of all peoples is our struggle. The struggle of our party and of our people is an integral part of the broad process of revolutionary transformation throughout the world." And, he added, "the changes that have taken place in the countries of Africa, in the course of the struggle against colonialism, racism, apartheid, in the struggle for national independence and for the construction of a new society, play a decisive role." Aguinaldo Espada, the man in charge of the PCP organization in the People's Republic of Mozambique, also spoke. During the ceremony, the PCP militants offered support for the conduct of the Fourth Congress to the FRELIMO Party in the amount of 75,000 meticals. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 8 Mar 82 p 8] 5058

CHARCOAL MORE EXPENSIVE THAN GAS--Charcoal, one of the fuels replacing cooking gas, has recently become more expensive than gas itself, in spite of the fact that its handling does not require the same care and expenditures connected with the manufacture of petroleum derivatives. Coal gets to be more expensive the moment its dealers fix their own prices, as each of them wants to, in the absence of a legal and uniform price list for the sale of this item. A 13-kilogram can of gas can supply a five-member family for 30 days; that means spending 190.00 meticals; that is not true of coal. As for the customer, he pays three or four times more for coal than he would pay for a can of gas, in terms of prices. "With the gas, you can get along with one can per month; coal will cost me about 1,000.00 meticals or more during the same period of time; that makes it difficult to control the family budget. There were even cases when we went to a market to buy coal, bringing the usual amount of money along. When we got there, we found that the price had been jacked up," Catarina Antonio told us in connection with the cost of that fuel. Resolving this situation necessarily calls for the establishment of uniform sales prices for coal because it is sold on the market; a standard measure must also be provided. [Excerpts] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 18 Mar 82 p 2] 5058

REPAIRS IN FLOATING DRYDOCK--The floating dock which was recently acquired by the People's Republic of Mozambique from the Soviet Union will soon carry out its first major mission with the docking of the dredge "Rovuma," our reporter was told by a source at EMODRAGA [Mozambique Dredging Enterprise], the enterprise which owns that vessel. The repair work on the dredge "Rovuma" in the floating drydock will be accomplished with the support of Dutch specialists whose arrival in Mozambique is scheduled within the next several days. As soon as the Dutch specialists arrive in the country, a repair time and cost study will be prepared and it is expected that everything will be done in the shortest possible time. The dredge "Rovuma" is the biggest unit of its kind in the country and it is the only one in operating condition. Its repair by Dutch technicians is a part of the technical cooperation agreements signed between the governments of the People's Republic of Mozambique and that European country. Since the floating dock has been in Mozambique (starting in October 1981), ship repair work has been done on it although on a somewhat smaller scale and as a part of routine maintenance. Built in 1964 in Holland, the dredge "Rovuma" is a ship with a structure that enables it to perform various dredging operations with maximum efficiency. Its engine has a capacity of 960 hp and it is equipped with two 200-kw generators. The unit can carry 2,800 t of dredging material (mud) and it can sail at a speed of 12 km/hr. Empty, it weighs about 1,745 t, with a length of 77.75 m and a beam of 13.4 m. [Excerpts] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 11 Mar 82 p 8] 5058

UN REFUGEE ASSISTANCE--The refugees who are presently in the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique] will, starting this year, be the beneficiaries of a project leading to their social integration so as to provide them with broad prospects, both in teaching and in work, it was disclosed by Diarra Sadek Boubakar, RPM representative with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. This program is subsidized by an allowance of $50,000 (about 1.85 million meticals) which will be invested efficiently and effectively not only in teaching Portuguese, in view of the fact that the majority of the refugees come from English-speaking countries, but also in vocational training for these people so that their social integration may develop in a positive fashion. According to the information which Diarra Sadek Boubakar provided us with, the ACNUR (United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees) in Maputo is allocating the amount of $210,000 (7.77 million meticals, approximately) for assistance to refugees in the RPM; the United Nations made that amount available to the country in order to meet the pressing needs of the refugees. [Excerpts] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 12 Mar 82 p 10] 5058

CUBAN MOVIE PRODUCER--Cuban film producer Santiago Alvarez arrived in our country on 24 February. The internationally renowned Cuban is in Mozambique to produce a documentary. The day after his arrival, Alvarez, who is also a member of the Cuban Communist Party Central Committee, went to Inhambane to film President Samora Machel's visit to the province. The Cuban producer will also conduct a seminar on the topic: "Journalistic Cinematography and Revolution." [Excerpt] [Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 7 Mar 82 p 6] 6362

CSO: 4742/248-A

BRIEFS

POPULATION FIGURES PUBLISHED--Windhoek, 2 Apr (AFP)--The population of Namibia, the former German colony administered by Pretoria since 1920, today has a population of 1,035,000, according to the official figures published on Friday. The white population of the territory which was about 90,650 in the second half of the 1970's has apparently dropped to 71,530 in other words, it has fallen by 26 percent compared to the last census. These figures indicate that the most important ethnic group numerically is the Ovambos (505,000), followed by the Kavangos (93,560), the Herreros (78,380), the Damaras (77,100), the whites, the coloreds (41,000) and the Tswansa (8,000). The whites, who were the second largest group in the 1970's come fifth today. [Text] [AB021552 Paris AFP in French 1458 GMT 2 Apr 82]

CSO: 4719/756

PAPER SAYS SDAR ISSUE SHOULD NOT DISUNITE OAU

AB311310 Banjul GAMBIA NEWS BULLETIN in English 19 Mar 82 pp 1-3

[Editorial: "Lest They Bring Down the Whole House With Them"]

[Text] Following the manner in which the OAU Council of Ministers meeting recently broke up in Addis Ababa because of the unceremonious and unprecedented way in which the OAU secretary general allowed the seating of the representatives of the Saharaoui Democratic Republic at that meeting, the ensuing storm is continuing unabated. Yet another OAU ministers conference, that of the ministers of information in Dakar for the purpose of determining a take off date for the PAN AFRICAN NEWS AGENCY this year, ended in division. All because Senegal, exercising its right to decide who it should allow entry into its borders, refused entry to the Saharaoui Democratic delegation. As the Senegalese minister of information said, for them the OAU consists of 50 sovereign states, not 51. Therefore the question of the Saharaoui's attendance at this meeting of a specialised agency of the OAU did not rise. The ensuing disagreement about this led to the walkouts and the lack of a quorum (two-thirds of the members) so that the meeting had to be postponed indefinitely. It has thus become clear that an amicable and just solution must quickly be found to this Saharaoui question lest it plunges the OAU and its agencies into the sort of stalemate and acrimony which can destroy our organisation. The following editorial comments on the situation.

What started in the form of secret meetings and deliberations between Spain, the Kingdom of Morocco and the Islamic Republic of Mauritania, what was embarked upon without involving the people of Sahara or the other people of Africa or even the OAU is now turning out to be the Achilles heel of the Organisation of African Unity.

This question of the Saharaoui Democratic Republic has been spreading like an incurable cancer. From Morocco's spectacular green march to the coup that toppled Ould Daddah, from the dramatic divisions which surfaced at the OAU summit in Freetown to Mauritania's abandonment of its share of this land, yes even despite King Hassan's unexpected announcement at the Nairobi OAU summit to allow what he called a "controlled referendum" under UN and OAU auspices, the question of the Sahara remains unsolved.

Not only that, the lack of tangible progress on the referendum question is now taking the initiative from the hands of Africa's heads of state. History moves according to its own dictates and by forces which are really mysterious. The cause of the Saharaoui's is seemingly and increasingly pricing itself the sort of unprecedented and unexpected initiatives and developments. The turn of events is actually endangering the continued unity of Africa itself as manifested in the OAU.

In management, one must decide and implement otherwise other unauthorised people will be tempted to do it for one. In the case of the Saharaoui Democratic Republic, Africa has singularly failed to act on the basis of the Nairobi decision. Granted, there had been unexpected turns of events and there had been complications, there had been matters of detail which have got in the way of the practical implementation of the decision taken in Nairobi.

And now, it would seem the Saharaoui's for long engaged in a running verbal and actual battle with Morocco, are losing their cool if not their head. Their diplomacy is being forced and they have their supporters in some parts of Africa and the OAU secretariat itself. What they and the OAU secretariat general, whose correct nomenclature is still administrative and not executive secretary, should however remember, is that procedure is procedure. What has to be done right must be done right. Half measures, technicalities, tricks and back door entries will not do.

To be a state, to be independent and sovereign, is a proud moment in a nation's history. It calls for front door entry, it calls for ceremony and it calls for mobilization. Not this action smacking of a guerrilla mentality, and way of doing things, not these disputes, these quarrels, these divisions which question the very basis of their yet to be state's right to existence, and their claim to be therefore qualified for OAU membership. Guinea-Bissau, Zimbabwe, Angola and Mozambique, all fought their liberation wars, and all had to satisfy Africa that as governments of their countries, they were in charge of them territorially, politically, administratively and by way of national security and representation. That is the true independence, that is the full credentials for unquestioned membership of the OAU. Nothing else will do.

And the people of the Sahara should therefore go back to quiet diplomacy; they should heed the Nairobi decision and pay attention to the efforts of the Committee of Wisemen; they should indeed give chance for the ceasefire to be; they should in fact allow a referendum as proposed. That way the facts will be there for all to see the Moroccans, the Saharaoui and their leadership as the rest of Africa.

That should be the strategy commendable for adoption. That is the correct route to success and the truth. Anything else only serves to divide us more, to endanger any support so far gained by them throughout Africa and to affect in an adverse manner the very future wellbeing of the OAU. For God's sake therefore, people and leadership of Sahara, let this not be a case of bringing down the whole house with you when you fall. Africa can never forget it or forgive you for it. Nor will history.

CSO: 4700/1028

BRIEFS

MERCENARY ALLEGES S.AFRICAN THREATS--Victoria, 29 Mar (AFP)--Martin Dolinchek, a member of the South African Intelligence Service who was arrested after the coup attempt in the Seychelles in November of last year, said on Monday that he was subject to threats from South Africa and that he was afraid for his life and that of his wife and children who have remained in their country. Mr Dolinchek, one of the seven mercenaries accused of treason by the Seychelles Government, added before the Victoria Supreme Court that he was informed by telephone by the CIA of the threats issued against him by Niel Barner, director of the South African Intelligence Service (WIS). According to Mr Dolinchek the "WIS" would like to eliminate him to prevent him from revealing confidential information, but he added that no one had questioned him on the structure of the South African Intelligence Service. The seven accused persons, who are currently under temporary detention, are expected to appear before the tribunal on 13 April. [Text] [AB291841 Paris AFP in French 1650 GMT 29 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/756

PRESIDENT DEPARTS MOROCCO, MAKES STATEMENT

LD261426 Rabat Domestic Service in Arabic 1300 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Text] Before leaving Rabat today, the president of Sierra Leone, Siaka Stevens, made a statement in which he reiterated his astonishment at the unilateral decision taken by the OAU secretary general, Adem Kojo to impose the delegation of the so-called Saharan Republic on the meeting of the OAU Ministerial Council in Addis Ababa.

In his statement to the radio correspondent, President Stevens expressed his pleasure at his visit to Morocco which enabled him once more to exchange views with King Hassan II on what he called the serious situation which has arisen in the OAU. He said that the situation demands urgent action, otherwise the OAU will break up and will depart from the spirit of Casablanca and return to the same serious situation it found itself in in Monrovia, and this is something which we do not like to see happening.

He affirmed that as a former OAU chairman, he will do his utmost to restore things to their true perspective. This is because the gravity of the situation does not affect only the countries concerned, and the African countries but the whole world as well.

He expressed his belief that the OAU can once more perform its role in the proper manner, if it is run correctly. Otherwise, he noted, a catastrophe will occur.

Replying to a question about his own views on Adem Kojo's decision, President Stevens pointed out that as an African committee has been set up to supervise the referendum in the Sahara in accordance with specific resolutions, it is necessary to involve the OAU in the problem. Kojo should not have taken the decision he has taken, he said.

He affirmed that the participation of the POLISARIO delegation in the meetings of an African Ministerial Council is contrary to the holding of the referendum.

He said that as a former OAU chairman, he has discussed the matter with Adem Kojo and he believes that Kojo's action was very grave.

As to Morocco's position, President Stevens pointed out that Morocco is a sovereign independent state and consequently it has the full right to take whatever decisions it deems fit for itself and for its interests. Irrespective of the Moroccan stand, he said, Kojo's action is contrary to the interests of the OAU. Finally, he again expressed his surprise at this action.

CSO: 4704/15

BRIEFS

EPLF SUCCESSES IN ERITREA--A report from the Eritrean People's Liberation Front [EPLF] headquarters in Mogadishu says their forces killed 150 soldiers of the black colonialist Abyssinian regime. They wounded 160 and captured 16 others in fighting during this month and last month in Eritrea. The report added that EPLF fighters captured 83 medium guns belonging to the Abyssinian forces. [Text] [EA062040 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 1700 GMT 6 Apr 82]

CSO: 4797/13

BOTHA REBUFFS CONJECTURES ABOUT AN EARLY ELECTION

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 17 Mar 82 pp 1-2

[Text] Conjectures in the Progressive Party's press that a snap election is about to take place were emphatically rebuffed yesterday by Prime Minister P. W. Botha during an interview with DIE BURGER.

The prime minister asked: The government has a two-thirds majority in parliament...so, why should it now suddenly call for an election?

Both the RAND DAILY MAIL and the afternoon papers of the Argus group yesterday conjectured that there would be a snap election on 26 May or 18 August. The conjecture was made on the basis of statements made by far-right groups. They were quoting Mr Louis Stofberg, the chief secretary of the Reconstituted group, while opposition leader Dr Van Zyl Slabbert also made some comments.

However, yesterday the prime minister gave DIE BURGER a positive denial that he wants to hold an early election. "Such thoughts were surely being entertained in the flighty imagination of people who do not have anything to do."

Rebels

"The government has a lot of work to do. It has a mandate from the voters and it must go on with its work. The government has a two-thirds majority in Parliament...Why must it now all of a sudden hold an election?"

In yesterday's Progressive Party press, Mr Stofberg stated that confirmation that the election would be held on 26 May came not only from one source but from as many as five or six, while one of the 16 rebels in parliament (whose name was not mentioned) believes that this will take place on 18 August.

According to Stofberg, the prime minister is to make the announcement in parliament on 25 March, while the nomination date is to be 15 April.

The Reconstituted Nationalist Party's machinery is believed to have been geared up last Thursday and the first candidate could be nominated by the party branches as early as next week. The comment made to the Argus newspapers by opposition leader Dr Van Zyl Slabbert was: "If the rightest parties succeed in consolidating and uniting themselves, an early general election is possible, but that is a big question."

In political circles it is being pointed out that an early election is highly unlikely in light of the Presidential Council's constitutional proposals which are expected shortly.

The expectation is that the Presidential Council will be coming up with a comprehensive report on local administration by the month of May, while the general framework for the first-level and second-level government will be sketched out at the same time. The prime minister has already repeatedly emphasized that if the proposals deviate considerably from the Nationalist Party's present policy, he would first present these to the four provincial congresses and he would then consult the voters directly through a referendum.

The coloreds and the Indians could also be consulted in referendums or elections.

The feeling is that an early general election would probably mean a delay in the entire process.

It is further being pointed out that there is still a lot of confusion among the voters, especially in Transvaal, as a result of the break caused by the Treurnicht action. The Nationalist Party must first get a chance to properly consolidate its position through a process of information.

7964
CSO: 4701/44

KRYGKOR GIVEN WIDE POWERS IN ARMS IMPORT, MANUFACTURE

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 17 Mar 82 p 9

[Text] From now on KRYGKOR (Armaments Corporation) alone will exercise control over arms imports to South Africa, because this organization is abreast of the armed forces arms requirements. This is what minister of defense, Gen Magnus Malan, said yesterday in Parliament.

General Malan introduced the debate on the second reading of the draft amendment on the Act on Military Weapons Development and Manufacturing and said that these powers are being given to KRYGKOR also for the purpose of preventing diplomatic embarrassment to South Africa.

General Malan said that it is obvious that uncoordinated importation and transit of armaments is creating a security risk for South Africa and moreover this could damage the country's political ties. KRYGKOR knows the armed forces' existing and expected requirements in military equipment and is therefore equipped for exercising control over the importation and transit of armaments.

An agreement has been reached with the South African Police to the effect that it will continue to exercise control over imports and transit of arms and ammunition for commercial purposes.

These provisions will mean in practice that military armaments may not be transported or imported without a permit issued by KRYGKOR. Issuance of the permit will be announced in the government gazette.

General Malan said that these stipulations also would apply with respect to armaments on board an aircraft landing in South Africa or on board a ship entering a South African harbor, even though the armaments would not be destined for South Africa.

In light of the arms embargo against South Africa, the local armaments industry must be stimulated as much as possible. The draft law is making provisions for this.

The uncontrolled manufacturing of armaments can lead to the danger that arms of strategic interest could fall into the wrong hands or that manufacturers will incur great expenses only to later discover that there is no market for their products.

Mr Harry Schwarz (Progressive Federal Party, Yeoville) said that the official opposition will support the draft law. South Africa has responded exceptionally well to the weapons boycott. A lot of money must be being allotted for this purpose, money which could rather be used for social purposes.

It is ironical that the people who forced the boycott do not realize that had it not been for the boycott more money could be dedicated for those people whose interests the advocators of the boycott pretend to be serving.

Mr Schwarz said that he doubted the desirability of having the permits issued in accordance with the draft legislation announced in the government gazette. South Africa's enemies cannot be allowed to have an idea of what is going on in the local armaments industry.

Mr Koos Lloyd (Nationalist Party, Roodeplaat) said that there exists an oversupply of certain armaments all over the world and that South Africa has become an important target area for dumping these weapons. Therefore it is important that better controls be exercised.

With the support of the opposition party the legislation was read a second time.

7964
CSO: 4701/44

'OPERATION SUPER' DESTROYS SWAPO BASE IN SOUTHWEST ANGOLA

KRYGKOR Weapons Used

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 17 Mar 82 pp 1-2

[Text] Cambeno (Southern Angola) -- This weekend the security forces of South Africa and of the South-West dealt a hard blow to SWAPO by killing 201 terrorists in the course of a day-long battle. Three South Africans were killed in combat.

The security forces captured a large quantity of AK-47 rifles, SAM-7 rockets and rocket launchers and it is expected that more weapons and ammunition will be found in that vicinity.

The existence of the SWAPO base in the southwest corner of Angola, 22 kilometers north of the South-West border and 75 kilometers from the Atlantic Ocean is an indication that SWAPO plans to infiltrate Kaokoland and Damaraland, in the northwest section of the South-West, from that region.

Capt Jan Hougaard, commander of Operation Super, the code name for the attack, said here yesterday that the attacking force consisted of 45 men from the 32nd Battallion in the northern sector of the South-West.

The soldiers, who operated in two patrols, were unloaded from a helicopter on Saturday morning at about 8 o'clock at a location about 2 kilometers from the base. When they were about 1 kilometer from the SWAPO base the terrorists began firing upon them. However, it was clear that the terrorists were trapped unexpectedly.

Later the terrorists fought back tenaciously and it took 8 hours for the security forces to take over the base. The terrorists also opened fire on the South Africans with mortars and according to Captain Hougaard it was necessary to fall back a little for a while.

Many terrorists who fled were mowed down by South African "stopper groups." About 40 terrorists fled.

Later it became apparent that the terrorists were completely surprised by the security forces. Many bodies were found lying near homemade shelters and the laundry was still hanging on mopani trees.

Within the base the security forces also found food supplies from Zimbabwe. This is the first time in the war in this region that food from Zimbabwe has been found in a SWAPO base and this is an indication that that country is now directly involved in the war, according to a senior officer of the armed forces.

Yesterday Gen Magnus Malan, minister of defense, expressed his satisfaction with the successful operation in Angola. "I am especially proud of the soldiers who took part in the operation. The fact that 201 terrorists were killed is yet another proof of how effective the armed forces can be.

"I want to say good luck to all of them, they have carried out their task very well. To KRYGKOR (Armaments Corporation) I want to say: Keep on making those good weapons with which such good victories can be attained."

Brig Rudolph Badenhorst, commander of Sector 10 in the operational region, said that 10 hideouts with weapons, ammunition and food have thus far been found in followup operations in the region. In one of the hideouts, 500 RPG, 7 rocket launchers, thousands of rifle grenades, 150 land mines, 10 used SAM-7 rocket launchers and 50 AK-47 rifles were discovered.

The security forces destroyed some of these arms on the spot because it would have been difficult to transport them to the South-West over rough terrain. Among these arms there were 306 mortar bombs, 610 M-60 rifle grenades, and 310 projectiles.

Brigadier Badenhorst said: "The destruction of the base must have been a demoralizing blow for SWAPO."

The South Africans who were killed in the attack were: T Lt Petrus Johannes Stefanus Nel (19) of Pomfred, Northern Cape, Cpl Philip Thomas Steward (23) of Durban and Rifleman Eduardo Dumba of the Buffalo Military Base.

Description of the SWAPO Base

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 17 Mar 82 pp 1-2

[Text] Cambeno -- The futility and abomination of war was clear yesterday in one of the most remote parts of southern Africa.

The swollen and dismembered bodies of SWAPO terrorists killed in Operation Super turned the usually peaceful and remote area into a valley of death.

After the attack the laundry of the terrorists still hung on the mopani trees near their hiding places of tarpaulin and dry branches.

It was clear that many of 240 or so terrorists in the camp tried to get away and that they were killed as they ran up the steep gorges.

Many other terrorists were killed at their post where they made a last effort to turn back the attack. But is was clear that they could not stand up to the refined and smooth operation of one of the security forces' superior counter-insurgency units, the 32nd Battallion.

It was all over after an 8-hour combat.

Judging by the bodies of the terrorists scattered over a wide area it appeared that they were all grown ups. Fifteen-year-old terrorists have in the past often been shot and killed in the operational area; most of them being school children and students who believed that they would have found a better life and education in Angola.

According to military experts, SWAPO is now letting young infiltrators fight alongside experienced men.

The location of the new camp which was destroyed in the operation was poorly chosen, according to them. The camp was situated in a valley surrounded by high mountain tops and could have easily been attacked.

Corn Meal

Most of the arms and ammunition in the base were imported in December of last year through the south Angolan port of Mocamedes and transported by freight truck to a place about 5 kilometers from the base. From there SWAPO members carried them to the base.

Canned foods, corn meal and bags of rice were stored in gullies. In one concealed location there was enough rice stored to keep 300 men alive for 48 days. According to the labels on the bags, the rice was shipped from Moscow to Mocamedes by the Russian Afro-Asian Solidarity Committee.

Soup packages dated 12 December 1981 were also found. Among the supplies, there was also Danish food from the UN's Food Commission for Refugees.

Zimbabwe Involved

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 17 Mar 82 pp 1-2

[Text] Cambelo (Angola) -- Yesterday Maj Gen Charles Lloyd, commander of the South-West's regional force said that indications of direct Zimbabwean involvement in the terrorist war in the South-West were found for the first time in the course of Operation Super conducted this weekend in southern Angola.

Following the operation in which 201 members of SWAPO were killed and three South Africans died, General Lloyd said that he expects Zimbabwean involvement to increase in the future.

This was the first time that Zimbabwean supplies were found in storage facilities taken over by the South-West and South Africa's security forces. Cans of preserved meat, shown to newspapermen bore a well-known trademark on which the Zimbabwean place of origin was shown in print.

This is being regarded as the beginning of Robert Mugabe's promised support to SWAPO.

"I think that it can be assumed that Zimbabwe's support will be in the form of weapons and food," General Lloyd noted.

He added: "It must be assumed that the new contacts between SWAPO's leaders (its main directorate) and Mugabe will be taking place and I think we can expect that the supplies for SWAPO will be sent to Angola."

In answer to a question, General Lloyd said that the location of the new supplies is indicative of SWAPO's intention of reactivating the bush warfare in the dry and sparsely populated Kaokoland in the northwest section of the South-West where only about 20,000 people live.

Thus far SWAPO has not succeeded in making its presence felt in Kaokoland.

General Lloyd said that this might mean that SWAPO wants to work its way to Kaokoland in order to reactivate Damaraland further south.

In any case SWAPO's most recent actions must be regarded as an effort to regain the prestige which they have lost "in the eyes of their tutors."

Operation Super was a "show piece" - a pursuit operation on a small scale. Through good intelligence and able management it was a successful and "cost effective" operation.

This was still another operation in pursuance of the policy of discovering and destroying SWAPO bases no matter where these are located.

The events which gave rise to this operation can be seen as still another effort by Russia and SWAPO to "hoist the Russian flag over Windhoek," General Lloyd said.

At the same time SWAPO and certain African countries are pretending to be trying to find a peaceful solution for the South-West Africa question.

General Lloyd said that Russia is pouring arms into Angola.

The area where Operation Super took place has once again made it clearly apparent that the Angolan Government has allowed its territory to be used for the purpose of destabilizing the South-West.

General Lloyd said: "Operation Super will show once more that SWAPO is involved in a futile struggle."

Vietnam

"We know that SWAPO will be trying again and will be getting fresh supplies. We also know that SWAPO will be needing bases and that we will discover and destroy them."

General Lloyd said that actions such as Operation Super can turn Angola into the Soviet Union's "Vietnam in Africa."

When he was asked whether the discovery and the obliteration of 201 SWAPOs, in a base which was recently established, represents an intensification of bush warfare, General Lloyd answered in the negative.

Operation Super was simply a short, but successful operation in which SWAPO suffered great losses.

7964
CSO: 4701/44

CRITIQUE OF DRAFT AMENDMENTS TO LAW ON TERRORISM

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 10 Mar 82 p 15

[Article by Prof Francois Venter: "This Is Internal Security"]

> [Text] The Rabie Report on the legislation affecting internal security has generally evoked favorable reaction among jurists. In this article by Prof Francois Venter, professor in public jurisprudence at the Potchefstroom University, the report is actually appraised as an "eminent work of research." At the same time it contains a discussion of several ways of possibly pulling the barbs from the criticism against the state's security legislation without constraining the maintenance of security by the state. As a whole, the discussion revolves around the difference encountered in the report between prevention measures against people who appear to be actively subverting the security of the state and the treatment of those who are being held just for questioning.

The report of the Rabie Commission treats South Africa's "legislation regarding internal security." As for the exact definition of "internal security" the commission, like Parliament and the courts, has thus far also abstained from presenting its views on that.

However, determining what "internal security" entails is of basic importance before judgment can be passed on the necessity, adequacy, reasonableness and effectiveness of security legislation.

That is not to say that the commission's report really lacks something. To the contrary it evidences an eminent work of research. However, a greater service would be rendered if, in any future legislation, the legislator could indicate more exactly what he wants to protect with his security legislation.

Logically it could be said that state security is an ideal condition prevailing when there are no threats present for the survival of the state. The state's orderly existence and organization are based on certain rules of law the most important of which forms a part of the constitutional regulations.

Positive

Thus it may be positively stated that state security entails the existence of the state as legally constituted (not a specific government). The draft legislation on internal security, which the commission drafted, properly and expressly states such a concept of "state security." This is also done in Article 54 which treats terrorism and related wrongdoings.

In this article, the emphasis falls mainly on violent actions having as their objectives such things as overthrowing government authority, achieving political, industrial and economic changes, forcing the government to do things and instilling fear among the inhabitants. Therefore, this has to do with actions which threaten the orderly existence of the republic as legally constituted.

Article 29 of the proposed draft bill would allow a police officer, having a least the rank of lieutenant colonel, to arrest and detain certain persons without a warrant in a manner similar to the notorious Section 6 of the Act on Terrorism of 1967. That also includes someone who, according to his suspicions, could provide information about a crime committed or planned such as mentioned in the above Article 54. As a variation in the existing Section 6 of the Act on Terrorism it is being proposed that certain mechanisms be incorporated in the legislation to provide better protection for the person being detained against maltreatment and misues of discretionary authority given to police.

What follows here is a critique of the question whether on the one hand, some of the proposed methods of protection are sufficient, while, on the other, the required maintenance of state security can still be met to its fullest.

Review Board

The commission's proposed draft bill provides for the establishment of a review board of three members appointed by the state president on recommendation from the minister of justice. This does not apply for an arrest made in accordance with the new Article 29. The qualifications of the chairman of such a review board are that he must be a judge or a former judge, or a retired chief or district agistrate, or a person who qualifies to practice as an attorney and has 10 years of experience in jidicature. The second member must have an academic qualification in law and the third member can be any other person.

The review board must receive in writing from the minister the pertinent information regarding the case within 14 days after the minister has taken certain measures in accordance with the proposed legislation so that it can review these measures. This applies to cases where a person's membership in an organization or public body will be limited or terminated, or a person is confined, forbidden to attend meetings, or placed in prevention custody for the purpose of preventing subversion against the state.

This review within 14 days does not, however, apply in those cases of detention for questioning under the proposed Article 29. The commission's review proposals for these cases will be discussed hereafter.

The work which the review board must do is not intended as a legalistic review, but as an "administrative" review. The board's task is not to determine whether the minister has acted in accordance with the law, but whether he has exercised his discretion in a reasonable manner consonant with the merits and the facts of the case.

However, the draft bill also provides for an adapted sort of "legal" review. The minister is not obliged to abide by the recommendations which the review board may make; however, if he wants to administer stronger measures than those recommended by the board he must refer the entire question to the chief justice. The chief justice, or a judge of the appeal court appointed by him, must subsequently consider all the documents on legal grounds and then decide whether the minister's measures must be put aside or be administered. The legal ground which the chief justice, or judge of the appellate court, must consider is whether the minister has exceeded his authority, has acted in bad faith or based his actions on unlawful considerations.

This proposed procedure of review is a definite improvement on the present system since this provides the satisfaction that the minister will not be acting haphazardly in the cases in question and "be able" to act only in accordance with his own opinion.

The fact that the traditional liberal argument of "indict or set free" is not satisfied is to be ascribed to the commission's realistic view that the measures for the protection of state security, in the sort of political system in effect in our country, are primarily the task of the "executive" and not of the administrative authority. To begin, the review does take place administratively, even though this is done by legal experts and the chief justice (or judge of the appellate court) reviews things on legal ground, but not as a court of justice.

Persons who are arrested, forbidden membership in an organization, forbidden from attending a meeting, or undergoing preventive detention, are not after all charged with offenses and sentenced for that; but their action, or planned actions, which in the judgment of the executive authority threatens the orderly existence of the state, are to be neutralized. If the courts as such must play a more important role than they do now for the purpose of tempering the extent of the executive authority in this respect, then this will necessitate a fundamental adjustment in the constitutional order of the republic.

The context of the system of detention for questioning, in pursuance of the already mentioned Article 29, certainly presents the most far-reaching measure contemplated in the proposed draft bill, because:

It leaves the decision for arrest to one of themany officials (police officers) and not to the minister himself;

It is not necessarily the person who commits or plans a crime dangerous to the state who can be arrested, but also somebody who simply knows something about it and thus presumably does not wish to readily provide his information to the police;

The new procedure of review discussed above will not become effective until a later stage of such a case... and

The courts common law jurisdiction for reviewing the actions of the police is excluded completely.

A review of the officer's decision originally takes place at a departmental level exclusively. The police commissioner must be informed about the arrest as soon as possible and then in turn he must inform the minister. Within 30 days following the arrest, the minister must authorize a further detention in writing and then once every month the commissioner must provide reasons to the minister as to why the detainees must not be set free. This is all that is prescribed, by way of review, for the first 6 months of the detention. Only then can there be a review by the proposed review board and ultimately by the chief justice.

The question is whether it is necessary for the maintenance of the orderly existence of the state to treat someone in this class so harshly. This question applies most of all to detainees who can serve as witnesses, some of whom are not suspected of even having committed or planned an act of terrorism. Must such a person be no more entitled to a review than other persons against whom actions are being taken because they have already done things that endanger state security?

It is being suggested that the barb in the criticism against our state security law would be pulled out even further if the same procedure of review discussed above is made to apply also to those persons being held for questioning, because the security of the state could be maintained just as effectively.

As far as can be determined from the report, the commission's most important motivation for keeping the existing Section 6 procedures is the finding that "information from persons under detention is most important for the police and to a great extent is the only weapon for anticipating and thus preventing acts of terrorism and other subversive activities; also the information thus obtained can, in appropriate instances, be used as testimony in trials of persons accused of crimes of this nature."

The fact that the effectiveness of the police's interrogation will be limited if the situation of those held for questioning is also reviewed in 14 days by the review board and possibly also by the chief justice in the end cannot be perceived... unless the reason for the continuation of an indefensible arrangement of interrogation methods stems from the police.

While no responsible South Afrikaner wants to hinder the police's job of protecting the state, the same responsible South Afrikaners must be able to feel satisfied that justice continues to form the foundation of all branches of our law and administration.

Visitors

In accordance with Article 29, access to persons being held for questioning is still largely limited to officials, to wit, at least every 14 days to a magistrate and a district doctor; then also to a newly introduced official called "an inspector of persons in custody" who must visit the detainees "as often as possible for the purpose of ascertaining the well-being of those persons." However, according to the draft legislation the commissioner of police will be able to grant permission to visit the detainees to other persons.

Despite the proposed expansion of the list of visistors who may visit the detainees, solitary confinement remains a tremendously far-reaching matter, especially if it can go on for an indeterminate period of time. Along with the same questionability of the possible interrogation methods already mentioned, and still with the thought of the necessity of maintaining state security on the one hand, and justice on the other, there is also the question of whether even the slightly less solitary confinement of potential witnesses is necessary for the effective protection of the state against attacks on its orderly existence.

Former Judges

In conclusion, a word about the composition of the proposed review boards. As already stated, these boards are actually administrative tribunals having to do with questions of reasonableness, administrative correctness and necessity. Although the chairman of such a board can be an active judge, according to the draft legislation, this can also be someone such as a state persecutor having the degree of Bachelor of Laws and 10 years of experience.

The intention may be good, but the recommendations create the possibility of a review board composed in such a manner that all of its members have as their background professional lives of service to the state as officials. To the outside world, this would naturally create the impression of servitude to the administration. It would be much more preferable to lay out the composition of the review board in such a manner that the average citizen could be left only without the impression of preference for the official view. Such a composition could, for example, consist of an active judge as the chairman and two members who have no government service background, but are recognized experts of one or another applicable professional area, such as psychology, public administration, social work, politics, jurisprudence or criminology.

Whatever the composition of such a board may be, it is of decisive importance that ther be no grounds for an argument regarding the objectivity of its members.

7964
CSO: 4701/41

BRIEFS

CORPORATION REVEALS NEW WEAPON--Johannesburg, 27 Mar (AFP)--The Armament Corporation of South Africa (ARMSCOR) today lifted a veil of secrecy around the development of a new South African 155-mm artillery system [word indistinct] the G5. In an interview with the Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES, ARMSCOR Chairman Major P. G. Marais said that the G5 had a range 40 per cent beyond any similar weapon in existence, was more accurate and could carry nuclear warheads. South Africa, Mr Marais declared, had managed to circumvent the international arms embargo and to conduct simulated arms tests through a Canadian affiliate. In the course of [word indistinct] he added, sets of South African weapons were tested in earnest on the Caribbean island on Antigua when it was still a British colony. Mr Marais denied that ARMSCOR had ever been involved with the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) or with any other foreign secret service. He was reacting to a report in Washington this week saying the CIA, the U.S. Army and the State Department must have bent rules to let South Africa beat the United Nations arms embargo. The report also alleged that a CIA agent had dealt directly with South African armaments officials and helped plan illicit arms and ammunition shipments between 1976 and 1978. [Text] [PA280429 Paris AFP in English 0408 GMT 28 Mar 82]

MERCENARIES 'WELFARE ORGANIZATION' REGISTRATION--Johannesburg, 28 Mar (AFP)--Colonel "Mad Mike" Hoare and his 42 fellow mercenaries on trial over the attempted coup in the Seychelles last November have applied for registration as a "welfare organization", according to press reports here today. This would allow the 43 accused to collect funds in South Africa and abroad for their defence against charges in connection with the hijacking of an Air India Boeing 707 to South Africa after the failure of the attempted coup. Col Hoare is quoted as saying cost of the defence could exceed 150,000 rands (about the same in U.S. dollars). Under the South African Welfare Act, no one may collect funds from the public without first being registered as a welfare organization. According to a report in the SUNDAY EXPRESS, this act was in fact amended to provide stricter control of funds supplied from overseas for the defence of people charged under the terrorism and suppression of communist act. The trial of the 43 at the supreme court at Pietermaritzburg was adjourned last week until April 20. [Text] [AB281135 Paris AFP in English 1031 GMT 28 Mar 82]

NATIONALIST FEDERAL CONGRESS -- There exists a strong possibility that a federal congress of the Nationalist Party will be held later this year. Speculations about a federal congress increased yesterday after it became known that the Federal Council of the Nationalist Party (the highest body of the party) is going to meet in Capetown on 29 March. The possibility is accepted that the recent upheaval in the Nationalist Party which led to the splintering of the Treurnicht group will be discussed at this meeting. In political circles, the possibility of a decision to hold a federal congress, following a meeting of the Federal Council, is not excluded. At this stage there is no definite indication about a date or place for the possible federal congress. However, is is unlikely that a federal congress will be held afcer the usual provincial congresses. A federal congress of the Nationalist Party is a rare event. The previous federal congress was held in Parow in 1968 in celebration of the Nationalist Party's acceptance of its 20th government leadership. A federal congress was also held shortly before the country became a republic. [Text] [Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 17 Mar 82 p 1] 7964

CSO: 4701/44

SOUTH AFRICAN SPY RING UNCOVERED, THREE ARRESTED

AB290845 Paris AFP in English 0824 GMT 29 Mar 82

[Text] Salisbury, 29 Mar (AFP)--A South African spy ring operating in Zimbabwe has been discovered and three men, all former white members of the government's central intelligence organization, have been arrested, according to Minister of State Emmerson Munangagwe.

Mr Munangagwa did not reveal the identities of the arrested men but said in an interview published today in the semi-government daily newspaper, THE HERALD, that two of the men would appear in court soon.

The minister named the boss of the spy network as Geoffrey Burton Price, who had been director of close security in the office of the prime minister. Mr Price was previously chief superintendent of Zimbabwe's police.

"When he (Price) discovered that we knew he was head of one of South Africa's spy rings in the country and that we were on the right trail, he fled," Mr Munangagwa was quoted as saying, "he first went to Britain but is now in South Africa.

Mr Price has been declared an enemy of the state and all his property has been seized by the government. It is the third case in which an alleged spy's property has been confiscated since formation of a black majority government nearly two years ago.

The government seized property owned by Captain Frank Gericke, a member of the Zimbabwe National Army who had been arrested for spying for South Africa, and that of police detective Inspector Fred Varkevisser, who is believed to have helped Captain Gericke to escape from prison in November before disappearing.

Those two men are also believed to be in South Africa, according to the government.

CSO: 4700/1025 END

JPRS 80589

16 April 1982

Sub-Saharan Africa Report

No. 2608

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 80589

16 April 1982

SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA REPORT

No. 2608

CONTENTS

CAPE VERDE

PAICV National Council Meets, Issues Communique
(VOZ DI POVO, 10 Feb 82) 1

Prime Minister Speaks on Relations With Church, Guinea-Bissau
(Pedro Pires; VOZ DI POVO, 10 Feb 82) 3

Cooperation With Spain Planned
(VOZ DI POVO, 10 Feb 82) 6

GABON

Statistics on 1982 Investment Budget Set Forth
(L'UNION, 3 Mar 82) 7

Belgium, Gabon Pursue Talks on Cooperation
(Mathurin Mihindou; L'UNION, 25 Feb 82) 9

Briefs
Price Freeze 10
Makaya on Taxes 10
Makaya on Presidential Tour 10

GUINEA-BISSAU

Briefs
Rice Donations 12
Cooperation With Libya 12
French Cultural Cooperation Studied 12
Youth Delegation to PRC 13
USSR Workers' Donation 13
Bissau Power Outage 13
FDJ Solidarity Week 13

MOZAMBIQUE

Delivery of Vessels Purchased in Spain Expected
(NOTICIAS, 10 Mar 82) 15

Sunken Dredger in Maputo Port Moved
(NOTICIAS, 9 Mar 82) 17

Portugal, Mozambique Economic Cooperation Institute Planned
(NOTICIAS, 11 Mar 82) 18

Renovation of Mozambique Railroad Line to South Near Completion
(NOTICIAS, 11 Mar 82) 19

FRG Youth Delegation Pays Visit
(NOTICIAS, 8 Mar 82) 21

NAMIBIA

West's Economic Aid Necessary To Halt Disastrous Exodus
(Editorial; DIE SUIDWESTER, 1 Mar 82) 22

South-West Nationalists Forever Against One-Man, One-Vote
(DIE SUIDWESTER, 5 Mar 82) 24

Briefs
Basterland Incorporation With South Africa 27

SENEGAMBIA

Results of First 1982 Session of National Energy Body
(Papa Momar Sarr; LE SOLEIL, 4 Mar 82) 28

Briefs
Solar Energy-Operated Dispensary 30

SOUTH AFRICA

Ben Schoeman Expresses Strong Support for Enlightened Policy
(RAPPORT, 7 Mar 82) 31

Treurnicht's Partnership a Mistake
Confederal System

Contrasting Views on Apartheid in Religion Presented
(RAPPORT, 7 Mar 82) 34

Clearer 'Centrist' Policy Urged in Wake of Split
(Willem de Klerk; RAPPORT, 7 Mar 82) 36

Report Provides Recent Demographic Data
(Pieter Esterhuysen; DIE TRANSVALER, 9 Mar 82) 39

A Glimpse of New 'Afrikanerized' Mafikeng
(Andre du Toit; DIE VADERLAND, 3 Mar 82) 42

PAICV NATIONAL COUNCIL MEETS, ISSUES COMMUNIQUE

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 10 Feb 82 p 2

[Communique of the PAICV National Council]

[Excerpts] The third regular session of the party National Council was held from 1 to 5 February under the chairmanship of the secretary general, Comrade Aristides Pereira. Participating in the proceedings were the first secretaries of the regions and the autonomous sectors of the party as well as the leaders of the mass organizations.

The secretary of the National Council for Organizational Matters, Comrade Olivio Pires, presented a report on general party activities which emphasized that in 1981 there was intense political and organizational activity and important progress in building the party. The receptiveness and prestige of the PAICV among the popular masses increased. Through great demonstrations of support for our regime, in response to attempts at disrupting the social climate of the country by external and internal agents of reaction, they demonstrated their constant readiness to defend the principles and objectives of the party.

Appreciable results were also achieved in the preparation and advancement of members and cadres, and advances were made in the establishment and consolidation of mass organizations and popular participation, although some local difficulties remain.

Along with the advances and the victories, there are still shortcomings of various kinds in the organizational as well as the political-ideological areas as a result not only of the level of development of our society but also of a certain stagnation that has been occurring among some members, and also because of the fact that many organizations have turned to working within the party to the detriment of action among the masses.

The National Council deciced that the party must continue the political offensive aimed at the masses with a view to reinforcing their identification with party objectives, and proceed with the work of strengthening the party, giving special attention to ideological action among the members and to recruitment of the workers and cadres most dedicated to the national development effort.

The effort at political and cultural advancement must be maintained to increase the capacity of involvement by the grassroots organizations and the members, and measures must be adopted with a view to developing the links between the party leadership and the members, and to increase the contacts of the leaders and organizations, at all levels, with the masses.

It was also decided to take action aimed at those members who have not been acting in accordance with statutory norms, revealing apathy or indecision, in order to safeguard the purity and the combativeness of the party, keeping in its ranks only the members who are really dedicated to the realization of its objectives.

The economic and social situation prevailing in the country, characterized by the negative effects of another year of serious drought and the effects of the current world economic crisis, was discussed by the prime minister, Comrade Pedro Pires, and the minister of economy and finance, Comrade Osvaldo Lopes da Silva.

The National Council acknowledged the government measures taken to cope with this situation and, at the same time, to proceed with the effort of development aimed at creating an independent national economy. It decided to call the attention of the party organizations to the need, by persistent political action, to lead the masses to participate more and more actively in the national development effort and to understand the nature of the difficulties stemming from the economic situation we are going through. Also, the government was encouraged to proceed with the policy of austerity and to augment the measures aimed at assuring stricter and stricter management of available resources.

The international situation was also the subject of attention by the party National Council, which considered a report by Minister of Foreign Affairs Comrade Silvino da Luz.

Great concern was expressed over the aggravation of the climate of tension that prevails in the relations between states, jeopardizing international peace and security.

Finally, manifesting its support for the liberation struggle of the Namibian people under the leadership of SWAPO, the PAICV National Council expressed confidence in the initiatives taken by the "Contact Group," which can represent an important element capable of leading the Republic of South Africa to accept a just solution of the problem of Namibia, and expressed the conviction that the efforts perseveringly undertaken by the international community will lead to the real independence of Namibia.

The National Council confirmed the correctness of the foreign policy orientation of our government--the policy of strict nonalignment and of the diversification of relations with countries and peoples--that has been shown to be the surest and most consistent course for the defense of the vital interests of the Cape Verdean nation and to have contributed to the prestige of the state and government of Cape Verde on the international scene.--Praia, 6 February 1982

8711
CSO: 4742/241

PRIME MINISTER SPEAKS ON RELATIONS WITH CHURCH, GUINEA-BISSAU

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 10 Feb 82 p 5

[Press briefing by Prime Minister Pedro Pires; given in Vila do Tarrafal during the pledge of allegiance to the flag ceremonies at the second military induction of 1981]

[Text] In a 2-hour question and answer period, the reporters posed various questions, such as the economic policy of Cape Verde in the face of the international economic situation, the priorities and development plan for agriculture, the agrarian reform process, the position of the government on the property of the church, the relations of Cape Verde with the Republic of Guinea-Bissau, the national armed forces, the external reaction of Cape Verde, and others such as the opinion of Cape Verde with reference to the formation of Senegambia.

On the economic problems of Cape Verde, the comrade prime minister referred to the international economic crisis the effects of which are hardest felt in the underdeveloped countries and most particularly in the countries that are not oil producers. In this regard, a reference to currency exchange control and the foreign market as a state measure to prevent the excessive outflow of foreign exchange would help the foreigners understand our foreign policy, which has prevented us from reaching the chaos that affected the majority of countries in the first years of their independence. "The state has a legal monopoly of all essential products and a de facto monopoly of construction materials," said Comrade Pedro Pires, who also referred to the system of wages practiced in the country, saying: "With our wage system, there are still categories where it is very much below the necessary minimum." Continuing, he explained the origins of our budget, dependent for the most part on foreign cooperation. That is one of the reasons, he concluded, that leads the state to cover the real value of a large number of essential products that reach our public at a price below their real cost. He declared: "We support the practice of real prices and we are going to try to approach it gradually. The problem that arises lies in synchronizing the objectives of the political power and the aspirations of the population."

Agrarian Reform: Bogeys Dispelled

To speak about agriculture at this time in Cape Verde is necessarily to speak about agrarian reform, or more precisely, of the process of discussion of the basic agrarian reform laws, and the two questions were linked when the priorities established here in the area of agriculture were discussed. In that regard, the head of the government said: "We cannot limit ourselves to productivity because self-sufficiency cannot mean producing only for ourselves and only what we need; we have to take into account the profitability of the product, see what we are capable of producing for domestic consumption and what we are capable of exporting." Here we were getting into a related matter, namely, the improvement of agricultural techniques, expansion of irrigation areas, and the better utilization of waters, indispensable conditions for increasing production. One of the areas in which the agrarian reform is going to contribute to changing the bad habits a little is in regard to the utilization of the waters and soil conservation, and in this regard, the prime minister pointed out: "Today we already have some water resulting from the improvements introduced in the countryside and we cannot permit this water to benefit precisely those who have a good or normal situation to the detriment of those who have an unstable situation."

Self-Sufficiency Does Not Mean Production of the Essential

Speaking in greater detail of the discussion of the agrarian reform laws, the reporters wanted to know about the incidents that had occurred and the causes for them. The question was answered in detail by the prime minister, who concluded: "The small disturbances that arose required a greater effort to explain the law, which had its positive effect because it eliminated the political onus of the agrarian reform and dispelled the bogeys that had been sought to create about it, making better understood what agrarian reform is in a country such as ours where the concept of what is mine and what is yours distorts everything that is of interest to a community."

He was also asked about the position of the government on church property, which, as is clear, does not directly exploit its lands and has some areas in the islands with the greatest agricultural acreage. Here the reply was succinct and clear: "It was concluded a long time ago that the government should buy the lands from the church. We have an open dialogue with the church. We do not have anything against the church. Although our state is secular, it is not against religion and what we are seeking to do with the agrarian reform is to end the indirect exploitation of the land by whomever it may be."

Guinea-Bissau, Cape Verde: the Party Label Is an Obstacle to Dialogue

"Within the spirit of African unity which we support, we cannot be opposed to the normalization of relations with Guinea-Bissau; for us it is something that will have to happen," declared the prime minister, replying to a question asked by a reporter, who wanted to know if Cape Verde were willing to seek rapprochement with Guinea-Bissau. He thus defined the position of Cape Verde with reference to a country with which it has a history of common liberation, with regard to which it has already been stated several times that we do not have anything against it, although we are not in agreement with "the methods, analyses, opinions and even justifications presented." However, he made it clear that our relations can be established at the state level but never at the party level since as far as Cape Verde is concerned, the PAIGC ceased to exist on 14 November 1980. And he said: "Retention of the party label is an obstacle to dialogue. How can we dialogue with a party that does not exist."

Asked also if the break in relations with Guinea-Bissau does not jeopardize relations among the former Portuguese colonies, Comrade Pires explained: "The normalization of our relations with Guinea-Bissau could facilitate them a little but nonnormalization has not hampered our relations with any of the states."

Defense Respects Growth

"Is the special attention that is now given to the armed forces and popular militia due to the new national situation of Cape Verde?" one reporter wanted to know, to which he received the following reply: "It is now that we have the intermediate cadres for a more effective organization of our People's Revolutionary Armed Forces (FARP), because what we seek is to have effective armed forces, which, though small, will be effective," stressed the prime minister. He explained that we do not have pretensions, nor can we spend much money on our armed forces. "We are very careful about our policy of growth and defense, since it is incomprehensible that a poor country should spend much money on the armed forces because that would lead to incomprehension among the countries that aid us. Nevertheless, it is necessary to defend our [political] power. That is why we base our defense on popular participation. In the popular militia, there must be government-people identification, which we believe is occurring."

Commenting on opposition to the government of Cape Verde, he said: "There are people who still have not seen that our independence was not given; it was gained; and they take advantage of certain political sensitivities and certain news media in Portugal to attack Cape Verde and the liberation struggle of the former Portuguese colonies."

With regard to the arrest of some people who tried to cause disturbances, the prime minister said, with a certain sarcasm: "Our great difficulty is the prisons. When you do not have good prisons, it is impossible to have many prisoners. Prisons are expensive and, nowadays, who is going to finance a prison?" Answering the question more directly, he declared: "We are a young country and all young countries have the need to assert the organs of power, and that is not always possible by using good manners." He said: "It is a characteristic of any state, all the more reason for the new ones."

Urged to express his views regarding the formation of Senegambia, he said: "It is a position assumed in a sovereign manner by Senegal and Gambia, and we support noninterference in the internal affairs of any state.

"But if we consider the geographic situation of Gambia and its economic policy, that is sufficient for us to understand the reasons of state that led the two countries to choose that route." And the prime minister, Brigade Commander Pedro Pires, concluded his analysis by saying: "It is a political event that is not a novelty in the zone but which we must follow with attention and understanding of its essence."

8711
CSO: 4742/241

COOPERATION WITH SPAIN PLANNED

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 10 Feb 82 p 1

[Excerpt] The visit which a Spanish cooperation delegation has just made to our country, from 28 to 31 January, was described as another step in the search for a ground of understanding between the two countries, dictated by the political will of their respective governments. That was learned by the newspaper VOZ DI POVO from a well-placed source in the Secretariat of State for Cooperation and Planning.

The same source added that, during the meetings held, the Spanish mission demonstrated great receptiveness to cooperating in various areas with Cape Verde, especially in conveying its experience in the area of vocational training, rural development and fishing.

At the level of rural development, it was agreed that a technical delegation of the Ministry of Rural Development should go to Spain in March to discuss with Spanish authorities matters connected with cooperation between the two countries. Apprenticeships in different branches of rural development, specifically in the sectors of hydrology and veterinary science, as well as technical assistance in the area of combating the development of deserts and the protection of vegetation were proposals agreed upon between the two sides during the talks. Also in the area of rural development, a reliable source in the Secretariat of Cooperation and Planning told us that Spain showed interest in cooperating with our country in the Santa Catarina agricultural project.

To define the pattern of cooperation in the area of vocational training, a Spanish expert specialized in methodology of vocational training will arrive in Cape Verde in the near future, according to information given by an official agency. The need to supply a mobile training unit and the granting of study scholarships in that area were aspects that were also agreed upon.

With regard to fishing, there is a possibility that two captains may come to this country and that study scholarships may be provided.

8711
CSO: 4742/241

STATISTICS ON 1982 INVESTMENT BUDGET SET FORTH

Libreville L'UNION in French 3 Mar 82 p 4

[Text] A study of the investment budget for 1982 revealed a certain number of facts:

1. The initial budget for 1981 called for allocations totaling 135 billion CFA francs, while the 1982 budget shows an increase in this figure to 182.8 billion, i.e., an increase of 47.8 billion in absolute figures, or a percentage of 35.4 percent.

But it is necessary to correct this using the budget figure for investments actually made in 1981, which was 137.5 billion, representing a net gain of only 45.3 billion, and a percentage increase of 32.94 percent.

Assuming that the rate of inflation was about 15.1 percent (from 30 November 1980 to 30 November 1981)--although it may decline this year--the correct budget increase would 17.84 percent.

2. If we take into account the large sums allocated for the main sectors of activity, we obtain the following figures (in millions of CFA francs):

	1982	1981	Increase
Crop raising, livestock breeding, water and forests, fishing	13,525	13,273
Miscellaneous research	4,708	3,390	+ 38.87%
Hotels and tourism	1,970	--
Energy	14,035	9,855	+ 42.41%
Roads and bridges	29,367	24,142	+ 21.60%
Railroads	47,100	39,200	+ 20.15%
Ports and rivers	1,100	1,500
Airports	3,808	2,275	+ 67.38%
Housing	7,080	4,750	+ 49.01%
Education	13,160	10,300	+ 27.76%

	1982	1981	Increase
Health	4,894	3,450	+ 41.85%
Various	20,482	19,263
Miscellaneous contributions	2,073	3,602
1981 balance	19,500	--
	182,802	135,000

Source--Gabonese Ministry of Economy and Finance

From a study of these figures one can conclude that the investment budget was established on the basis of three main axes:

a) Priority has been given to infrastructure development, with a substantial increase in the credit allocations for airports, roads, bridges and railroads. In this connection it should be noted that the relative increase for the last two categories may seem small, but since sizeable sums are involved, this increase is very important in absolute terms. These three sectors account in fact for a total of 80,275,000,000,000 CFA francs, or 43.91 percent of the total investment budget.

b) The economic development of the country is another of these axes, dictated by the need to make the necessary energy available to industry and to further research giving access to new techniques and the improvement of those already in existence.

c) Massive action in the social sector in order to improve housing, health and education to the benefit of the entire population.

It is indicative that housing ranks second in the credit allocations, proof of the desire of the government to take effective action in a realm which affects the masses and in which it had not previously taken determined steps.

In connection with health and education, taking the effort made in the various preceding budgets into account, the increase noted for 1982 shows that the state wants to continue its effort and to take the already substantial improvements in these two fields still further.

In conclusion, one can say that the investment budget for 1982 is a budget for economic and social development.

5157
CSO: 4719/657

BELGIUM, GABON PURSUE TALKS ON COOPERATION

Libreville L'UNION in French 25 Feb 82 p 4

[Article by Mathurin Mihindou]

[Text] The schedule of Mrs Jacqueline Mayence, the Belgian minister of cooperation for development, for Wednesday, 24 February, included several meetings with high level Gabonese officials.

Her morning began with an expanded work session with experts at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in which it was noted that relations between Belgium and Gabon date back to 1961, when an embassy was opened in Brussels.

On the economic and technical levels, cooperation was limited to an exchange of diplomatic letters until the agreement in the air transport sector allowing Sabena, the Belgian airline, to land in Libreville, was signed in 1968.

It was then that a Belgian physician was made available to the Gabonese government (the present incumbent is Dr Renders, who is working at the Hyacinthe Antini Social Center) and three scholarships were awarded to Gabonese students.

The last student in that class completed his studies in October of 1981. Since that time, Belgium has provided no further scholarship facilities. These negotiations are therefore intended to complete the legal framework for cooperation, following the exchange of visits by the Belgian and Gabonese ministers. Along the same lines, steps have been taken with a view to the signing of an economic, industrial, technical and technological agreement.

These agreements, when they have been signed and ratified, will lead, logically, to the establishment of a large Belgian-Gabonese mixed commission. These agreements will be initialled about 1800 hours today, just prior to the departure of Mrs Jacqueline Mayence for Brussels.

We should add that the discussions had to do in substance with the possibilities existing in the realms of agriculture (AGROGABON), transportation, education and financial training. In this connection, the Belgian interlocutors appear ready to implement these projects concretely in the very near future.

5157
CSO: 4719/657

BRIEFS

PRICE FREEZE--By a presidential decree dated 4 February 1982 (No 92/PR/MINECOFIN/MCDIPPME), the Gabonese authorities instituted a price freeze on products and services for the whole of the territory, in order to put an end to any illicit price rises subsequent to the increase in the interoccupational guaranteed minimum wage. Article 1--The prices of all products and services locally manufactured or produced or imported are frozen on all levels, at the point they had reached legally as of 18 January 1982. Article 2--Violations of the provisions of this decree will be established and prosecuted in accordance with Law No 29/63 dated 15 June 1963 regulating the price system in the Gabonese Republic. [Text] [Libreville L'UNION in French 3 Mar 83 p 1] 5157

MAKAYA ON TAXES--The reading of certain government documents is often enriching and very informative. Therefore during this tax declaration period, I suggest that everyone give a careful reading to the simplified wage declarations. What a surprise, under the heading "Taxable Income!" While just recently it was necessary to deduct 40 percent for the portion of the monthly wage below 600,000 francs, and 20 percent for the portion between 600,000 and 1 million francs. Now, in the 1981 statement, everyone is included in the same category, and must deduct 20 percent for professional costs. The tax experts will tell me that I do not understand their business at all. As always, there will be fanciful flights to explain that this is the same as that, and that the big fish will be caught in the tax charge and checking net. You will see nonetheless that something has changed, and that the main winner is certainly not myself, with my only income from this column, after all. What a funny kind of tax equality for taxes on the income of individual entities! [Text] [Libreville L'UNION in French 27-28 Mar 82 p 1] 5157

MAKAYA ON PRESIDENTIAL TOUR--The presidential tour of the interior of the country will end soon. I know that Estuaire will still remain. But I, Makaya, believe that some comments could be made about this tour of the provinces. I had hoped that the Libreville dignitaries would yield their place in the front ranks to the villagers, in other words those who represent the heart of Gabon, those for whom the honorary Makaya planned his tour. Unfortunately, I see that those who dance attendance in Libreville have completely pushed the local notables into the background. At every stage, the Libreville big shots elbow their way into the planes chartered for newsmen and the honorary Mayaka's official entourage. Thus, as the tour progresses, they swell the ranks by groups of their friends and government colleagues in the provincial capital. At this rate, we are likely to arrive at the final stage here with all of the big shots in the provinces, and all of this because of the desire to get as close as possible to the honorary Mayaka, to whisper a few "good words" in his ear and to play the role of the "eternal wise advisers." What kind of a provincial tour is this? [Text] [Libreville L'UNION in French 25 Feb 82 p 1] 5157

CSO: 4719/657

BRIEFS

RICE DONATIONS--Starting on Friday, 19 March, the consuming public will have access to one of the staple items in its diet, that is, rice,where we have had a shortage for about a month. Tomorrow, Thursday, a ship carrying 6,800 tons of rice will be coming in from Italy; this will permit the distribution of this cereal crop on the same day or on Friday at the latest to end the people's food shortage. Out of the 6,800 tons to be received (5,000 tons purchased by the People's Stores and 1,800 tons offered by the Italian government), 2,000 tons will be distributed immediately to the people in the capital and in the country's interior; an amount of 50 kilograms is basically planned for distribution to each consumer. Another shipment is expected on 19 March, Friday, with 6,000 tons of rice, of which 3,500 tons were offered by the EEC and the remaining 3,000 tons came from Italy. [Excerpts] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 17 Mar 82 p 8] 5058

COOPERATION WITH LIBYA--Guinea-Bissau and the Arab Jamahirya of Libya may establish a Mixed Cooperation Commission to stimulate bilateral cooperation; the commission would meet annually and alternately in the capitals of the two countries. This decision, among others, was made during the recent visit to Guinea-Bissau by a Libyan delegation headed by Mr Nuri Baitel-Mal, director of the Economic and Technical Cooperation Directorate, People's Bureau for Foreign Contacts. The Guinean delegation to the conversations was headed by Comrade Carlos Correia, the finance minister. The two parties agreed to work together to establish a mixed financing company which would engage in investment activities in the fields of agriculture, fishing, and other areas. Libya on the other hand promised to supply experts in the petroleum field and to train supervisory personnel in that industry. Guinea-Bissau pledged to provide data and studies dealing with petroleum prospecting. In the field of education, Libya will provide scholarships in the subjects of medicine, agriculture, industry, and Islamic studies. Libya may also offer Guinea-Bissau medications based on a list to be presented by the government of Guinea-Bissau. Finally, Libya agreed in particular to finance the construction of the Islamic Center at Gabu. [Text] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 17 Mar 82 p 3] 5058

FRENCH CULTURAL COOPERATION STUDIED--France is interested in cooperating with Guinea-Bissau in the field of information and culture. To study areas in which projects can be carried out as well as all of the pertinent requirements, a French technical mission is scheduled to arrive this year. It has been learned in the meantime that this aid can help in the repair of the Nhaora broadcasting center, the training of Guinean supervisory personnel in the mass communications field, and the distribution of French magazines in the Republic of Guinea-Bissau. This information was given to us by Mr Valbert, the chief of missions in the Office of French Minister of Cooperation, working with Guinea-Bissau and other African countries, who visited Guinea-Bissau recently. [Excerpts] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 13 Mar 82 p 8] 5058

YOUTH DELEGATION TO PRC--A delegation from JAAC (Amilcar Cabral African Youth) on Monday left for the PRC in response to an invitation from that country's youth organization. The delegation is headed by Comrade Teobaldo Barbosa, member, Central Committee, PAIGC [African Independent Party of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde], and also includes comrades Seidiba Sane, first youth director in the Autonomous Sector of Bissau, as well as Galona Mane, in charge of our youth vanguard in the region of Bafata. During its stay in China, the delegation, according to its head, is planning to establish contact with Chinese youth leaders in order to strengthen the bonds of friendship and solidarity between these two organizations. [Text] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 17 Mar 82 p 3] 5058

USSR WORKERS' DONATION--A gift of medications, offered by the Central Council of Labor Unions of the Soviet Union, was handed over during a ceremony which took place on Thursday in the auditorium of the country's labor union, the UNTG [National Union of Guinea-Bissau Workers]. The medications, totaling 1,135 kilograms, included antibiotics and antipyretics, among other things. During the speech delivered at this ceremony, the counsellor from the Soviet embassy stressed this proof of friendship manifested through this gesture. Comrade Eufragio dos Santos expressed gratitude in the name of the UNTG secretary general and the workers; he noted that this gesture of solidarity toward the Guinean working masses also represents a gift that will benefit the people. Comrade Jose Pereira, member, Party Central Committee and UNTG secretary general, left yesterday to represent the country's labor union organizations during the 17th Congress of the Central Council of Labor Unions of the Soviet Union to be held between 16 and 20 March. [Excerpts] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 13 Mar 82 p 3] 5058

BISSAU POWER OUTAGE--Once again, Bissau is without lights! This time it was the injection pump of "Group 4" which had a "tolerance breakdown." The electric power plant manager explained: "A sudden stoppage because we exceeded its operating time limit." The workers backed him up: "It is difficult and sometimes even impossible to keep supplying energy to a city with just one generating group in operation and without any guarantee of spare parts." In the meantime a new pump is expected from the FRG. Contrary to any optimistic forecasts, this week "I can see nothing!" Let us therefore wait with confidence and patience. [Text]]Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 13 Mar 82 p 1] 5058

FDJ SOLIDARITY WEEK--On 26 March, a solemn session in Bissau will open Solidarity Week with the Free German Youth--FDJ. This session will be held in the auditorium of the Third Congress. On 25 March, a delegation from the Free German Youth will arrive in Bissau to attend this Solidarity Week; the delegation will be headed by one of the secretaries of the FDJ Central Council,

Dietmar Langhuth; it will also include Gunther Ziegler, of the International Relations Department, and Joachim Gulle, of the Department for Friendship Brigades of the FDJ Central Council. During its stay in the country, the German youth delegation will go to various parts of the country, especially Bafata and Gabu; it will also participate in a youth encampment in Biombo. The visiting delegation will also hold a friendship meeting with the delegations of the JAAC [Amilcar Cabral African Youth], the Leninist Komsomol, and the UJC (Union of Young Communists). A joint announcement and a cooperation agreement between the youth organizations of the GDR and Guinea-Bissau will be signed at the end of the visit. The FDJ has maintained close and friendly relations with the JAAC since the creation of our youth organizations on 12 September 1974 in the hills of Boe. The two youth organizations cooperate in various areas. In Bra, we have the "Amilcar Cabral" Friendship Brigade of the FDJ which, in close cooperation with the comrades of the JAAC, works in the Bra vocational training center. This center is staffed with FDJ instructors who teach sawmill operators, bricklayers, and carpenters. The "Amilcar Cabral" Friendship Brigade in 1981 established a literature club which constitutes yet another possibility for Guinean youngsters to familiarize themselves with the work and operations of the Free German Youth. The importance of the excellent relations existing between the "Abel Djassi" and "Ernst Thaelmann" pioneers must also be stressed. As a result of this Solidarity Week of the JAAC with the FDJ, cooperation between these two organizations will be given further impetus and will develop in various areas on the basis of mutual understanding, the common struggle for peace and progress throughout the world, and understanding among peoples. [Excerpts] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 13 Mar 82 p 3] 5058

CSO: 4742/258

DELIVERY OF VESSELS PURCHASED IN SPAIN EXPECTED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 10 Mar 82 p 10

[Text] A Mozambique naval crew will depart later this month for Spain, from which it will bring back two coastal shipping vessels recently purchased by the NAVIQUE [Mozambican Shipping Enterprise] from that European country, our reporters learned from a source in shipping circles.

The two coastal vessels, purchased second hand, are intended to strengthen the present Mozambican merchant marine fleet. The purchase of these vessels comes within the context of the measures to renovate the NAVIQUE.

The Mozambican crew which will bring back the two vessels will fly to Spain. The arrangements for their trip are now in process, and on their completion the date of departure will be set.

When they sail from Spain for Mozambique, each of the vessels will be carrying 1,000 tons of wheat, a product recently offered to our country by Spain, the same source said.

The purchase of these two vessels is of great importance to the strengthening of the transport capacity of our merchant marine, particularly in the realm of small and average coastal shipping operations.

At the same time, the purchase of the two vessels will contribute to the gradual decrease in the use of the chartered vessels which are currently operating along our coastline, and thus a reduction in the foreign exchange expenditures which these charters involve.

During the year just ended, the six vessels which at the present time make up the Mozambican merchant marine fleet carried a total of 250,700 tons of miscellaneous cargo.

This year the freight volume to be transported will certainly show a substantial increase, in view of the fact that the two vessels just purchased will add an annual transport capacity of 70,000 tons.

The two vessels were built at the Murueto shipyards in Spain in 1977, and can transport 1,112 tons of freight each. They are equipped with 1,160 horsepower engines and have a cruising speed of 11.9 knots per hour.

Each of the two vessels will carry a crew of 11. They have a draft of 4 meters and they are equipped with three cargo booms for the loading and unloading of goods.

Their structure is such that they can call at all the ports in the country. It should be noted that following the hydrographic survey work done in the ports of Moma and Mocimboa, the vessels can also call at these minor coastal shipping ports.

5157
CSO: 4742/249

SUNKEN DREDGER IN MAPUTO PORT MOVED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 9 Mar 82 p 8

[Text] The dredger "Pristman," which sank recently near the coal wharf in the port of Maputo, was moved 50 meters away on Sunday, our reporters were told yesterday by one of the members of the commission responsible for the refloating of the vessel in question.

The same source said that the moving of the dredger away from the coal wharf made the immediate testing of the coal loading system in the port of Maputo possible.

The dredger "Pristman" was towed, while still submerged, about 50 meters from the site of the sinking solely in order to guarantee the resumption of the coal handling operation as soon as possible, the same spokesman said.

Today the operation of refloating the vessel will proceed, beginning with the removal of the coal it was carrying.

Later, if this proves possible, the vessel will be entirely refloated and then towed to the EMODRAGA [Mozambican Dredging Enterprise] wharf, in the direction of Catembe.

The effort to salvage this vessel has already been under way for a week, with the aid of specialists in refloating vessels who were summoned for the purpose by the local port authorities.

The vessel is owned by the EMODRAGA. The rather old vessel (in operation about 30 years) sank just as preparations were being made for maintenance work on the ocean floor adjacent to the coal wharf in the port of Maputo.

No human lives were lost at the time of the accident, the causes of which have not yet been established. The crew managed to board a barge which was alongside the dredger at the time it sank.

The salvage operation carried out by the specialists employed for the purpose involved several stages, the first of which was the location of the vessel. Then, using suitable equipment, the "frogmen" undertook the removal of the excavator bucket from the vessel (a kind of barge), which was then towed away from the area in which the coal vessels dock.

5157
CSO: 4742/249

PORTUGAL, MOZAMBIQUE ECONOMIC COOPERATION INSTITUTE PLANNED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 11 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] The establishment of a Portuguese-Mozambican Institute of Cooperation and Economic Development will be the subject of study by delegations representing the two countries in Lisbon, the ANOP has reported.

Joaquin Tenreiro de Almeida, the Mozambican secretary of state for fishing, heads the delegation from his country, which has traveled to Portugal, at the invitation of his Portuguese counterpart, Jose Viana, to meet with shipowners and businessmen in the private and state sectors.

The establishment of an Institute of Cooperation and Economic Development will be the object of a study desired by both parties, which hope that such an institution could function as a basis for coordinating and developing the Portuguese and Mozambican economic blocs.

It is hoped that such an institute, thanks to its contacts with domestic and international markets, could seek the establishment of credit lines for the key sectors in Mozambique and could draft a plan of action for courses to be offered locally and apprenticeships in Portugal.

Another point to be discussed by the two delegations is the need for a "joint venture" policy in the vital areas of planning Mozambican development and further, in specific cases, the establishment of compensation agreements.

A study of free zones and supply stations is also on the agenda, as is the strengthening of Mozambican cadres in the various sectors.

On Tuesday, Minister of Agriculture, Trade and Fisheries Basilio Horta gave a reception for Secretary of State Tenreiro de Almeida on board the Portuguese training and piscatorial research vessel Noruega. Other guests included the Mozambican ambassador, Joao da Silva Aguiar.

Yesterday, Tenriero de Almeida visited the fishing dock, the National Fishing Research Institute and the SESIMBRA, to inspect the fish farm and some units producing fish meal, fish oil and canned fish.

The Mozambican secretary of state for fishing, who will remain in Portugal until Saturday, will travel to Oporto today to talk with Portuguese businessmen interested in working in Mozambique and to visit some fishing units.

5157
CSO: 4742/249

RENOVATION OF MOZAMBIQUE RAILROAD LINE TO SOUTH NEAR COMPLETION

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 11 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] The renovation of the Ressano Garcia railroad line over a distance of about 88 km is almost completed, engineer Aurelia Melo of the National Ports and Railroads Office indicated in a meeting held with our reporters.

This work, which involved replacing the old rails and establishing a second track in some sections covering about 30 km, as well as the replacement of the old wooden ties with new ones of metal, is currently in its final phase.

According to engineer Aurelia Melo, this project will make possible a major reduction in the derailments which until just a short time ago have occurred along this line, and thus will make its use by a larger number of trains carrying goods and passengers possible.

The same source said that the replacement of the old rails was made necessary because they were incapable of withstanding the constant train traffic needed to transport many thousands of tons of goods. The new rails have a weight of 54 kg per meter, such that the passage of heavy tonnage freight trains will affect them very little.

Hindrances to the Project

The renovation work on the Ressano Garcia line did not proceed in accordance with the plans made by the Mozambique-South Railroad because a shortage of certain materials for the laying of the track developed.

These difficulties were most serious with regard to rock, an essential material for stabilizing the railroad ties and thus the rails themselves, althought there were also delays in the delivery of the metal ties. Aurelia Melo indicated that the bodies responsible for the delivery of this material also had to supply other sectors, which led to irregular deliveries.

However, the problem of the railroad ties has practically been resolved, leaving only that of the rock to be settled.

In discussing this problem, Aurelia Melo said that if the quarry can guarantee the normal supply of rock, the work of replacing and laying parallel lines along certain Maputo and Machava railroad sections will be completed by the end of this year.

Along with the work of replacing the railroad linking Maputo and Ressano Garcia, plans for this year also call for the installation of a new signaling system all along the Ressano Garcia line.

In the opinion of our source, this step will be reflected in an increase in train traffic, which will mean, among other things, that a larger quantity of freight will be transported.

5157
CSO: 4742/249

FRG YOUTH DELEGATION PAYS VISIT

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 8 Mar 82 p 8

[Text] "We can contribute to a fraternal rapprochement between the youth in the FRG and Mozambique, promoting a real knowledge of the economic, cultural and political situation in the Republic of Mozambique in our country, through the means available to us," Erik Bettermann, Secretary General of the Federal Council of German Youth (DBJR) said in the course of a press conference held in Maputo.

Erik Bettermann is the head of a delegation which has been in our country since last Monday. The delegation visited two communal settlements in Manhica and the Maragra sugar unit. According to the youth leader from the FRG, "despite the political differences between the People's Republic of Mozambique and the FRG, our long-term goal is the full exchange of experience between our two people. We admire the receptive attitude of the OJM [Mozambique Youth Organization] in this connection."

Concerning the activity of the DBJR, Erik Bettermann explained that "we are devoting attention to the international situation, including the political situation in Southern Africa. The DBJR comprises 19 youth associations in the FRG and is pursuing a tradition of support of liberation movements.

5157
CSO: 4742/249

WEST'S ECONOMIC AID NECESSARY TO HALT DISASTROUS EXODUS

Windhoek DIE SUIDWESTER in Afrikaans 1 Mar 82 p 4

[Editorial: "South Africa, The West Must Help."]

[Text] Last week's visit to the South-West on the part of the prime minister and his company was necessary and good. This offered him the opportunity of informing a broad spectrum of local leaders regarding South Africa's viewpoints and problems. At the same time this gave local leaders the chance to spell out their problems and objections.

Naturally the discussions were confidential and what exactly was discussed is not known. However, several of the local leaders subsequently spoke with the press, while the prime minister and the foreign minister also held discussions with the media here and in South Africa.

During this process somethings were said with which we simply do not agree. But we do not want to go into these matters today.

Before his departure the prime minister said that one aspect of the conversations stands out prominently: Namely, the fact that despite differences there are many common grounds between the local parties...and with that we do not mean simply political parties.

We believe that one matter on which there is reasonably wide consensus in the South-West is the fact that a healthy economy is indispensable for the success of the exercise of independence.

No matter what government is in power in South-West Africa it will have no chance of maintaining stability, order, peace and even a democratic process unless the economy is kept in a healthy state. This also applies (and perhaps most of all) to the interim period.

The history of many of the African nations is there for everybody to read. Among these nations there are some of our own neighbors including Angola, Mozambique, Zambia and now Zimbabwe where the departure of the whites (something which happened more or less voluntarily) resulted in economic regression. Although not yet independent this process is already underway in the South-West as well.

This is contributing to the economic troubles which this country is experiencing and is placing an increasingly greater burden on those who remain here. A continuation of this trend can be disastrous for the economy...aside of all the other implications which this entails.

If it is important for South Africa and for the West to insure stability in the South-West then definite actions must be taken on their part. We do not want to purport that political insecurity alone is causing the exodus, but it would be stupid to overlook the effects of political instability.

The capability of local leaders to encourage and motivate people to stay in the South-West is limited. The past has shown only too clearly that it is other powers who have the final say, no matter what the local population may decide.

Just to mention only one example: Despite the consensus between the population groups of the South-West, in 1977, they were not allowed to proceed with the implementation of the Turnhalle Plan.

After all is said it will be the actions and pronouncements of South Africa and of the Western countries which will determine whether people (especially trained persons, enterprisers and property owners) are going to decide to run the risk of a black majority government...and that is really a risk, in view of the rest of Africa.

Two of the most important priorities for those who are deciding the fate of the South-West are therefore:

To see that the necessary means for shoring up the economy are provided and in this respect we are in agreement with South Africa that it can no longer bear this problem alone.

In one way or another to reassure the population, with respect to a political future, to such a degree that at least enterprisers and trained people will want to stay here.

7964
CSO: 4701/48

SOUTH-WEST NATIONALISTS FOREVER AGAINST ONE-MAN,ONE-VOTE

Windhoek DIE SUIDWESTER in Afrikaans 5 Mar 82 p 4

[Text] Today the political situation in the South-West has reached a point where it makes little sense to doodle around the past about who said this and that and when. But when people still want to do that then they must have their facts in order.

Putting frills around facts to make a story sound prettier, as Baron von Munchausen of old used to do, does not profit anybody. Yet this is what the political commentator of the local Republican newspaper indulges in doing this week once again.

He is not telling it as it is when in an effort to make it look as though the Nationalist Party of the South-West "just about a decade ago" had agreed to a sort of one-man-one-vote election like the one now being planned.

Last week the prime minister, in talking about this matter, referred very clearly to 11 years ago and not to "about a decade ago." The matter at hand 11 years ago was the World Court case about the South-West.

It was there that the South African legal team had suggested the possibility of a national election or a plebiscite. The question which was to be raised would certainly not have dealt with a government for the South-West, but with the matter of whether the South-West would still be ruled by South Africa or rather by the UN.

At that time the former editor of the former SUIDWES-AFRIKANER had gotten the political whim of trying to pin that offer on the Nationalist Party of the South-West.

But while we are now dealing with the past it is interesting to read some of the things he wrote. On 29 January 1971 these were his comments:

"However, what we believe (with all respects for the non-whites of the South-West)--and we want to make that very clear--is that the white inhabitants of South-West Africa will never subordinate our constitutional future to the decision making of non-whites."

What he meant by "non-whites" was explained by him in more details on 5 March when he wrote:

"No matter how the Nationalist newspapers go on protesting, one thing stands out like a piling above water: The leaders of the Nationalist Party have, through this shocking offer, for the first time in history placed the future of the white man in this country at the mercy of the Hereros, the Mountain Damaras, the wild bushmen, etc., and to top it all...under international supervision."

We have the vague suspicion that the person who was writing in that newspaper is the same political commentator of the Republican newspaper which now carries such long articles. But once again he is to the left of the truth.

The fact is that the World Court case, along with the offer made there, must be seen against the background of the South African Government's policy at that time. The basis of that is set forth in the "South-West Africa Survey" of 1967.

It is clearly stated: "The people themselves will ultimately decide."

This was also the approach of Prime Minister John Vorster. He visited Windhoek in 1973 (Note that this was after the offer was made at the Hague and this had been exactly about the reports to which reference is made above.) He emphasized that South Africa wants to help the peoples of the South-West "...so that each of the populations will be able to decide over their own future. Each one of them, and therefore this naturally means the whites as well."

Full coverage was given to that speech at the time and Mr Vorster emphasized that it was also the right of the various population groups to find each other in one or another constellation; however, he added:

"....Let me put it clearly: those who do not wish to be a part of this will not be forced by me and neither by the UN."

The same approach was spelled out in Parliament in the clearest possible language. That was the Nationalist Party's policy at the time.... 11 years ago as well as "about a decade ago."

That approach ultimately led to Turnhalle and there it was expressly agreed that the solution lay along the road of self determination. This was the recipe throughout the Turnhalle period.

This viewpoint was endorsed by the Government of South Africa at which time Mr John Vorster, in accordance with Hansard [official parliamentary report] of 18 April 1975, stated:

"However, when it comes to the actual negotiations, then this must be through the elected representatives of the majority (of each population group), otherwise there will simply be chaos and no negotiations can take place."

This viewpoint was heartily supported and very clearly set forth by Mr Dirk Mudge (then still a member of the Nationalist Party) when in February of 1974 he spoke at the Legislative Assembly of the whites on the subject of a request by Attorney Bryan O'Linn that the United Party must also take part in the Turnhalle deliberations.

Mr Mudge stated: "...The recognized leaders of the whites...are to be found in the Nationalist Party...If they (the United Party) want to use non-whites as pressure groups against the government...I want to advise them to first sell their policy to their own people and to first take over the government in this country. If they cannot sell their policy to the whites, if they cannot win an election amongst their own people with such a policy, then what will they be wanting of the non-whites with such a policy? Surely, if this is what they want to do then there is nothing good in their minds."

According to the records this was the policy of the Nationalist Party in the South-West and in South Africa. Now people can write and talk until they are blue in the face, but the fact remains that the Nationalist Party of the South-West has never ever accepted the sort of one-man-one-vote election now being held out as a prospect, not 11 years ago, not a decade ago and also not now.

7964
CSO: 4701/48

BRIEF

BASTERLAND INCORPORATION WITH SOUTH AFRICA --Chief Hans Diergaardt of Basterland went to tell the Western Powers that Basterland wants to be incorporated with South Africa. This news became known Thursday when the chief along with other politicians spoke with Prime Minister P. W. Botha. The chief's group, along with SWAPO-D, the Federal Party and Mr Kloppers' group and the group close to Johannes Kuruaihe, held a discussion with the prime minister. At the time Chief Diergaardt walked out of the Turnhalle conference along with Dap Isaacks, because according to them that was simply apartheid in disguise. He repeatedly raised objections to Mr Botha regarding the company with whom he was present with the prime minister...the other political parties. Despite the company in which he found himself he all the same told Mr Botha that the political parties in the South-West will not be able to win against SWAPO because they are too proud to meet with each other. He then explained to Prime Minister Botha that what is actually necessary is holding a Turnhalle conference all over again. He too does not believe in one-man-one-vote election, because he won the election in Rehoboth,but now he is being "snowed under." He then told Mr Botha that the South-West cannot hold an election because SWAPO would win and then the communists would overrun the country. [Text] [Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 1 Mar 82 p 6] 7964

CSO: 4701/48

RESULTS OF FIRST 1982 SESSION OF NATIONAL ENERGY BODY

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 4 Mar 82 p 4

[Article by Papa Momar Sarr, director of information: "Prime Minister Calls for Coherent Planning"]

[Text] Yesterday at 0930, the prime minister presided over the first 1982 session of the National Energy Commission. The session was held in the prime minister's office conference room.

Opening the proceedings, Habib Thiam reaffirmed that there can be no development without effective solutions to energy problems.

Several members of the government and a number of high officials took part in the discussions, which were introduced by the two-part report of the minister of industrial development and crafts, the chairman.

After the rewarding debate that followed this presentation, the prime minister noted that Senegal seems to have significant prospects in regard to national primary energy sources, and that these should be the subject of coherent planning as the results of various studies now in progress become available.

The prime minister also stressed the importance that the government assigns to exploiting our energy resources such as oil, peat, and coal.

He thus issued the following instructions:

a) Petroleum: Exploration will continue in the areas in which prospecting currently being conducted, specifically at the Dome Flore deposit of Casamance, in the Louga area, and at Kafountine in Casamance. The minister of industrial development and crafts will oversee the beginning of drilling for oil extraction from Dome Flore at the end of 1982, and the continuation of other studies during 1983.

b) Peat: The minister of industrial development and crafts and the Senegal Peat Company will take all necessary steps to begin electric power production through combustion of peat by 1984 at the latest.

c) Coal: The studies to estimate reserves, their depth, and the various layers must be accelerated.

In addition, the prime minister has decided that, in view of the importance of the new energy sources, an overall program for their exploitation will be developed, and the appropriate resources will be set aside for this.

The prime minister expressed the government's satisfaction with the results of the energy conservation campaign. The minister of industrial development and crafts, in cooperation with the minister of information and telecommunications, is to continue this campaign.

The prime minister affirmed that in order to assure our supply of wood and charcoal, we must continue under the best possible conditions to restore and develop our forest assets. Concerning the use of charcoal, production by the Ban Ak Suuf ovens should reach 50,000 units, which will be distributed to rural as well as urban areas. This increase should be accompanied by a revision in the system of charging for gas, so as to permit a method that will be of benefit to Blik Banec.

With regard to the linking of projects of OMVS and OMS [expansion uncertain: normally WHO], the government continues to favor subregional cooperation in the energy field.

The prime minister also stressed that attention should be given to solar energy. Research on its use is continuing with the objective of improving rural living conditions, which would benefit most from it.

On the same general topic, the prime minister noted that wind installations should be one element of our water policy, and thus it is important to continue the current experiments.

Regarding gasoline, a 72-day security supply must be established. The minister of industrial development and crafts will oversee its establishment at the distributor level, and the minister of economy and finance will study the price structure.

Before closing the meeting, the prime minister, citing the importance of the National Energy Commission's work, announced his decision to hold more frequent meetings of the commission, and he issued instructions to that effect to the minister of industrial development and crafts.

9920
CSO: 4719/654

BRIEFS

SOLAR ENERGY-OPERATED DISPENSARY--On Saturday 6 March 1982 at 1000, the minister of public health will officially open at Mont-Rolland (near Thies) a dispensary which will operate on solar energy. Constructed entirely and donated to the people of the area by the Leroy-Sommer Company, European manufacturer of electric motors, the dispensary is the first of its kind in our country and in West Africa. Mamadou Diop will be accompanied by Jacques Diouf, secretary of state for scientific research and technical affairs. [Text] [Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 4 Mar 82 p 4] 9920

CSO: 4719/654

BEN SCHOEMAN EXPRESSES STRONG SUPPORT FOR ENLIGHTENED POLICY

Treurnicht's Partnership a Mistake

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 7 Mar 82 p 14

[Text] This week former minister Ben Schoeman told RAPPORT that when Dr Andries Treurnicht was accepted in the cabinet a mistake had been made. Yet he thinks that some of the members of parliament, who broke away from the party along with Dr Treurnicht, must reconsider their action.

The party split was no surprise and it was unavoidable. Dr Treurnicht waited a long time for the right moment; so stated Mr Schoeman.

It would be disastrous for the future of South Africa and for the survival of the whites in this country if Dr Treurnicht's views and philosophy were to prevail.

Mr Schoeman said that he expected the split to take place years ago. In 1969 when, as leader of the Nationalist Party in Transvaal, he expelled the Hertzog followers from the party, Mr Schoeman summoned Dr Treurnicht to his office and told him that he had to come down from the fence.

If he supported the Hertzog followers, then he must go with them. If he supported the Nationalist Party then he must show it. His actions would reflect this. Dr Treurnicht thereupon said that he stood with the Nationalist Party and Mr Schoeman accepted that.

Advocate

Mr Schoeman said: "If I had become prime minister I would have never accepted him in the Cabinet; I would never have appointed him as deputy minister."

Former Prime Minister John Vorster made the initial mistake of appointing him as deputy minister and P. W. Botha was thereafter in difficulty as Dr Treurnicht was also the leader of the Nationalist Party of Transvaal.

"But at the time I told P. W. Botha that he was making a mistake in taking Dr Treurnicht in the Cabinet."

Mr Schoeman said that he is an advocate of unity and was himself largely responsible for the unity in Afrikaner ranks...especially with the Havenga-Malan agreement which led to the Nationalist Party's victory in 1948.

But as he had to take action against the Hertzog followers, so now it is again necessary to take action. The situation could not remain unaltered and a split was unavoidable.

Mr Schoeman went on to say: "The rightist group does not frighten me. There will always be discontent for those who vote for them. It is an old rule: People with grievances are always looking for a place of refuge; even people with personal problems as is once more the case with Mr Vorster."

"The right faction will of course continue to fight; they will be fretting all the time. However, I do not regard them as a danger."

Yet Mr Schoeman wants to warn that the Nationalist Party has an important stumbling block to remove (the most important and biggest) namely: the cost of living.

The Nationalist Party is very vulnerable to the high cost of living, however, much can be done to check it. Mr Schoeman said that this matter requires urgent attention.

Confederal System

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 7 Mar 82 p 15

[Text] Mr Schoeman was emphatic about the need for the coloreds, Asians, Chinese to be placed on the voters' roll with full rights in Parliament. This is to be followed by a confederal parliament in which everybody will have representation, even the urban blacks and the national states.

This week former Minister Ben Schoeman told RAPPORT that this is the only way that whites in South Africa will be able to continue to exist.

He said that Prime Minister P. W. Botha is moving in the right direction. He said: "I support him and he knows that. What I am saying is being said in my own name and not in the name of the Nationalist Party."

Some of the things which Mr Schoeman said were:

It is wrong to talk about a separate colored nation. Years ago he said that the coloreds must become allies of the whites. They practice the same religion, talk the same language and have the same culture.

The coloreds must be placed on a common voters roll and must have a political voice in Parliament.

The same applies to the Asians and the Chinese.

The greater majority of urban blacks were born in black cities and towns and with the exception of language they do not have any ties worth mentioning with the independent and the national black states. Therefore, black cities and towns must be given the status of city states.

A confederation must then be formed and this is to be representative of all the national states and exist along with the central parliament of whites, coloreds, Asians and Chinese and the city states.

A confederal parliament will have to be formed and this is to have certain powers as determined by Parliament as now constituted. These powers will affect matters of common interest such as defense, transportation and foreign affairs.

Mr Schoeman says that Prime Minister P. W. Botha acted correctly with respect to the recent split. "I want to wish him full success. He must stick to his guns, make no concessions to the right wingers and he must go on with his policy. He is a strong man and I support him.

7964
CSO: 4701/47

CONTRASTING VIEWS ON APARTHEID IN RELIGION PRESENTED

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 7 Mar 82 p 9

[Text] The eighth meeting of the Federal Council of Dutch Reformed Churches, which meets every 4 years, was held in Pretoria during the past 3 days. The Federal Council consists of the white Dutch Reformed Church and 11 independent member churches formed as a result of the missionary work of the mother church, including the NGSK [Dutch Reformed Synod of Churches] (for the coloreds), the NGKA (for the blacks), the RGA (for Asians) as well as Dutch Reformed churches in Zambia, Mozambique, Zimbabwe and the South-West.

Dr Abraham Luckhoff, Dutch Reformed preacher in Pretoria and church and religious collaborator for RAPPORT attended the meeting.

This week, in Pretoria, Rev E. M. Mataboge, the new deputy chairman of the Federal Council of Dutch Reformed Churches, stated: "The white Dutch Reformed churches are driving the black and colored churches to the militants. We are getting the impression that the daughter is not welcome into the house of her mother and if the hen no longer wants its chicks then it has reached the end."

During the eighth meeting of the Federal Council of Dutch Reformed Churches sharp differences came to light between white and black delegates with respect to the unity of the church and especially the practicability of it.

Observers are of the opinion that this is the first time that black and colored preachers have spoken so openly at a formal public assembly. Previously such discussions took place behind closed doors.

However, it was mostly Rev David Botha, the moderator of the Dutch Reformed Missionary Church, who summed up the crux of the differences.

We are either one church or four separate independent churches for whites, blacks, coloreds and Asians.

The God-given unity must now attain stature in concrete terms.

However, the Missionary Church is not closing its eyes to the serious problems on the road to church unity. But the principle of unity is scriptural and therefore we must work hard at it, even if we have to suffer in order to attain it.

Rev Klippies Kritzinger of the Asian congregation in Laudium, Pretoria, joined in this and said that the road to unity is no easy road, but a difficult one; it is the way of the Cross.

Earlier in the debate the white Dutch Reformed Church, by word of mouth of Rev Dawid Snyman, missions secretary of the General Synod in the Free State, explained his viewpoint on church unity. The Dutch Reformed Church believes in a spiritual unity and this is the unity in the belief in Jesus Christ. Although the visible unity of the church must be given expression, a structural unity is not necessary.

Dr Dirk Fourie, the moderator of the South Transvaal Synod and registrar of the General Synod spoke strongly against structural unity.

"It is an impossibility to bring into one congregation peoples of different cultures and languages to serve the Lord. This has never worked in history."

Dr Fourie said that unity between Dutch Reformed churches can be given expression by doing such things as holding a joint thanksgiving service on Reform Day, by getting together at a presbytery level and by dealing with the authorities jointly.

Rev D. T. Keta of Windhoek stated that language and culture need not be a stumbling block in the way of unity. He has a congregation in the South-West where seven languages are being spoken and they are experiencing no problems.

Rev N. I. Moyo, deputy moderator of the Dutch Reformed Church in Botswana said that he is experiencing serious problems with Dr Fourie's viewpoint and he asked: Must members of the Dutch Reformed Church who come to Botswana now establish another Dutch Reformed Church?

Rev Kobus Potgieter, deputy moderator of the General Synod and moderator for North Transvaal, said that there is a misunderstanding over this matter.

"Our General Synod is meeting in October and the question of church unity will be discussed then. Please let us not press the question now. We all love Christ and there is an intimate cord that binds us together." This was his comment.

At the end of the debate the entire matter was referred to a subcommittee. A report will be ready in 2 years.

7964
CSO: 4701/47

CLEARER 'CENTRIST' POLICY URGED IN WAKE OF SPLIT

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 7 Mar 82 p 24

[Article by Willem de Klerk: "Rightist Groups Show Their Voting Power"]

[Text] What is new is the expected choice of F. W. de Klerk as the new leader of the Nationalist Party of Transvaal. I will get to him and the road that lies ahead in a moment.

As for the old news concerning the defection of Dr Andries Treurnicht and of the other breakaways, this requires a few things to be said.

First of all congratulations for the fact that the tour-de-force which caused that old boil in the Nationalist Party to burst open came when it did. This was unavoidable and necessary. Actually it was the salvation of the credibility and effectiveness of the Nationalist Party.

All of us have for too long swallowed the dream of unity against our better judgement and have for too long been patient with people at cross purposes with ourselves.

A new political grouping is on its way. It is improbable that there will be an amalgamation of the rightist group: the Reconstituted Nationalist Party, the APT and AET [sic], the National Conservative Party and all the others on that side of the fence. There are too many people with ambitions, too many bravados and too much irreconcilability.

Accustomed as we all are to his style, Dr A. P. Treurnicht sits on the fence and waits and pretty soon we will see on which side of the fence he will be pushed...establishing his own party along with the AET and the National Conservative Party or alone; but as far as returning to the Nationalist Party, it is all over for him.

The bad news is that our politics will be subjected to new tensions. Nobody dares to underestimate this rightist grouping in our politics. Forced into a small heap, threatened, bewildered and without any answers to our problems, still, by guise of some sort of alliance, they could attract as much as a good 40 percent of the Afrikaners' vote and do this in an election which could be forced earlier by the situation. The municipal elections results have shown that they can attract a strong vote.

The great struggle below the surface is now becoming greater in scope and meaner. This can be described as a stealing activity in which Dispatch rider corps and all other Afrikaans institutions will be picked up and down for support recruitment.

The good news is that the Nationalist Party, lighter in its aspect and relieved of its handicap, can come out of this struggle very strong. Success brings success and the chance is excellent that, with a strong leadership, a breakthrough can be made into a new magnetism for attracting the vacillators, the tired and the uneasy who will be streaming back from the A. P. Treurnicht camp to a realistic policy.

The Nationalist Party will also be strengthened from other sources. All of this can bring the statistics to a convincing mid-sixty percent support for the Nationalist Party.

Another good news is that two "center" parties, the Nationalists and those of the APT-group, and whoever wants to join them, retain advantages. The Reconstituted Nationalist Party's dangerous extremism will be forced to draw-in its horns. There must follow a clear statement of policy on the part of the two center parties which will present clearer choices. The break in the party has raised to the foreground a few things about these clearer choices: In our country a policy will succeed only if separateness and togetherness are presented in a practical manner.

The APT group emphasized separateness unilaterally and wants to consent (against reality) to putting aside togetherness in such a manner that the bars fence-in the coloreds and blacks on all sides. Supremacy for whites only is the basic ideologic motive. They must not ask how this can be achieved, because they simply do not know.

The Nationalist Party group places equally heavy emphasis on separateness and togetherness with strong motivation for giving togetherness a fair and just stature at all levels of government and society; moreover they know how to achieve this.

You see...the choice is becoming clear.

Now I have come to the subject of Minister F. W. de Klerk.

At first a little teasing that the old chum's enlightened thinking had then, after all those years, surely reached its goal in Transvaal!

Know him? Yes I do. I also know that this leadership will be dedicated, capable, honest, upright and conservative...in the good meaning of the word. Also reconciling toward those who fit with the Nationalist Party. His leadership will be bound to principles. He will bow to nobody, because that is not within his nature.

May the Lord's blessing descend upon you...

If I read the signs correctly the nation (Afrikaners and other peoples and groups) now wants the following kind of leadership:

A leadership without too much wariness. The danger of fear of "rightists" and the pain of amputation can induce the Nationalist Party to be too withdrawn. This will weaken the Nationalist Party.

No bullying attitude. People on the other side of the camp are also our people. We will be able to strengthen the Nationalist Party only through logical argumentation, persuasive effort, constructive confrontation and patient listening.

The proposals of the Presidential Council must not be presented in watered down versions, but in accordance with the procedures promised for this: Cabinet, caucus and congresses. We must not waiver.

The feeling is that vague concepts such as co-responsibility, confederation, and moving away from discrimination, and so on, must be spelled out more clearly, distinctly and concretely.

The battle of enlightened mottos has been won. Now it is time that contents be given to these in detail:

Contents to the coloreds' policy at all levels of government, to the model of confederation with all of its sub-departments, to the political rights of urban blacks, to the great bulk of discrimination which still remains to be removed... all these things must now become squarely clear and not rounded off.

Let us take the bull by the horns, make break-through decisions. The members of parliament must hurry in giving the necessary insight to our people.

7964
CSO: 4701/47

REPORT PROVIDES RECENT DEMOGRAPHIC DATA

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 9 Mar 82 p 8

[Article by Pieter Esterhuysen: "The Population Pattern in South Africa"]

[Text] The continuing migration from the south to the metropolitan areas of Transvaal and Natal, as mentioned in the report on population shifts in South Africa prepared by the Council for Humanities Research, is striking. This phenomenon, along with other tendencies is taken under consideration in the present perspective drafted by Pieter Esterhuysen of the Africa Institute.

An important tendency in the geographic distribution of South Africa's population is shown in a research report recently issued by the Council for Humanities Research.

Out of a total population of 23,605,351 (according to the 1980 census) 17,160,540 persons, or 72.7 percent of the population is residing in "white" South Africa, while 6,444,811 or 27.3 percent are counted as living in the self governing national states. Out of the total black population (17,160,540) 9,568,693 or 59.6 percent were living in "white" South Africa and 6,423,889, or 40.4 percent in the self governing national states. The latter states consist of Ciskei (now independent), Gazankulu, Kangwane, KwanDebele, KwaZulu, Lebowa and Qwaqwa, but Bophuthatswana, Transkei and Venda, which were already independent in 1980, are not included.

Lower

Although the level of urbanization for the South African population (53.4 percent) is high in comparison with most other African countries, it is considerably lower than in the developed industrial countries. This can be ascribed to the fact that only 38 percent of the black population, which constitutes the majority of the total population, was urbanized in 1980.

The level of urbanization is especially low in the self governing states where only 17 percent of the blacks reside in towns. Nevertheless, it is estimated that about 75 percent of the total black population of South Africa, taken as a whole, will be urbanized by the year 2000. This means that the black population in urban regions will increase to 21 million in the next 20 years.

The greater majority of the other population groups is already urbanized and this trend is continuing uninterruptedly. In 1980, 88.7 percent of the total white population of 4,364,059 resided in urban areas. Out of the 2,554,071 coloreds, 77.4 percent lived in urban areas and out of the 794,639 Asians, 91.3 percent were urban residents.

A striking phenomenon in the redistribution pattern in South Africa is the continuous shift of the population from the south to Transvaal and Natal.

Transvaal increased its percentage share of the total population from 42.8 percent in 1970 to 43.8 percent in 1980. Natal's percentage increased from 23.3 percent to 24.3 percent, while the Cape Province's share of population fell from 24.7 percent to 23.5 percent and that of the Orange Free State from 9.1 percent to 8.4 percent.

Although the Cape's metropolitan regions succeeded in increasing their share of each of the population groups, in 1980 their population was only 14 percent of the total population of "white" South Africa as against 30 percent in the case of the Pretoria-Witwatersrand-Vaaldriehoek area. Moreover, the percentage of increase of the Cape's metropolitan area was lower than that of Transvaal and Natal.

With respect to the white population, 67.5 percent of it resides in the big metropolitan areas and 41.3 percent of this in the Pretoria-Mitwatersrand-Vaaldriehoek area. As in the case of the bigger cities in the Western World, the whites of South Africa are inclined to move away from the central sections of cities to the fringe areas.

Capetown

The white population of urban districts such as Alberton, Boksburg, Hoeveldrif, Kemptonpark, Pretoria, Bandburg and Roodeport in the Pretoria-Witwatersrand-Vaaldriehoek area, Ballville in greater Capetown and Pinetown and Newcastle in Natal has increased faster than the country's average.

On the other hand cities like Johannesburg, Capetown, Durban, Germiston and Port Elizabeth are experiencing a relatively lower increase in white population. In addition a considerable intra-city migration within "old cities" such as Johannesburg and Capetown is being observed.

Greater Capetown houses 39.3 percent of the total colored population; however, it is striking that 68 districts in Transvaal, 38 in the Orange Free State and 36 in Natal have experienced an absolute increase of coloreds.

The Durban-Pinetown-Pietmartizburg area houses 74.3 percent of the total Asiatic population and the districts of Inanda (North Coast), Pinetown and Pietmaritzburg absorb more than 80 percent of the relative increase.

Border changes, consolidation, rehousing and the possibility that a lower count was taken in 1970 is responsible for the abnormally high population increase experienced by the self ruling black states in the period 1970-1980.

As against an average increase of 29.5 percent of the total population, these regions experienced an average growth of 65.8 percent.

The black population is also migrating increasingly from the heartlands of the self-governing states to regions located against white development regions. In 1980, 33 percent of "white" South Africa's black population was housed in the Pretoria-Witwatersrand-Vaaldriehoek region, as against 29.26 percent in 1970, an increase of nearly 4 percent.

7964
CSO: 4701/46

A GLIMPSE OF NEW 'AFRIKANERIZED' MAFIKENG

Johannesburg DIE VADERLAND in Afrikaans 3 Mar 82 p 12

[Article by Andre du Toit: "Mafikeng is Afrikanerized"]

[Text] "Please open up your rumble seat, sir." This order came from a black man and his Afrikaans was faultless. He wore a camouflage uniform and carried a machine gun under his arm.

Ahead of me there were whites in a car with a YBA auto tag. The black policeman became less formal and there was laughter and joking and he did not even open the rumble seat.

The scene unraveled at the outskirts of Mafikeng at a roadblock.

To the visitor this offered a glimpse of the joviality which prevails in Bophuthatswana between whites and blacks.

Just 60 kilometers from the Conservative town of Lichtenburg apartheid died a quiet death. In the center of Mafikeng white and colored children play together and (unlike Johannesburg) people can speak Afrikaans everywhere.

On Saturday morning, Mafikeng can be as bustling as Johannesburg, but between the increasing numbers of Mercedes Benz, which can now be seen there, one can count just as many donkey carts.

The former Bechuanaland of Moffat and Reverend Mackensie is rubbing here against a newer, more obtrusive black Africa which wants to assert itself in the world.

Cecil Rhode's statue is still shining before the station, but the shunting yards are no longer the southern headquarters of the old Rhodesia Railways.

There are brown passenger cars everywhere, these are newly acquired and bear the imprinted sign of National Railways of Zimbabwe. The railroad police are black as are also the bank and store clerks.

But the irony is that in the process of nigrization Mafikeng has become Afrikaans.

This is no longer the town where Baden Powell established the Boy Scouts and no longer the English town where, as an old English auntie told me, they had the "most delightful balls in the town hall."

The town's two most English establishments, the Surry Hotel and Crewes Hotel, where Baden Powell entrenched himself during the siege, are places where English is not heard any more.

One hears just Tswana and Afrikaans.

But Mafikeng has not only lost its name, but its once peaceful colonial atmosphere as well. The Barolongs are an exuberant people, hard drinkers and hard talkers who drove out the "colonials" of Mafikeng.

With that the days when one could go and enjoy a cup of tea at the Surrey in tranquility are gone.

But a couple of islands have survived...places where the old colonial atmosphere is not altogether gone. One of these is Mafikeng's museum. It is still being conducted in the old manner, with no concessions to Black Africa, and it is still under the control of the Cape's Provincial Administration. There is still the Mafikeng High School with its double medium, as in the old days, and as white as Lichtenburg's Dutch Reformed Church Council.

The town also sports its Jan Smuts Avenue, Carrington Street, Churchill Avenue and obviously the Baden Powell Avenue.

A couple of miles outside of Mafikeng there is already an Independence Stadium, but the town itself does not yet have its Mangope Lane or Julius Nyerere Drive like Gaberone in Botswana.

Mafikeng's opulent whites live in the neighborhood of the fair grounds and the rugby-field, still in pretty fair style in their large dwellings. The only difference is that here and there a black family has taken up residence. However, the street names in the new stately quarter remain unaltered: Jakaranda Lane, Langenhoven Boulevard and Totius Lane.

7964
CSO: 4701/46

END

JPRS 80611

20 April 1982

Sub-Saharan Africa Report

No. 2610

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 80611

20 April 1982

SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA REPORT

No. 2610

CONTENTS

BURUNDI

Briefs
Bagaza Receives French Adviser 1

CAMEROON

Moroccan Visitor Denounces OAU Admission of Sdar
(Yaounde Domestic Service, 31 Mar 82) 2

NAMIBIA

Thomas Remarks on Capitalism, Future of Namibia
(ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG, 3 Mar 82) 3

Capitalism 'Suspect'
Misleading Choice of Words, Editorial,
by H. Feddersen

Ethnic Leaders Hinder National Unity
(Editorial, H. Fedderson; ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG, 9 Mar 82) .. 6

NIGERIA

Commentator Looks at U.S. Latin America Policy
(Dayo Adeyey; Lagos International Service, 2 Apr 82) 8

'NAN' Reports House Adjourns 'In Confusion'
(NAN, 2 Apr 82) 10

Timetable Proposed for Creating New States
(Lagos Domestic Service, 6 Apr 82) 11

Banks Expand Overseas Operations
(NAN, 5 Apr 82) 12

Shagari Receives Report on Creation of States
(NAN, 2 Apr 82) 13

House Passes Appropriation Bill Over Protests
(NAN, 1 Apr 82) 14

Commentary Examines Relations With SFRY
(Alex Ekenyaon; Lagos Domestic Service, 30 Mar 82) 15

Banks Fail To Submit Information on Imports
(NAN, 30 Mar 82) 17

Western Pressure To Lower Oil Prices Denounced
(Atilade Atoyedi; Lagos Domestic Service, 2 Apr 82) 18

Briefs
Papers Disturbed by Rawlings 20
Paper on OPEC Warning 20
Press on Economic Crisis 20
Paper Opposes Oil Price Cuts 21
Israel, Taiwan Invitations 21
January Oil Production Figures 22
Falkland's Negotiations Urged 22

TANZANIA

Seminar Held in Dar es Salaam on Palestine Problem
(DAILY NEWS, 27 Mar 82) 23

Salim's Opening Speech, by Daniel Mshana
Final Session, by Boniface Byarugaba

Power Supply in Mwanza To 'Improve Considerably'
(Nestas Kageuka; DAILY NEWS, 30 Mar 82) 25

Districts To Be Responsible for Running Development Activities
(DAILY NEWS, 30 Mar 82) 26

Max Says Bills for Reestablishment of Cooperatives To Be Tabled
(Simeon Ileta; DAILY NEWS, 29 Mar 82) 27

NBC To Steamline Foreign Branch in Dar es Salaam
(DAILY NEWS, 29 Mar 82) 28

Tanzania, Mozambique Approve Technical Cooperation Program
(DAILY NEWS, 30 Mar 82) 29

Education Review Commission Submits Report to Nyerere
(DAILY NEWS, 30 Mar 82) 30

Mbeya Development Body Endorses Expansion of Municipality
(DAILY NEWS, 31 Mar 82) 32

Links Between Extension, Research Farm Services To Resume
(DAILY NEWS, 29 Mar 82) 33

Survey Shows Many Poultry Raisers 'Barely Surviving'
(Emma Faraji, Patrick Mwanukuzi; SUNDAY NEWS, 28 Mar 82) .. 34

Tiper Resumes Fuel Oil Production After Three-Month Stoppage
(Emma Faraji; DAILY NEWS, 31 Mar 82) 36

Msuya Inaugurates Japanese-Built Bridge in Dar es Salaam
(SUNDAY NEWS, 21 Mar 82) 38

Submerging of Maziwi Island Eliminates Turtle Nesting Site
(Daniel Mshana; DAILY NEWS, 25 Mar 82) 39

Government Approves Disconnection of Telephones of TPTC Debtors
(DAILY NEWS, 24 Mar 82) 40

NBC To Be Restructured in Next Fiscal Year
(Simeon Ileta; DAILY NEWS, 25 Mar 82) 41

Intermittent Stoppages Cause Losses for Tanga Cement Plant
(Charles Kizigha; DAILY NEWS, 16 Mar 82) 43

TPCC To Increase Production Following Kiln Repair
(Charles Kizigha; DAILY NEWS, 20 Mar 82) 44

Minister Urges Public Enterprise Managers To Minimize Costs
(DAILY NEWS, 19 Mar 82) 46

Social Welfare Official Says Laws on Destitutes Must Be Reviewed
(DAILY NEWS, 19 Mar 82) 47

Msuya Urges Use of Experts in Planning Village, Farms' Expansion
(DAILY NEWS, 17 Mar 82) 48

Crop Authorities Exploring Ways To Reduce Overhead Costs
(Habib Nyundo; DAILY NEWS, 15 Mar 82) 49

Msuya Says Government Aims To Build Strategic Food Reserves
(DAILY NEWS, 16 Mar 82) 50

Tanzania, USSR Issue Communique Condemning Pretoria
(Daniel Mshana; DAILY NEWS, 20 Mar 82) 51

Rice Harvest Termed 'Major Step' Toward Food Self-Sufficiency
(Paul Chintowa; DAILY NEWS, 15 Mar 82) 53

CATA Proposes Temporary Closure of Some Processing Plants
(DAILY NEWS, 16 Mar 82) 54

CDA Proposes New Contribution Formula for Dodoma's Development
(Gabby Mgaya; DAILY NEWS, 22 Mar 82) 55

Experts Claim Traditional Drugs Effective Snake Bite Remedies
(Daniel Mshana; DAILY NEWS, 24 Mar 82) 56

Nyerere Makes 8-Day Working Tour of Dodoma Region
(Isaac Mruma; DAILY NEWS, various dates) 58

President's Itinerary
Second Day of Tour
President on Land Fertility
Tightening of Distribution Network
President on Cattle, Dams

Msuya Makes Address Before Opening Swiss-Aided Training Complex
(Boniface Byarugaba; DAILY NEWS, 20 Mar 82) 63

Msuya Making Four-Day Tour of Singida Region
(Mwamoyo Hamza; DAILY NEWS, various dates) 65

Prime Minister's Schedule
Msuya in Iranba District
Final Day of Msuya's Tour

Briefs
Farm Implements Shortage 68
Arms Probers To Submit Report 68
FRG Project Evaluation Delegation 69
Kilimanjaro Electric Power Project 69
Netherlands Project Write-Up Aid 69
Austrian Wheat Donation 70
UPC Delegation's Visit 70
Swedish Grant to TPTC 70
Swahili Translation Essays on Socialism 71
TSA Food Crop Cultivation 71
CC Ends Meeting 71
Nyerere, Tambo Talks 71

UGANDA

International Red Cross Ends Work in Arua
(Kampala Domestic Service, 30 Mar 82) 72

ZAIRE

Candidate Profiles Show Commitments of MPR
(AZAP, 7 Apr 82) 73

Commentary Approves of Screening Candidates
(AZAP, 1 Apr 82) 75

Briefs
Communications Talks With Belgium 77

BRIEFS

BAGAZA RECEIVES FRENCH ADVISER--Bujumbura, 27 Mar (AFP)--The president of the Republic of Burundi, Col Jean-Baptiste Bagaza, on Friday received in audience Guy Penne, adviser to French President Francois Mitterrand on African and Malagasy affairs. Mr Penne, who began a 2-day visit to Burundi on Friday, delivered a personal message from the French head of state to President Bagaza. [Text] [AB271130 Paris AFP in French 1057 GMT 27 Mar 82]

CSO: 4719/797

MOROCCAN VISITOR DENOUNCES OAU ADMISSION OF SDAR

AB010713 Yaounde Domestic Service in French 1900 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] The Western Sahara issue was at the center of discussions which Prime Minister Paul Biya had today with Ben Ould Sidi Baba, speaker of the Moroccan House of Representatives.

Ben Ould Sidi Baba noted that Morocco is a founding member of the OAU, and he added that the existence of the organization is now threatened following the recent OAU Council of Ministers meeting. This is due to admission of the SDAR into the OAU. The highest authorities of the continent should hold consultations, said the Moroccan envoy. It should be pointed out that Moroccan authorities are happy with the position taken by Cameroon during the Addis Ababa meeting. Let us listen to Ben Ould Sidi Baba's statement to our reporter Antoine-Marie Ngondo.

[Begin recording] We consider that Cameroon has already carried out its duty. It did so when its delegation decided to withdraw from the deliberations of the OAU Council of Ministers meeting. This duty was prompted by the organization's principles, and was also dictated by respect for African heads of state, for we have never hastily admitted a country during a meeting originally scheduled to be devoted to administrative and financial issues. The admission of a country into the organization, as we have seen on several occasions, is effected at a summit of African heads of state and is a sorc of consecration.

This kind of furtive admission is the only possible way of entry for the so-called SDAR, a self-proclaimed republic without territory or population or address. Its presence within our organization is only designed to split the organization and pull it apart, which will have exceptionally serious consequences for the future of our continent. [End recording]

CSO: 4719/797

THOMAS REMARKS ON CAPITALISM, FUTURE OF NAMIBIA

Capitalism 'Suspect'

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 3 Mar 82, p 1

[Text] A full house responded with an animated discussion to Prof Thomas' plea for a "third way" in which neither capitalism nor socialism in their present form can be considered the beginning and the end. The discussion made it clar that the listeners had been attracted not by the professor's name alone but that the Roessing Foundation had hit "the nail on the head" with its topic for the third lecture and had found an interested audience.

Prof Wolfgang Thomas emphasized that "the future of capitalism in Namibia" will be strongly influenced by the ability, image and effectiveness of capitalism to operate in such a way that at least some of the wishes of the poor majority of the population can be fulfilled. It is not a question of finding a new ideological name for possible alternatives, but new ground rules must be established and obeyed. It is difficult to motivate the majority to participate within the framework of the capitalist system because the traditional economic concept can hardly be accepted ideologically and practically by the majority.

The longer the economy is dominated by the capitalist camp and its philosophy, the more obvious becomes the movement toward a polarized world, and the weaker becomes the system's position that unreasonably opposes black intellectuals, union leaders and political leaders who equate capitalism with "the suppression of the blacks." The plan to accept smaller segments of the black community into the capitalist middle class is likewise not able to erase from the capitalist system its "suspicious role."

Capitalism in its conventional form has little to offer to the poor people in the Third World. The economic system has to make sure that not only the free market economy, the role of the private sector and the call for the redistribution of wealth are emphasized. Capitalist principles should not be repeated over and over but should be changed in a practical way on the basis of social conditions. Prof Thomas said that now is the time "that South Africans should finally face the facts more honestly" in view of the weaknesses of their economic system.

The black "man of the street" is becoming increasingly important as "the voice of a new public opinion." To him, however, socialist economic strategies are attractive and of great importance. This must also be taken into consideration during the transition phase of political change.

Prof Thomas spoke only briefly about the international economic situation. Factors contributing to a debate on economic problems are, after all, also the limitations of a government that no longer can fulfill the wishes of its electorate. The voices against the welfare state are becoming louder and louder. That, too, must be considered a weakness of the free economic system (capitalism).

The revolutionary economic expectations among black Africans have, in addition to ideological reasons, led to the belief that capitalism is the same as racial discrimination. Against this background the principles of "the high productivity of capitalism" and the distribution of profits are also criticized. Prof Thomas pointed to the dangers resulting from an overemphasis on the role of the private sector. In this case, rich industrial firms will easily shift the responsibility for social ills to the public sector. There are many areas where the private sector cannot offer any help but can, on the other hand, persuade the poor that "the state" is to blame for their misery.

Although capitalism emphasizes a free market economy, there are too many forms of control, government interference and price regulations. For this reason, the [capitalist] economic situation can hardly be cited as an example of a free market economy.

In his speech Prof Thomas pleaded for a restructuring of the Namibian socio-economic system. This is possible only through a "third way" because all too often the opposing parties fall back on outdated cliches and there are no possibilities of compromise between socialist and capitalist concepts because both camps are isolating themselves from each other. The political changes in SWA/Namibia require that proper attention is paid to the opposite camp (African Socialism) and that its good features are accepted.

Misleading Choice of Words

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 3 Mar 82, p 2

[Editorial by H Feddersen on Prof Thomas' remarks]

[Text] Anyone listening to the "academic" discussion following Prof Thomas' remarks will have been so confused by a misleading choice of words that he will have hardly been able to analyze why the capitalist system (let us rather call it the free market economy) shows so many weaknesses in Namibia. The fault will not lie alone in the fact that the ideology of black nationalism calls for a "redistribution of goods" because apartheid is considered the same as capitalism.

One of the participants in the discussion cited examples that speak for themselves: South Africa exports corn all over the world at 80 rand per ton, whereas SWA/Namibia has to pay 150 rand per ton. The large airport of Karibib, empty hospitals, housing shortage, the teachers' college, expenditures for the infra-structure and measures taken by the control councils (e.g. milk import!) "are crying out for a new economic strategy." This means of course the redistribution of existing capital.

However, these are not the weaknesses of capitalism, but rather it is obvious that the government will not allow economic freedom. The initiative of the individual (a principle of capitalism) is trampled underfoot. The free market economy with all its consequences is choked to death. It could produce better results than the appeal to a "support of laziness" that is hidden within the concept of African socialism.

In the economic field, the initiative of the individual exists only in a very limited way. Why? Because the government "manages the economy" through semigoverment organizations and control councils. The government should instead see to it that we can finally talk about a free market economy. Our economy is definitely no example of "capitalism." The weaknesses in our system are therefore not necessarily only the weaknesses of capitalism.

One additional comment about the misleading choice of words of the academicians. SWA/Namibia could be economically independent! This makes an exchange of goods with foreign markets or an exchange of goods for foreign currency absolutely necessary but does not exclude freedom. The economy must become more independent. Let's call our dependence on neighboring countries "the willingness to exchange [goods]"! Let's call the infamous capitalism free market economy. And then we must go to work seriously! Then it will become clear that "competition," "price management," the "chance to acquire wealth" (as H Pupkewitz called it) need not be criticized by ideological half-truths. The choice of words is indeed important!

8889
CSO: 4720/8

ETHNIC LEADERS HINDER NATIONAL UNITY

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 9 Mar 82 p 2

[Editorial by H Fedderson on Ethnicity]

[Text] Exaggerated ethnicity is contradictory to the idea of national unity. In our political life there are too many politicians who emphasize the value of ethnic isolation to such a degree that the concept of unity suffers. Some DTA leaders believe that in the past few days this kind of political stubbornness has lead to the departure of Peter Kalangula from the DTA. Furthermore, Kalangula is now believed to be of the opinion that the federal government has no authority over the Ovambo Region. The chairman of the Council of Ministers said yesterday that, by establishing a committee that is to supervise the actions of the security forces in Ovambo, Kalangula even claims to have executive and directive authority over the security forces.

This would mean that an ethnic leader assumes too much! The breaking up of the NNF is another example that political egotism--and exaggerated ethnicity is nothing else--does not promote national unity. Damara Council Chairman Justus Garoeb wanted on the one hand to keep open the option of joining the NDP. A few days ago he stated jointly with Kosie Pretorius and Rehoboth representative Diergaardt that the National Assembly and the Council of Ministers should be restructured, and in this process the elected ethnic representatives would have to serve as guidelines.

The position of the people of Rehoboth is not clear. They have not yet accepted the principle of ethnic representation and do not adjust their political actions to the interim constitution AG-8.

The National Assembly is formed on the basis of country-wide elections. Because the elected representatives of the people form the central government which has nothing to do with ethnic governments or representatives, one can hardly object to the fact that a victorious alliance names its representatives after the election.

On the other hand, different splinter groups (e.g. the differences between SWANU, NIP and Damara Council) point out that it is symptomatic for our country that many political leaders place their personal ambitions in the foreground.

The national concept and the loyalty toward a central government are losing out in this process. For this reason it is not justified that elections are held in Ovambo right now. Our aim should always be country-wide elections whose results will lead to independence and will give the democratic parties the right to prove their superiority through democratic elections.

The present time is most unsuitable for ethnic politics. There is far too much emphasis on ethnicity. The concern for separate interests is out of place at a time when we are faced with internationally supervised elections and the formation of a constituent assembly following the elections. Our politicians should finally get together and form a united front against the common enemy. Or perhaps not?

8889
CSO: 4720/8

COMMENTATOR LOOKS AT U.S. LATIN AMERICA POLICY

AB021514 Lagos International Service in English 0830 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Commentary by Dayo Adeyey]

[Text] The foreign policy of the United States in relation to her Latin American neighbors has been set by the Monroe Doctrine. In essence, the doctrine spells out the great political hegemony of the United States over the western hemisphere.

Since the Second World War, that doctrine has been complemented by the containment policy which was born out of the cold war rivalry between the United States and the Soviet Union. It defines U.S. responsibility as that of containing or stemming the tide of communism everywhere in the world, particularly in the Americas. Moreover, the United States has always viewed Latin America as her area of influence. For this reason, she moved in quickly to replace the erstwhile colonial masters following the demise of colonialism in the various Latin American states.

Since then, most of these countries have been under the firm grip of Washington. The importance of the Latin Americas to the U.S. foreign policy lies in that region's strategic location and her vast economic resources. For many decades, this backyard of the United States was turned into America's colony and the rich market they offered to U.S. goods and businesses have been crucial to the growth of the American capital. It is, therefore, not surprising that the United States has always resisted any attempt to challenge this status quo in Central America. However, the first challenge came in the form of the Cuban revolt against the American supported dictatorship of Batista. The success of the Cuban revolution was such a blow to Washington that for decades it embarked on various forms of subversive action to bring an end to that revolutionary government. The political and military intimidation of Cuba by the American global power still continues to the present day.

Ten years after Cuba, the most dissenting voice was heard in Chile; this time, Salvador Allende's Socialist Party tried to inspire a Chilean revolution that was brutally suppressed. He was assassinated and his government overthrown in a CIA-inspired coup. Nicaragua became another test case of the people's revolt against the U.S.-backed repressive regime of Somoza. Despite heavy military and diplomatic support by Washington, the corrupt dictatorship of Somoza was overthrown by the Sandinista nationalists. As usual, America refused to accept a people's government in Nicaragua because it considered the legitimate revolt of the people to have been communist-inspired.

Today, it is the turn of El Salvador. What one witnesses in El Salvador confirms the hegemonic designs of the United States. As the rightist government's grip on El Salvador wanes, the United States has come out again strongly with massive military aid for the Salvadorian dictators in a vain attempt to ensure their continued stay in office.

The aim of the United States is to keep Latin America within her political, economic and military domination. Any challenge to this hegemony will be countered even if it means support for repressive regimes or an outright military confrontation. In spite of her avowed claim as a bastion of democracy and human rights, the United States is quite prepared to support oppressive regimes so long as such regimes protect her interests. America's involvement in the internal affairs of El Salvador has reached a stage comparable to the Vietnam misadventure. The Reagan administration's refusal to concede to the El Salvadorians the right to self-determination has heightened the people's animosity for the United States. It is very unlikely that the results of the recent elections would bring peace in that country nor would it have a positive impact on the political and military morass into which the country has sunk. Already, the leftist nationalists, who have been fighting the government, have pledged to continue their struggle. The conflagration in Central America was triggered by the twin evils of poverty arising from unequal distribution of wealth and the neocolonial structures that merely replaced one exploitative master with another. It is in the interest of the United States to appreciate this fact and make a more determined effort to correct the ills in the region.

CSO: 4700/1048

'NAN' REPORTS HOUSE ADJOURNS 'IN CONFUSION'

AB021852 Lagos NAN in English 1750 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Text] Lagos, 2 Apr (NAN)--The House of Representatives today broke up in confusion as some members tried to prevent the speaker, Chief Edwin Ume-Ezeoke, from leaving the chambers. The confusion started after the speaker had announced the result of the only motion on the day's order paper in respect of Easter recess for members.

As Chief Ume-Ezeoke was being escorted out of the chambers by the sergeant-at-arms, some members held his jacket to restrain him from leaving. One legislator grabbed the mace from the sergeant-at-arms, another attempted to retrieve it and, in the process, the mace was broken. Chief Ume-Ezeoke left the sergeant-at-arms and the mace behind, during the scuffle. A police sergeant, however, rescued the sergeant-at-arms from legislators and led him away from the chambers.

At the end of the scuffle, an NPN [National Party of Nigeria] member from Cross River, Prince Awa Ekpo, took over the speakers chair to continue deliberations without the official recorders in the chambers. Addressing newsmen later, Prince Ekpo said that a vote of no confidence had been passed in the speaker and displayed a list, containing 165 signatures mainly of UPN, NPP, GNPP, and PRP [Unity Party of Nigeria, Nigerian People's Party, Great Nigerian People's Party and People's Redemption Party] members. Prince Ekpo is the only NPN member whose signature appeared on the list.

In a notice signed by Prince Ekpo and distributed to assembly correspondents, the 165 members condemned the speaker for "deliberately failing to uphold the rules of debate in the house," and considered his action as a serious breach of confidence of the house. They are protesting against the inclusion of 128,277,070 naira in the 1982 appropriation bill as margin for increased cost and emergency provision.

Twelve members of the Joint Finance Committee had walked out protesting against that provision during their meeting on 16 March.

The deputy leader of the house, Chief Olusola Afolabi, described the action of the members aa "irresponsible and unbecoming of assembly men."

A NAN correspondent who called at the office of the speaker for his comment on today's incident was told that the speaker was attending a meeting. His press secretary, Mr Ogunlye, however, told NAN that the speaker would reply to the legislators' allegations at a later date.

CSO: 4700/1048

TIMETABLE PROPOSED FOR CREATING NEW STATES

AB062210 Lagos Domestic Service in English 2100 GMT 6 Apr 82

[Text] A timetable has been proposed for the creation of more states in the country. Highlights of the recommendations include the validation of requests by the National Assembly and the passing of an act to regulate the procedure for the creation of new states and allied matters by the 31st of next month. Conversion of requests into proposals by the National Assembly and the assent to the act by the president should be carried out by 30 June of this year.

It was also proposed that the Federal Electoral Commission should complete the holding of referendum on the creation of new states by 31 October this year while debates on possible proposals by the state houses of assembly should be concluded by 30 November. Other recommendations are the (?passage of an act) of the National Assembly by 15 February next year. The meeting recommended that between 2 and 31 August this year, general elections should be held in the country to elect the president, governors and members of both the national and state assemblies. The proposals should be sent to the national and state assemblies and also be published for the information of the public.

The recommendations followed the meeting of leaders of political parties held in Lagos today and attended by the National Party of Nigeria, NPN; the People's Redemption Party, PRP; and the Great Nigeria People's Party, GNPP. The meeting, presided over by President Shehu Shagari, was also attended by representatives of the National Assembly.

CSO: 4700/1048

BANKS EXPAND OVERSEAS OPERATIONS

AB051351 Lagos NAN in English 1336 GMT 5 Apr 82

[Text] Lagos, 5 Apr (NAN)--Four Nigerian banks now operate branches overseas as part of the federal government policy of enabling the private sector to attract revenue from outside the country, a competent source at the Ministry of Finance said in Lagos at the weekend. The source told the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) that the banks New Nigeria, African Continental Bank, First Bank, and National Bank were given approval to establish branches and representative offices having satisfied conditions laid down by the ministry.

Among the conditions are the volume of business and size of the account of the bank, the bank's past records and the reasons for operating an overseas branch.

The banks also had to satisfy the conditions laid down by the banking authorities of the host country, which according to the source varied from country to country.

The source said that the Lloyds International Bank had been granted permission to open a representative office in Lagos and that application from Barclays International and Chase for branches in Lagos were beeing considered by the ministry.

Meanwhile the managing director of the National Bank, Mr Samson Banjo, has said that the Central Bank gave the necessary approval for the establishment of the National Bank's New York office.

Mr Banjo, who was commenting on the statement by the Ministry of Finance that the bank never got home government's approval before it opened its New York office, maintained that the Central Bank's approval was all that the bank needed to begin operation.

He said his bank had plans to establish another branch in Tokyo, Japan but added that this would depend on the performance and volume of the business carried out at the New York office.

The National Bank has a branch in London.

CSO: 4700/1048

SHAGARI RECEIVES REPORT ON CREATION OF STATES

AB020838 Lagos NAN in English 0810 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Text] Lagos, 1 Apr (NAN)--President Shehu Shagari today in Lagos received the report of the 17-man committee he set up to consider the creation of more states in the country.

The vice president, Dr Alex Ekwueme, who is the chairman of the committee, submitted the reports on behalf of the committee.

Receiving the reports, President Shagari expressed appreciation to the committee for completing its assignment on schedule. He said that the committee's job was only advisory on whatever solution was found since the legislature and political parties were the representatives of public opinion.

President Shagari assured the committee that the report would be studied properly and that after the meeting of political leaders on it, the report would be made public to generate debate.

The committee was set up on 23 February to consider the memoranda submitted by the five political parties. The committee was expected to examine Section 8 of the constitution critically with a view to defining the procedural parameters of the terms referendum, requests and proposals and other expressions contained in the section.

It was also charged with the responsibility of examining issues relating to terms of offices or office holders (executive and legislative) as they affect areas from which new states are to be created. The committee was also to suggest ways, principles, procedures, mechanics, modalities and the schedule for the constitution.

Members of the committee were made up of two representatives each from the NPN, GNPP and PRP [National Party of Nigeria, Great Nigerian People's Party and People's Redemption Party]. The National Assembly was represented by four members, two from each house, while the executive was represented by Chief Richard Akinjide and Dr Chuba Okadigbo. Members of the NPP and UPN [Nigerian People's Party and Unity Party of Nigeria] did not take part in the committee's deliberations.

CSO: 4700/1048

HOUSE PASSES APPROPRIATION BILL OVER PROTESTS

AB011936 Lagos NAN in English 1750 GMT 1 Apr 82

[Text] Lagos, 1 Apr (NAN)--The House of Representatives today passed the 1982 appropriation bill amidst protests from members mostly from the UPN [Unity Party of Nigeria], NPP [Nigerian People's Party], GNPP [Great Nigerian People's Party], and PRP [People's Redemption Party]. The protests were over the procedure used in passing the bill.

Earlier, the house met for about 45 minutes behind closed doors. The reason for the closed-door session was not given, but informed sources said that it was in a bid to get members to pass the bill without further delay.

Later, when the house voted on the report of the joint conference on appropriation, the speaker, Chief Edwin Ume-Ezeoke, ruled in favor of the supporters of the report amidst shouts of no, no from other members. A division was called, but the speaker rejected this and adjourned the house till tomorrow morning.

Shortly after the adjournment, members of the UPN, NPP, PRP and GNPP met in the chambers for about 2 hours.

A member, Dr I.B. Ufondu, NPP-Anambra, told the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) that over 150 members, five of whom were NPN members, had signed a petition against the procedure used in passing the bill. Dr Ufondu also said that they would move a vote of no confidence in the speaker tomorrow. He said that those who voted against the adoption of the bill were clearly in the majority.

Mr M.O. Oni, UPN-Ogun, said that they voted against the bill because of the inflated contigency fund for the president. He said that the bill showed 128 million naira as contingency for the president as against 27 million requested by the president. Mr Oni further said that they were not prepared to accept the bill in its present shape until the excess 101 million naira was removed from the contingency fund provision. (NA)

CSO: 4700/1048

COMMENTARY EXAMINES RELATIONS WITH SFRY

AB301145 Lagos Domestic Service in English 2100 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Commentary by Alex Ekenyaon]

[Text] The Federal Republic of Nigeria and the SFRY have had bilateral relations for so many years. But contacts at the highest level between the two countries were not established until President Shehu Shagari paid a state visit to Yugoslavia in June 1981. This was further consolidated by the just concluded visit to Nigeria by the president of the presidency of the SFRY. But prior to this diplomatic contacts between them had been limited to ministerial levels and exchange of visits by various delegations from the two countries. However, the outcome of these low key visits is manifest in the fact that there is a joint committee for economic, scientific and technical cooperation between Nigeria and Yugoslavia. Also, both countries share an identical historical past, having been victims of colonialism or foreign domination at one time or the other.

Again, the two countries have on various occasions expressed their irrevocable commitment to the belief in and adherence to the basic principles and practice of the policy of nonalignment--an ideological stand that has been incorporated in the foreign policy of this state of Nigeria in its relations with the two main ideological blocs.

Both Nigeria and Yugoslavia operate the federal system of government. Yugoslavia consists of six republics and two autonomous provinces as the integral part, while Nigeria is made up of 19 constituent states. Therefore, they both have a common national obligation as well as the inevitable desire to foster a feeling of unity in diversity, being both multiethnic societies. Furthermore, the Federal Republic of Nigeria and the SFRY share identical opinion on many contemporary international issues, especially on matters affecting developing countries of the Third World--decolonization in Africa and a new international economic order. In the area of human rights, the two countries believe in the right of every country to peace, equality, liberty and freedom from colonial rule and other forms of inhuman oppression.

Yugoslavia, like some other socialist countries, has continued to extend her support and assistance to liberation movements in Africa in their struggle for self-expression.

Also, she has unrelentingly spoken against apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa--a cause to which Nigeria has committed a lot of resources. On various international gatherings, Nigeria and Yugoslavia have vigorously campaigned for an end to the cold war and the escalating arms race between the superpowers.

The two countries have also condemned the continued attacks against the independence and freedom of smaller nations by the big powers. Again they have on numerous occasions vehemently condemned the increasing gap between the industrialized north and the developing south. Their commitment to this led to their joint participation in the summit on cooperation and development in Cancun, Mexico.

No doubt, the visit to Nigeria by the Yugoslav leader will lead to a further improvement in the relations between the two countries, based on the cherished principles of equality, mutual benefit and respect. It is therefore hoped that agreement reached at their discussions would (?become) useful to the cause of peace and progress to which the Federal Republic of Nigeria and the SFRY are deeply committed.

CSO: 4700/1048

BANKS FAIL TO SUBMIT INFORMATION ON IMPORTS

AB301200 Lagos NAN in English 1130 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Text] Lagos, 30 Mar (NAN)--No bank, as at the close of business yesterday, had submitted the information required of them by the Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN) with regard to their import commitments, the director of exchange control of the CBN, Mr Chris Nwarache, disclosed in Lagos yesterday.

Mr Nwarache, who gave this information to the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN), however, expressed the hope that his office would get all the required data before the expiration of the deadline fixed at noon today.

Many banks with their headquarters in Lagos yesterday said that they might not be able to meet the Central Bank's deadline.

A NAN correspondent who went round various banks with headquarters in Lagos gathered that they could not easily communicate with their state branches especially as most of them had no radio links with the state branches.

A major constraint in complying with the CBN directive, according to the banks, was getting information on registered form M [importers form] because they had to rely on their customers to produce copies of the document [words indistinct] have lost their papers.

The banks said that they would continue to encounter difficulties for as long as they did not have control over the form M in the possession of their clients.

The CBN last week issued three circulars requesting all commercial banks to supply information on the import commitments they were handling on behalf of their customers through their letters of credit, issuance bills and form M on or before 30 March.

The directive said that during the period of stock taking, no new letters of credit, issuance bills or form M were to be issued. It also specified that neither should old ones be extended or modified without reference to the Central Bank.

CSO: 4700/1048

WESTERN PRESSURE TO LOWER OIL PRICES DENOUNCED

AB021000 Lagos Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Commentary by Atilade Atoyedi]

[Text] In the past few days, a fair amount of information and explanation has emanated from official sources on the state of the nation's economy. The president's address to the relevant National Assembly committees is one that has put the matter in black and white.

The long and short of what has been said is that Nigeria is at the moment experiencing declining revenue in crude oil sales. The prevailing circumstance is that the country now produces less crude oil than anticipated and this is bound to adversely affect the level of projected revenue and, in turn, the government's development programs.

For the benefit of [words indistinct], the present economic situation was predictable to some extent. This is because the industrialized countries of the world, especially the Western nations, had for quite some time embarked on a number of measures aimed at reducing their oil consumption. One of the most familiar of the measures has been the incessant campaign on energy conservation, on the pretext that some measure of success has been achieved in this direction. Another strategy is the one that lays emphasis on the discovery and exploitation of new sources of energy. Already, nuclear energy has been developed on commercial scales in most of the industrialized nations. And this is in spite of the vocal opposition of environmentalists who consider the venture an undue risk. The argument is based on the possibility of breakdowns or risks from radioactive material which could wipe out the surrounding population. Remarkable successes have also been recorded in the area of development of solar energy. In addition, the use of coal is becoming more and more attractive to those nations that have a commercial reserve of it and who have never insisted that the industrial nations have been carrying on a systematic program of oil stockpiling.

In a way, the whole program will appear as a normal economic safeguard for self-reliance in energy use. However, it is now difficult for the Western oil companies and their governments to deny the charge that they had, in fact, been laying a kind of economic siege on oil-producing nations, among whom Nigeria is a permanent member. These oil companies are now cashing in on the countries' carefully planned assault on OPEC. They are blackmailing some members of the organization to reduce their oil price to the level the British North Sea oil is being offered for sale. There have been convincing reports that the United States, in particular, is behind the price manipulation.

Somehow, the whole episode is going by the way of calculated economic open confrontation stimulated by the Western oil consumers. And in the wake of such a comprehensive economic attack on OPEC, there are still mandatory responses on our own part. The first is for OPEC itself to continue with the spirit of solidarity all the members showed during their last meeting. The current oil glut can only be reversed through the planned reduction in oil output. It is an antidote necessary to suppress the economic poison now being handed out by the Western industrialized nations to the oil producers.

The other imperative response is for our people to rally around the government to surmount the present strains and stresses in our economy. As the president observed, the present situation does not call for undue panic. What is essential for this nation is to spend only on essentials, thereby reducing the level of payments for imports. Also, the challenges of the present economic realities suggest that the country should continue to pursue with vigor those programs that will make us be self-sufficient in food production and other essential consumer goods. Of course, the prevailing situation equally demands that we cut our dress according to the size of our cloth. What all these boil down to is that this country has to continue to strive to be resilient in the face of the current conspiracy to undermine its economic progress.

CSO: 4700/1048

BRIEFS

PAPERS DISTURBED BY RAWLINGS--The recent pronouncements made by Flight Lt Jerry Rawlings that Ghanaians would never again be given the chance to elect their leaders is the subject discussed by the NATIONAL CONCORD. The paper admits that this very man who once opposed dictatorship has now not only turned around to impose but has in fact blindly mounted a crusade causing the death of 2,700 precious lives. Against this background, the CONCORD calls on Jerry Rawlings to lead Ghana back from the brink of disaster. The SATELLITE is disturbed very much about events in that neighboring country, especially as narrated by the former Ghanaian high commissioner to Nigeria, Alhaji Yusuf Patti. In the view of the paper, it is the feeling of insecurity that has caused thousands of Ghanaians to flee the country into neighboring states. However, the SATELLITE contends that Nigeria has its own problems to grapple with and as such, can do no more than sympathize with Ghanaians in whatever government they choose for themselves. [Excerpt] [AB271045 Lagos International Service in English 0830 GMT 27 Mar 82]

PAPER ON OPEC WARNING--The NEW NIGERIAN carries the banner headline "OPEC Warns Oil Companies, Restore Purchases From Nigeria Or..." in a front page lead story. The paper reports that Nigeria has suddenly become the most important factor in the world oil crisis. According to the NEW NIGERIAN, OPEC had told Western oil companies to restore purchases from Nigeria or face the possibility of being blacklisted. Quoting sources from OPEC, the NEW NIGERIAN adds that the organization is concerned that the oil companies have slashed their Nigerian purchases to pressurize the country into cutting its price in line with Britain which exports the same kind of crude and which brought about the oil crisis as a result. The NEW NIGERIAN concludes that the dramatic turn in events was highlighted when Saudi Arabia, the leading member of OPEC, told four Western oil companies that they had until today to restore their former level of oil purchase from Nigeria or face sanctions. [Excerpt] [AB292127 Lagos International Service in English 1630 GMT 29 Mar 82]

PRESS ON ECONOMIC CRISIS--An announcement last week by the federal government as regards the country's economic position engages the attention of the NATIONAL CONCORD. The CONCORD attributes the financial situation to the oil glut as well as to the mass importation of foreign goods into the country. It however adds that the situation is not unusual as Nigeria is a mono-economy whose fate is dictated by market conditions. The paper therefore blames the situation on planners and economic advisers whom, it says, lack the ability to read danger signals in good time. As a remedy, the CONCORD advises President Shehu Shagari to push forward with detailed plans to combat the mess. The PUNCH writes on the intention of the federal government to slash the price of Nigeria's oil from $35.5 to $31.9. The paper expresses fear that this could lead to a break-up of OPEC and advises that care should be taken in the interest of Nigeria and OPEC. The DAILY STAR is sad that the transnational corporations that drill oil in the country are set to blackmail Nigeria to change her oil price from the OPEC price. The paper describes these oil-drilling companies as economic vampires who suck the economic blood of developing nations. The STAR feels that the time has come for Nigeria to reassess her economic situation and redetermine her priorities by forgetting grandiose projects. [Excerpt] [AB011243 Lagos International Service in English 1130 GMT 1 Apr 82]

PAPER OPPOSES OIL PRICE CUTS--The NEW NIGERIAN explains the prevailing market conditions as they affect oil and suggests that the federal government must be firm in rejecting any call for the reduction of Nigeria's crude oil price. The paper is convinced that any attempt to do the contrary will not only amount to submission to blackmail from the West but will most significantly prove dangerous in the light of OPEC decisions at the last Vienna meeting. In view of the short-fall in the nation's economic activity, the NEW NIGERIAN still maintains that Nigeria should not withdraw from the OPEC, advising that the state governments are duty bound to stop their excessive borrowing from external sources. Furthermore, the paper contends that there must be sacrifices from every quarter. The controversy among members of the OAU over the question admitting the SDAR into the organization is discussed by the NIGERIAN TIDE. The paper is in support of a statement by President Siaka Stevens of Sierra Leone that it was imperative first for a referendum to be conducted in the SDAR before the OAU could take any decision on whether or not to admit the republic. The step is, in the view of the TIDE, the only positive move toward finding a lasting solution to the dispute between Morocco and the Polisario Front over the territory. [Excerpts] [AB031319 Lagos International Service in English 0830 GMT 3 Apr 82]

ISRAEL, TAIWAN INVITATIONS--The controversy between officials of the federal government and some members of the National Assembly over the attendance of Israel and Taiwan at the forthcoming interparliamentary union conference is examined by the DAILY TIMES. According to the TIMES, what ought to have been considered while deciding on which countries to invite for the conference is Nigeria's foreign policy toward Israel and Taiwan. The paper feels the organizers of the meeting should have consulted officials of the Ministry of External Affairs before inviting Israel and Taiwan. The TIMES, however, says it is not too late to cancel the invitation to these countries as this is necessary in the interest of good image in the international system. The topic that engages the attention of the NIGERIAN TIDE is the alarm raised by the chairman of the Nigerian Port Authority, NPA, that the authority loses business to operators of private jetties. The paper says the call by the chairman deserves urgent consideration not only for the economic (?fraud) involved but also because of the potent danger it poses to the security of the nation. However, the TIDE is happy that the NPA has set up a panel to investigate the activities of private jetties as they affect the nation's economy. The paper urges the panel to unearth how delivery papers are obtained from the port by nonimporters. [Excerpts] [AB051331 Lagos International Service in English 1130 GMT 5 Apr 82]

